Nothing confused me more than the discovery of the God diet. The alleged Creator of the universe wasn't much in the habit of catching a quick bite to eat, as far as I knew. But no, Dorothy Gault-McKemee M.D has engineered a similar low-carb diet, which states that if the food doesn't exist in nature, you can't eat it. Alcohol, bread and pasta are strictly off limits, but a handful of grapes and a chicken are all right. Strangely enough, butter is given a green light, regardless of its fat content and the fact that God didn't own a butter churn. This diet fad is relatively recent, and as a side note, it's probably best to consult a doctor or nutritionist before beginning a program with these types of changes.

The Grapefruit diet started as a hoax! Most dieters have tried this form of weight loss, and the Internet has started spreading rumors that the Mayo clinic in Rochester, Minn. released this plan as a way for its patients to lose weight before by-pass surgeries. In no way does the clinic endorse this program, and the information provided is regarded as nutritionally unsound. A basic menu for the diet commands its adherents to eat as much bacon and grapefruit as they want, because "fat burns fat," and grapefruit acts as a catalyst in metabolic activity. In researching this fad, I discovered a website which did support the use of grapefruit combined with aerobic activity...it was sponsored by the Florida Department of Citrus and endorsed by Denise Austin, aerobic fitness guru of the 80s.

Ah, Xenadrine RFA-1. This rapid fat catalyst has enjoyed more time in the spotlight over the past six months than J-Lo. Does it work? To be honest with you, I tried it for two weeks, and if you can get past the resulting rapid heartbeat and jumpiness, you're set. The warning list is incredible; the issue isn't "don't take if you have high blood pressure;" it's "don't even think of taking this if there's a chance in hell you could have any physical abnormality." So, if you're not freaked out enough by the warning label and the side effects, there's always the fact that Orioles pitcher Steve Belcher and a hundred other people have died because of negative reactions to ephedrine, a stimulant found in this particular type of pill. An ephedrine-free version of the pill is available, but use of the supplement alone can cause lost weight to return in no time.

Body Wraps are a must for weight loss fanatics with the urge to wrap themselves in polyvinyl like a sausage and sweat like a chicken in a rotisserie. But, according to those who swear by the process, the wraps can remove 20 inches from your body. (That's 20 inches total from all over your body, not 20 from the stomach alone.) It also draws out toxins – basically, you sweat a lot – and will leave you feeling healthy. Once more, medical experts quickly point out that these feelings of trimness are temporary and cosmetic. According to the experts, the best method for dropping poundage remains a lifestyle of moderate exercise with a low-fat diet.

In today's society, the pressure to be thin is combined with media messages, which embrace all things chocolate-covered and contradict a physically fit lifestyle. But don't go out and sue McDonald's because you can't fit into your high school jeans. Just reconsider eating the jelly doughnut with your coffee next time.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

science of microwave cookery in all its forms and variants
Dedicated to the subtle
MICROLOGY
Jessica Pelletier

Long memory
Chris Fiore and the men's lacrosse team remember last year's 8-7 scare at Stony Brook. The Minutemen will look for an easier win over the Seawolves Saturday at Garber Field.

'Buffy' leaving airwaves; Gellar done

R. Kelly's album at chart tops; Irv Gottis shot

NEW YORK (AP) – Stick a stake in it: "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" is done.

After seven years, the series will be over at the end of this season, said its star, Sarah Michelle Gellar.

"'Buffy,' in this incarnation, is over," Gellar told Entertainment Weekly magazine for its March 7 issue, her eyes welling with tears. The series will wrap up with a five-part story, which will include the return of Faith, the bad-girl slayer, and Buffy's first love, Angel.

"We're gearing up to tell a fabulous, huge, great arc," Gellar said. "It's going to be pretty spectacular." But the show may come back to life in some form; its creator, Joss Whedon, is planning a spin-off that may include some "Buffy" cast members. It will be pitched first to UPN. "Buffy's" home for the past two seasons; for five seasons before that, it was on the WB.

Gellar, 25, gained fame on the cult hit as Buffy Summers, a perky high school student burdened with the responsibility of killing vampires in the seemingly idyllic town of Sunnydale, Calif.

Last summer, she co-starred with Freddie Prinze Jr., who's now her real-life husband, in a live-action movie version of "Scooby-Doo." A sequel is scheduled for release in March 2004.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) – R. Kelly's new album has debuted at the top of the charts despite child pornography charges against him.

Kelly's disc "Chocolate Factory" sold about 532,000 copies for the week ending Sunday, according to industry figures released on Wednesday.

It's the R&B singer's first disc since his arrest last year for allegedly videotaping himself having sex with an underage girl. Kelly has denied the charges, and they haven't hindered his popularity so far; the first single from the album, "Ignition," is at No. 12 on the Billboard charts.

"Chocolate Factory" is Kelly's third album to debut at No. 1, according to his label, Jive Records.

Kelly knocked rapper 50 Cent out of the top spot. Although 50 Cent's album "Get Rich or Die Tryin'" is no longer No. 1, it still managed to sell 520,000 copies in just its second full week of release; it's sold 2.2 million copies within three weeks.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) – Now you can smell like Andre Agassi – hopefully before a match, not afterward.

The tennis star is the spokesman for a new fragrance that Estee Lauder is releasing through its Aramis unit in a five-year, multimillion-dollar deal.

Details about the name of the scent and what it will smell like haven't been released yet. It will be available worldwide in September.

John Karp, president of Aramis and Designer Fragrances, described Agassi as "a wonderful role model." "Anyone who has watched him play tennis knows how determined he is, even in the face of overwhelming odds," Karp said recently. "But not only is he a great athlete, he is also a magnetic, confident, compelling personality who is able to balance career, family and philanthropy."

Aramis also becomes the main corporate sponsor of the Andre Agassi Charitable Foundation, created in 1994 to provide recreational and educational opportunities for at-risk kids in Agassi's hometown of Las Vegas.

The 32-year-old already had sponsorship deals with corporations including Nike, Canon, Schick and Head.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) – The brother and manager of rap music impresario Irv Gotti was shot in the leg outside the Manhattan offices of Gotti's Murder Inc. recording label.

No weapon was found, and police were investigating whether Christopher Lorenzo shot himself.

The shooting occurred in a courtyard on West 49th Street Monday night, said Sgt. Vito Marrano, a police spokesman.

Around that time, a security guard saw Lorenzo hand a duffel-type bag to another man, walk away and then return to the courtyard, where he waited for police, officials said.

Lorenzo, 39, was listed in stable condition at Bellevue Hospital Center.

Gotti's Murder Inc. is home to rap and R&B stars including Ja Rule and Ashanti. Gerald McKelvey, a spokesman for the label, declined to comment on the shooting.

Authorities are investigating alleged ties between the rap music industry and drug trafficking. They've been trying to determine whether Gotti's childhood friend Kenneth "Supreme" McGriff funneled drug proceeds into the popular label, and last month they seized documents during raids of Murder Inc. offices. McGriff and Gotti have denied wrongdoing.

COURTESY UPN

"Buffy" will be over at the end of this season, its star Sarah Michelle Gellar (above) told Entertainment Weekly.

Els eliminated early

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) – Tiger Woods held up his end of the bargain Wednesday, defeating Carl Pettersson in the first round of the Match Play Championship.

For Ernie Els, it was another shocking finish to a short week at La Costa.

Golf's most fickle tournament lived up its billing, and no one could attest to that more than the Big Easy. Poised to get past Phil Tataurangi, he could only watch as the Kiwi holed a 25-foot birdie putt on the 18th and then won on the 20th hole.

"So be it," Els said. "I'm disappointed, but this is what happens with 18 holes of match play. I knew he was going to make that putt."

Players have come to expect anything in this tournament, where the top seeds are usually gone by the weekend.

At least Woods stuck around, atoning for his first-round loss last year. He took the lead for good on the 13th hole, and seized control by holing a 12-foot birdie putt on No. 16 after Pettersson had chipped in for birdie.

"I had a putt that probably looked like it would win the match. Then, it looked like I could lose the hole," Woods said of the par-3 16th. "That's match play. It can swing that quick. I knew if I made that putt, I'd probably win the match."

Six of the top 10 seeds managed to advance to the second round _ Phil Mickelson, David Toms, Davis Love III, Padraig Harrington and Jim Furyk.

Els wasn't the only one who left La Costa in a state of shock.

Sergio Garcia was 3-up with six holes to play until losing the next five holes to defending champion Kevin Sutherland. Charles Howell III, who lost in a playoff at Riviera last week, failed to make a birdie and lost 1-up to Nicke Fasth.

Mike Weir earned his keep. He went 2e holes before heating Loren Roberts, the longest match in the five-year history of the Accenture Match Play Championship.

No one cared how they played, just as long as they get to come back.

"If you don't go out there and play well right away, you'll be going home," Woods said. "I know that, and everyone else knows that."

Some found out the hard way.

Els finally took the lead against Tataurangi with a par on the 17th to go 1 up. He hit a great bunker shot to within inches for par on the 18th, and stood off to the side as Tataurangi lined up his putt.

Els could only laugh when the putt dropped.

On the first playoff hole, Tataurangi hit into the hunker and blasted out to 5 feet, but holed that one for par. With new life, he hit his tee shot on the par-3 11th to 2 feet, and Els conceded after failing to make his bunker shot.

Fight a gamble for both Jones and Ruiz

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS (AP) – Roy Jones Jr. will be taking the gamble of his career when he steps into the ring to try to win a piece of the heavyweight title. John Ruiz is taking a gamble of his own, and he's not even sure he'll get paid for it.

Ruiz wanted a big fight so bad he agreed to defend his WBA title against Jones Saturday night with the understanding he'll get paid only if the event sells well on pay-per-view television.

That partly explains why he's so peeved with Jones, who is guaranteed $10 million but has been doing little to help promote the fight.

"Roy hasn't done his job," Ruiz said Wednesday. "I'm basically depending on pay-per-view buys. He has his guarantee, he can walk away with his money."

Whether Ruiz walks away with some of his own depends not only on how well he can sell himself as a legitimate heavyweight champion but also on how much Jones does to attract attention to the fight.

Jones hasn't done a lot since arriving in Las Vegas, blowing off a scheduled public workout and media session Tuesday and then arriving an hour later for the pre-fight press conference Wednesday.

That's why promoter Don King included an Adolf Hitler imitation and a dissertation on world affairs as part of a nearly three-hour sales job of his own in a fight that has largely been overshadowed by the Mike Tyson-Clifford Etienne fiasco.

"This is what makes a promoter – you work with an empty chair," King said. "I'll call David Copperfield up here and tell him to wave that cape and make this guy appear."

Ticket sales have lagged for the fight, with one report that only 6,000 were sold for a 19,000-seat capacity arena. Ruiz will make about $2.5 million if some 400,000 households buy the fight for $49.95 on pay-per-view, a tall order considering Jones has never sold that many in his career and Ruiz has never been in a pay-per-view fight.

"Getting Roy Jones to do this fight was the big win," said Mark Taffet, who heads HBO's pay-per-view division. "But I would always like a fighter to do more promotion."

Perhaps Jones was the smart one on Wednesday, as King droned on and on at Caesars Palace. After all, this was a fight Jones didn't really want in the first place and is now having to face up to the reality that he will have to fight.

"People constantly ask me why would I take this fight," Jones said. "They want to see me get hurt. They want to see me knocked out. They want to see me bleed."

Ruiz would like to see all three of those things, of course, as Jones tries to become only the second fighter other than Michael Spinks to win a piece of the heavyweight title while still light heavyweight champion.

Oddsmakers like Jones' skills so much he's a 9-5 favorite despite giving away 35 to 40 pounds to Ruiz. Jones is expected to come into the ring at about 185 pounds to between 220 and 225 for Ruiz.

"I get to see the man who's going to try and beat me," Jones said. "That's why I'm here."

Spinks was outweighed by only 18 pounds – 205 to 223 – when he beat Holmes in September 1985 to win the heavyweight title in a huge upset. Before Spinks, 12 former or reigning light heavyweight champions tried to win the heavyweight title and all failed.

Jones is regarded by many as the best pound-for-pound fighter in the world, but he's a relatively small fighter even by light heavyweight standards and his chance to win against Ruiz depends on his ability to outbox Ruiz while staying away from his power and his weight.

"He's a runner," Ruiz said. "He loves to run around the ring but I'll lean on him, throw the heavier punches. It will take its toll."

Hockey East Playoff Picture

A look inside the final weekend of the conference's regular season

Team (potential finish)	HE Record W-L-T	Pts.	Games Left Fri.	Sat.	Can clinch...
Boston College (1-3)	16-5-1	33	@UNH	UNH	1st with 2 pts against UNH
New Hampshire (1-3)	14-5-3	31	BC	@BC	1st with 3 pts against BC
Maine (1-3)	13-5-4	30	BU	BU	2nd with sweep of BU
Providence (4-5)	11-9-3	25	UML	--	4th with win, 1 Maine win
Boston University (4-5)	12-9-1	25	@ ME	@ME	4th with 3 pts against Maine
Massachusetts (6-7)	9-14-0	18	--	@ MC	6th with win against MC
Merrimack (6-7)	7-11-4	18	@NU	UMass	6th with win against UMass
Northeastern (8-9)	4-16-2	10	MC	@UML	8th with win against UML
UMass-Lowell (8-9)	3-15-4	10	@PC	NU	8th with win against NU

Gibson's unlikely rise to dominance

Continued from page 10

a teacher to student ratio of one to one. Essentially, each kid gets private tutoring.

"It really was beneficial to me," Gibson said. "It was great."

For the next three years, Gibson made the transition every year in mid-November from his regular high school in Maryland to Killington. He tried to leave as late as possible because of his dedication to the cross-country team in Maryland.

With three hours of skiing and one hour of dry land activities (plyometrics and light lifting for the younger skiers) a day, Gibson enhanced his natural skill.

Like any good athlete in high school, Gibson not only skied well, but also helped the cross-country team win several state championships. Winning timed events would not stop in Maryland on the heaten paths of cross-country.

Through his years at Killington, Gibson befriended a young man by the name of Ken Tohman, who went on to ski at UMass. It was Thoman who convinced Gibson to come to Amherst.

When Gibson was looking at colleges, he wanted a school that had both a competitive skiing program and an excellent engineering department. With some help from Thoman, he found both at UMass.

When Gibson entered UMass as a freshmen, it was the year that the famed coach Bill MacConnel stepped aside, turning the reigns over to his grandson, Mike MacConnel.

"Coach [Mike] MacConnel had a very hands off approach to coaching," Gibson said. "In fact Ken [Thoman] was running the dry land program almost completely by himself."

Freshman year in the classroom went great for Gibson, who achieved high grades partly due to the first rate education at Killington.

Yet, during his sophomore year of college, he decided to move again, this time back to Maryland, when he transferred to the University of Maryland for second semester.

"Part of the reason I left was because I needed a break," Gibson said. "I needed a break from UMass, but the major part was that my brother Todd was a senior at Maryland and the captain of the ski team. I wanted to ski with him."

Gibson joined the Terrapins and won the conference in his only year at Maryland. He qualified for a trip to Nationals, where he finished 46th in the slalom and 31st in the giant slalom.

Not great finishes, but as the years went on Gibson became better and better.

After his brother graduated, Gibson decided to come back to Massachusetts and ski for the Minutemen. His reasoning was simple:

"Two words," Gibson said. "Ski bunnies. But seriously, I was already halfway done with my engineering degree. I wasn't going to throw away the credits I already had from UMass."

When Gibson got back, he saw the difference between Maryland and UMass. The coaching in Maryland was non-existent because it was a club sport and the members had to pay their own way. UMass got a new coach in Igor Vanovac, the much-heralded former Olympian. His no-nonsense attitude combined with assistant coach Mike LeBlanc led the Minutemen to a sixth place finish at Nationals, which Gibson topped off with a 17th place finish in the giant slalom and a 25th place finish in slalom.

But no one was ready for the dominating force that is Beau Gibson, who is getting ready to face the toughest competition of the year at Nationals. Sierra-Nevada fields an all-star skiing squad of U.S. Ski team members and skiers from the Austria national team.

With four wins in the regular season and coming off a first-place finish in the Eastern Regionals, Gibson is having his "best year ever – I've never skied at this level."

As Gibson looks towards the odds of winning Nationals this year, he says, "anything can happen."

Terror threatened at America's Cup

www.dailycollegian.com

By RAY LILLEY
Associated Press

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) – A group calling itself "September 11" sent terror threats to the U.S., Australian and British embassies in New Zealand, warning it has 33 pounds of cyanide to use against American interests if Iraq is attacked, police said Thursday.

A squad of anti-terror police is working to find the author of the threat contained in four letters that mentioned the America's Cup yacht race in Auckland.

One of the letters, which were intercepted by postal workers at the Auckland mail center, contained cyanide crystals, according to counter-terrorism police chief Assistant Commissioner Lou White.

Britain's Foreign Office confirmed Wednesday that a suspect package "containing traces of cyanide" had been sent to the British High Commission in Wellington but said it had no information on the group September 11.

White said all the letters also contained a white powder. Authorities have not identified that substance but have ruled out anthrax, he said.

The identical letters, addressed to the ambassadors of the United States, Australia and Britain and to an Auckland newspaper, said the group aimed "to challenge the actions of the great satan America and resist its imperialist ambitions in the Islamic world."

White said police knew of an Australian group that called itself September 11. But they were unaware of a group in New Zealand by that name.

The name seems an obvious reference to the 2001 attacks on New York and Washington by al-Qaida Osama bin Laden's terrorist network.

"September 11 wants at the Americas Cup for instruction if Iraq is attacked by the host of satan all interests and there supporters will be attacked by September 11," the letters said. The letter is written in English and thick with errors in spelling and punctuation.

September has stockpiled 33 kilo weapon grade cyanide and will use those against those interests wherever they are," the threat adds.

White said there were similar features between the letters sent last Friday and one sent to the U.S. Embassy last year.

That letter, which contained enough cyanide to kill 20 people, had threatened the New Zealand Golf Open in which Tiger Woods played in January 2002. Its author has not been found.

Cyanide is widely used in animal pest control, mining and other industries and is readily available throughout New Zealand.

Police were reviewing security at the America's Cup already high before the threat. They recommended people be careful about eating food served in public.

At the America's Cup venue on Viaduct Harbor in downtown Auckland, restaurant and cafe operators removed open sugar bowls, salt and pepper shakers and self-service water jugs Wednesday.

Wednesday was a scheduled day off at the America's Cup, which has been stalled for more than a week by uncooperative weather

Boston pitcher succeeds with strict superstitions

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – Derek Lowe's nasty sinker is the biggest reason for his success. Iced coffee and ravioli also seemed to help.

He had the same breakfast and lunch last year before his nighttime starts in Boston and enjoyed his best season.

"I ate at the same places. I will do that again. Call me freaky," he said Wednesday. "Every morning, French vanilla iced coffee and a coffee roll."

Then came lunch at an Italian restaurant near his home south of Boston. He visits there so often that the servers know what he wants.

"I walk in there, triple-cheese ravioli, a small salad, lemonade, bread, every time," Lowe said. "I'm like Norm on 'Cheers.' I don't even have to order."

He skips dessert, but Lowe thinks that routine gives him a comfort level that helps.

"Does it work? I have no idea. Probably not, but in your mind it may help," he said.

It didn't hurt on the mound.

He made 15 starts at home last year. In the eight night games, he was 5-1 with a 1.42 ERA. In the seven day games, he was 4-3 with a 2.88 ERA.

For the year, he was 21-8 with a 2.58 ERA and a no-hitter in his first full season as a starter. He was third in the AL Cy Young voting.

Lowe is scheduled to start the Red Sox exhibition opener Thursday night at home against Minnesota. Since he didn't begin his eating habits until last April, he must find restaurants in Fort Myers.

"I'll have some Italian lunch," he said.

Many players have routines that keep them comfortable, perhaps the most striking being Boston shortstop Nomar Garciaparra's toe-tapping before each pitch.

"Everybody makes the biggest deal about Nomar's tapping," catcher Jason Varitek said. "That puts him in the same routine. He's in the same place every day, over and over."

Lowe's diet fits his emphasis on consistency. He tries to maintain an even emotional keel and treats each start the same, no matter the quality of the opponent.

So he didn't get carried away by his no-hitter last April 27.

"I've already forgotten," he said. "It seems like moons to go."

And he didn't sink too far the previous season when he lost his closer's job.

"Sometimes I wanted to go bury my head in the dirt. But, for the most part, you've got to understand that you're going to have ups and down so you just have to stay level.

"I always want to have success but I don't do cartwheels or something when I have a good year."

Lowe should open the season as Boston's No. 2 starter, behind Pedro Martinez, and already is throwing all his pitches effectively.

He lives in Fort Myers in the off-season and started throwing in December. He took three weeks off in January after a cancerous growth was removed from his nose, but the chance of a recurrence is slim, doctors said.

He takes a different approach than many pitchers who use exhibition games to work on certain pitches.

"I go out there trying to get guys out. I don't want to go out there and get in bad habits," Lowe said. "I'm not going to go out there and just throw fastballs and changeups my first two or three outings. I'm going to try to throw everything to the first batter" Thursday.

He doesn't see any reason why he can't win 20 games again, especially if he has more than his 32 starts last year.

"Not sounding arrogant, but it's not really unreasonable," he said. "If you can get 34 (starts) you're looking at just over half your games being quality games. I think that's not an unrealistic goal."

So is drinking French vanilla iced coffee and eating triple-cheese ravioli.

"It's funny how you do things once or twice like that and then it just becomes second nature," Lowe said. "Hopefully, I won't stink and have to change."

Sports@dailycollegian.com

$19 to BOSTON
Newton - Framingham from UMASS & NORTHAMPTON
Special Student Fare with ID
ONLY $19.00 One Way
$35.00 Round Trip
Purchase tickets in advance by phone or at Hampshire College Bookstore, UMass Campus Sender Office, Southwest Hampden Dining Commons, Herter Hall Copy Center or Redfern Travel, South Hadley.
Departures from: Amherst Center Terminal, So. Pleasant St., Hampshire College Bookstore, UMass Fine Arts Center at Haigis Mall, Northampton Terminal at Round House Plaza or Redfern Travel, 29 College St., So. Hadley.
Peter Pan Bus Lines
The People Professionals
1-800-343-9999 • www.peterpanbus.com
Offer is subject to change at anytime and may be withdrawn without notice at the sole discretion of GLSPRB.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics-Best Machines
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 50 AMHERST www.amherstathletic.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 Thursday 2/27/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (SNEAK PREVIEW SAT 2/22) (PG13) 1:30 P.M.
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 12:45 2:55 5:05 7:20 9:30 11:30 NO SHOW SAT 7:20 9:30
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:05 9:55
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:20
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:15 4:45 7:05 10:25
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:35 4:15 7:25 10:20
DARK BLUE (R) 1:40 4:50 7:50 10:30
CATCH ME IF YOU CAN (PG13) 1:10 9:55
BANDITS (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15
LATIN-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 5:10
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (PG) 1:10 3:15 5:10 7:05 9:10
Senior Show 2/27/03 - THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:15 7:10 10:05
NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Busch/Busch Light 24 bottles & 9.99 + dep
Millwaukee's Best 30 pack cans $10.99 + dep
Open SUNDAYS Noon 11 pm
Monday Saturday 9am 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584-8174

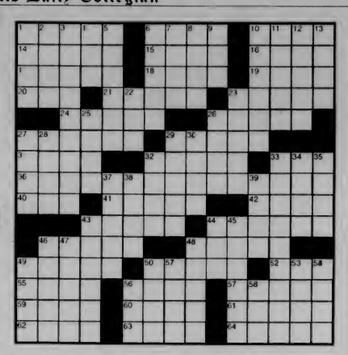
AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Silent Groove
Skymie Funk
Integrity Jazz Band
Mothers Less Grateful
UPSTAIRS AT THE ABC
POOL / DARTS / PINGPONG
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT
24-36 N. Pleasant St. • Amherst MA
413-253-4400
www.amherstbrewing.com

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Heloise C. Gaskins IV

COLLEGE RULES • By J.C. Fennell

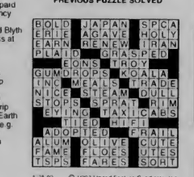
GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

SKYBOX • By Bo Bake



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Cooper X

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Heloise C. Gaskins IV



ACROSS
1 Horseshoer
6 Fitness centers
10 Hatchet handle
14 Sn.
15 Glean
16 Dazzles
17 Fire chief's suspicion
18 Movie license
19 Carefree escapade
20 Sugar amt
21 Objectives
23 Invents a word
24 VCR button
26 Cuts calories
27 Accompany
29 Nuisance plants
31 Large purse
32 Shouldered
33 "— Baby Baby" (Linda Ronstadt)
36 Winter sports gear (2 wds.)
40 That ship
41 Large mammal
42 To be, in Montreal
43 Face warmer
44 Diadems
46 Bogged down
48 Raw-fish delicacy
49 Fortuneteller's card
50 Silt deposit
52 Trippet
55 Kind of leopard
56 EEC currency
57 Sod grass
59 Beatrice and Blyth
60 Throw rocks at
61 Abrasive
62 Jokester Martha —
63 Pub orders
64 Rodeo prop

DOWN
1 Wooden strip
2 Next after Earth
3 Clouseau, e.g.
4 Boxing win
5 Closet item
6 Fantastic
7 Bellow
8 Bulk
9 Hot tub
10 Moon phenomena
11 Expect
12 Spore producers
13 Reproving clucks
22 Mo. for Libras
23 Apple drink
25 Louis and Frazier
26 Auto mishap
27 Delineate
28 Tender
29 Was willing to
30 Sea eagle
32 Wild husker
33 Big birds
34 Soup vegetable
35 Makes tracks
37 Candied
38 Libya neighbor
39 "She Loves You" refrain
43 Window-shop
44 Famous mummy
45 Signora Peron
46 Food from heaven
47 Sarcasm
48 Piggy-bank features
49 Russian ruler
50 Sword fight
51 — Stanley Gardner
53 Freshens
54 Rochester clinic
56 Earth-conscious org.
58 GP group

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-28-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"All the wrong people have the power of suggestion / and the freedom of the press is meaningless if nobody asks a question."

- Ani DiFranco "Serpentine"

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
- High: 31
- Low: 13

FRIDAY
- High: 33
- Low: 16

SATURDAY
- High: 33
- Low: 26

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Vegetable Tortellini Soup
- Oriental Beef & Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- Vegetable Tortellini Soup
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schatter
COPY EDITOR
Jesse Greenspan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Dan Simmons / Andrea Mangini

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
If you skip classes today a great discomfort will befall you.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't be so quick to temper. A calm composure will save the day today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
That thing you've been thinking about constantly? Yeah, it will work out.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
If you wear pink today, be happy. If you don't, you'll be happy anyway.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Pigs will fly today...so watch out. So that's a yes to your question.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are not the center of the universe. But just because you think you're not doesn't mean you are.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't be so down on yourself. You are great, and you're not the only one who thinks so.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't go outside. They're all going to laugh at you. But if you're brave, it will work out.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You've been putting it all off for too long. It's all piling up, but you're still not going to do anything about it.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
It's about time you started sending out some good vibes. They're contagious.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You've been putting too much thought into something. Just relax, and all answers will be revealed.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your closest friends miss you. Make sure to take the time to acknowledge their existence.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you know when you ovulate? Do you want to know if you are right? Participate in a study of the signals of ovulation! Call or email: Lynette Leidy Sievert: leidy@anthro.umass.edu or Cathy DuBois: 374-6759

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Save up to $700 Off Move-In Costs
Deluxe 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & WATER Washers/dryers available Minutes from UMass- On free busline Gall Sugarloaf Estates today! 413-665-3856 visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstdlncolrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstdlncolrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Voyager Van $1750 549-6023

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER ON CAPE COD! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 6, 7, 8 & March 20, 21, 22. Check out our website at www.wychmerehar bor.com & email or call Amy at (508) 432-1000 x129 for details.

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

Dunkin Donuts supervisor needed for shop located in Mullins Center ice rink at UMass Amherst year round position call Marlene 413-549-6552 for interview.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

Internship: For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9,300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmaill1@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Assistant Needed for busy office on Nantucket Island May-Aug. or Dec. Computer, accurate typing and telephone Skills necessary. Salary and housing. Fax resume to 508 228 8778 or Mail to: Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

Whitewater raft guides needed F/P summer jobs will train $4000-6000 for season. Call crabapple white water 413-625-2288

FOR SALE

Twenty year old Northampton pin back Advertising Button and Promotional Products Business for sale. Visit: buttonsbywilson.com or call Gregory 586-8554.

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to know who will win the big games? Email todayspicks@hotmail.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days, Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials! Incl. Port, Departure, Hotel Tax! www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1

TRAVEL

Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Absolute Best Deals for Spring Break! Acapulco, Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida; Space still available. Call us today 1-866-273-2500 www.vagabondtours.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Beau Gibson was named Eastern Regional Champion after his first-place finish in the giant slalom and third-place finish in the slalom.

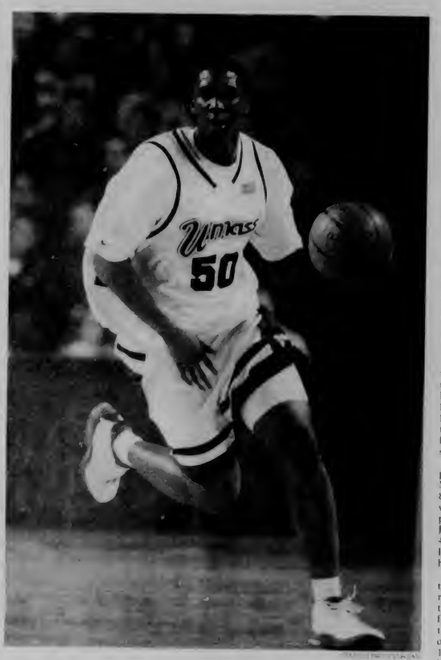
Beau Gibson's strange path to skiing dominance

By Ari Jankelowitz
Collegian Correspondent

Beau Gibson hails from Oakland, Md., a small town south of the Mason-Dixon line that is typically not a hotbed for skiers. Yet, with a little bit of luck and a whole lot of skill, Gibson wound up at the University of Massachusetts dominating the MacConnel Conference and the Eastern Division of the United States Collegiate Skiing Association.

Gibson was lucky enough to live right next to the only mountain suitable for skiing in the state of Maryland. This mountain allowed for adequate skiing, but it lacked a ski racing program. His father, Jim Gibson, who had a ski racing background, set up gates with his friend for Beau, his older brother Todd and a family friend's son to race.

The older Gibson effectively started the first ski racing club for Beau and his older brother Todd, which eventually led both brothers to a ski-racing filled life. This club traveled every weekend to race in the hills of Pennsylvania, where Beau got his first look at racing against strangers.



From then until he was a sophomore in high school, Beau knew only weekend skiing and competition. That would soon change when he enrolled in the Killington, Vt. Ski Academy.

Killington Mountain Ski Academy is a small school of around 50 kids. Since it is impossible to ski year round, the school allows the kids to stay at their regular high school until November and then go to the Academy from November until early spring.

One of the intriguing aspects of these ski academies is the way the education is planned out. The academy correlates the curriculum with the regular school. The kids never miss a beat, but because of this accommodating style, the school has

Continued on page 8

UMass falls apart

Marcus Cox and the Minutemen suffered their worst loss of the season last night, an 88-46 drubbing at Temple's Liacouras Center.

Suffers biggest loss of the year

PHILADELPHIA (AP) – David Hawkins and Alex Wesby led five Temple starters in double figures with 17 points each as the Owls handed Massachusetts its worst loss of the season, 88-46, Wednesday night.

Temple	88
UMass	46

It was the fourth straight win and eighth in the last 10 games for Temple (11-13, 8-5 Atlantic 10), which got 14 points from Maurice Collins, 11 from Brian Polk and 10 from Keith Butler. Butler also added 12 rebounds.

Temple closed the first half on a 21-4 run to take a 42-14 lead at halftime. It was the fewest points and worst field-goal percentage (19.2 percent) in a half for the Minutemen this season.

Jeff Viggiano's 14 points led the Minutemen (11-15, 5-8), whose previous worst loss was by 29 points, 76-47, to Saint Joseph's on Jan. 11. The 42-point margin was the largest in the 50-game history of the series.

The Owls, who ended the first half on a 15-0 run, scored the first six to start the second half for a combined 21-0 run that lasted 8:56, ending on Jackie Rogers' layup 1:53 into the second half.

Temple led by as many as 44 points and Massachusetts never got closer than 30 points in the second half.

Temple used a 14-0 run, helped by six Minutemen turnovers, to take a 21-8 lead with 9:45 left in the first half. After a jumper by Massachusetts' Micah Brand made it 21-10, Temple went on a 21-4 run to close the half.

Massachusetts had 21 turnovers while Temple had five.

Steve Lappas is now 2-7 against Philadelphia schools, including 0-5 in Philadelphia, since he left Villanova for Massachusetts after nine seasons as the Wildcats head coach.

In addition to the 29-point loss to the Hawks, the Minutemen lost 78-57 at La Salle earlier this season.

Temple outrebounded the Minutemen 40-28.

UMass freshman Mike Lasme, who shot 1-for-6 for three points, returned to the lineup after missing Sunday's win over Duquesne with an elbow injury.

With the win, Temple sweeps the series, having already beaten UMass 61-50 at the Mullins Center.

In that contest, the Owls beat the Minutemen 44-26 on the glass and scored 24 second-chance points.

– From wire and staff reports.

Early shine wearing thin

Cleo Foster and the women's basketball team look to snap a five-game losing streak tonight, when they host Fordham at the Mullins Center.

Injury-plagued squad in freefall

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The sparkle on Marnie Dacko's first season is beginning to wear off.

The coach knows it, too. With two games remaining in the season, all of the hope and optimism that came with the best start in the program's history has faded, and the Minutewomen are locked in a battle for low-end playoff positioning.

The fight continues tonight, as Fordham (14-13, 5-9 Atlantic 10) enters the Mullins Center for a 7 p.m. clash. The Rams have won four of their last five, including two victories over Rhode Island, to slip into a tie for third place in the A-10 East.

As for UMass (12-13, 4-10 A-10), the result of tonight's game, as well as Saturday's season-ending matchup with Duquesne, could put them as high as third place, or send them all the way to the bottom of the East. For Dacko's crew, the time is now, and they know it.

"I'm about ready to slit my wrists," Dacko said at the UMass Sports Luncheon yesterday. "We keep losing, but we really are a team that, in spite of our losses, we come back every day."

The last time the two teams met, Fordham countered a career-high 23 points from Nekole Smith with 42.6 percent shooting, and sent the Minutewomen packing with a 60-52 victory at Rose Hill Gymnasium in Bronx, N.Y. UMass took an early lead, but then went nearly nine minutes without a basket, and the Rams took a three-point edge into halftime. They remained in front throughout the second stanza, despite clutch 3-pointers from Katie Nelson and Kristin Cannon.

If the loss of Nelson, who is reportedly having season-ending surgery, wasn't enough to deflate the Minutewomen, add a weekend in Philadelphia that brought two more losses and no answers in the backcourt.

Monique Govan, who is saddled with running the offense for the remainder of the season, showed improvement and a better sense of control over the weekend, but no one on the UMass roster has stepped up to replace Nelson.

In their last five games – all losses – the Minutewomen shot a mediocre 36.7 percent and averaged just 3.8 3-pointers.

"It's easier to hit a bullseye on a dartboard or in archery than it is for us to put the ball in the basket," Dacko said.

And while Govan's hands are getting more competent every day, Nelson's missing outside presence is giving opponents free reign to put every defender on Jennifer Butler, a "legitimate All-American candidate," according to Temple coach Dawn Staley.

Not that Butler's contribution has diminished. Her 17 points and 16 rebounds in Sunday's 47-42 loss at Temple gave the senior her 21st double-double of the season.

With just one win in the last nine games, Dacko is resorting to any source of inspiration she can find, even of the cinematic sort.

"You know, you go back to 'The Rookie' and 'Hoosiers,' and you look for some inspiration there," she said.

If the season ended yesterday, the Minutewomen would head down to the Ryan Center at URI and play Duquesne (14-11, 7-7 A-10) in the first round of the A-10 tourney. But each team in the East has two games to go, and with St. Bonaventure lurking just one conference win behind UMass, the Maroon and White's first round opponent could be the West's No. 3, Richmond, which took a 69-57 decision at the Mullins Center three weeks ago.

This all adds up to proof that the "future is now" theme of the 2002-03 season is undeniably true. And the coach recognizes that.

"If these kids were sophomores and juniors, I'd be thrilled," said Dacko, who has seven seniors on her roster. But it's Dacko's lineup, and with just two games before playoff time, it's not producing the way it did in the first two months of the season.

So if the Minutewomen can't get out of the slide they're in, it may not be long before Dacko starts measuring rim heights.

UMass pitcher Arnold earns national award

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Correspondent

Kim Arnold, sophomore pitcher for the Massachusetts softball team, was named Louisville Slugger National Fastpitch Coaches Association Player of the Week yesterday.

The award was given for the week of Feb. 17-23.

During that period, Arnold led the Minutewomen, who entered the week ranked No. 25 in the nation, to a 3-0 performance at the SEC A Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga. All three of UMass' wins came against teams in the top 20.

Arnold picked up a win and a save at the tournament and was named the Classic Most Outstanding Player.

After UMass beat then-No. 18 Oregon State 7-1 on Friday, UMass coach Elaine Sortino sent freshman Jenna Busa to the mound for her first career start against then-No. 20 Pacific. Busa picked up the win in 6 1/3 innings of work, and Arnold picked up the save getting two strikeouts to seal the 6-3 win for the Minutewomen.

Arnold returned to the mound Sunday with the tournament championship on the line. No. 11 held then-No. 11 Florida State to just four hits and one run, while striking out three in the 2-1 victory. Of the 8 seminoles four hits only one reached the outfield.

Arnold improved to 2-1 with the performance.

"Kelli pitched the best game of her career (against FSU)," Sortino said.

This week's Dunn Brothers/UMass Co-Player of the Week Arnold called the Leadoff Classic Championship "another step on our journey toward Oklahoma City," in a prepared statement to the UMass Sports Luncheon Committee yesterday.

The strong weekend vaulted the Minutemen up to No. 18 in the nation.

Arnold started off the season with a loss to No. 10 Cal Fullerton, a 3-1 defeat on Feb. 7 that saw the sophomore pitch six innings and give up eight hits and three runs. No. 11 rebounded the next day with a 5-2 win over Texas Tech. Arnold pitched seven innings in that contest, giving up six hits and two runs while striking out two.

The Kalama, Wash. native did not lose a single game as a freshman. Behind upperclassmen Kaila Holtz and Jen Hadley in the rotation, Arnold appeared in 11 games last year, including five starts. No. 11 won every start she made last season for a 5-0 overall record. She posted a 1.29 earned run average in 2002 and allowed just 27 hits and eight earned runs in 43 1/3 innings.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 91

Author speaks at Cage

Dave Eggers discusses his book, "A Heartbreaking Work of Staggering Genius," yesterday in Curry Hicks Cage to an audience of over 1,200.

Eggers discusses book

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Correspondent

Dave Eggers, author of "A Heartbreaking Work of Staggering Genius" and editor of McSweeney's publishing, joked and conversed with an audience of over 1,200 University of Massachusetts students and faculty yesterday evening in the Curry Hicks Cage.

A member of the audience asked Eggers how he came up with the title. "It was a joke at first," Eggers said and then explained that he just didn't find a better one. "If the title wasn't hyperbolic enough for you..." he continued as he read an exaggerated segment of the book where his little brother Toph is brought to star status because Eggers fought through crowds in order for Toph to shake President Clinton's "pink, why so pink" hand.

Eggers' appearance was sponsored by Commonwealth College's Dean's Book Course to enhance students' reading of his memoir (AHWOSG). The book begins with Eggers losing both parents to cancer when he is in his early twenties, and then centers on being a young-adult in California's Bay Area publishing business while raising seven-year-old Toph.

Eggers asked how many people in the audience were required to read the book for class. Approximately 90 percent of the audience raised their hands to affirm the novel had been assigned reading.

"Do not blame me," Eggers teasingly said, reflecting the conversational tone of the book.

Although students read the book for the assignment rather than pleasure, many of them said they enjoyed reading the book and hearing Eggers' speaking style.

"His voice really came through," sophomore Seth Berkowitz said.

Eggers read, joked, conversed and played Frisbee with the crowd from 8:00 to 10:00 p.m.

"Any presentation where Frisbees are caught, I tend to appreciate," said Matthew Latkiewicz, a former Hampshire College student and current employee of the Book Mill.

Frisbee throwing was a main theme in the memoir. Eggers and Toph's close relationship is demonstrated through their Frisbee games, as are numerous metaphors. Towards the end of the book, Eggers writes, "...it [the Frisbee] slows and stops all the way up there at the very top, for a second blotting out the sun, and then its heart breaks and it falls."

So Commonwealth College student Jocelyn Scheintaub said that she decided to bring a Frisbee for Eggers to sign. Instead of requesting a signature, Scheintaub decided to ask for a Frisbee-trick. Eggers attempted a cartwheel while catching the Frisbee that was thrown from another volunteer audience member.

"He caught the Frisbee – that was cool," Scheintaub said. Eggers read from his newest book, "You Shall Know Our Velocity," and from McSweeney's works "Dog Letters to CEOs," written by and starring "Steve-the-Irish-Setter," as well as several selections from AHWOSG.

"The letters were especially hysterical," said Heather Collins, a former UMass student. "He's done a lot of funny stuff between McSweeney's and his work with Might magazine. I think he really showed how funny he can be."

Collins waited with over a hundred other students to talk with Eggers after the show. There were students waiting to have their books, paper, folders, notebooks, Frisbees, and hands signed.

One day national student walkout for peace planned

By Jonas Jacobson
Collegian Correspondent

War with Iraq is very likely, according to a Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies (PAWSS) panel that met last night in Herter Hall.

Presenters spoke on issues including what to do to stop a possible United States invasion of Iraq and the economic costs of war. Most early estimates put th costs near $100 billion.

"[One] hundred billion is more than what the U.S. will spend on K-12 education over the next three years," said Anita Dancs, director of the National Priorities Project, an economic research organization. "A hundred billion could fund health care for all American children for five years."

Ann Ferguson, a professor of Philosophy and Women's Studies at the University of Massachusetts, spoke about the National Student Strike taking place on campus next Wednesday.

"There are two hundred colleges and universities that have signed on to this," she said. "There are both public and private universities calling for peace."

There is now a large and demonstrable anti-war movement taking place despite the fact that war has not yet been officially declared.

Move-on, an anti war coalition, organized a "Paper March on Washington" Wednesday by urging tens of thousands of people from all over the United States to phone or fax their Congressmen and senators to voice opposition to an Iraqi invasion.

"Yesterday Congress could get no phone calls out because of calls coming in," Ferguson said. "The lines were clogged all day."

Western Massachusetts and the University combined brought more than 1,000 people to the recent protests in New York City, Reuters estimated six million people across the world protested war on Feb. 15.

"The Pioneer Valley is extremely well organized," Ferguson said. "More than 80 professors have agreed to either talk about war in their classes or let students attend the rally. There will be a rally in the Student Union from 12 to 1 p.m.]"

Using the walkout to learn more about a war with Iraq is essential, according to Ferguson.

"We need to have some control over our education," she said. "The moral and political damages are so serious we shouldn't be doing business as usual."

"Asking one of your faculty to excuse you from class – then you're making a political statement," Ferguson said. "It's so as to show general concern."

Michael Klare, director of the PAWSS for the Five College system, said that though the United States would easily win a war against Iraq, the economic and political fallout would be disastrous. He cites the money funneled into war that would not go to things like education and health care.

"Once you conduct a military campaign against Iraq you remove the threat of reprisal," he said. "What we're doing is the least safe thing we could do."

The threat of reprisal, according to Klare, has been one of the governing principals in the international community since the Cold War. It is the belief that no nuclear power would attack another because of the threat of retaliation.

Audience members posed questions about national security and the security of our allies in light of the war.

"It is likely to reduce our security," said professor Gerald Epstein, the moderator of the panel series, and a political economy researcher at the University. "It is unlikely to increase Israeli security as well."

The United States would not conquer Iraq and abandon it to warlords

Continued on page 3

Iraq agrees to destroy Al Samoud missiles

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS – Iraq agreed in principle Thursday to destroy its Al Samoud 2 missiles, two days before a U.N. deadline. Word of the agreement came as chief weapons inspector Hans Blix said Baghdad's disarmament efforts had been "very limited so far."

The mixed signals were likely to provide ammunition to supporters and opponents of a quick war to disarm Iraq. The two sides failed to reach agreement on substantive issues during a heated and bitter discussion in the Security Council on Thursday.

The council debate came as the U.S. military buildup for war exceeded 200,000 troops in the Persian Gulf region on Thursday.

The United States is seeking Turkish permission for a northern front against Iraq, but Turkey's governing party, facing strong public opposition to a war, delayed a vote to allow in more than 60,000 U.S. soldiers. Justice and Development Party leaders called for parliament to take up the issue on Saturday.

Inside Iraq, Saddam Hussein was moving some of his best-trained forces into new positions, Bush administration officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

At the United Nations, diplomats said privately that the lack of consensus and tone of the debate Thursday were demoralizing, but many held out hope for compromise among the council's five major powers. The United States and Britain are pushing a resolution that would open the door for war, while Russia, China and France are calling for continued weapons inspections and a diplomatic end to the crisis.

Chinese Ambassador Wang Yingfan said he too hoped for a compromise that could unify the council, "but I could see it's very difficult."

A senior U.S. diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, hinted there may be some room wiggle room in the resolution.

"It's difficult to visualize many, if any changes to it but obviously if people have suggestions to make that preserve the integrity, the intent and purpose of that resolution ... I'm sure we'd be pleased to consider them."

But there were no signs of agreement at Thursday's four-hour meeting, held behind closed-doors.

Bulgaria's U.N. Ambassador Stefan Tavrov, who is considered a likely supporter of the U.S.-backed resolution, said, "I haven't found any important change or ... an important shift in those positions."

British Ambassador Jeremy Greenstock, trying to bolster the case against Iraq, told the council that

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

WAR WITH IRAQ
U.S. MUST CONSIDER CONSEQUENCES
PAGE 4

A SAD DAY...
REMEMBERING TELEVISION PIONEER MR. ROGERS
PAGE 5

MINUTEWOMEN WIN
VICTORY ENDS FIVE-GAME SLIDE FOR UMASS
PAGE 8

Speaker discusses hate and preaches tolerance

Malaka Bublil, founder of Jews Indigenous to the Middle East and North Africa, talks about her life as a child in a hate-filled country and later as a refugee.

By Ikaika C. Arnado
Collegian Correspondent

Malaka Bublil, the founder of Jews Indigenous to the Middle East and North Africa (JIMENA), spoke yesterday to a group of 50 in the Campus Center. Bublil's mission is to educate people about the Jewish persecution of the past.

"Hate is a drug that has very little recovery," Bubil said. "Hate is a weapon of mass destruction."

Bublil formed JIMENA a year ago to educate people about the Jewish plight in the Middle East and North Africa.

"We have been ethnically cleansed from a country that was our home for over 2,000 years," Bublil said.

Bublil is a Libyan refugee. In 1967, anti-Jewish riots broke out in Libya, due to the Six Year War between Egypt and Israel. The riots broke out and Buhlil and her family were forced to leave their country.

On their way to the airport, the bus driver tried to burn their bus.

"It was a fear that paralyzed my body and my mind," Bublil said. She and her family managed to escape to Rome.

Bublil then spoke of how she grew up in a hate-filled institution as a young child. She remembers the adversity she faced, going to school in an Arabic country. When Bublil was six, her mother took her to look into classes only to see the hate taught in schools.

"A teacher said: if you have 10 Jews and kill five, how many do you have?" Bublil said about a women teaching an arithmetic class. "That was my first taste of hate."

People often ask Bublil why, if she is striving for peace, does she keep bringing up the tumultuous past.

"Today, we need to confront the forces of hatred that made me into a refugee because these are the same forces of hatred that continue to drive the conflict in the Middle East, and terrorism around the world," Bublil said.

Despite bad experiences, Bublil still preaches tolerance.

"To the Palestinian mother, who sends her child to become a suicide bomber, I say this: Hate is a drug from which there is little hope of recovery. Teach tolerance, not hate," she said. "I am a mother, like you. I feel love is stronger that hate. I too was exiled. But my heart is healing. Despite my pain, despite my despair, despite my anger, I would never want to emulate the hate that exists in the world today."

Bublil's speech inspired further discussion from the audience. Joalia Davie, a Jewish refugee from Egypt in the audience, spoke of her childhood.

"I went to a French private school, and I had to

Continued on page 3

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What do you think of Mitt Romney's proposed budget cuts that potentially eliminate the UMass network?"

By James Schaffer

Katrina Screen
Senior
Communications & Art History

"If UMass gets more money, anything would be good."

Aaron Oakes
Sophomore
Exercise Science

"Sounds a little fishy to me."

Patrick High
Sophomore
Political Science

"Mistake, because it would eliminate many opportunities that are available for students and professors."

Matthew Garber
Junior
Anthropology

"We would really miss the connections we have with other campuses."

Eric Salgado
Junior
Biology-Chemistry

"I don't think that one man should have this much power over the state's financial situation."

Pete Lazar
Senior
Computer Science

"I think we would end up getting more resources because of it. Everything we need is taught here."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew E. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001
ISRAELIS MOURNED IN TEL-AVIV

ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001,
PALESTINIANS CELEBRATED IN LEBANON

London police following up tips in search for US fugitive James Bulger

LONDON – Police in London said Thursday they are following up on 90 calls from the public in their search for James "Whitey" Bulger, one of the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation's most-wanted fugitives.

The calls were prompted by a segment on Bulger on the British Broadcasting Corp. program "Crimewatch" on Wednesday night.

"Work will be carried out in the coming days on the information received but at this stage there are no confirmed sightings (or) developments," Metropolitan Police said in a statement. "FBI agents are expected to remain in London as this work is being progressed."

Bulger, 73, is wanted in connection with 18 murders and for allegedly leading a criminal organization involved in extortion and drug dealing in and around Boston.

Police have said a businessman reported seeing Bulger in central London in September.

London police said they had established that Bulger rented a safety deposit box at Barclays Bank in Piccadilly, central London, in 1992. The branch was closed in 1997 and the box was moved to another branch.

Police obtained a warrant to search the box in October, and said they found an Irish passport in Bulger's name, some correspondence and U.S., British, Swiss, French and Irish currency worth a total of about $57,000.

A key found in the box was subsequently traced to a safety deposit box in Ireland containing an undisclosed amount of cash, police said.

Bulger fled the United States in 1995 just before he was indicted on racketeering and extortion charges. He has since been indicted on additional charges related to 18 murders.

The FBI is offering a $1 million reward for information leading directly to his arrest. U.S. authorities first sought help from British police in January 2000.

- Associated Press

Iraq makes agreement before deadline

Continued from page 1

fresh British intelligence indicated Iraq was producing anthrax, sarin and other biological and chemical agents. He said missiles were being hidden and scientists were being threatened.

At the end of the session, French Ambassador Jean-Marc de La Sabliere said the majority of the council still opposed the draft resolution and that he pushed the French proposal for additional time for inspections.

Ambassadors said there was little actual discussion about the merits of the U.S. resolution or the French proposal. And they couldn't agree on the content of Blix's next presentation to the council or even agree on which day next week he would appear.

Blix was invited to discuss his 17-page report detailing the work of his staff in Iraq over the past three months. The report was submitted to the United Nations Wednesday and will be sent to council ambassadors on Friday.

In a key section of the report, read to the Associated Press by council diplomats, Blix says Saddam could have made greater efforts "to find remaining proscribed items or credible evidence showing the absence of such items."

Other sections of the report cited positive examples of Iraqi cooperation, but said it was "hard to understand why a number of the measures which are now being taken could not have been initiated earlier. If they had been taken earlier, they might have borne fruit," Blix wrote.

U.S. officials had said they expected Iraq would agree to destroy its missiles, which were found to have a range exceeding the 93-mile limit set by the Security Council at the end of the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

In a letter to Blix on Thursday, Iraq agreed "in principle" to destroy its Al Samoud 2 missiles. U.N. diplomats and officials said on condition of anonymity.

But it wasn't immediately clear whether Iraq's letter constituted an unconditional acceptance and whether Iraq would meet the Saturday deadline to begin the destruction, as Blix has ordered.

Blix told reporters earlier this week that the missile issue would be a key test of Iraq's cooperation.

While Blix has noted some recent Iraqi cooperation, he lamented in his report: "It is hard to understand why a number of the measures which are now being taken could not have been initiated earlier."

Nonetheless, he noted that inspections resumed only in November after a four-year break and asked, "Is it the right time to close the door?"

The U.S. draft resolution authorizing war was presented earlier this week by the United States, Britain and Spain.

There was some evidence that support for the resolution was gaining ground, including signals that Mexico had changed its strong anti-war stance.

Pakistan is also a key vote. Iraq and the United States each sent envoys to Islamabad on Thursday to state their case.

Walkout planned

Continued from page

and the different ethnic factions, Klare said. Iraq contains over 200 billion barrels of untapped, unclaimed oil. The estimated worth of that much oil is close to $5 trillion.

If war went badly it could wind up costing America $2 trillion, said Klare. A draft could be instituted to maintain the enormous military presence required to keep peace in Iraq.

"There are not enough soldiers in the military to fight two wars on this scale. I foresee a crisis developing over the issue of manpower in the military," Klare said. "One thing we should be clear about is the people who are being mobilized and rounded up, and sent to Iraq are victims just as much as the Iraqis are. We should see them as victims of the war. My heart goes out to those people and their families, because I think they are being dragged into an unnecessary war."

The Bush administration would much prefer the military consisting entirely of professional soldiers, Klare said. He explained that drafts are very unpopular with the American people, and draftees make for poor soldiers. The protests against the Vietnam War began, in large part, with the commencement of the draft. According to Klare, the Bush administration is loathe to institute a draft.

"There may be more enrollment," Klare said. "The economy will probably tank if there is a war... but then, that makes soldiers more expensive."

To subscribe to a U Mass Coalition Against the War mailing list contact Natalya Weinstein-Roberts by email at Natalyaz@yahoo.com, or head to www.moveon.org for more information about global action.

Living as a refugee

Continued from page 1

learn Arabic. When I learned Arabic I learned Arabic poems. I had to answer questions such as who is the cursed enemy of God, that's the poem, and the cursed enemy of the god was Israel, and that's what I had to answer," Davie said

Davie spoke of a need for Jews to recognize their identity.

"It's important for Jews to know they're Jewish, and not to be afraid to be Jewish, even though they are. A lot of Jews have not spoken up. It's important, because this is the first time I spoken up," Davie said.

Students were very receptive to Bublil's speech. They appreciated the honesty and reality of what she said.

"We hear so many stories from the media, and we don't know what filter it goes through before we hear it. This is the real thing from the horses mouth," said Ben Nathan, an undeclared freshman. "We need to be thinking that love is stronger then hate and we got the message here tonight."

This event was sponsored by the David Project and the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI).

Basement Breakdown
Siawn Ou (right), a junior Economics major, practices his break dance moves in the Campus Center basement while his friend looks on.

www.dailycollegian.com

Get 600 Whenever Minutes® for only $39.99

600 Whenever minutes
Unlimited weekends
Free long distance and roaming
$39.99 a month

Whenever minutes means whenever savings.

ONLY $49.99
FOR A MOTOROLA C332
AFTER $50.00 MAIL-IN REBATE
SRP $99.99

INTRODUCING T-MOBILE.
GET MORE™ WITH THE WORLD'S LARGEST ALL-GSM NETWORK.

T··Mobile·
authorized dealer

2000 / T-Mobile
241 King Street
Northampton, MA 01060
(Located in Potpourri Plaza across the street from Stop & Shop)

★ Three Divisions: Men, Women and Co-ed

ATLANTIC 10 ShootOut

★ Free and open to all students

$10,000

TO ENTER LOG ON:
www.atlantic10.org

OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS AND REGISTRATION

PRESENTED BY

GMAC
NAUTICA COMPETITION THE NEWEST PLAYER IN MEN'S FRAGRANCE
new balance
US AIRWAYS
Caribbean

• Free T-shirt, food and radio for all participants!
• Win airline tickets!
• Win sneakers!

SHOOTOUT QUALIFYING ROUND:
Tuesday, March 4 • 7:00 p.m.
Mullins Center

CO-ED SHOOTOUT FINALS:
Wednesday, March 5 • 7:00 p.m.
Mullins Center

LOCAL SPONSORS
Coca-Cola · Collegian · Hampshire Mall · wmua 91.1 fm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Vaccinating for AIDS: The best hope for the future

Amid all the discussion over Mitt Romney's new budget, why Norah Jones won so many Grammys, and the continuing saga in the Middle East, a noteworthy medical story may have slipped below some people's radar.

The results of the first clinical testing on humans of an AIDS vaccine were released. The story did not receive as much press as would have been expected with positive results. Indeed the first vaccine failed. Sort of.

VaxGen, the company producing the vaccine, had high hopes for the preventative measure, shooting for a 50 percent reduction in the infection rates among those patients testing the new vaccine. Unfortunately, infection rates only dropped 5.8 percent.

"Of course I'm disappointed. But having worked in AIDS this long, I'm accustomed to being disappointed," said Dr. Don Francis, the president of VaxGen.

All the news related to the study was not negative though. In an interesting twist, the infection rates over the three-year testing period were reduced by 67 percent. In the case of blacks, the reduction rate was 78 percent.

Scientists are baffled at the disparity in the numbers, but state that it is definitely something to be investigated further.

"We found that there clearly was a sub-group here of about 10 percent of the individuals that responded quite effectively, declared Francis. "So if that opens the way, I'm thrilled."

While many in the highly volatile world of AIDS research and prevention are debating the significance of the splinter group, the real goal on everyone's mind remains to be finding an effective vaccine.

With AIDS running rampant throughout the entire world, the disease has become a global crisis and has even been classified as a national security threat by certain nations. Those who doubt the disease's impact need only look at sub-Saharan Africa, where infection rates are through the roof.

In the United States, and other wealthy nations, an expensive cocktail of drugs is used to keep the disease at bay as long as possible. A downside of the AIDS cocktail however has been a scary trend of AIDS infections inching back upwards as people begin to think that the treatment equals a cure.

Vaccinations are cheaper than treatments for an already ill person are and would be easier to spread around the globe. The issue is of such urgency that the FDA was willing to grant approval to VaxGen with only a 50 percent prevention rate, which they fell far short of. Most vaccinations need to prove to be at least 80 percent effective.

We at The Collegian applaud the efforts put forth thus far in trying to find a vaccine for what can be described as possibly the greatest health threat our world has faced since the influenza epidemic almost a century ago.

In the end, finding a vaccine will not only be the best method of prevention, but also the most realistic solution. Diseases such as smallpox and polio have been cut down by vaccinations. AIDS will someday, hopefully, be added to that list as well.

Information from CBS News was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

You break it, you buy it

Yousef Munayyer

Two days ago, Hamid Karzai, Prime Minister of Afghanistan (or mayor of Kabul as he has been called), appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee and pleaded that they not forget to aid Afghanistan if a war with Iraq begins. Well, unfortunately for him, the forgetting process has already begun.

When the bombs began to fall on Afghanistan on Oct. 7, 2001 and we began to free them from the Taliban, we did so with the promise that we would aid the reconstruction of the country. Afghanistan, a nation of many ethnic peoples like Pashtos, Uzbeks, and Tajiks, desperately needed help to stabilize. They feared that without stabilization the country would fall back into the constant faction wars that have plagued the nation since the end of the Soviet invasion in the early 1980s. And since this process takes time, constant support would be necessary, or so one would think.

So you would assume President Bush's proposed budget for 2004 would include a good chunk of aid to Afghanistan. Unfortunately it didn't. When the budget reached Congress, the Bush administration had forgotten (yes, forgotten) to put that in as an item on the budget. Embarrassed members of Congress had to pencil in $300 million to cover up this blunder.

In the world of international relations today it seems that there is this common understanding among nations. It's very similar to policies in pottery shops: if you break it, you buy it. This is probably because there is some sort of international order right now and no one wants to disrupt it. If a nation decided to attack another nation or change the regime there it becomes responsible for fixing it, especially if it acts unilaterally.

So this has to be considered in what seems to be an inevitable war on Iraq. Are we prepared to pay for Iraq's reconstruction once we break it? I'm doubtful. Some might point to post-WWII Germany and say that it was successful after we broke and fixed it. However, we cannot neglect the fact that Iraq is drastically different because it is much more like Afghanistan and the former Yugoslavia in that it is much more divided ethnically, religiously, and ideologically. Sure, Germany was an instant success but you can't expect to take a broken Iraq, add democracy, and watch it grow the same way.

> "Sure, Germany was an instant success but you can't expect to take a broken Iraq, add democracy, and watch it grow the same way."

I have heard these arguments about going in to help the oppressed Iraqi people. But I ask, in the long run will they be any better off? Not if we plan on walking away and leaving them in a broken, destabilized, sorry excuse for a nation.

What we have begun to forget to do in Afghanistan cannot happen in a post-Saddam Iraq especially if there is no strong central government.

Today Iraq has within its badly drawn borders Kurds and Arabs, Shi'ites and Sunnis (not to mention a small group of Christians), Ba'athist Socialists and Islamic fundamentalists. There has also been inter-group fighting, especially between the Kurds who are looking for autonomy, in northern Iraq.

The Kurdish issue continues to be a big problem. Turkey has already said that it will not accept an autonomous Kurdish state. Since the Kurds span from eastern Turkey to the south Caspian Sea they cross many internationally recognized borders, and an autonomous Kurdish state in this area would undoubtedly spark a conflict far greater than any war to oust Saddam Hussein.

The Shi'ites in the south, once freed, may invite Iran to restart the bloody border war of the 1980s and may lead to an even larger regional conflict tearing the Middle East apart on denominational lines, leaving Christians and Israel in between this horrific possibility.

So are we prepared to take on this responsibility? If this administration ignores Afghanistan while they still have thousands of troops there, how can we trust that they will not forget Iraq?

To all those people in America out there who are still gung-ho about this war, take some time to think about the responsibilities and long-term investment we will have to put into rebuilding Iraq. Many countries do not want to get involved because of this reason. Right now our allies seem to be the United Kingdom, Bulgaria and um...um....Cheneystan and Rumsfeldia. We are not going to walk out of Iraq in a year or two or 10 even if Saddam is gone on the first day of war. Many experts have said that we may never leave Iraq because of how potentially instable it will become. Are you prepared to pass on that debt to future generations?

This needs to be part of the thinking process on this war because it has not been talked about enough and is definitely crucial. If we continue to make decisions that only look good in the short term, we will be dealing with conflict forever. Reconstructing a nation we destroy cannot be neglected before war and should not be forgotten afterwards.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

What do you get when you mix snow and sweets?

Erika Lovley

If you want to view paradise, simply walk around UMass and view it. I did, on the first day of spring semester. I skipped down the stairs near the health center, only to stop dead in my tracks. The entire stairway looked as if it had been hit with some sort of projectile vomit consisting of regurgitated Coca-Cola.

The smell was overwhelming. It smelled like either fermented gingerbread dough or Grandma's cookies gone horribly wrong. To top it off, my new Steve Maddens were covered in the goo. The shoes weren't just slightly splashed either – they looked as if they had been hit by a tidal wave.

I never thought my life could be anything but catastrophe. But now it had turned into a code red crisis, involving a sticky, stinky stain that Clorox and Febreeze couldn't remove.

"It's that molasses again," an upperclassman muttered. I gave him a blank stare. Molasses? Was this some sort of annual spring term prank? Little did I know, this shoe-ruining event was soon to become a daily affair.

The campus of UMass is unique. Rather than using salt to de-ice our sidewalks, we rely on a sickly sweet concoction of sugary molasses. Supposedly, this mixture is the most environmentally safe salt substitute to use when a blizzard is a-blowin'.

Using this sugary syrup keeps the grass alive and the soil pH balanced, rather than leached by the use of salt. It also keeps the ducks in the pond healthy. Personally, I think we have enough waterfowl at this university to have a campus wide game of duck hunt, complete with a game dinner afterwards, but that's just me.

This succulent solution to slippery sidewalks seems like a plan that only a culinary school would think of, or a confectionary genius. I am convinced the university has secretly employed Mr. Willy Wonka himself, in order to keep our walks liability-free. You may have your doubts, but think about it.

> "I am convinced the university has secretly employed Mr. Willy Wonka himself, in order to keep our walks liability-free."

Don't you ever wonder how the molasses magically appears onto the sidewalks overnight?

There's no earthly way of knowing from where the molasses stream is flowing. That's because it is spread in the wee hours of the morning by a band of Oompaloompas. While one Oompaloompa rides a molasses spewing-type machine, two other Oompaloompas walk behind and roll the brown goo around with Twizzlers and oversized gummy bears. In the twilight hours, our school transforms from a concrete slab of learning into a world of pure imagination – at least on the walkways.

Meanwhile, while you trudge around in the cold, you no longer have to worry about some guy smudging your Pumas. Rather, you better watch for the brown goo sloshing on your Jimmy Choos. I dropped my apple on to the sidewalk traveling uphill from the Dining Commons. It immediately transformed into something that could be sold at a concession stand at the Big E. Talk about your childhood wishes.

I've slipped and fallen more times trying to avoid the molasses than ice, snow, and sleet combined. Maybe it's because I'm too busy looking for Everlasting Gobstoppers and a golden ticket. But it's repulsive, revolting, and wrong smelling environmental friendly sludge all day long. Did you all stop to smell the walkways last Friday when the temperature passed 40? Nothing could escape the power of that odor. The candy man must have been proud.

From what I hear, this Oompaloompa process has been used successfully for several years; thus, the rollers keep on rolling and they aren't showing any signs that they are slowing. If this process continues to work, I wouldn't be surprised if the school turns to other confectionary wonders when the grounds need upkeep. Perhaps we will begin to spray the trees with chocolate syrup as a squirrel repellent, (they hate chocolate) or water the grass with 7-Up. Maybe some of those yellow buttercups will pop up in the spring, edible saucer included, just to make the world taste good.

If you are wise you'd listen to me. Don't let this sticky situation drive you to Loompa Land. If you're afraid of the little people, don't worry. The Oompaloompas only come out in the wee hours of the morning. Just another good excuse to sleep late. En route to class, if you are so overcome by the molasses aroma that you feel like skipping your academic duties, simply repeat this inspiring phrase by Veruca Salt: "I want the world." NOT "I want to hurl."

Erika Lovley is a Collegian Columnist.

Farewell Fred Rogers

Mister Rogers died yesterday. And for anyone who grew up in the last thirty years, a little bit of us died as well.

Throughout his career of public service, Fred Rogers echoed one overriding message: love yourself and love There goes the neighborhood

Mister Rogers died yesterday. And for anyone who grew up in the last thirty years, a little bit of us died as well.

Throughout his career of public service, Fred Rogers echoed one overriding message: love yourself and love each other. They were strong words from a man so frail. The words seemed so simple, the concept so obvious. Yet, for kids and adults alike, acting out the message is so difficult.

With a unique style of gentle honest and utmost humility, Mr. Rogers taught us all how feeling left out can be sad, how forgiving someone you are angry at can be liberating, and how being thankful for each can be satisfying. Where other children's shows sugarcoated reality, Mr. Rogers spoke from the heart. His voice was that of sincerity, sympathy, kindness, and understanding. When we had a bad day at school or when our friends had abandoned us, Mr. Rogers was there everyday giving us a reason to celebrate.

In an age when children's shows relied on high tech graphics, exaggerated cartoons, and loud music, Mr. Rogers needed only a fish tank, a sweater and a train set. His show, like his life and his message, was simple. He blended puppetry and mail with imagination and soft speaking. He taught us that our mind could take us anywhere. He taught us that we could be whomever we wanted to. He believed in our dreams and in us, even if no one else did.

In an age when sex, drugs, and violence permeate television and the movies, Fred Rogers showed care, concern and compassion. Mr. Rogers kept children away from the bad influences around them. He gave hope to the hopeless and direction to the lost.

In an age of commercialism where profits and television ratings mean more than anything else, Fred Rogers never once aired a commercial on his program. Though ratings continued to drop in the 1990s as the show wore on, Mr. Rogers continued his mission. With Fred, there was no hidden agenda, no profit-driven motive, and no avaricious ambition. There was a simple credo of work hard, stay in school, be kind to others, and embrace yourself for who you are.

Despite his gentle nature, Fred Rogers tackled the thorniest of issues, from race, to divorce, from war to death. When parents had no way of explaining to their children the September 11 disaster, Fred Rogers was there. When parents could not possibly tell their children that Grandma had died, Mr. Rogers was there. When parents could not tackle the issue of discrimination, Mr. Rogers was there.

Eric Martignetti

Perhaps the most striking thing of all about Mr. Rogers was his humility. He never asked for celebrity status or Hollywood publicity. He never begged the cameras or the newspapers for a story. He never bragged or took advantage of fame. When everyone was selling out, Mr. Rogers was held strong. He quietly went about his business of teaching children and children-at-heart that they were special.

> "With Fred, there was no hidden agenda, no profit-driven motive, and no avaricious ambition."

At the end of each episode, Mr. Rogers promised that he would be back when the day would be new and there was something more to do. We believed Fred Rogers each time he said something. We trusted Mr. Rogers because he was our friend. Maybe we believed him because we needed someone to believe, something to believe in. Maybe we were lonely, or sad, or tired, or angry, or desperate. Maybe we just needed someone to listen, someone to understand.

Fred Rogers may have died, but a piece of him and his message live on in each of us. We are all better off for having been a part of his neighborhood. We'll miss his sweaters, his slippers, his theme song, his fish, and his glasses. Most of all we'll miss him.

Thank you Fred, for always being there.

Eric Martignetti is a UMass student.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, [illegible] number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed to [illegible] Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as "Editorial/Opinion." [illegible] be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

By TODD SPANGLER
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) – A television icon who put on a zip-up cardigan and sneakers each day and gently invited millions of children to be his neighbor, Fred Rogers never wavered in the mission he considered his ministry: to use "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" as a way to persuade young viewers to love themselves and others.

Early Thursday, Rogers died following a bout with stomach cancer at his Pittsburgh home, leaving friends, colleagues and generations of people who grew up watching him in mourning. He was 74.

For more than three decades, his low-key, low-tech public television show refused to follow its louder, more animated competition, sticking to the format Rogers developed, presenting him as one adult in an increasingly busy world who always had time to talk to children about their feelings and listen to them.

"What a loss to the world. He talked to kids at the ages of four to six about feelings. That's the age when they begin to realize they have an effect on their world," said Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, an author and child development specialist.

An ordained Presbyterian minister, Rogers produced the show at Pittsburgh public television station WQED beginning in 1966, going national two years later. The final episode, which was taped in December 2000, aired in August 2001, though PBS affiliates continued to broadcast old episodes.

Composing his own songs for the show, Rogers opened each episode in a set made to look like a comfortable living room, singing, "It's a beautiful day in the neighborhood." One of his sweaters hangs in the Smithsonian Institution.

He would talk to viewers in a slow, quiet voice about their feelings and introduce them to other characters and guests, including cellist Yo-Yo Ma and trumpeter Wynton Marsalis. Then, he would take his audience on a magical trolley ride into the Neighborhood of Make-Believe, where puppet creations including X the Owl, King Friday XIII and Daniel Striped Tiger would interact with each others and adults.

Rogers did much of the puppet work.

On Thursday, staff at Family Communications Inc., which produced the show, brought bouquets of flowers left outside WQED and placed them on the set next to King Sail's castle.

"He was not an actor. People would ask us, 'What is Mr. Rogers really like?' The thing was, he was the same," said family spokesman David Newell, who played Mr. McFeely on the show.

The show won four Emmys, plus one for lifetime achievement. Rogers received a Peabody Award in 1993 and the Presidential Medal of Freedom in July 2002.

In April 2002, President Bush invited Rogers to help launch a reading program. When Rogers entered the room with no introduction, spontaneous applause erupted.

Rogers hushed the audience, asking for 10 seconds of silence to "think about anyone who has loved you and wanted the best for you."

Rogers was born in Latrobe, 30 miles southeast of Pittsburgh. Early in his career, he was an unseen puppeteer in "The Children's Corner," a local show he helped start at WQED in 1954. In seven years of unscripted, live television, he developed many of the puppets he used later.

He studied early childhood development at the University of Pittsburgh and was ordained in 1963 with a charge to continue his work with children and families through television. That same year, Rogers accepted an offer to develop "Misterogers," his own 15-minute show, for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

He brought the show back to Pittsburgh in 1966, incorporating segments of the CBC show into a new series distributed by the Eastern Educational Network to cities including Boston, Philadelphia and Washington.

In 1968, "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" began distribution across the country through National Educational Television, which later became the Public Broadcasting Service.

Through the years, Rogers dealt with topics ranging from anger and anxiety to death and divorce. He taught children how to share and even why they shouldn't fear taking a bath by assuring them they would never go down the drain.

"Mister Rogers was the father who was available. He was the unhurried guy who always had time for the kids," said Alan Hiller, a child psychologist at Maimonides Medical Center in New York.

Joe Negri, who played the royal handyman in the Neighborhood of Make-Believe and owner of Negri's Music Shop, said Rogers demanded perfection, refusing to accept shoddy ad-libbing by guests who may have thought they could slack off during a kid's show.

The show's ratings peaked in 1985-86 when about eight percent of all U.S. households with televisions tuned in. By the 1999-2000 season, viewership had dropped to about 2.7 percent, or 3.6 million people.

Bob Keeshan, who appeared on television as "Captain Kangaroo," said he and Rogers often spoke of how children's programming had become increasingly violent.

"I don't think it's any secret that Fred and I were not very happy with the way children's television had gone," Keeshan said.

Continued on page 5

The Grouch starts his 'Crusade' for notoriety

By JUSTIN CHELLMAN
Collegian Staff

The Grouch is one of hip-hop's greatest contemporary emcees – that you've never heard of. As one of the core members of the California crew The Living Legends, the Grouch is held in great reverence by the underground heads and by other underground artists, but is scarcely known "above the ground." This is one of the downsides of being a true independent artist (the Grouch produces his own tracks as well as raps, and puts the music out himself without a label). He went from "slangin'" tapes on the corner to selling CDs at shows and via the Internet on his crew's Web site. These are the main methods of getting his music out. What he has lacked in publicity he has gained in respect by those who know of him and understand what he is attempting to do by staying independent.

Recently, after years of hustling and doing an insane amount of shows and selling as many tapes and CDs as they could, the Living Legends were able to start their own label, Legendary Music. "Crusader for Justice" is one of the first releases on their new label. (The first being the crew's long awaited Living Legends "crew album," "Almost Famous.")

On his new album, the Grouch has managed to do what many artists strive to do, and that is to "one up" themselves, and to make their new album better than the last. Each Grouch album, in my opinion (which may or may not be shared by all his fans), has always been an improvement on the last.

Here on "Crusader for Justice," Grouch has stepped up his beat production; the sound is more crisp and clear. In past albums the Grouch had used a variety of methods to make his beats. In the earlier "hella broke" days for the crew, Grouch and his counterparts used four tracks and made tapes that sounded dirty with a subtle hiss. As he progressed over the years, his production (as well as with other crewmembers) has steadily improved, as he has begun to widen his uses of ways to make beats. On "Crusader" Grouch actually put what type of equipment he has used to make his beats in the production credits for each song, showing his wide range from using the ASR-10, MP-7, to the Triton.

The rhymes on the album are another story. In that aspect of the album: it's a mixed bag. The Grouch has a strange quality about himself when it comes to his emceeing because he has great delivery, his voice is rough, West Coast accented and very unique. This usually forces the Grouch to fall short of spectacular in his actual wording in spitting a rhyme, because it was delivered so well. Sometimes on "Crusader," the Grouch spits rhymes that if another emcee had done the same thing, it may not have worked. That is a testament to one of his talents, as some fans say, no one can rock a Grouch beat like Grouch himself.

That isn't to say that the Grouch doesn't shine lyrically on this album, because he does on several tracks. For instance, the first track "Crumble Your Tower" and the title track "Crusader For Justice" both come hard lyrically as well as smoothly over dope fluid West Coast flavored beats. Where the Grouch falls short on the album (songs like "Cloud 9," and the ode to the love of his life,

Continued on page 6

TransWorld Undeclared draws extreme turnout

By SARA-MEGAN WALSH
Collegian Correspondent

One hundred seventy-five students gathered in the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night to watch the annual presentation of the TransWorld Undeclared Film Tour.

The 60-minute extreme snowboarding and skiing film, hosted by the University of Massachusetts' Ski-N-Board Club, is presented by TransWorld Sports as part of a nationwide tour that makes a stop here at the University of Massachusetts. The film features professional and upcoming athletes in both snowboarding and skiing, performing various stunts, tricks and falls on both snow powdered mountains and everyday walkway railings.

The number of students attending the film increased at least six times from the year before, when approximately 20 to 30 students attended.

The first half of the film featured a high-tech compilation of extreme snowboarders by Mack Dawg Productions. Footage in the film was filled with special effects, with upbeat, fast-paced songs behind them.

The second half of the film gained even more attention then the first, with skiers taking the screen.

"There was more variation in the skiing then boarding, and it showed more crashes," said student Shane Zuffante.

Aaron Owens, president of the Ski-N-Board club, was also impressed with the skiers.

"[The] skiers were going bigger then the boarders," he said. "Don't get me wrong though, the boarders were going big too."

Owen said that he enjoyed the skiing section more than the boarding section "because you could hear the guys talking and the sound of the rails."

Brenda Ning, a representative of TransWorld said before the event that they received a positive response since its premier in Boulder, Colo. Most UMass students walked out satisfied.

"I've got absolutely nothing to complain about," said Will Raymond, a skier with the Snow-N-Board club.

The film went beyond simply amazing and astounding the audience but actually inspiring them as well. When asking students about their ideas on the stunts and tricks they saw, some were encouraged to get out there and "go big," as skiers and snowboarders say. One in particular was Steve Havey, a snowboarder who stated, "I'd like to get out there and try some [tricks], just not around here. There's no powder."

Those who are interested in the athlete's stunts in the film and details on how-to go about attempting to perform them can find further information in the film's supporting magazines such Freeze and TransWorld Snowboarding –or their Web sites.

Unfortunately, for those students wanting to see the film but were unable to make it down to the Student Union Ballroom last night, the film cannot be found on DVD or video. There are only two chances to view the film again: catching up with the TransWorld Undeclared Film Tour at another nearby college campus, or waiting to see if the film ever makes it to television.

Game Two; Round Two

A popular Hollywood myth states Kevin Bacon is somehow connected to every other actor in show business by no more than six degrees, where a degree is a single link between the given movie star and someone else who has appeared on screen with him/her. Rumor states every puzzle has at least one route.

Send your answers to collegianbacon@hotmail.com by no later than noon on Sunday. With your solutions, please include:

-Your Name
-Your University/College
-Your Class Year
-Your Major

This game will end on April 25.
Points are awarded as the following:
GOLD (15 points) - Shortest route, fastest time
SILVER (10 points) - Fastest time only
BRONZE (5 points) - Most creative, thematic route
HONORABLE MENTION (1 point) - All other players with valid solutions

This week's puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & GENE WILDER

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

Jake D. Lewis

'Crusader' sets Grouch's tone

Nikes," which is more of an introspective look at his life. On this track the Grouch acknowledges his mistakes and things that he has taken for granted in his life. He equates the situation to having a new clean pair of Nikes, and how in the beginning you take good care of them but later on take them for granted and let them fall into waste.

"Some People" provide the listener with another song with deep feeling and an underlying message, as the Grouch relates to the listener about how everyone deals with life differently and how "some people get better with time, and some people have a hard time. Some people they age like wine and other people they can't find themselves." On "Crusader" it seems that the Grouch wanted to get a lot more personal. Before its release, he had been talking about how he never wanted to make another song that didn't have any real meaning. This means that he wanted to separate himself from the "battle rhyme" orientated songs that he had done from time to time in the past.

That isn't to say that he has totally abandoned this style because even though that may have been the direction and most of the album is in that vein, the Grouch still has a few tired up "battle like songs." This is shown in "Juxtaposed," with guest Jae One from Hobo Junction, which has a hard beat implemented with scratches by DJ Dice. Grouch and Jae One just trade verses talking about their crews and how dope they are, the basic emcee ego trip. There is also another collaboration track with Diabolic Living Legends crewmember Bicasso and newcomer Zion I from Zion I. The track is called "Moves That Make Me" and boasts one of the best beats I have ever heard the Grouch drop, and all three emcees just rip it up (especially Zion).

There is also one lone track on the album that isn't produced by the Grouch, and that is "Better Than You"and nobody's better than me/not even you when I'm telling the truth/How can it be? You asked the question/say it to yourself and believe in it, listen." The new and positive Grouch can be refreshing at times considering his past work fit well with his name, because it was riddled with pessimism.

To cap off his album the Grouch takes us on a trip into his soul on "More Than Meets The Eye", a sad but hopeful song about his recently deceased father. The Grouch, in this song is actually conversing directly to his father, calling it a song for the journey to the next. The Grouch struggles to put things into words as he tells that "beings like this don't die, don't ask me where they go though/I just know there is more than meets the eye." Not knowing what happens after this life, Grouch explains that he feels that somewhere he knows his father's energy lives on. As the strange guitar riff plays out its last chord, I realized that not only is this the Grouch best sounding album, but it was also one of his deepest, because it was honest.

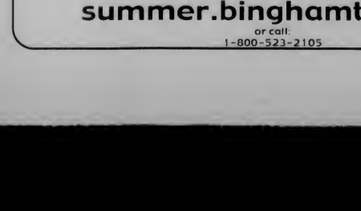
The Grouch was true to himself and by doing so, opened his soul to the listener which allows a better feeling of what he is trying to illustrate, as long as your willing to go along with him. There is room for improvement, but at the pace that the Living Legends are releasing music, I doubt that this will be the last we hear from the Grouch. I enjoyed this album, and look forward to what is in store.

Remembering Mr. Rogers

Some TV shows today are simply too violent to market goods which actually endure. Fred never did that. He had a great interest in kids, he was interested in them and there was a purpose to it," said Bill Kelly, a professor who specializes in popular culture and television at Penn State University.

Rogers never stopped trying to make a difference. He came out of broadcasting retirement last year to record public service announcements telling parents how to help their children deal with the anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks.

"If they see the tragedy replayed on television, they might think it's happening at that moment," Rogers said.



In January, Rogers served as a grand marshal of the Rose Parade with Bill Cosby and Art Linkletter. "More times than I could count I heard the people yelling, 'Welcome to the neighborhood, Mr. Rogers,'" Cosby said.

Off the set, Rogers swam daily, read voraciously and listened to Beethoven.

His gentle manner was the butt of some comedians' jokes. Eddie Murphy parodied him on "Saturday Night Live" with his "Mister Robinson's Neighborhood," a routine Rogers found funny and affectionate.

Rogers was diagnosed with cancer in December 2002 and had surgery in early January, but his health declined in the past two weeks, said Bill Isler, head of Family Communications. Funeral arrangements were incomplete, but Isler said a private service for the family and a public memorial would be scheduled soon.

Rogers is survived by his wife, Joanne, a concert pianist; two sons; and two grandsons.

Will Proudly Present All Male Revue Show
Monday
March 3, 2003
8p.m
Featuring The New York Centerfolds
Pick up your early tickets at club
Free V.I.P room parties
Free Dancers Choice
At 5 PM & 10 PM
Everyday
We will soon have another successful FEMALE Amateur Night
Call for Details
PRIZES
1st - $00
2nd - $00
3rd - $00

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
$139
★ Student Special ★
4 months
Best Aerobics~Best Machines
KLISER • SATURN • FREE WEIGHTS • CYBEX • STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES • TRAXMILLS • ELLIPTICALS • LIFEROWER
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0060
50 AMHERST
Across from Kinko's • Behind 7-Eleven
www.amherstathletic.com

THINK SUMMER NOW!
SUMMER SESSION
BINGHAMTON UNIVERSITY
State University of New York over 250 of the best and most innovative classes at BU courses in arts and sciences, business, education, engineering and nursing available newly developed "Distance Learning" courses nationally-recognized quality at affordable prices beautiful campus, friendly people, comfortable atmosphere
Term I: May 27 – June 27
Term II: July 7 – August 8
Term III: variable
Registration begins March 17
For more information, please visit our website at:
summer.binghamton.edu
or call:
1-800-523-2105

Tennis heads indoors

By Nick Wright
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team recorded a comprehensive away win over Dartmouth yesterday by a score of 5-2, which improves their dual-match record for the spring season to 1-3.

The Minutewomen took the first four points on offer to record victory before the Big Green hit back with two late singles points.

Freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz won the crucial fourth point with a 6-1, 7-5 win at the number three singles position.

The Maroon and White got off to the perfect start by winning all three doubles matches 8-3.

Victories by the number one doubles pairing of sophomore Sasha Edelstein and Iwanowicz and number two pairing of junior Iafra Depontes and sophomore Stephanie Price were enough to earn UMass the doubles point. UMass took the dead rubber courtesy of number three pairing, freshman Camilla Knight and junior Susan Hyams.

The Minutewomen then proceeded to win four of the six singles matchups.

Along with Iwanowicz, those taking singles points for the Maroon and White were Stephanie Price who won at the number two position, 6-1, 6-2, and Hyams in a close game at number five which was eventually decided by a third set tie break. The Cincinnati, Ohio native won 6-4, 2-6, 10-8 (tiebreak) and Knight, at number six, prevailed 6-4, 6-2.

Assistant coach Celeste Frey said of the performance, "Today they played really well, now we're ready for the weekend."

This weekend the Minutewomen will play two home games in consecutive days on the indoor courts at Hampshire College. On Saturday, they will face Columbia at 1 p.m., and on Sunday they will match up against Colgate with a noon start.

Frey said of the Columbia squad, "They are pretty good; there is no pressure on us."

"We are looking forward to Sunday, we will save [Depontes] for Sunday," she added.

Depontes, a 2002 Atlantic 10 All-Conference Selection and Academic All American, is still recovering from the shoulder surgery which saw her sit out the fall portion of the schedule.

The injury forced her to serve underarm in her singles match against Army and she has so far been used sparingly until she regains full match fitness.

After this weekend's doubleheader, the next home match for the Minutewomen is on April 2, when Rhode Island will provide the opposition.

Clashing styles at Garber on Saturday

Continued from page 8

ning," Cannella said. "They're looking at last year's game...and thinking 'we should have won.' They are going to come up here confidently."

UMass midfielder Chris Fiore, who scored six points in last week's win over Sacred Heart, hasn't forgotten last year's trip to Stony Brook and he's making sure that no Minuteman has.

"It's played over and over in our heads, the guys who have played," Fiore said. "The guys who didn't play, we definitely remind them of it."

The Minutemen are at a slight disadvantage this week, as Stony Brook hasn't played this season. Therefore, the Seawolves have UMass game footage, but Cannella must rely on other means.

"It's tough," Cannella said. "You are going on some information on maybe a scrimmage or guys from last year. We have tapes from last year in the playoffs. We look at what might be their tendencies."

The Minutemen opened their season last week with a 13-7 win over Sacred Heart. Fiore scored a career-high five goals in the cogtest – which occurred in a steady downpour of rain.

SHU jumped out to a 2-0 lead three minutes into the game, but UMass came back immediately and held a 5-3 advantage at the end of the first quarter. The Minutemen added seven more goals in the second and third quarters to seal its season opener.

Rivalry on tap

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is playing its second game in a row on friendly Garber Field tonight. This time the Minutewomen will be facing a much different animal than last week's Holy Cross squad.

The Maroon and White will take on UConn, which is playing its first game of the season. "We don't know much about them yet, it's their first game of the season...we have to go off last season's stats," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said.

Looking at statistics, the Minutewomen know they need to contain sophomore standout Tracy Mullany, who led the Lady Huskies in points last year with 30 goals and 11 assists.

Alongside Mullany on attack will be seniors Heather Bliss and Kelly Feely, who combined for 51 goals and 13 assists last season.

Even with this formidable attack, coach Bolduc is more concerned with the UConn defense. "They execute the press well... they are a strong, athletic team," she said.

UConn uses a much more intense defensive strategy than Holy Cross. The Lady Crusaders spent more time playing a hanging-back, conservative defense. The Lady Huskies come out and contest the attacker more, leading to a faster game play stressing one-on-one matchups.

UConn also plays pressure defense behind the cage, which is uncommon for teams to do. "It's a more exciting defense... UConn does what we practice," Bolduc said.

The Maroon and White had a slow first half against Holy Cross where they didn't capitalize on some opportunities. A few of these mistakes were on fundamental lapses, which hurt possession time. "We need to get ground balls, draw control, and hustle," Bolduc said.

The Minutewomen will have to come out like they did in the second half against the Crusaders, scoring three goals in five minutes. They are going to need to slash and attack the cage more in order to open up opportunities against UConn.

The Maroon and White defense will be faced with a formidable attack that uses a variety of picks in the scoring area to open up one of their shooters. Bolduc added, "We practice against it... they go into clusters and pick until there is an opening."

Senior goaltender Cyndi Doyle will be in the net for the Minutewomen after missing the second half of play last week. Doyle will be with a strong defensive unit led by Kirsten St. Hilare, Andrea Valachovic, and Jackie Nesbitt, who had a strong presence against the Lady Crusaders.

The Lady Huskies defeated the Maroon and White last year in Storrs, Conn. This will be the first challenge of the year for the Maroon and White, and UConn will be one of the tougher teams that UMass plays – outside the Atlantic 10 – and are a good measuring stick for where they are. "We need to focus on our game style and play our game," said Bolduc.

Both teams exhibit a solid amount of talent, and it will come down to who makes the fewest mistakes.

"It will be the battle of details in the small stuff," Bolduc said. "They are a well-coached, athletic, solid team."

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 - Thursday 3/6/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
CHARLIE & THE CHOCOLATE FACTORY (PG) 1:10 4:20 7:15 10:20
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00
DARK BLUE (R) 1:40 4:30 7:50 10:30 (DIGI)
SHOWS Sun 3/2 - Sneak Preview of Agent Cody Banks (PG) 1:00pm
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 4:05 6:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05
LOVE ACTUALLY (R) 1:30 4:45 7:45 10:30
BOWFINGER (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 10:00
HOW TO LOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:00 7:25 10:10
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
LILO & STITCH (PG) 1:15 4:20 7:00
LILYA 4-EVER (R) 1:15 4:25 7:10 10:00
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 8:00
Senior Show 3/4/03 - GODS AND GENERALS 9:00AM
Doors open at 8:15AM
~no passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES; NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

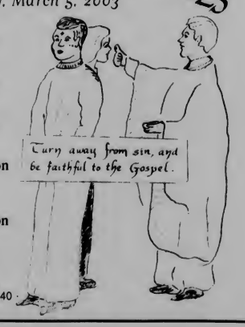
Butler did it: big win for UM

Continued from page 8

tive points from six different players, and built a 30-25 lead at the 17:08 mark of the second frame.

"Our defense really picked up and allowed us to make that run," Butler said. "We knew we had to do something to pick us up, and we went to an aggressive man-to-man and it really paid off for us."

The lead grew to 52-40 with just 5:05 left in the contest, and the Minutewomen would connect on 11 of their 24 made free throws down the stretch to hold off the Fordham rally and preserve the much-needed victory.

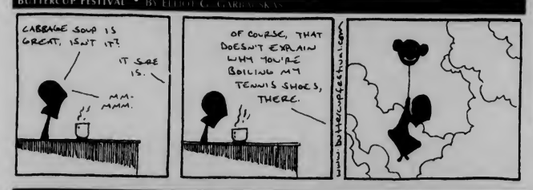


"It really helped to get to the line [39] times tonight," Dacko said. "We've been trying to do that all year, just pound the ball inside, and tonight it worked."

"We took it to the hoop aggressively all night," Butler added.

After being shutout for the first 11:31 of the game, Butler finished the night with an impressive double-double – her 22nd of the season – on 21 points and 19 rebounds in 39 minutes. Classmate Nekole Smith chipped in with 14 points for UMass.

The Minutewomen will now turn their attention to Sunday's Senior Day matchup with Duquesne. UMass will honor its seven seniors before the game, which will again be crucial for postseason positioning. The Dukes will enter play as losers of four of their last five.



"We're not going to finish second or first and get the bye," Dacko said. "But we always want to win and finish the regular season on a high note, so it's a game we really want."

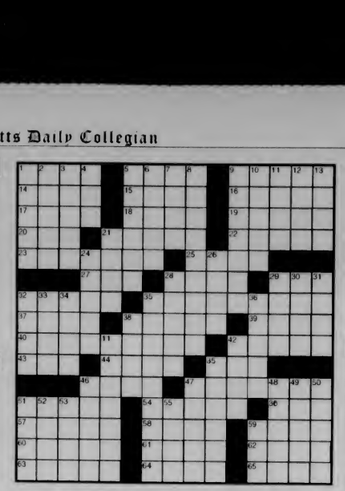
ASH WEDNESDAY SERVICES
Newman Center
Wednesday, March 5, 2003
8:00 A.M
Mass and Distribution of Ashes
12:15 P.M
Mass and Distribution of Ashes
5:15 P.M
Mass and Distribution of Ashes
7:00 P.M
Liturgy of the Word and Distribution of Ashes
9:00 P.M
Liturgy of the Word and Distribution of Ashes
Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St.
413-549-0300
The Catholic Community at the Newman Center invites you to join them to begin the 40 days of the Lenten journey.

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Elliott G. Garbus-Kay

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Elliott G. Garbus-Kay

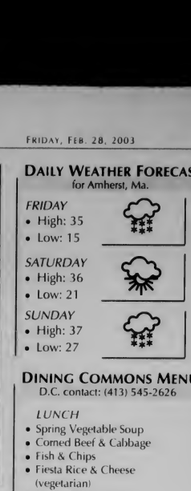
ELSIE HOOPER • By Robert D. Krzakowski

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley



GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Comrad X



ACROSS
1 "Kon-Tiki" craft
5 Matured
9 Act cranky
14 Mass Cinders of old comics
15 Perform again
16 Gossipy tidbit
17 Tart
18 In charge of 19 Fruit stand buy
20 Chimney of filmdom
21 Smelled bad
22 Robins domiciles
23 Tycoon
25 Commanded
27 Military addr.
28 Job application
29 Hot brew
32 Extinct birds
35 Book extract
37 Wax-coated cheese
38 Covered with goo
39 Proceed
40 Nonsoldiers
42 Smart-mouthed
43 Lock turner
44 Monsieur's airport
45 Perfect score
46 "Soft Watches" painter
47 Delicate
51 Actress — Hunt
54 Potato snacks
56 Tease
57 In a set
58 Minimal amount
59 — Kong
60 Contributor
61 Radiate
62 Not even twice
63 Gets wind of 64 Liars
65 Tinted

DOWN
1 Kingdom
2 Metalmaking giant
3 Throw angrily
4 Youngster
5 Clavé
6 Vaudeville show
7 Strange-la
8 Manuals
9 Mom's mom
10 Delhi corn
11 Safe callers
12 Shed hair
13 U.S. leader
21 Drains, as energy
24 Wynonna's mom
26 Bohemian
28 Drill
29 Bindings
30 Vast ages
31 Rooney of "60 Minutes"
32 Ship's floor
33 "Garfield" pooch
34 — Jones locker
35 Competent
36 Longbow's sound
38 Bitby, maybe
41 Replacement vehicles
42 Oceans
45 Takes out to dinner
46 Prevent
47 Be accepted (2 wds.)
48 Sarcasm
49 Spear
50 — on (incited)
51 Shrill
52 New York canal
53 Molten rock
55 Nero's city
59 Coal scuttle

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2/28/03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Let's get out of this women's clothing and get into our tights!

- Robin Hood: Men in Tights

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 15

SATURDAY
- High: 36
- Low: 21

SUNDAY
- High: 37
- Low: 27

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Spring Vegetable Soup
- Corned Beef & Cabbage
- Fish & Chips
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
- Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
- Spring Vegetable Soup
- Veal Parmesan
- Boston Scrod
- Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schaffer
COPY EDITOR
S.J. Port
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jolene Rousseau / Adam Shane

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You may realize that it will be easier to circumvent someone's indifferent and annoying attitude.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
What begins casually early in the day may become serious business before you are through.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You should be able to cloak an unpleasant truth today and keep others from becoming unduly upset.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You must be careful today not to give people the wrong impression when you respond instinctively today.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You must be willing to answer questions and make choices for yourself today.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Take care not to let your emotions rise to the surface too quickly and get the better of you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Are you willing to step forward and tell others what you know? You must prepare to face the consequences.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
An independent investigation on your part is likely to reveal some facts that have been overlooked.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
An unexpected discovery may have you doubting your security at this time.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You may be temporarily confused as a result of a surprise encounter with someone who you may not know.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will have to spend the money if you want the best today.

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The process will count more than profit today. However, in the end, your efforts are likely to end well.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you know when you ovulate? Do you want to know if you are right? Participate in a study of the signals of ovulation! Call or email: Lynette Leidy Sievert: leidy@anthro.umass.edu or Cathy DuBois: 374-6759

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Save up to $700 Off Move-In Costs Deluxe 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & WATER Washers/dryers available Minutes from UMass- On free busline Call Sugarloaf Estates today! 413-665-3856 visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Voyager Van $1750 549-6023

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

Internship For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9,300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmaill1@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Assistant Needed for busy office on Nantucket Island May-Aug. or Dec. Computer, accurate typing and telephone Skills necessary. Salary and housing. Fax resume to 508 228 8778 or Mail to: Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Dunkin Donuts supervisor needed for shop located in Mullins Center ice rink at UMass Amherst year round position call Marlene 413-549-6552 for interview.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to know who will win the big games? Email todayspicks@hotmail.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 2bedrm apt $425+utils Avail. ASAP in Amherst on bus line, heat+water include. No deposit. Prof. Student+cat email flowerface4u@netscape.net

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Absolute Best Deals for Spring Break! Acapulco, Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida; Space still available. Call us today 1-866-273-2500 www.vagabondtours.com

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Panama City Beach Boardwalk Beach Resort $199 Includes 7 Nights Hotel, 6 Free Parties! 24 Hours Free Drinks! Cancun & Jamaica! From $459 www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Butler serves up a win

After slow start, senior leads UMass to victory

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Finally.

After losing five consecutive games and eight of the last nine, Massachusetts women's basketball coach Marme Dacko knew exactly what her team needed heading into battle with the Fordham Lady Rams at the Mullins Center Thursday night: a win.

And after shaking off a slow start with a little help from an energized defense, the Minutewomen (15-13, 5-10 Atlantic 10) got just that, downing Fordham 64-51 in a vital game for the Maroon and White as they jockey for positioning in next weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament.

UMass	64
Fordham	51

"It's just good to be on the winning end again," Dacko said. "It was obviously really tough to keep having the losses pile on, but now at least we're back headed in the right direction heading into our last game."

The Rams (14-14, 5-10 Atlantic 10) flew out of the gate quickly, building an 18-9 lead on the strength of a 14-2 run, which was highlighted by three consecutive jumpers by sophomore guard Monica Mack and a trey from senior leading scorer Mobolaji Akode.

After the lead grew to 25-14, the Minutewomen made a furious run over the next 8:46 sandwiched around halftime scoring 16 consecu-

Continued on page

GREG SULLIVAN/COLLEGIAN

Senior Jennifer Butler (right) and the Minutewomen ended their season-high five-game losing streak with a 64-51 win over Fordham last night at the Mullins Center. With 19 rebounds, Butler became the No. 1 all-time rebounder in Atlantic 10 play.

Same time, this year: UM, MC set to go

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Having already been eliminated from postseason contention, the Massachusetts hockey team's season-ending game last year against eighth-place Merrimack meant little other than to salvage some pride. But UMass fell to the Warriors, 5-3 at home.

One year later, the Minutemen (16-16-1, 9-14-0 Hockey East) will head east to North Andover not only looking to clinch the sixth seed in the conference, but also seeking their first season above the .500 mark since joining Hockey East in the 1994-95 season.

Most outside observers expected UMass to turn it around over a couple years, but to improve this quickly? The Minutemen themselves sure aren't shocked.

"I'm not surprised, it's the first step in the right direction," junior defenseman Thomas Pock said.

Merrimack (12-14-6, 7-11-4 HE) enters Saturday's game with a sub-.500 record, but have been a dangerous team at the Volpe Complex. The Warriors have an impressive 9-3-3 mark at home, including wins over Boston College, Boston University, and Providence. UMass and Merrimack split their home-and-home series on Jan. 10 and 11, with each team winning in its own building.

While the Minutemen will have had a week to recover from last weekend's split with Maine, Saturday's contest will be the third in five days for the Warriors. After surviving a bruising 2-2 tie with UMass-Lowell on Tuesday, MC will face Northeastern tonight before the showdown with the Minutemen.

But rather than worrying about a fatigued Warrior squad, UMass is more concerned with executing its own game plan and coming with full energy.

"We have to play hard and not worry where they're at," Cahoon said. "They're in great shape like our guys, and they're going to be game-ready."

"We're just going in with the same game plan as always, working hard," freshman Chris Capraro added.

The Warriors will be without leading scorer and assistant captain Marco Rosa, lost for the season with a fractured right wrist suffered three games ago in a 6-1 win over Boston College. But Merrimack's crafty netminder Joe Exter has kept the Warriors in most games this year, with a .916 save percentage and a 2.94 GAA. Exter steered aside 34 of 37 UMass shots in the back end of the January series, as the Warriors prevailed in a 4-3 decision.

Still, with a Merrimack defense that gives up an average of 35 shots each night, the Minutemen know that if they continuously get the puck on goal, they should be able to get a few past Exter.

"If we can get enough quality shots on net, he won't be able to hang for 60 minutes," Pock said.

Cahoon agreed, saying "we just have to go after him. We need to get second-chance opportunities."

UMass will be without the services of Stephen Jacobs on Saturday, as he received a one-game suspension for a spearing incident last Saturday against the Black Bears. Jacobs, whose hard-nosed presence had earned himself a steady spot in the UMass lineup, will be replaced on the third line by Josh Hanson, according to Cahoon.

Most importantly, a win on Saturday will give the Minutemen some much needed momentum entering the quarterfinal round of the conference playoffs, starting next week. While the Minutemen could play either BC, New Hampshire, or Maine, regardless of Saturday's result, a win will give them a boost going into a guaranteed tough matchup.

"It's always easier to come off a good outing than it is to come off something less than that," Cahoon said.

Lappas, Minutemen head to R.I. after loss

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It's too bad the Steve Lappas radio show was held on Thursday this week. If it had been held just a couple days earlier, the UMass coach would have been able to talk about the team's three-game winning streak.

Unfortunately for Lappas, he was forced to go on the radio and fight a somber mood after being whipped by 42 against Temple on Wednesday night.

"If Duquesne had been last night, we'd be feeling a lot better now," said Lappas on his weekly show. "It's hard. I'm an emotional person so I tend to get emotionally involved in the situation. Just losing at Temple isn't that bad. But losing that way at Temple is bad."

Now it's Lappas' job to help his team start another winning streak. And with only three games left in the Atlantic 10 season and UMass fighting for the right to host a tournament game, that quest starts with an important game at Rhode Island.

UMass currently sits in fifth place in the A-10 East and two games back of the fourth-place Rams. The Minutemen have one game at hand on URI, so a win would greatly increase their chance of hosting a first round contest.

To do that, UMass will have to contain star scorer Brian Woodward. In a 60-55 Minuteman loss on Jan. 15, Woodward paced the Rams with 14 points while shooting guard Dustin Hellenga struggled to find his shot.

Dawan Robinson aided the cause with 10 points off the bench. And the Minutemen can't expect Hellenga to have another bad game.

He's averaging 13.5 points a contest, good for second on the team.

But the Rams are not playing their best basketball right now. They've lost three straight, including a one-point loss to an inconsistent Richmond team on Saturday.

Luckily, they're home at the brand new Ryan Center to face a worn-out UMass team.

Not only does Lappas have three freshmen starting and playing major minutes, but he has sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson playing almost 40 minutes in any game that's close.

"These guys are being really tested right now," Lappas said. "They're really being pushed to the limit."

Michael Lasme is probably feeling the effects more than most. At this time last year, his high school regular season was over. But now he has at least four more contests in front of him, and he has already played 24 games with one of an assortment of injuries.

This while Jeff Viggiano has been off and on with his 3-point shot, and Lee has had to face centers that outweigh him by 20 to 30 pounds on a regular basis.

That isn't necessarily a formula for success. But in the 10 games it has worked (next to 15 when it hasn't), it's been Anderson who's carried the load.

"I've had players like that before [that were a gauge for the team's success,]" Lappas said. "But I've had a 5-foot-9 point guard who has done that. It's not like he's a 6-foot-6 shooter or a 6-foot-9 forward. It's a lot to ask of a guy who is 5-foot-9, to do that."

But the proof is there. In UMass' last six games (3-3), Anderson has averaged 20 points in wins and 11 points in losses. He's also dished out averaged over six assists in victories while never having more than four in a loss.

Needless to say, Anderson has a good amount of pressure on his narrow shoulders. Maybe sometime in the next couple years he won't have to do it all for a UMass victory.

But right now, he's the catalyst.

Celtics suspend Baker indefinitely

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — Vin Baker was suspended indefinitely by the Boston Celtics on Thursday after meeting with team officials reportedly to discuss problems with alcohol.

The Celtics released a statement saying Baker "has left the team to address personal issues." It is unknown when Baker will rejoin the team.

General manager Chris Wallace later confirmed that Baker had been suspended, but he would not elaborate on the reason.

"We wish Vin the best. We're hoping Vin Baker will come back and join us someday," Wallace said on his radio show. "I don't want to speculate. It's hard to say where this will all go."

Baker did not attend practice Thursday after the Boston Globe, citing unidentified sources, reported that he would be suspended for two weeks for alcohol-related problems. The brief statement from the team did not refer to a suspension, but Wallace confirmed that Baker was suspended without pay.

"Our first and foremost concern is Vin Baker the person, and we believe that taking time off is the best thing for him to do at this time," Wallace said in the statement. "We look forward to his successful return to the team."

Celtics coach Jim O'Brien, who was not at the meeting, would not elaborate on Baker's problems, except to say they were personal and that the team would support him.

"He's a wonderful guy. He's a gentleman, a sweet man. Whatever he has to deal with he will have the full support of everybody with the Boston Celtics," O'Brien said after practice. "Good organizations support their people. That will be the case here."

A call to Baker's agent, Aaron Goodwin, was not returned Thursday. Attempts to reach Baker were unsuccessful because his voice mailbox on his cell phone was full.

Baker, 31, was earning $12.375 million this season, meaning he would lose about $3.75 million if he does not return this season. He also has three years and about $44 million left on his contract.

On Wednesday night, Baker was adamant in telling the Globe he would not retire or accept a buyout.

He said he wanted to address his teammates before practice Thursday, but he was not at the team's workout facility. The players said their only concern was Baker's well-being.

"This is more important than basketball. That's something we understand as friends and as teammates," Antoine Walker said. "Right now we've got to make sure he's OK before we worry about him coming back to the team."

Baker came to Boston from the Seattle SuperSonics last summer in a trade that was supposed to give the Celtics the presence in the middle they had lacked. But the 31-year-old player hasn't been able to acclimate himself and O'Brien has left him on the bench for three consecutive games.

"Me and Coach and the others are just going to talk about things," Baker said Wednesday night after the Celtics beat Indiana 71-69.

"I'm making a request," Baker said without elaborating. "I just want to talk, and then I'll let everyone know. As you know, this is a very tough time for me."

The 6-foot-11 Baker was the eighth overall pick by the Milwaukee Bucks in the 1993 draft. He averaged 21 points and 10 rebounds over his last two seasons in Milwaukee before he was traded to Seattle for the 1997-98 season.

He first season in Seattle showed only slight dropoff, and he was good enough to be picked for the 2000 U.S. Olympic team. But by the time the Sydney games came around, his level of play had deteriorated to the point where he was rarely used.

This year, he is averaging 5.2 points, 3.8 rebounds and 18.1 minutes. He missed a Feb. 5 game against Seattle after complaining of lightheadedness, and he reported heart palpitations following a Jan. 18 game in Milwaukee, but he was cleared by doctors.

Before Wednesday's game, Baker described his season as "somewhat of a nightmare" but expressed hope that things would work out.

Near upset not forgotten by UMass

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

JAMES R. HAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jeff Zywicki (right) and the UMass men's lacrosse team will host the Stony Brook Seawolves tomorrow at Garber Field. The opposing styles of the two teams will be in the spotlight.

There will be a clash of lacrosse styles on display tomorrow afternoon at Richard F. Garber Field as the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team (1-0) hosts Stony Brook.

The fast-paced, ram-it-down-your-throat style played by the Minutemen will face off against the slow-it-down and pack-'em-in ways of the Seawolves.

This clash almost resulted in an UMass upset loss last year, as host Stony Brook held a 2-1 halftime lead over the then-No. 12 Minutemen. Despite giving up another four goals in the fourth quarter, UMass survived the scare, and managed the 8-7 win when senior Dan Paccione scored with 52 seconds left.

"It was more than just a scare," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We have [talked about it] as coaches. We had a poor performance. They played really well that day and we did not. We were very, very fortunate to get out of there with a win.

"That is something we have talked about and hopefully, we can play well this weekend."

Cannella expects that contest has given the Seawolves quite a bit of confidence heading into this weekend.

"They are looking forward to coming up here and win-

Continued on page 6

MARCH

2003

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2003 | NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 | VOLUME CIX ISSUE 92

United States pushing for war without Turkey

PETER DEJONG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. soldiers walk towards a bus, right, as a Humvee passes a convoy, rear, waiting to leave the staging area in the harbor of Iskenderun, Turkey, yesterday.

By NIKO PRICE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq began crushing banned missiles with bulldozers Saturday, meeting a U.N. demand in an attempt to prevent a devastating U.S.-led attack. Washington dismissed the move and continued to push for war.

But President Bush's preparations for a military showdown with Iraq suffered a severe setback when Turkey's parliament failed to approve the deployment of 62,000 U.S. combat troops. The United States wants to use Turkey to open a northern front against Iraq if it launches a war.

Even Arab nations failed to find unity over the Iraq crisis, with a summit descending into an exchange of insults between Saudi Arabia's crown prince and Libya's Moammar Gadhafi. The United Arab Emirates called on Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to step down, but the leaders eventually agreed on a declaration rejecting any aggression on Iraq.

The destruction of the Al Samoud 2 missiles had been ordered by chief weapons inspector Hans Blix, who said Iraq had to begin by Saturday.

In a sprawling military complex on a desert plain just north of Baghdad, U.N. weapons inspectors watched as Iraqi workers tried to crush an Al Samoud 2 missile, then had to wait for bigger bulldozers to finish the job.

"They built it very strong," joked Blix's deputy, Demetrius Perricos.

Perricos, who traveled to Baghdad to work out the last-minute details on destruction, held technical discussions with the Iraqis before the operation began. He said more talks would be held Sunday morning concerning stores of anthrax and VX nerve agent that Iraq says it destroyed.

Perricos said he agreed on a timetable of "a few days or a very short few weeks" to destroy Iraq's 100-plus missiles – as well as components, software and machines used to make them.

Four missiles were destroyed Saturday, and Perricos said the

Continued on page 3

Alleged mastermind of Sept. 11 apprehended

By KATHY GANNON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan – Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, the suspected mastermind of the Sept. 11 attacks, was captured Saturday in a raid in Pakistan involving U.S. agents, officials told The Associated Press.

The arrest is a major coup in the war against terrorism and could provide new clues in the search for Osama bin Laden. Mohammed, 37, is perhaps the most senior member of the al-Qaida terrorist network after bin Laden and Egyptian Ayman al-Zawahiri.

"It's hard to overstate how significant this is," White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said. "It's a wonderful blow to inflict on al-Qaida."

A naturalized Pakistani who was born in Kuwait, Mohammed is on the FBI's most-wanted list and allegedly had a hand in many of al-Qaida's most notorious attacks. The U.S. government had offered a reward of up to $25 million for information leading to his capture.

Mohammed was arrested along with two other men in Rawalpindi, a city near the Pakistani capital of Islamabad. Information Minister Sheikh Rashid Ahmed said. The raid was the work of both U.S. and Pakistani agents, according to U.S. and Pakistani officials who requested anonymity.

Pakistan has handed other al-Qaida suspects over to the United States but officials here would not say whether that was the plan this time. Military officials in the United States also would not comment on whether Mohammed would be turned over to the United States or another country.

"This is a great success today, but the war on terrorism goes on tomorrow," said Jim Wilkinson, a spokesman at U.S. Central Command in Tampa, Fla. "There's still a lot of work to do."

U.S. officials say Mohammed organized the Sept. 11, 2001, terror mission that sent hijacked passenger jets crashing into the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and a field in Pennsylvania, killing more than 3,000 people.

But even before then, Mohammed was wanted in connection with plots in the Philippines to bomb trans-Pacific airliners and crash a plane into CIA headquarters. Those were broken up in 1995.

He also has been linked to April's bombing of a synagogue in Tunisia. At least 19 tourists, mostly Germans, were killed.

Mohammed was arrested along with a second man of Middle Eastern origin and a Pakistani, Ahmed Abdul Qadoos, 42, a member of one of the country's main religious parties, Jamaat-e-Islami. The identity of the Middle Eastern man has not been revealed.

Mohammed narrowly escaped capture in a raid about a week ago in the southwestern town of Quetta, a Pakistani government source said. During that raid, a Middle Eastern man, possibly of Egyptian origin, was arrested, according to the source, who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity.

"At the time of that raid in Quetta the authorities were looking for Khalid Shaikh but he escaped and from there they followed him to Rawalpindi," the

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4

ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5

SPORTS PAGE 10

COMICS PAGE 9

CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

REMAINING OBJECTIVE
HELPING CHILDREN UNDERSTAND THE WAR
PAGE 4

GROOVE AND FUNK
ANTIBALAS AFROBEAT ORCHESTRA AT IRONHORSE
PAGE 5

MINUTEMEN WIN
HOCKEY BEATS MERRIMACK; HEADS TO HE PLAYOFFS
PAGE 10

Police seize drugs in raids

By DAN LAMOTHE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two University of Massachusetts students were among four people arrested in drug raids late last month in two separate apartments that led to the seizure of over $12,000 in cash and several other drugs, including several pounds of marijuana.

Amherst Police Department (APD) raided the apartments at 394 Puffton Village and 44 Mill Hollow Apartments on Feb. 20 after undercover officers made purchases there, according to the Hampshire Gazette.

UMass student Jesse S. Schauffer, 22, was arrested in connection with the Puffton raid in his apartment and was charged with possession of a class D substance, marijuana, with intent to sell. The Gazette reported that APD seized four pounds of high-grade Canadian marijuana, $12,000 in cash, three safes and a BB gun from the apartment. The marijuana was vacuum-sealed in one-pound bags and has a street value of over $1,500, according to the Gazette.

Schauffer was arraigned Friday in Northampton District Court and pled innocent.

A second raid related raid on the night of Feb. 20 at 44 Mill Hollow Apartments on Summer Street led to the arrest of three people, including UMass student Leah B. Kimmel, 22, of Swampscott, Mass. Kimmel also pled innocent on Friday to two charges, possession of a class B substance (oxycodone) and possession of a class D substance.

The Gazette reported Friday that police confiscated several different kinds of drugs in the Mill Hollow raid, including hundreds of Adderall pills, a prescription amphetamine and medicine similar to Ritalin. Detective Sergeant Ronald Young told the Gazette that Ritalin is known on the street as "the poor man's speed."

Other arrests made on Feb. 20 in the Mill Hollow raid include Leonard Aylward, 23, of Amherst, and Danny W. Mastroianni, 23, of East Longmeadow. Aylward pled innocent Friday to possession of a class D substance and Mastroianni pled innocent to possession of a class B substance (Alderol).

The investigation began with a tip from Greenfield police last month alerting Amherst police and members of the Hampshire-Franklin Drug Task Force to the possibility of drugs being sold at 44 Mill Hollow.

Young told The Gazette the investigation is still underway.

This is the second major drug bust involving UMass students this school year. The first, a seizure of $24,000 in cash, a large quantity of marijuana and individually wrapped baggies of marijuana from a Kennedy dorm room last semester, was the biggest cash seizure at the University in 30 years, according to UMPD spokesman Jim Lyons. The raid of the room originated with a search warrant for a stolen laptop computer that OIT traced to the room.

Steven Y. Nguyen, 20, of Southborough, Mass., was arrested and charged with receiving stolen property (the laptop) valued at more than $250 and possession of a class D substance with intent to distribute. Yuta Nakamura, 22, of Singapore, was charged with possession of a class D substance. Both men pled innocent to the charges in Hampshire District Court in January.

UMPD police chief Barbara O'Connor expressed concern to the Collegian last semester with the amount of drug related activity on campus.

"We've had a number of armed robberies, all drug related," she said in November. "We had six or seven last semester, one earlier this semester."

Another armed robbery on Feb. 20 in Cashin Hall is still under investigation. UMass police suspect that it was also drug-related. The arrest of one student, Young W. Lee, 20, of Tenafly, N.J., has already been made in that case.

Voyage to Ghana

Group travels to Africa; experiences foreign land

COURTESY DENNIS HANNO

University of Massachusetts student Michael Alden, at right, works with students in Ghana to improve their computer skills. Alden was a part of the group from the School of Management that went to Africa during winter break.

By ANDY VOGT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite sweltering in a sauna-like room, crammed next to his compatriots like the friendliest of sardines on the compound floor, Michael Alden was just about to drift off to sleep.

A rainbow-striped lizard, caught in the corner of his eye, eliminated any chance he would receive any slumber, at least for the next half hour.

Alden recounted the reptile as one of the more interesting things to occur on his School of Management group's recent expedition over winter break.

Thousands of miles away from Amherst, a nation gleaming with hot sun, a beautiful coastline and welcoming people seems like the ideal getaway for any college student in January. But you won't find synopses like these of a country in any Fodor's guide, or discounts on airfare and hotels at your local travel agency.

The destination was Ghana, a tiny West African nation nestled between the Ivory Coast and Togo. While the coastal land might not be your typical vacation spot, these University of Massachusetts undergraduates returned home with more than just a good suntan.

"The students came back with appreciation for other cultures, and a new-found confidence in themselves," said Dennis Hanno, associate dean at SOM and leader of the student group.

Now in its third year traveling to Ghana, the program and the students in it present educational seminars on sound business skills and computer training to the people of Sekondi, the country's third-largest city.

Prior to leaving on the transatlantic journey, the 11 students, accompanied by two UMass alumni, split into four teams. They prepared extensive seminars on marketing, management, accounting, and economics and personal finance. Many of the inhabitants of Sekondi, a massive, spread-out city with a population nearing one million, either own tiny businesses or had been looking to open up a shop of their own. The SOM contingent presented skills relevant to the citizens' everyday lives, such as how to develop a means of income, and proper assets management.

ADJUSTING TO DIFFERENCES

The members knew that the trip would be like entering a completely different world, but there was little that could prepare them for what they would soon experience.

"They couldn't have briefed you enough," said John Collmer, a senior accounting major. "From the moment you get off the plane, you're taken from an industrial nation to a pre-industrial nation."

Making the adjustment to a completely different lifestyle began even before the team departed. Each member received seven shots prior to departure to prevent disease and was advised on what to expect upon arrival.

Still, adjusting to the conditions was difficult. Heat rash and inflamed mosquito bites afflicted the team, and each person carried self-filtering water bottles or bought water sold in sandwich bags. On several occasions, group members ran out of water completely, said Alden, a junior marketing major. The entire team was also required to take pills that prevented malaria, which Alden said caused many hallucinations at night.

Sekondi also doesn't have many of the modern advantages that our nation takes for granted, such as medical facilities and waste removal systems.

Not exactly your typical winter vacation.

A WELCOMING FEELING

The people of Sekondi have extremely limited phone access and probably couldn't tell you what a Big Mac tastes like. Alden said that they have few imported goods from the industrialized world, except for automobiles, Guinness, Coca-Cola and Marlboro cigarettes. The team saw families living in shacks and

Continued on page 3

© 2003 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. PricewaterhouseCoopers refers to the U.S. firm of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP and the other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

VOTED #1 IDEAL EMPLOYER BY BUSINESS STUDENTS, UNIVERSUM UNDERGRADUATE STUDY, 2002

Help us help companies determine how import taxes, manufacturing costs and labor will affect their profits, and we'll help you build a career.

For opportunities and information go to:
www.pwcglobal.com/lookhere

Look beyond the numbers.

Group takes voyage to Africa

Continued from page 1

crumbling buildings all around the city.

Whatever the city lacks financially, it more than compensates with its generous, hospitable spirit.

Whether it was the American-style foods (such as spaghetti, rice, etc.) prepared during meals, or simply the deep gratitude the citizens showed toward their visitors, those in Ghana left a lasting impression on their visitors from the United States.

"It's a place where you learn about the word 'thanks,'" Collmer said. "They have more sense of appreciation than you could ever imagine." He said that the people in Ghana are deeply grateful at something as commonplace as holding a door for another.

The compound where the team lodged also did its best to make the group feel welcome. Aside from the aforementioned lizard and the occasional spider creeping its way up the wall, the sleeping conditions were "modest, yet very comfortable," said Hanno.

With three years of Army experience, sleeping in tight quarters was nothing new for Collmer.

"You're not in the Hilton," he said. "But the beds were more comfortable than my dorm room."

GROWING CLOSER

When not coaching the citizens on proper business strategies, however, the group was able to relax and develop friendships with the townspeople, especially the younger citizens.

Several of the team members discarded their white polo shirts and khakis for more athletic wear, playing soccer and basketball in the city streets with the citizens. Hanno laughs when remembering previous UMass groups traveling over to Ghana. The program, started by the nursing program at UMass, originally sent almost exclusively female students to the country, so there was little interaction between the two sides athletically. Now, he says, with an equal distribution of gender, the young boys of Sekondi can display their athletic prowess against the Americans.

Alden said that it was evident how strongly the people of Ghana have incorporated Christianity into their daily lives. He remembers how signs on the street display Biblical passages, and town businesses have names such as the "God is With Us" fruit stand. He also recalled an instance in which he asked a group of townspeople to pick a presentation topic on PowerPoint, and they answered with the story of Moses.

The Ghana trip has developed into a bigger success each year, largely because the city welcomes UMass back with open arms. Hanno received 50 applications from students in September, more than he had seen in any of the previous trips. He hopes that next January he will be able to take as many as 20 students back to Ghana.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

During the first trip, Hanno and the School of Management built a computer center at the Assemblies of God church in the city. The center has helped train over 100 residents of Sekondi in computing and typing skills.

Hanno continues to bring over new computers each year. The people of Sekondi have a "thirst for knowledge," Hanno said, and that the center has created excitement in their city. He also said that the point of the SOM's journeys never had anything to do with helping the poverty-stricken.

"We never built it as a Peace Corps, 'save the world' type of trip," Hanno said. "They're probably happier than [we] are."

John Kollmer, center, works with students at a computer center in the Assemblies of God church in Sekondi, Ghana.

He added that when talking with students from Ghana that have attended UMass, he sometimes has to be corrected when talking about the journey, as the students tell him that "you're not going to Africa, you're going to Ghana."

"They have a lot of pride," Hanno said.

GAINING A DIFFERENT PERSPECTIVE

The team agreed that traveling to Ghana was a mind-blowing experience, but that the culture wasn't that much different from the United States.

"The only culture shock is perhaps an understanding of how easy it is to fit in different cultures," Hanno said.

Alden agreed, saying that the people are extremely friendly and warm despite not having the facilities we use each day in our daily lives.

"They don't know any better, so they're satisfied with their way of life," he said.

And that's something he can take with him to bed each night. Minus the lizards, of course.

The following 11 students represented the School of Management on the trip to Ghana:

Michael Alden, junior, Marketing.
Danielle Angus, junior, Marketing.
Matthew Charest, junior, Marketing.
John Collmer, senior, Accounting.
Meredith McLane, sophomore, School of Management.
Mindy Nyman, senior, Accounting.
Alexis Petrello, junior, School of Management.
David Soffer, senior, Operations Management.
Michelle Turk, senior, Accounting.
Rachael A. Wade, junior, Marketing.
Jason Wass, senior, Finance.

Turkey: no war support

Continued from page 1

piece soon would accelerate. The missiles' warheads were removed and will be destroyed at a safer site. South of Baghdad, workers began destroying a casting chamber used to make the Al Samoud 2, Perricos said.

In New York, Iraq's U.N. ambassador, Mohammed al-Douri, said he hoped Blix and the U.N. Security Council would take note of Baghdad's cooperation on the Al Samouds and other issues.

"War is the worst thing, and we are trying to do whatever we can to avoid war so we are doing our utmost to cooperate," al-Douri said.

European leaders praised the move, but White House spokeswoman Merci Viana said Iraq's decision was "part of its game of deception." Spokesman Ari Fleischer said that to avoid a war, Iraq needed not only to disarm, but also to change its leadership.

The United Nations reported that interviews with Iraqi missiles and biological weapons experts – delayed for nearly a month because the scientists refused to speak without recording the conversations – had resumed.

Two scientists were debriefed by inspectors Friday night, and Iraq's Foreign Ministry said officials encouraged the experts to do the interviews without tape recorders. A third scientist invited by the inspectors refused and a fourth is out of the country, the ministry said.

Several more interviews were planned Saturday evening, but it was unclear whether they occurred, inspectors' spokesman Hiro Ueki said.

Perricos said the inspectors thought an upcoming Security Council meeting might pressure the scientists to grant interviews, "and luckily enough we saw some changes of attitude."

Alleged mastermind of Sept. 11 apprehended

Continued from page 1

official said. "They got information from the man they picked up in Quetta and from phone calls until they tracked him down to Rawalpindi."

Senior government officials said the three men were arrested about 3 a.m. local time Saturday at a house where Qadoos lives with his father.

But Omar Qadoos, Ahmed's cousin, said only Ahmed, his wife and two children were in the house. There also was a guard outside, he said.

"The police pounded on the gate and then they rushed through. There was some firing, but no one was hurt and then they beat the guard and broke the lock on the front door," Omar Qadoos said.

He said police held the family at gunpoint while they collected cassettes, a computer and computer discs, leaving the floor littered with clothes, papers and other items.

Mohammed's ties to terrorism are deep. He is the uncle of convicted 1993 World Trade Center conspirator Ramzi Yousef and one of his older brothers also belongs to al-Qaida. Another brother died in Pakistan when a bomb he was making exploded.

He also is said to be close to bin Laden's son, Saad.

In Washington, the FBI refused to confirm Mohammed was arrested or say whether the bureau was involved.

President Gen. Pervez Musharraf has said a small number of FBI agents are in Pakistan but only to provide intelligence on al-Qaida or Taliban fugitives from neighboring Afghanistan.

However, Pakistani police and intelligence officials say FBI agents have been involved in nearly every important terror arrest in Pakistan.

The Pakistani government says it has handed over more than 420 al-Qaida and Taliban suspects to the United States.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January, 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

* PAID POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT *

ON [illegible] 31, 2002, A PALESTINIAN SUICIDE TERRORIST MURDERED 12 STUDENTS AND WOUNDED 80 AMERICANS.
ISRAELIS AND ARABS, BEFORE THEY DARED HANG OUT TOGETHER.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Discussions on Iraq need to remain objective

Maine's top education officials recently issued a warning to the state's teachers after receiving complaints from parents that their children were being taught biased views on the war.

The Maine Army National Guard has received reports from several guard members that their elementary and middle school-aged children have only been hearing criticism of the possible war with Iraq. Maj. Peter Rogers quoted parents, saying children have come home upset or depressed because of these discussions in both the classroom and on the playground.

"They were hearing comments like, 'The pending war in Iraq is unethical' and 'Anybody who would fight that war is also unethical,'" Rogers said. "So children who are already losing family members to deployment were understandably upset."

Maine state Department of Education commissioner, Duke Albanese, sent a memo to superintendents and principals saying that he was aware of these complaints and encouraged constructive dialogue that is "grounded in civil discourse and respect."

The Freedom Forum, based out of Arlington, Virginia has also dealt with many parents who have been concerned that teachers in the classroom have been unfair or biased.

Charles Haynes a representative from the organization said that schools should encourage discussion in the classroom about Iraq, even if there are complaints about teachers and their comments.

"Often it is a misunderstanding of what the teacher is trying to do," he said. "But it's also the case that some teachers have a political agenda they can't keep out of the classroom, and that they must do."

We, at the Collegian cannot agree more with everyone on all sides of this discussion. With the passing of American television icon, Fred Rogers, many of us have suddenly been reminded that there are small, innocent bystanders in this discussion; the children themselves. Rogers put war and tragedy into perspective for many parents and children for the over 30 years when he was on television. As iconographic as Rogers was, his guidance was no replacement for teachers and parents.

While the rest of us are busy watching the news, trying to keep up with the latest terror alerts, buying duct tape and bottled water, we've forgotten that children are also affected by the war. They pick up fragments of conversations, and re-interpret the world in their own terms when they don't understand what's going on. This can lead to misunderstanding and fears about the war, an unhealthy combination for especially small children.

That is why it's our job as adults to help children in the interpreting process. Conversations in the classroom about Iraq are important in helping children understand what's happening. These discussions need to present the facts objectively and discussed in a manner that doesn't scare children but remains realistic. If we ignore their questions and their ideas on the war, children are left to create their own interpretations, which can often be scarier than the truth and spread to others. Without constructive dialogue our youngest citizens are left in the dark about a war that will ultimately affect their lives.

Information from CNN.com was used in this opinion.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

America eats up reality television

Katy Noone

Nothing is more annoying than a panel of B-level celebrities judging pitiful, unknown singing hopefuls. Well, maybe a group of even lower caliber celebrities stranded in an Australian rainforest, painfully attempting to complete "icky" tasks involving bugs and wildlife is. Regardless of their ranking on the obnoxious scale every increasingly ridiculous reality television show airing this season makes anyone (including myself) feel guilty about boosting their Nielsen rating. Yet it is the kind of guilt that feels good deep down inside: the guilty pleasure you feel as you acknowledge you are putting all academic pursuits on the back burner for a half hour or hour to watch the triumphantly uneducational "American Idol," "Bachelorette" or "I'm a Celebrity, Now Get Me Out of Here!"

My personal reality TV addiction began when I innocently flipped channels over winter break on a lonely Wednesday night at home and landed on one of the beginning episodes of "The Bachelorette." I had been appalled by the former matchmaking millionaire show in which the couple filed for divorce a week after the finale aired, with sketchy background information about the millionaire and his new bride spilling out into the press. Yet on "The Bachelorette," Trista was just so cute, and some of those men were really cute. I found myself instantly addicted to her pursuit of love in front of millions of pathetic American viewers, but I willingly became one of them myself.

Two weeks ago when Trista made her final choice and picked Ryan over Charlie (I was happy - I have a thing for young firefighters, especially one with shaggy hair from Colorado!) and so was delighted (yet upset he was off the market) when Trista chose him. It is so strange how watching regular people on television makes them larger than life: you can imagine how you would look if you were in their place, how you too could be an instant household name, or how you know you would be just perfect for one of the adorable singles showcased on the program. Or how you could survive in the wild much better than Melissa Rivers, who is one of the most annoying individuals in human history.

The Australian rainforest is the setting for "I'm a Celebrity, Now Get Me Out of Here!" featuring "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" host Robin Leach, professional loudmouth Melissa Rivers, male supermodel Tyson Beckford, and Ian Ziering's (Steve Sanders from the 90's drama "Beverly Hills 90210") Playmate ex-wife. Aside from the blatant sexiness of Ziering and Beckford, the show offers little but squabbling celebrities that everyone wishes would be swallowed up by a Venus flytrap. Yet after a long day of classes and reading, this show catches my attention night after night. As a journalism major, I feel guilty about supporting these horrific programs with my viewership, but with so few quality programs to choose from, why not get down and dirty in the reality sludge and at least be entertained?

> "I feel guilty about supporting these horrific programs with my viewership, but with so few quality programs to choose from, why not get down and dirty in the reality sludge and at least be entertained?"

My real addiction is Fox's "American Idol." I didn't watch last year's winner Kelly Clarkson and her fight to fame, but this year I was lured in. I quickly got sick of the judges making fun of horrible singers and embarrassing them solely for entertainment value. It was clear the initial screeners were instructed by Simon, Paula or Randy to let a few atrocious voices slip by to be seen by millions as a cruel joke. Numerous specials have aired throughout the season, replaying those pitiful performers who should have known they would have been booed out of a downtown karaoke club, never mind a national music competition. Once the decently talented singers took the stage, I was hooked, dialing numbers to vote for my favorites, and becoming almost emotional when someone with a great voice or personality walked their way into the top ten.

"American Idol" viewers are bombarded with shameless plugs by mega corporations such as Coca Cola and AT&T Wireless Network, who no doubt are aware of the huge young audience of potential customers. Each singer is seen during a commercial break driving Coke trucks, laughing in contrived group situations with a coke in hand, while large red coke cups are strategically placed in front of each of the judges. It's sad that such a dominant corporation wouldn't have the creativity to hire someone classy to make their ads, instead preferring to bluntly throw the Coke logo in America's face.

It is so difficult to separate quality TV from the junk that clutters the small screen, probably because 90 percent of programs are junk to begin with. I find it frustrating, especially as I am interested in the media, that even I can be reeled into watching such meaningless garbage as "American Idol" and "The Bachelorette." It does make perfect sense to me though, as many of us feel that being a part of television validates our personhood and worth. As Dave Eggers, author of "A Heartbreaking Work of Staggering Genius," who came to speak last Thursday here at UMass states, "because we've grown up thinking of ourselves in relation to political-media-entertainment ephemera, in our safe and comfortable homes, given the time to think about how we would fit into this or that band or TV show or movie, and how we would look doing it." Have fun with reality TV, but also be aware of the shamelessly contrived programs that have imprinted themselves on the mass media map.

Katy Noone is a Collegian Columnist.

War can't be fought without support

Sean Jacquet

With each passing day, it becomes more and more likely that the United States will attack Iraq. The White House is urging all Americans to rush out to Home Depot to buy duct tape and plastic sheeting. President Bush has grown impatient with Iraq's refusal to disarm, and is trying to manufacture the same desire to go to war from the American public.

The problem is, Bush hasn't adequately convinced the American public, or anybody else for that matter. All over the world protesters have turned out in force, making clear their desire for a peaceful, diplomatic solution. British Prime Minister Tony Blair has taken a great deal of criticism for aligning himself with Bush and his cronies. Allies of the U.S. have refused to toss their hats in the ring as well.

Perhaps it is because every attempt made by the Bush administration to produce convincing "evidence" has failed miserably. Secretary of State Colin Powell's "report" looked like it was slapped together by a fifth grader. Apparently, Powell is telling us we should go stomp on an already impoverished nation because we have some pictures that may or may not prove that Iraq poses a threat.

Bush has also said he will not be deterred by the thousands of protestors at home and abroad. Makes sense, right? Why would an elected public official ever listen to what his constituents have to say?

That's the point. Bush isn't listening and he doesn't care what we have to say. The American people have made it pretty clear that we aren't sure about attacking the "axis of evil." Simply put, we don't know if it's a good idea. We haven't been adequately convinced that Iraq poses a threat. We have no evidence of their link to terrorism, and we're unsure about their likelihood to attack the U.S. The U.N. has also expressed doubts, calling for more talks and weapons inspections.

Which leads me to my question: if your constituents aren't sure, and your allies aren't sure, what makes you so sure? If your own people don't even have your back, isn't that justification enough not to go to war?

Bush is rushing America into a war we don't even need to fight, playing judge, jury and executioner. Bush is laying down a guilty verdict on Iraq, unless they can prove themselves innocent. Aren't you supposed to hold off on punishment until you're sure a crime has been committed? If Bush is going to gain support for this war, he'd better come up with something better than what he's done already. If you're not sure about something, and the American people aren't certain about this, then you shouldn't rush ahead and do it.

It's just an illogical way of doing something, especially when you're talking about flying troops halfway around the world to fight a $200 billion war. Oh, and another thing. That $200 billion couldn't be spent in a better way? Isn't the economy in the dumper? And now Bush wants to toss all that dough into quelling a threat we're not sure even exists?

> "I thought the idea after Sept. 11th was to return to normalcy. Now they want us to horde duct tape in the event of a terrorist attack."

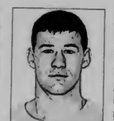
A leader should reflect the people he represents, and Bush, quite simply, isn't doing that. Whether you agree with a preemptive strike on Iraq or not, this country is supposed to be a democracy, and decisions made in a democracy are supposed to represent the opinions of the majority. Maybe Bush believes he is acting in the best interest of the American people, quelling an attack before it has the chance to happen. But in order to fight a war you need the support of the people for whom you're supposedly fighting. How can you start a fight if your own people don't know why or if they should join the fight?

I don't have a problem with Bush pleading his case to the American people, trying to garner the support he desperately needs, but this attempt to manufacture fear and panic isn't the way to go. It seems as though the White House is trying to scare us into fighting. All these warnings about duct tape, plastic sheeting and bottled water seems counter-productive. I thought the idea after Sept. 11th was to return to normalcy. Now they want us to horde duct tape in the event of a terrorist attack. How can you convince people to return to the way things were when you're constantly reminding them to be prepared for a potential nuclear holocaust?



And what will duct tape do anyway? Are we supposed to fend off suicide bombers by hurling rolls of duct tape at them? And who wants to be alive if everybody else is dead? If there is indeed a nuclear blast, we're all pretty much screwed anyway. No amount of duct tape or bottled water will save you if we start lobbing nuclear missiles back and forth with Iraq.

If Bush wants to attack Iraq, he shouldn't rely on scare tactics to convince people to join the march of war. He might try appealing to the logic of the American people, but I think he realizes he doesn't have the airtight evidence he needs. So he figures he can always play the fear card.

The point is, among the many reasons not to go to war, the most compelling is the fact that we're not sure if we should. Hopefully, Bush learned from Vietnam that fighting a war without public support can quickly turn into disaster. If you're unsure about fighting a war, why the hell would you do it? The American people have made it pretty clear that we just don't know whether we should go to war. We don't know if it's a good idea. Hopefully, Bush will realize that he needs our support.

Sean Jacquet is a Collegian Columnist.

Smashed up things and vast carelessness

Robert Carey

Regarding the 20's in America, F. Scott Fitzgerald wrote "They were careless people... they smashed up things and creatures and then retreated back into their money or their vast carelessness, of whatever it was that kept them together, and let other people clean up the mess they had made." Is this not the great American ethic wrapped up in a nutshell? What seemed most evident in the twenties seems even more apparent today. The disturbing ethos of America is everywhere, existing at every level of society, and unrelentingly steering us along a destructive path.

There is, of course, the recent case of Afghanistan. The country was already smashed before the air force went in and blew up the remaining mud brick houses, the fields of subsistence agriculture, and incinerated the Taliban soldiers armed with rust-covered bolt-action rifles. However, blowing up what infrastructure was there was supposed to be at the promise of massive donations by the U.S. government towards a rebuilding effort. Our government claimed they were going to knock down the putrid huts of the past, and build a great, shining, new Afghanistan in its place.

Not surprisingly, this didn't occur. Ultimately, the promised aid has come mostly in the form of food packets that were dropped from planes and settled in with the unexploded cluster bombs that were dropped previously by our planes. The unexploded bombs and the food packets bear a striking resemblance in both shape and color. In poorer nations this kind of "carelessness" has come to be expected of us.

> "Before we can expect our political and economic leaders to clean up their mess, we must start at a very local level."

In the vast economic circle of America, Enron was a clear reminder of the "Robber Baron" mentality that Fitzgerald so clearly outlined. At this point it's not worth reiterating the graft and corruption and all the awful stuff that happened there. The disregard of any moral accountability in that instance was so absolute that even the CEOs of major corporations from Japan to Western Europe were turning pale with disgust. But unlike other cultures, making a mess and not cleaning it up has become a popular concept.

However, it doesn't take close examination of American economic and government affairs to notice "smashed up things" and "vast carelessness." As long as you're in America you could look around at the most base and local level and find examples of purposeless destruction and pollution that go unaccounted. Take this campus for instance. Look at the students that get drunk on their parents money and then go around tearing up the place where they live, leaving the overworked and under appreciated custodial staff to clean up their mess. When I lived in Southwest, on a weekly basis I would see property destruction in the form of graffiti, vomit, and human bile that would make me cringe. And still the maintainers at UMass have to remind the administrators to "fund the contracts."

The mess left by oblivious, self-absorbed students stretches from Orchard Hill to frat row, and everywhere in between. As people of this powerful nation we have the ability, if not the will, to clean up our messes. Before we can expect our political and economic leaders to clean up their mess, we must start at a very local level. The power of democracy is that it relies on the sentiments and beliefs of the general public. How can we expect our leaders to clean up the messes they create, when we ourselves live in self-inflicted squalor? Obviously, the general public didn't believe it that important that we clean up our mess in Afghanistan, otherwise there would have been a bigger stink by the American people that we didn't do it.

The same can be said for Vietnam, the protestors who were so effective in ending the war, virtually disappeared when the fight came to rebuild the little Southeast Asian country we had spent so much time shattering. If the anti-war protesters lose this stand-off with the Bush administration, will they still sing, dance, and shout for the American government to pick up the mess, or will they crawl back into their dormitories defeated and depressed. As the U.S. begins its domination on the world, it will be amazing how far a little responsibility will go.

Robert Carey is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as "Letters to the Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as "Editorial/Opinion." Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Exploration behind HIV

QUESTION AND ANSWERS:

Question: I heard a rumor that there is more than one type of HIV. Is that true?

Answer: There are actually two different types of HIV, conveniently named HIV-1 and HIV-2. Generally, when people say HIV without specifying which type, they are referring to HIV-1. Both types of HIV are contracted in some of the same ways: sexual contact, blood and mother to child. The major difference between the two types is that HIV-2 is not as easily transmitted. The time between initial infection and actual illness is longer.

Sex-iversity

Sara Brumfield& Winnie Chen

Since HIV is a virus, it reproduces and mutates very rapidly, so there are many different strains of HIV. HIV-1 can be divided into two groups: M and O. There is, however, a case on record of a woman from Cameroon who has a strain of HIV-1 that belongs to neither group M or O. Each group has a set of subtypes that vary as much within their groups as between the two groups. Group M has 10 known subtypes, labeled A through J.

The subtypes don't seem to follow any type of general pattern. For instance, subtype B is found in the Americas, Japan, Australia, the Caribbean and Europe. It is hard to see a common pattern with the distribution of HIV-1 subtypes. There has been evidence to suggest that the different subtypes of HIV-1 are primarily associated with a specific mode of transmission. For example, subtype B is considered related to homosexual transmission or intravenous drug use. Likewise, subtypes C and E are linked with heterosexual transmission. A study conducted by Dr. Max Essex of the Harvard School of Public Health has shown that subtypes C and E replicate more efficiently in Langerhans cells (cells found in vaginal mucous, cervix and foreskin.) Subtypes C and E have a much harder time replicating on the wall of the rectum. There have been two studies conducted in Thailand supporting the notion that subtype E is easier to transmit than subtype B.

Now if you're freaking out about all these different subtypes, don't just yet. Standard HIV antibody tests used for either blood screening or a diagnostic purpose are able to detect virtually all subtypes of HIV. It is still unclear what the differences in all the subtypes means for treatments or possible vaccines. Subtypes appear to have different growth rates and immunization qualities.

Now, don't be one of those people who think that just because you live in the United States where type B is prevalent, your chances of contracting the virus are magically lower. Furthermore, just because B is linked to homosexual contact, there are plenty of other strains just as dangerous, and it is still very possible to contract type B. So be smart.

■■■

"Sex-iversity" is a question and answer column designed to provide answers and important information regarding sex, sexuality, sexual orientation, sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and reproductive right. Voiced by Winnie Chen and Sara Brumfield, the co-founders of Voices for Planned Parenthood (VOX) branch at the University of Massachusetts and active volunteers for Planned Parenthood of Western Massachusetts, the column is intended to help educate the University community about reproductive health, rights, legislature, and responsibilities. Much of the statistical information provided in this column derives from research done through and obtained by Planned Parenthood and its national affiliates.

GOT SEX HEALTH QUESTIONS? SEND THEM TO: sexiversity@hotmail.com

Your questions could be posted in the next "Sexiversity" column. Confidentiality is always respected.

Sara Brumfield and Winnie Chen are Collegian Columnists.

ANTIBALAS AFROBEAT ORCHESTRA

Group packs Iron Horse Music Hall with good grooves

By DAVE SIEGEL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Stepping into the Iron Horse, I was excited that the Antibalas Afrobeat Orchestra again flavin' been introduced to the smooth groove and positive message of Antibalas at this past summer's Bonnaroo. I was intrigued to see how their sound would translate to this small concert hall. Acoustically sound from the

The Antibalas Afrobeat Orchestra is a dynamic, 14-member ensemble hailing from Brooklyn. Translated from Spanish, directly Antibalas means "bulletproof" or possibly more pertinent, anti-bullets. The group blends together a horn-driven funk and world beat percussion with its politically laced messages into a tight and seamless presentation. Last Saturday, they shed a percussionist and a horn player to drop the total number of performers onstage, to an amazing 12. With so many players the group would probably find it extremely easy for their sound to become too muddy and overly textured. However with smooth conducting by trombonist Aaron Johnson they turned out a very simple yet layered sound.

> "The Antibalas Afrobeat Orchestra is a dynamic 14-member ensemble hailing from Brooklyn..."

Listening to them in a much more intimate setting than the main stage at Bonnaroo, I was able to pick up more on their structure and how they make each section flow so effortlessly from one to the next. The group begins with a very funky groove started by the keys guitar or sax and gradually builds up the energy until it peaks with percussive force and blaring horns. It typically simmers down until it builds back up for a final climax before ending. The supergroup is best known for its politically minded Worldwide Conspiracy album. Many of the songs on this album were performed live including the title track "Talkin' Shit." Other songs played were "Dirty Money" and "Fight to Win." Both songs were inspired by the group's recent trip to New York City.

> "The group blends together a horn-driven funk and world beat percussion with its politically laced messages into a tight and seamless presentation."

The second set included much of the same as the first. Despite the diversity that comes with such a large troupe, the paradoxical constraint of not being able to expand and cover new musical territories is unimaginable. With the difficulty to make each meet that many typical bands face it may be an even more daunting task to stay afloat as a band with everything being divided by so many heads. What would this band sound like if it toned down to a more maneuverable dimension? Perhaps they could keep their robust full sound without sacrificing tightness, they also could possibly take more risks and explore new terrain.

Providing a truly enjoyable performance Antibalas Afrobeat Orchestra is a very talented bunch of musicians who together present a very vivid and danceable experience. I could have done without the repetitive responsive crowd participation but I realize it keeps the audience involved. It'll be interesting to see how these guys evolve with added practice and performance. Hopefully, they will again be on the summer festival circuit in addition to their announced performance at Bonnaroo.

'Talk to Her' a filmmaker's must see

Spanish director shines

By LAUREN FREEMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Acclaimed Spanish director/screenwriter Pedro Almodovar depicts a vast and complex world of tortured loneliness and desperation in "Talk to Her" ("Hable con Ella"). The lives of the two main male characters, Benigno and Marco, intertwine as Marco's lover, Lydia the bullfighter, becomes comatose and is hospitalized. Benigno works as a nurse at the hospital, caring for a dancer Alicia, who has been in a coma for four years. This may seem like a weak plot idea, but Almodovar exceeds expectations with his over-the-top and sometimes bizarre, sometimes beautiful story.

Beginning and finishing with a theatrical ballet, Almodovar constantly reminds his audience of the theatrical influence on film as an artistic medium. In fact, "Talk to Her" is in its own radical way paying homage to the various predecessors to film known today. There are several ballets, a silent film and a bullfight all within the main narrative.

It was particularly interesting from a United States perspective to view Almodovar's correlation between bullfighting and film. After all, bull fighting, in its historical significance to Spain, has always been more than just a spectator sport. It's an artistic expression of angst and power. This combination of observation of event and art qualify bullfighting as a theatrical tradition preceding film. Perhaps the emotional battering a person undergoes when watching Almodovar's latest film is comparable to what one feels as they observe a bull fight.

"Talk to Her"
Directed by Pedro Almodovar
Starring Javier Camara Dario Grandinetti
Sony Pictures
Rated R
112 mins

Almodovar's characters are lonely and slightly psychopathic. However, viewers cannot help but feel intrigued and empathetic for their loneliness, thus making their psychotic behavior seem less offensive. Similarly, as a viewer at a bullfight, viewers might feel mixed emotions for the toreador who taunts the innocent bull in such a way that the taunting is beautified. Almodovar's evoked emotional tugging continues throughout the entirety of the movie.

The characters are relatable at every turn, particularly in the case of Marco. There are several instances when he watches a ballet or a musical performance and is so moved that he begins to cry. The audience feels it too, and Marco's

Continued on page 6

"Talk to Her" was directed by Pedro Almodovar and evolves around the lives of characters Benigno and Marco and their meeting in a hospital setting.

Spring break preparation

Did you miss us? The Ladies of "Running with Scissors" are back for yet another week of witty commentary on things you need to know. This week and next week, we are devoting our column to spring break and providing a travel guide for spring break success.

Running with Scissors

Melissa Hammel & Lizzy Nielsen

WHAT TO BRING

SELF-CONFIDENCE

The essential element, short of a bathing suit, to bring on any spring break excursion is some self-confidence. Yes, everyone including the "Ladies of Running with Scissors," have our moments in which we lack confidence and it's a must for those intending to meet anyone new on vacation. No one likes either a guy or a girl who will sit around in the corner staring at the floor. If you want to have a decent spring break, be willing to be assertive.

GOOD SUN BLOCK

We love tans as much as the next girls; however, coming home looking like a lobster with raccoon eyes is something that everyone should try to avoid. If you are going to a climate with lots of sun, bring some sun block and not just some tanning oil. Use

Continued on page 6

Game two; round two

KEVIN BACON &
GENE WILDER

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

GOLD SOLUTION: SHORTEST ROUTE, FASTEST TIME - 15 POINTS

Jake O'Lewis

SILVER SOLUTION: FASTEST TIME ONLY - 10 POINTS

BRONZE WINNER: MOST CREATIVE/THEMATIC ROUTE - 5 POINTS

HONORABLE MENTION: ALL OTHER PLAYERS WITH VALID SOLUTIONS - 1 POINT

Spanish film 'Talk to Her' wins hearts

Continued from page 5

relationship with Benigno is even spawned from this emotional display. (Benigno was present at one of the same ballets where Marco cried openly.)

It is quite appropriate to claim this film is perhaps a film-makers' film, but do not be discouraged if you are an average viewer who goes to the movies to be entertained: "Talk to Her" does entertain.

Noteworthy is a sexual scene that would be applauded by any devout Freudian. However, perhaps more notable is that this scene, among several others, is carried out by the means of a complex flashback. Almodovar doesn't shy away from flashbacks like many other directors (because it is a difficult thing to attempt without appearing hokey). In fact, he takes the meaning of flashback to new levels using flashbacks within flashbacks within dream sequences...and he does this both flawlessly and convincingly.

If you are an aspiring filmmaker, it would be silly not to take advantage of the opportunity to see this film. If you are an average viewer, take this opportunity to see a film that will dislodge your Hollywood-contrived perspective of the filmic medium.

Locally, "Talk to Her" is playing at the Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton.

'Running with Scissors:' advice for Spring break

Continued from page 3

your head on you will end up spending your entire break in your hotel room with aloe and an ice pack watching old movies on HBO.

MONEY

This is a no-brainer, but don't go on spring break without bringing enough cash to cover your expenses. There is nothing sadder than hanging out in the Bahamas or in Florida with nothing to eat but Ramen because you spent all of your cash on the plane ticket down.

GOOD FRIENDS

The worst thing about any vacation is going with someone you don't like or don't want to spend time with. The one factor that will make or break your spring break is the people you take with you. Although most people's plans have solidified by now, try to make sure you aren't going on break with someone you are going to fight with for five days straight. And if you are, try at least not to sit next to them on a car or plane ride.

COMMON SENSE

You do not have a license to act like a complete idiot just because you are on spring break. Simply put, try not to get yourself arrested by streaking across the campus of California or throwing up on a police officer in Puerto Rico. Although it makes a great story, sitting around in a police station in different state or country is not as fun as it looks. Trust us.

WHAT NOT TO BRING

Just as there are items that are absolutely essential to a spring break vacation, there's some items that can just stay in the freezing tundra of Amherst, for bringing them along would only cause you pain for having to carry it.

JEWELRY

Now, we realize that your one-carat diamond earrings from the boyfriend are something you wear all the damn time. However, on a trip to Cancun, such items are unnecessary and will just cause many tears when they disappear out of your $30 a night hotel room. Leave anything you don't want lost or get stolen at home; it's just a safer idea.

EXCESSIVE AMOUNTS OF MONEY

Again, this falls into the "lost or stolen" category. If I had a dime for each time I've heard stories about people carrying tons of cash in their wallets and those wallets getting stolen or lost after someone's 11th Mai Tai. Avoid all this. Keep the money in the bank, carry an ATM card or use traveler's checks. Along the same lines, leave the credit cards at home. After that 12th Mai Tai, you're more likely to buy a round of drinks for an entire bar.

DO NOT DO ANYTHING YOU WILL LATER REGRET

No matter how great an idea it seems to run up to those guys with the cameras and expose whatever part of your anatomy you're intoxicated enough to be proud of, do not do it. How will you feel someday when you're on a commercial for "College Girls Gone Wild?" Do you really want your children to see that? Avoid showing your breasts for free too. You never know who's around with a camera.

BRINGING YOUR ENTIRE CLOSET IS NOT NECESSARY

See above statement. Bring enough undergarments for the week, but it's not necessary to pack up your entire closet for a week on the beach. Chances are you're not going to be wearing too many dresses or pairs of jeans. Check the weather in your destination in advance and bring clothing that works for whatever climate you're heading to. Bringing your entire wardrobe will only cause you major back pain for lugging it around airports and maybe even more money, as airlines charge now for baggage that weighs too much. So protect your vertebrae and your pocket and pack a little suitcase with only the essentials.

■■■

While there are many other things you shouldn't bring, when it comes down to it, only bring stuff you don't mind losing. Spring break is just one huge party, and you're more likely to misplace or have your belongings stolen on this particular week of the year. Tune in next week as we tackle final departure preparation, when spring break will be a mere five days away.

Melissa Hummel and Lizzy Nielsen are Collegian Columnists.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

UMass CAMPUS RECREATION

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:

OFFICIALS NEEDED:

Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations.
Mon.-Thurs. 8:15 Boyden, 5-3665
stop www.umass.edu/campusrec

Castaway Lounge
I-91 to exit 24, south on Rte. 5
Whately, Mass., (413) 665-8733
Will Proudly Present All Male Revue Show
Monday
March 3, 2003
8p.m
Featuring The New York Centerfolds

Pick up your early tickets at club
Free V.I.P room parties
Free Dancers Choice
At 5 PM & 10 PM
Everyday
We will soon have another successful
FEMALE Amateur Night
Call for Details
PRIZES

Everyone asking what your plans are after graduation?
You have options!
Massachusetts School of Law graduates ACHIEVE!
Get the same edge that MSL graduates enjoy in almost every professional realm.
Law — Education
Business — Healthcare
Government — Law Enforcement
A Juris Doctor degree puts you ahead of the competition.
A Juris Doctor from MSL affords you the freedom of that competative advantage without the worries others suffer behind a mountain of debt.
Interested? Come check us out
Massachusetts School of Law is accredited by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.
Visit them Online at www.neasc.org
MSL
Massachusetts School of Law
Woodland Park
500 Federal Street
Andover, MA 01810
(978)-681-0800
Visit MSL Online at www.mslaw.edu

STUDENT TRAVEL web fares
and NOT just online
London.....$258
Paris.....$256
Madrid.....$298
Rio de Janeiro..$486
Fare is roundtrip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
ISIC www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

Arts and Living Meeting

The Arst and Living editors want you to come join the staff. Cover concerts and life around UMass and other fun opportunities. Meet Wed. at 5 p.m. in the Campus Center basement.

Munchie Madness 3-6 PM
TUESDAY - FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins $4.48
Nachos Especial $4.48
Sweet Potato Fries $3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
COMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
www.judiesrestaurant.com
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491

THE RED LION INN
Food & Lodging since c.1773
Stockbridge, Massachusetts 01262
www.redlioninn.com
HRTA STUDENTS
Looking for an exciting and rewarding opportunity?
Stop by The Red Lion Inn booth at the HRTA Career Day on Wednesday, March 5, 2003 in the Campus Center and meet with an HRTA alumna from the Inn.
We offer unique and customized hospitality internships in a historic atmosphere offering gracious lodging complemented by a full service dining room serving contemporary regional cuisine.
Gain "real life" experience with an internship in:
Culinary • Lodging • Food & Beverage
Discover what The Red Lion Inn can offer you!
If you miss us on Career Day, please feel free to contact Eva Sheridan at (413) 298-1677 or recruitment@redlioninn.com for further information.
www.redlioninn.com

AMHERST – "Music of America" premieres Tuesday, and Steven Dennis Bodner directs the Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band. Guest conductors include UMass alumnus ('98) Professor David Sporny and Lt. Jason Fettig, a member of the U.S. Marine Band. Music to be featured included pieces from John Adams, William Schuman and Charles Ives. The performance begins at 8 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Cost is $5 for Five College Area students and $10 for general admission. Contact the Fine Arts Center box office at 413-545-2511 for more information.

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. – The Majestic Theater will present "Judgment at Nuremburg," a play adapted for Tony Randall's National Actors Theatre by Abby Mann.

The play is set in 1948, during the second chapter in the Nuremburg trials. The story follows the trial of Ernst Janning, a renowned author and scholar who stood as a great figure in the German judicial system and the Minister of justice under the Nazis.

Show dates will be Thursdays, March 6 through April 3. Matinees will be performed at 10:30 a.m. for a $10 general admission price.

AMHERST – Infinity Brass presents "Treasures Old and New" Sunday, March 9. The performance will include trumpeters Eric Berlin and Melissa Willis, Laura Klock on the horn, trombonist David Sporny and John Manning on the tuba. Performed works will include music from Salvatore Macchia, Evan Hause, Jan Bach and Oskar Bohme. The performance begins at 8 p.m. at the Bezanson Recital Hall. Cost is $4 for Five College Area students and $8 for general admission. Contact the Fine Arts Center box office at 413-545-2511 for more information.

AMHERST – As part of the 21st Annual Jazz Showcase, "Horn-Band Mania" arrives at UMass on Tuesday, March 11. Producer Jeffery Holmes gathers the Jazz Ensemble I, Chapel Jazz, Jazz Lab and Vocal Jazz for this presentation. Under the direction of Catherine Jensen-Hole, Jeffrey Holmes, David Sporny and Susumu Watanabe, the show will present music from various outlets. Pieces included will be from Chicago, Blood, Sweat and Tears, Earth, Wind and Fire, Tower of Power and Brecher Brothers. The performance begins at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Cost is $5 for Five College Area students and $10 for general admission. Contact the Fine Arts Center box office at 413-545-2511 for more information.

SOUTH HADLEY – The Art Museum at Mount Holyoke College will be hosting a photographic exhibit, "Suspended Animation" by Rosamond Wolff Purcell, now through Mar. 16. Photographs by the photographer and writer Purcell, whose recent work includes, "Special Cases: Natural Anomalies and Historical Monsters."

Rosamond Purcell's images appear as part myth and part science. Two-headed animals, babies in jars, a transparent slice of a human face and childish skulls opening like flowers are just some of Purcell's works. Researching the history of monstrosity, Purcell presents age-old gossip along with rare scientific and medical texts, historical images, and her own exquisite photographs.

Frequently collaborating with paleontologist and science historian Stephen Jay Gould, Purcell has produced nine catalogs, including "Finders Keepers" and "Special Cases: Natural Anomalies and Historical Monsters."

Freshman director Rob Marshall wins top guild award

By ANTHONY BREZNICAN
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Freshman moviemaker Rob Marshall razzle-dazzled the Directors Guild of America with his musical "Chicago" Saturday night, claiming the group's top honor and defeating veteran directors Martin Scorsese and Roman Polanski.

In the 55 years since the guild began presenting its top honor the winner has gone on to receive the Academy Award for best director all but five times.

Marshall, 42, a Tony-winning Broadway director and choreographer, appeared as shaken as he was grateful after claiming the award. "This is something I didn't quite expect," he said backstage, describing the experience as "overwhelming."

Asked where he was going to place the trophy, a gold-plated disc about the size of a serving dish, Marshall replied: "I'm going to have to get another apartment in New York. It's huge!"

After directing the TV children's movies "Cinderella" and "Annie," the Pittsburgh native broke through into features with an approach to the jazz musical "Chicago" that blended a Vaudeville-style fantasy world with the story about star-struck female prisoners trying to beat murder raps and gain fame.

The film, which features the songs "Razzle Dazzle," "And All That Jazz" and "Mister Cellophane," leads this year's Oscar contenders with 13 nominations, including best picture. The Oscars are set for March 23.

Although his work on "Gangs of New York" lost to Marshall, Scorsese came away with a lifetime achievement honor from the guild for a career spanning three decades.

Scorsese, 60, has never won the guild prize, although he was previously nominated for the 1976 drama "Taxi Driver," 1990's "Raging Bull," 1990's "GoodFellas" and 1993's "The Age of Innocence." He has also never won an Oscar.

Sophomore steals the show for Rhode Island

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – A sophomore crashed Rhode Island's Senior Day party.

Starting in place of senior point guard Howard Smith, rookie Dawan Robinson led the Rams over the Massachusetts men's basketball team yesterday, by a score of 65-58.

Without their floor general, the Rams had to rely on Robinson to fill that void, contribute points and play strong defense against UMass' solid backcourt.

Robinson passed his test with flying colors, harassing Maroon and White point guard Anthony Anderson, grabbing five steals and limiting his turnovers.

"I thought Dawan Robinson did an excellent job doing what he needed to do," URI coach Jim Baron said.

Robinson also threw together a tremendous 23-point second half that saw him shoot 4-for-4 from behind the 3-point arc and almost single-handedly turned a nine-point halftime deficit into a URI win.

The rookie, who is listed as a sophomore after sitting out as an academic non-qualifier last season, shot 8-for-12 from the field on the game (4-for-5 on 3-pointers) and 9-for-11 from the free throw line for a career-high 29 points.

"(Robinson) was huge for them," UMass senior Micah Brand said. "We knew going in that he was more of a driver, so we played a little off him. He took advantage of that."

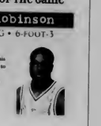
Robinson, who has averaged 22 points in his last five game, headed into the game shooting 23.7 percent (18-for-76) on 3-pointers.

"He played great," Lappas said. "He's been playing great for the last five games."

"Every team plays me for the drive," Robinson said. "I know I can hit 3-pointers. I was in the zone and I tried to make them pay as much as possible."

No. 5 dished out two assists and grabbed six rebounds in 38 minutes of action.

Robinson hurt the Minutemen in the teams' first matchup, as well. In that contest, a 60-53 URI win on Jan. 15 at the Mullins Center, he led the Rams with 16 points off the bench.



Robinson converted on 5-for-10 from the field and grabbed five rebounds to go along with two assists and a pair of steals in 28 minutes of play. But the sophomore's outside shot wasn't on display that night, shooting just 0-for-3 from behind the 3-point arc. But UMass coach Steve Lappas isn't going to call Robinson a UMass-killer just yet.

"I don't buy into that stuff," said Lappas, who refused to say Robinson had his team's number just yet. "He played good against us twice. If he plays good against us 10 times, then maybe."

Baron had an interesting point of view on Robinson's success against the Minutemen.

"(UMass) plays you so tight that you need guys to take the ball off the dribble," Baron said. "That is one of (Robinson's) strengths."

Rhode Island PLAYER OF THE Game
Dawan Robinson
SOPHOMORE • G • 6-FOOT-3
Connected on all four of his 3-point attempts en route to posting a game-high 29 points as URI (65-58 win over the Minutemen.

UMass finishes season on high note gave them a 22-10 advantage. The lead would grow to as many as 14, as Smith poured in four straight points and Sneed connected on a 3-pointer from the wing to make it 37-23 with 6:17 left in the first frame.

Continued from page 10

"We wanted to make sure we played well today," Sneed said. "We came out strong and our shots we're falling so we kept them back on their heels."

UMass PLAYER OF THE Game
Nekole Smith
SENIOR • F • 6-FOOT-2
Scored a team-high 20 points and grabbed five rebounds in 31 minutes in her final game at the Mullins Center, a 77-68 win over Duquesne.

A 41-30 halftime edge grew to as many as 16 when consecutive layups by Butler and Lliyandi put the Maroon and White up 54-38. However Duquesne (14-13 7-9 Atlantic 10) refused to die as four different players contributed buckets on an 11-0 run that made the score 56-51 with 9:53 to go in the game.

"When they made their run, we knew we had to just regroup and keep playing tough," Pegues said. "We weren't going to let this one get away."

A mini 6-0 run fueled by four points from Pegues would build the lead back to 10; one they would never relinquish.

"This is how we wanted to go out," Smith said. "We needed this game heading into [the postseason] and we wanted to finish our careers here with a win."

Duquesne junior Candace Futrell lead all scorers with 31 points, including the 1,000th of her career in the second half. Smith led the Minutewomen with 20 points, and Pegues and Butler chipped in with 18 and 16 respectively. Butler also recorded her 23rd double-double of the season with 11 rebounds.

It was also the final home game in a UMass uniform for senior reserves Kristin Cannon and Stasia Robinson.

The Minutewomen will now begin preparation for a first round A-10 Tournament matchup with the La Salle Explorers Thursday at 6 p.m. at the Ryan Center on the campus of the University of Rhode Island.

Three Divisions: Men, Women and Co-ed
•
Free and open to all students
Team Hoop Shooting Contest!
ATLANTIC 10 Shootout
$10,000
FREE T-SHIRT, FOOD AND RADIO FOR ALL PARTICIPANTS!
★
WIN AIRLINE TICKETS!
★
WIN SNEAKERS!
SHOOT!
Alternating shots from six spots on the court in 30 seconds
SCORE!
Men and women division winners win ROUND-TRIP AIR-FARE to anywhere in the U.S.
Co-ed division finalists will shoot at halftime of a men's basketball game
WIN!
Co-ed champions of each Atlantic 10 campus will compete for $10,000 at the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship in Dayton, March 14 and 15
PRESENTED BY
GMAC
NAUTICA COMPETITION
THE NEWEST PLAYER IN MEN'S FRAGRANCE
new balance
U·S AIRWAYS
Caribbean
TO ENTER LOG ON: www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS AND REGISTRATION
SHOOTOUT QUALIFYING ROUND:
Tuesday, March 4 • 7:00 p.m. • Mullins Center
CO-ED SHOOTOUT FINALS:
Wednesday, March 5 • 7:00 p.m. • Mullins Center
LOCAL SPONSORS
Coca-Cola
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN
Hampshire Mall
Domino's Pizza
University Store's Stuart Anthony
wmua fm 91

'WAM' line comes up big

Continued from page 10

from Ryan Cordeiro's rebound tally just seconds earlier.

"I thought that was a big, big goal," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "They certainly would have had their chances to get the tie."

Merrimack coach Chris Serino should have known his club was subject to being burned again by one of Hockey East's most talented lines. But having played their third game in five days, the Warriors did an admirable job of holding Werner, Anderson and Mauldin to a mere five shots on goal.

"If you look at the chances they got, they didn't get many, but the ones they got they put in," Serino said. "In the first period they got three 'grade A' scoring chances and got two goals. In the second, they got two chances and one went in, and in the third they got one chance and that was the empty net."

Werner has scored arguably the biggest goals in each of the last two Minuteman victories, after netting the game-winner against Maine last Friday. UMass also has a dominant 14-3-1 record when he gets on the scoresheet.

So with the Minutemen gearing toward a rematch with the Black Bears, their hopes of advancing very well could lie in the hands of their youngest player.

UMass PLAYER OF THE GAME

Stephen Werner

FRESHMAN • F • 6-FOOT-1

Scored a goal and recorded three assists in the Mass Attack's 5-2 win over Merrimack.

Minutemen beat MC for best regular season finish in nine years

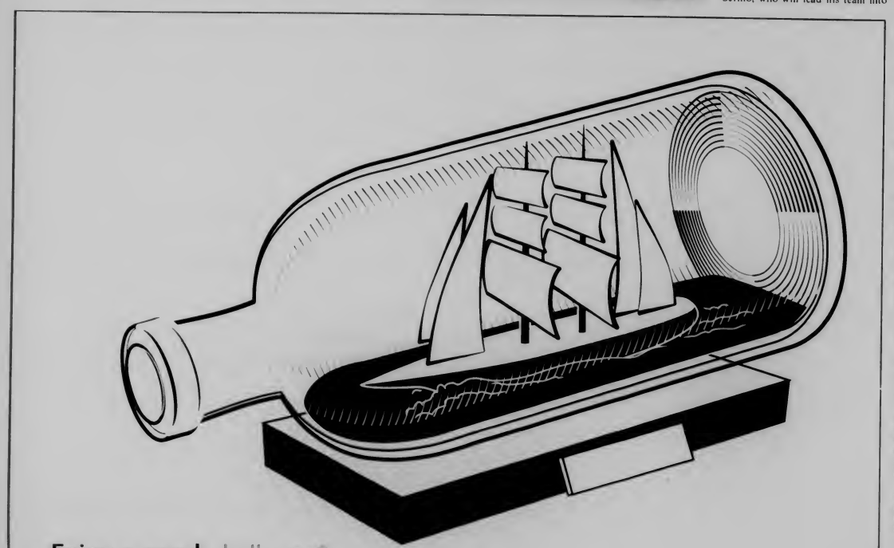
Continued from page 10

three games in five nights. They outshot us and I was really impressed with the heart they showed and the way they battled."

"We were tired, there was no question about it, we were tired tonight," said MC coach Chris Serino, who will lead his team into Boston College for the first round of the playoffs next week. "We weren't on them as quickly as we should have been on them, or as quickly as we could have been on them. We played three tough games in a week and they were pretty fresh. I think we played OK, but we didn't pay attention to detail again."

The Minutemen will take on Maine in Orono for the fifth time this season on Thursday, for the opening of the best-of-three first round. The Black Bears have gone 3-1 this season against the Maroon and White, but having just come off a weekend split with the Bears, the players were enthusiastic at having another shot at Tim Whitehead's squad.

"I think I like [the matchup] a lot – I bet every guy on our team does, we just played them last week – we played them really well Friday night and had a win, Saturday night we played good for two periods, they got a couple of lucky bounces and we kind of caved in," Warner said. "Of all the teams we could have played in the playoffs, this is a good draw for us."



Lowell secured the final HE playoff spot by virtue of a 4-1 win over Northeastern, and will travel to Durham to face top seed New Hampshire, who defeated BC 4-1 to get the top nod. Maine defeated Boston University 4-2, meaning the Terriers will have to go on the road for their first round set with Providence.

According to Cahoon, with a playoff series on the line, the practice regimen may be slightly altered this week, especially as the team will travel north on Wednesday.

"There's a little bit more focus put on preparation – we need to find a way to beat Maine in this series or we put our stuff away – so we're on high alert if you will, in terms of breaking them down in every possible area," he said.

The Minutemen have never won at Alfond Arena, and post a 0-19-0 record at the rink. But asked if his team could win the series in Orono, Cahoon was adamant.

"Can we? There's no sense in playing the game if we don't think we can."

Enjoy a good challenge?

You want a personal life, but you also want a career that challenges you.

At Ernst & Young, you can have both. True, we have high expectations.

And some tasks will no doubt rack your brain. But rest assured.

We help our people face assignments with some remarkably handy tools, such as the most advanced technology, information, and resources, bar none. And with a talented pool of colleagues and mentors by your side, success is closer than you think. And so are the rewards.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2002

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG

FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

For great sports coverage go to www.daily collegian.com

Writing Coach

Published author with 25 years' experience in meeting deadlines can help you break through writing barriers and complete important projects on time. Call 413-467-9470 or email Jeanne@yourghostwriter.com

CINEMARK

The Best Seat In Town

CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6

367 Russell St. 413-587-4233

Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 - Thursday 3/6/03 ONLY

DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS

Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com

CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:10 4:20 7:15 10:20*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25*
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00*
DARK BLUE (R) (1:40 4:30) 7:50 10:30* (1:40) SHOWS Sun 3/2: Sneak Preview of Agent Cody Banks (PG) 3:00pm
BARBERSHOP (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 4:05 6:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05

BRAINDEAD STUDENTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 10:00
HOW TO LOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:10
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 8:00
Senior Sneak 3/6/03 - GODS AND GENERALS 9:00AM Doors open at 8:15AM *no passes/superusers

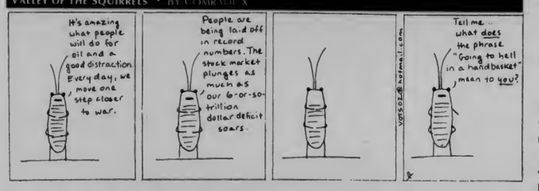
*NO PASSES NO SUPERUSERS

Tickets & Concessions available at cinemark.com

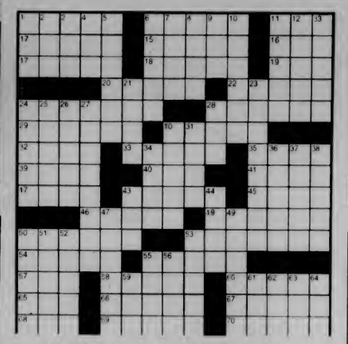
ESSIE COOPER • BY ROBERT D. KRZAKOWSKI

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY



THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE



GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY CORWIN X

ACROSS

1 Actor Welles
6 Winner
10 Thrill
14 Casual life
15 Fierce warrior, once
16 Pamplona cheer
17 Quartet part
18 Rugged cliffs
19 Type of poem
20 Ridiculous
22 Audacity
24 Part of a series
28 Laments
29 Fame
30 Utter happiness
32 Cabo's highway
33 Love, in Le Havre
34 Ms. Dickson
39 Nan Dickson
40 Untold centuries
41 Knowledge
42 Low voice
43 Vast assortment
45 Wife of Geraint
46 Floor polishes
48 Concurred
50 Subside
53 Extremely
54 Dwelling
55 Claims on property
57 Upper part
58 Location
60 Lost color
65 Ship's officer
66 Behind the —
67 Give the slip
68 Tint
69 Hammett gumshoe Sam
70 Deluded (2 wds.)

DOWN

1 Frequently
2 Salty Field role
Norma —
3 Energy source
4 Singer Yoko —
5 Not broad
6 Quiz-show host
7 Ancient poet
8 Pythons
9 Unit of work
10 Nightclubs
11 Beau
12 Pygmie
13 Payback
14 periods
21 Ms. Ferber
23 Go-getters
24 Novelist Hemingway
25 Parking light
26 Listless
27 Grieved
28 Cosmonaut space lab
30 Oats
31 Moon goddess
34 Pierre's parent
36 Sharpens
37 The Lathe Mermaid
38 Lingerie item
43 Lumberjack tool
44 Kittens playthings
47 Pros
49 Music genre
50 Hart Malin
51 Cabinet wood
52 Grove
53 Web-footed birds
55 'Lost Horizon' role
56 Overshot the mark
59 Rani
61 Livy's hello
62 Terhune collie
63 Tokyo, formerly
64 Bear's refuge

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-22-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

for Amherst, Ma.

MONDAY
- High: 22
- Low:1

TUESDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 29

WEDNESDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 12

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Garden Vegetable Soup
- Cavatelli Supreme
- N.E. Lite Scrod with Herb Topping
- California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Garden Vegetable Soup
- Chicken Mamou
- Honey Garlic Roast Pork
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald Ling
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Mike Kulak / Scott Ciruso
Fedrich Torres

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Ah, I'd love to wear a rainbow everyday and tell the world that everything's OK / But I'll try to carry off a little darkness on my back 'till things are brighter...I'm the Man In Black.

- Johnny Cash

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Focus on presentability today. You'll want to adopt the right behavior and look your best.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Someone is likely to know what's going on inside your head better than you do today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
What begins as a slow process, one that you do not wholly enjoy, is something that you do with more gusto.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Attendance is required in your second class. Make sure you wake up.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You can afford to be more sensitive today. And everyday for that matter.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You'll be going from one thing to another all day long.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
A social gathering affords more than one opportunity to capitalize on someone else's oversight.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't be so quick to temper. A calm composure will save the day today.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
If you skip classes today a great discomfort will befall you.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You'll be forced to crush someone with your poisoned tail after they stupidly make fun of "the new scaly kid."

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You might want to double-check your figures today. You'll notice that you forgot to carry the one.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't let someone else's lack of enthusiasm bring you down today.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in Hospitality? Come to the HRTA Career Day on Wednesday, March 5. Fifty companies will offer internships,seasonal, part-and full-time jobs!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Save up to $700 Off Move-In Costs Deluxe 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & WATER Washers/dryers available Minutes from UMass- On free busline Call Sugarloaf Estates today! 413-665-3856 visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Voyager Van $1750 549-6023

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at Around-Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Assistant Needed for busy office on Nantucket Island May-Aug. or Dec. Computer, accurate typing and telephone Skills necessary. Salary and housing. Fax resume to 508 228 8778 or Mail to: Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Dunkin Donuts supervisor needed for shop located in Mullins Center ice rink at UMass Amherst year round position call Marlene 413-549-6552 for interview.

EMPLOYMENT

Internship: For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9,300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmarill1@yahoo.com

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Want to know who will win the big games? Email todayspicks@hotmail.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 2bedrm apt $425+utils Aval. ASAP in Amherst on bus line, heat+water include. No deposit. Prof. Student+cat email flowerface4u@netscape.net

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst-area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days, Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials! Incl. Port, Departure, Hotel Tax! www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummer-tours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Off to Orono they go

UMass tops MC; will face Maine

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER, Mass. – One goal accomplished plenty more to go.

Before this season, Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon had many goals for his team and his program – one of which was an above-.500 finish for the regular season. By virtue of Saturday's 3-2 victory over Merrimack, the Minutemen (17-16-1, 10-14-0 Hockey East) secured the sixth seed in the Hockey East playoffs (they will face Maine in the first round) and a plus-.500 season for the first time since joining the conference.

"As happy as I am to get through the game...and any time's a win, we know we have to play a whole lot more solid in order to succeed," he said.

The trio of Greg Mauldin, Matt Anderson and Stephen Werner had nine points in the contest, giving them 23 points in the team's three games against the Warriors (12-16-6, 7-13-4 HE). Werner had a goal and three assists on the evening, as the Minutemen bested Merrimack backstop Joe Exter.

UMass	3
Merrimack	2

"If you see the first two goals I think any time you get a two-on-one you want to make a pass because he's really square on the first shot," Werner said. "To be honest with you I was surprised my goal went in."

Werner's goal was a crucial one, coming just 13 seconds after Ryan Cordeiro's second goal of the game trimmed the UMass lead to 3-2. Werner picked the puck off the boards and fired a low slapshot past Exter (14 saves) for his 13th goal of the season.

Mike Warner also answered a Merrimack goal for the Maroon and White, as his tally at 15:22 made the score 3-1 in favor of the visitors. Warner had three or four whacks at the puck in the crease before it popped up into the air and he swatted it over Exter.

"It's not something I've worked on lately – it might have also helped playing baseball in high school, but it might have been a little lucks too," Warner said.

The Warriors were playing their third game in five nights with all three contests coming at different arenas. They tied Lowell (2-2-1) and lost to Northeastern (4-1) earlier this week.

"Merrimack deserves real kudos for what they've done this week," said Cahoon, who is going to the Hockey East playoffs for the first time with the Minutemen. "They're undermanned – missing three of their top forwards certainly their top forward in [Marcel] Rosa – and they're the ones that have played

Continued on page 8

Greg Mauldin and the Mass Attack secured their best regular season record in nine years by downing Merrimack 5-2 on Saturday.

Line packs big punch

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Even though he would probably be an authority on the subject, Stephen Werner still couldn't explain it.

After he and his line mates Greg Mauldin and Matt Anderson racked up another huge night against Merrimack College Saturday (the trio's third this season against the Warriors), Werner was unable to put a finger on a reason for its success.

"The pucks seemed to bounce our way against them, especially in their rink," Werner said.

The freshman from Chevy Chase, Md., is in contention for Hockey East Rookie of the Year, but this quip might give him honors for "Understatement of the Year" as well. Not only were the pucks bouncing the "WAM" line's way, they made a beeline past Warrior goaltender Joe Exter every time one of them touched the puck.

The three accumulated nine points in the 5-2 UMass win, and 23 points in the three-game set against Merrimack. That's 23 percent of the line's total offense all season (102 pts) in that series alone. Of the 12 goals scored against the Warriors by the Minutemen this season, the "WAM" line produced nine of them.

Anderson got things going for the Minutemen with about six minutes left in the first period, as he patiently waited for Exter to commit before lifting the puck high to stake UMass to the early lead. Mauldin doubled the Merrimack deficit three minutes later after one-timing Werner's feed from the right face-off circle on a two-on-one break.

But Werner's goal, while it might not have been as pretty as those of his partners, proved to be more important for UMass, as it stole any momentum the Warriors received

Continued on page 8

A dominating performance

Senior Kevin Leveille paced a potent Minutemen attack with seven goals and three assists as the Maroon and White cruised past Stony Brook 17-7. For full coverage of the game please see tomorrow's paper.

Robinson leads Rhody past Minutemen

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – With two teams fighting for position, and over 7,000 fans in attendance at Rhode Island's Ryan Center, UMass' 65-58 loss to the Rams had a postseason feel to it.

And it was rookie Dawan Robinson – galvanized by the crowd and his first career start – that stepped up to score a game-high 29 points and lead Rhody to victory.

After Micah Brand's two free throws tied the game at 56 with just over two minutes remaining, Robinson answered right back with a deep three. "His asset is taking some guys off the drive," URI coach Jim Baron said. "But I tell you, he hit some big, big shots today."

Rhode Island	65
UMass	58

At the other end Brand hit two more free throws to make it a one-point game. But the Rams countered again as Lazare Adingono drove and dished to Marcel Momplaisir for the slam.

Then Jeff Viggiano, who struggled going 2-9 from the field, missed a baseline three that sealed the loss.

Down nine, the Rams (16-10, 8-7 Atlantic, 10) began the second half...in much the same way they began the game, with a decisive run.

After Anthony Anderson fed Jackie Rogers in the lane for a dunk at the 17:00 minute mark, rookie Robinson took over.

"He was huge for them," Brand said. "We knew going in that he was more of a driver. So we played a little off him. He took advantage of that." He had 11 points in less than five minutes as Rhody used an 18-6 run to erase the deficit and take a one-point lead with 12 minutes remaining.

Thanks in large part to Robinson's 23 second-half points, the Rams never trailed again.

Brand paced the Minutemen with 18 points and a perfect 10-10 performance from the line.

"Brand did a great job." UMass coach Steve Lappas said. "He came out very focused and he wants to get the most out of his last few weeks."

UMass began the first half ice cold from the field. The Minutemen shot just 1-9 from the field in the game's first eight minutes, including 0-6 from beyond the arc.

Meanwhile, Rhode Island took advantage with a 13-2 run. Center Jon Clark was the catalyst with five of the game's first seven points.

Top scorers Dustin Hellenga and Brian Woodward added a pair of fast break dunks to cap the run and ignite the Ryan Center crowd.

Mike Lasme, who has seen limited time in the last two games due to injury, came off the bench to cool Rhody off.

The freshman shooting guard hit his first four threes on a 32-15 run that gave UMass a nine-point lead at halftime.

Lasme finished with 15 points at halftime on 5-9 shooting. But Baron made the adjustment from zone defense to man to shut him down in the second half.

"Our man really gave us good energy," Baron said. "And I thought we tired them out a little bit. Lasme wasn't as quick coming off screens."

Anthony Anderson added eight points on the streak while a Gabe Lee block with five minutes left stymied the Rams counter.

Viggiano shut down Hellenga in the first half. The sophomore guard had only four points in 20 minutes.

On the other end, Clark held leading scorer Jackie Rogers to only two first half points.

With the loss UMass (11-16, 5-9 A-10) is officially eliminated from National Invitation Tournament contention.

Anthony Anderson scored just eight points while his counterpart Dawan Robinson poured in 29 as URI downed the Minutemen 65-58.

Seniors finish with a bang

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Marnie Dacko couldn't have drawn it up any better.

The Massachusetts women's basketball coach started five of her seven seniors against Duquesne at the Mullins Center Sunday for "Senior Day." the final game in Amherst for the group.

UMass	77
Duquesne	68

Naturally she hoped for a good performance from each of them, capping off what have been successful careers for Jenniler Butler, Nekole Smith, Ebony Pegues, Sirii Hivandi and Amber Sneed.

What she got was the quintet combining for all but one of the team's 77 points in front of a season-high 1,278 fans, as the Minutewomen (14-13 6-10 Atlantic 10) finished the regular season on a high note, beating the Dukes 77-68.

"I just couldn't have asked for more from [the seniors] today," Dacko said. "It was their day...their last chance to play here at home, and they definitely made the most of it.

"I'm very proud of them, and glad they went out like they did."

The Minutewomen blew open a tie game early in the first half with a 13-1 run that

Continued on page 7

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 93

UMass faculty responds to Governor's new plan

Governor Mitt Romney's new plan to make UMass-Amherst independent of the other state campuses has left many at the University worried for the future of the school.

By Barbara Lotto
Collegian Correspondent

Gov. Mitt Romney announced this week his plan to drastically transform the University of Massachusetts-Amherst into a gigantic school, run independently of the state's other campuses.

This was announced at the same time as Romney's state budget results, which will raise UMass tuition for in-state students by 15 percent, and 22 percent for others.

In the upcoming school year, Massachusetts' residents will owe $6,424 per semester. Non-residents will have to pay almost $18,000 in tuition, a figure comparable to many private institutions.

Although details are undisclosed, Romney's proposal includes the addition of another 15,000 students to UMass-Amherst over the next decade, bringing enrollment to 38,000. It also dedicates hundreds of millions of state dollars to the creation of new dorms, classrooms, and facilities.

His goal is for UMass-Amherst to be comparable to other large, top public universities, such as the University of Michigan.

So what does the University's faculty think of Romney's idea? While it may increase the school's prestige and bring in more money in the long term, is it worth the compromise of a more crowded campus?

The cuts will have "profound, sweeping effects" on the University, said James Shaw, president of United Auto Workers Local 2322.

"It's hard to fully imagine what the impact will be because the details of Governor Romney's plan have been somewhat vague," Shaw said. "What it's really doing is making a bad situation worse on campus. All the things that make the University great are under attack."

Shaw said that students will have a harder time getting into classes that are hard enough already to get into. Classes will be even larger, lectures with more than 100 students will increase, there will be fewer faculty to accommodate students and the student/advisor ratio will be worse.

Political Science Chair M. J. Peterson said there will also be pressure for departments to economize on things like photocopies and technology they buy and use.

Romney's proposal includes keeping money collected from tuition on the UMass-Amherst campus. Tuition dollars currently go to the state for redistribution.

Peterson pointed out that she does not see a way to prevent all hikes in tuition rates because that is partly what funds a university. But she is worried that the legislature will cut back on what it gives to the University because it sees extra money coming in as a result of the increase in tuition.

"Normally it would be risky because there is always the temptation to increase tuition instead of getting state funds," Ron Story, President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said. "It can't be a substitute for state funding. We hope we can find support and help elsewhere."

Amherst senator and UMass-Amherst alumnus, Stan Rosenberg, said that he chose to attend UMass because he could afford it.

"UMass was the only hope I had," he said. "I want to make sure that it's available for the next generation and many to follow. I would be very careful to make sure we don't price kids out."

"It's very exciting to think we might be level funded when everyone else gets cut, but we need to be very careful," Rosenberg said. "It sets the stage for the privatization of the University."

Rosenberg said that key elements for privatization are evident in Romney's proposal. "We may have a wolf in sheep's clothing here," he said.

"The governor talks about the need to balance the budget without raising taxes," said Shaw. "Instead, he's raising tuition and fees, which is raising taxes in another way. The governor is levying a massive tax directly onto the students."

Raising tuition especially limits the chances of minorities and the poor getting into the school, Shaw said.

"This tax is basically a 'fee for service.' If you can't afford it, you can't come to the University," he said. "We need UMass to remain a public, affordable University."

"There are no guarantees that the financial aid will be there," Rosenberg said. "There's no guarantee you can push costs down later, I know we're cheaper than the comparable group of public universities, but we have to make sure we don't too raise rates too fast."

"The whole fiscal problem is a revenue crisis, not a budget problem," said Shaw. "State spending has not kept up with the growth in personal income."

Shaw admitted there is not an easy solution to this problem, but tax reform would be a good start.

Story said that the faculty has been reduced by almost 15 percent since 1990. The Boston Globe also reported that officials predicted that Romney's plan would lead to 1,500 layoffs out of 13,000 employees at UMass.

"I don't see how we're going to be able to handle going down another 15 percent in the next 10 years," he said. "We were hoping to try to rebuild after the last cuts, but we can't unless the legislature decides to turn around this decision."

Romney's plan also calls for eliminating University of Massachusetts' President William Bulger's office.

"I think overall the president's office has done us more good than harm," Rosenberg said. He said that having to report to a board of higher education or a secretary of education isn't necessarily better.

"I would want to know why that's better than reporting to a president's office that cares only about UMass," he said. "Campuses always want to be independent, but they always report to somebody. I want to know who we're going to report to and how much they're going to care about us."

Story said that there will be a teach-in held on March 11 and 12 so that students will have the chance to write legislators about why UMass-Amherst needs more support.

"We're really on the edge here," Story said. "I don't see how we're going to make it through this without some type of assistance."

"It's fairly clear to me." Peterson said, "that even if Governor Romney's reorganization plan doesn't pass, UMass-Amherst needs to be more active in supplementing its resources from the state."

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

DEATH'S STING
SAYING GOODBYE NEVER GETS EASIER
PAGE 4

TALIB KWELI
AN INTERVIEW WITH THE FAMED RAPPER
PAGE 5

DOMINATION
LAX DESTROYS STONY BROOK
PAGE 8

Everywoman's Center celebrates International Women's Day today

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

Today, in celebration of International Women's Day, the Everywoman's Center and the University of Massachusetts Campus Activities will present independent artist and scholar Max Dashu and her multi-cultural slide presentation "Female Rebels and Mavericks."

The event will take place in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union Building from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Following the presentation there will also be a reception offering refreshments in honor of International Women's Day. The event is free and open to the public.

"Female rebels and Mavericks" is one of 80 slide shows that Dashu has developed since the founding of the slide show series.

Suppressed Women's Histories, in 1970. The Suppressed Histories

Archive, a California based program, aims to increase awareness of female heritages and achievements from an international perspective.

The slide talk on Tuesday will focus on audacious women who have broken the rules and have spoken out against war, racism, and oppression. The visuals will present a global view, including photos of activists, radicals, and visionaries from around the world.

Presented in the show are visuals and stories of courageous and independent women including Chinese marriage resisters, African-Americans who reclaimed the women's right to drum, and Ethiopian activists fighting to stop female genital excision, as well as many others.

Dashu has photographed over 12,000 slides and created various shows from an array of sources including history books, newspapers, ethnographic studies and even album covers. The free-lance teacher of international women's studies has presented her work at conferences, bookstores, museums, prisons, festivals and galleries throughout North America. She has also presented at Northwestern, Princeton, Stanford and scores of other colleges.

Dashu has acted as historical consultant for a variety of projects, including Donna Deitch's film, "Woman to Woman" and the San Francisco Women's Building mural project. She is also an artist who publishes prints and note cards.

The host of the event, The Everywoman's Center provides leadership in promoting educational access and equity for women. It currently sponsors five different programs and two projects designed to serve the UMass student body and the surrounding community.

For additional information concerning the event contact the Everywoman's center at 545-0883. For more information on the Suppressed History Slide Series visit www.suppressedhistories.net.

Three killed in plane crash in Western Mass

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

MONTEREY, Mass. (AP) – Rescuers used helicopters and a snowmobile to pluck four plane crash survivors, including three children, from a snowy state forest on Monday where the small aircraft carrying their family went down in severe weather the previous day, killing three, state police said.

The four survivors were hospitalized after managing to stay alive through the night's bitter cold, as state police combed the mountainous region for the lost plane. A state police helicopter spotted a survivor waving from the crash site at midday Monday.

"I'm totally amazed. They're very, very tough to have made it through the night," said Richard Toman, state police civilian search and rescue administrator. "This is the stuff movies are made of."

Albany Medical Center Hospital said that 2-year-old Ryan Ferris and 5-year-old Jordan Ferris, the first two to arrive at the hospital, were being treated for hypothermia. Ten-year-old Tyler Ferris is being treated for hypothermia and a broken leg. All three boys are in critical condition.

The fourth victim, who was not identified, was taken to Fairview Hospital in Great Barrington, said Fairview spokeswoman Lauren Smith.

The plane's mangled fuselage was found in the Beartown State Forest, a mountainous area near the Connecticut and New York state lines. Searchers had been combing the area along the boundaries of the three states for any sign of the single-engine Piper Cherokee Six.

The Keene, N.H. area family, including five children, had been flying home from Florida before flight controllers lost radio contact with the plane about 6:50 p.m. Sunday. State police did not immediately release the victims' names, saying only that the children ranged in age from 2 to 11.

One of the survivors was standing outside the plane and was able to wave to one of the New York State Police search helicopters that had been dispatched to the search area, said Massachusetts State Police Lt. Marion McGovern.

The helicopters dropped in rescuers to stabilize the injured before they were evacuated, said Major Bruce McAleavey, director of the New York State Police aviation unit.

Three were taken out by helicopter, and a fourth was transported by snowmobile.

"They were frozen," said Peter Berry, a deputy chief of Colonie, N.Y., Emergency Medical Services, who was riding in the helicopter.

Temperatures in the mountains were in the single digits early Monday with winds gusting up to 40 mph, according to McGovern. She said the plane was found in about 4 feet of snow.

The plane had left Lakeland, Fla., about 1 p.m. Sunday. As the pilot flew north, he radioed air traffic controllers twice to change his flight plan. Controllers last spoke with the pilot when he radioed to report icing on the plane, and was planning to make a visual approach to Barnes Airport in Westfield, according to Jim Peters, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration.

"At that point we stopped talking," Peters said.

He said tapes showed the plane disappearing from radar at an altitude of about 2,200 feet, roughly 9 miles east of the Great Barrington Airport.

"When we went back and looked at the radar plot it was clear that he had turned and was on a straight-in approach to the Great Barrington Airport," Peters said.

The owner of the plane was listed as Ronald K. Ferris of 359 Flat Roof Mill Road in East Swanzey, N.H., according to Peters.

Peter Dower, an employee at Ferris' used car business in Swanzey, said Monday that he had not heard from Ferris. He said Ferris had piloted a plane carrying his wife and five sons and that they had been returning from a vacation in Florida during school break.

"I work at his business; I've been concerned because I haven't heard from him myself. He was supposed to be on the way back from Florida last night," Dower said.

Before Ferris and his family left, "We (Ferris and Dower) went up for a flight to make sure everything was OK, for an hour just before he took the trip. I was with him," Dower said.

North Korea intercepts United States plane possibly indicating attack

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Four armed North Korean fighter jets intercepted a U.S. reconnaissance plane over the Sea of Japan and one used its radar in a manner that indicated it might attack, U.S. officials said Monday.

Lt. Cmdr. Jeff Davis, a Pentagon spokesman, said it was the first such incident since April 1969 when a North Korean plane shot down a U.S. Navy EC-121 surveillance plane, killing all 31 Americans aboard.

The latest incident happened Sunday morning, Korean time, and there was no hostile fire, Davis said.

The most recent crisis involving U.S. reconnaissance aircraft was in April 2001, when a Chinese fighter jet collided with a Navy EP-3 plane, forcing it to make an emergency landing on China's Hainan Island. The fighter pilot was killed and the American crew was detained for 11 days.

U.S. officials have said they have no plans to invade North Korea but are growing increasingly concerned about the North's reactivation of a nuclear reactor that is part of a suspected weapons program. Washington believes Pyongyang already has one or two nuclear weapons.

The dispute over nuclear weapons development increased last week when North Korea restarted a 5-megawatt reactor that could produce plutonium for such weapons. North Korea said Saturday that nuclear war could break out at "any moment."

At the State Department, spokesman Richard Boucher said he had no comment on the latest incident beyond what the Pentagon reported. He did express concern about North Korea's nuclear program.

"All of North Korea's neighbors have made clear that this kind of development would be unwelcome and have serious consequences for them," Boucher said.

In the Sunday incident, Davis said, the four North Korean planes "shadowed" the American plane over international waters for about 20 minutes before breaking off.

Two North Korean MiG29 fighters and two other aircraft that Davis said appeared to be MiG23 fighters intercepted the Air Force RC-135S reconnaissance plane, which Davis said was conducting a routine intelligence mission over the Sea of Japan about 150 miles off North Korea's coast.

The closest the fighters came was about 50 feet, Davis said.

He did not know whether there was any communication between the North Korean and American crews. He also did not know how many crew members were aboard the RC-135, although the standard number is 17, including two pilots.

At one point one of the fighters used a radar system to "acquire" the U.S. plane, meaning it identified it as a target. The Pentagon initially reported that the Korean fighter then "locked on" to the RC-135, meaning it engaged a separate fire-support radar to provide the targeting data needed to strike the American plane with a missile. Later, Davis said officials were reviewing available data to confirm that the second "lock on" step was taken.

The U.S. plane broke off its mission and returned to its home station at Kadena Air Base in Japan, Davis said.

The American plane is a highly specialized version of the RC-135 series of reconnaissance planes.

police log

Drug busts lead Police Log

compiled by Dan Lamothe

Monday, Feb. 24, 2003

[illegible] was arrested on John Quincy Adams Drive on Fearing Street.

[illegible] was reported to her automobile at 1:30 a.m. on West Main Road. A caller reported that [illegible] was damaged during the night. The owners left [illegible] and there was a small [illegible] on the hood.

A caller reported [illegible] on Commonwealth Avenue at the corner of Lincoln Lane at 2:00 p.m. [illegible] ID. A caller at 5:10 p.m. reported [illegible] was observed [illegible] and [illegible] a vehicle. Further investigation revealed [illegible] had [illegible] compact [illegible] and [illegible] a hard [illegible].

[illegible] p.m. Environmental Health and Safety (EHS) was notified [illegible] reported [illegible] from [illegible] the Isenberg School of Management [illegible] Hall [illegible].

[illegible] p.m. Police [illegible] [illegible] complaints of [illegible] on the [illegible] Avenue. The complaints of [illegible] were unfounded [illegible].

Tuesday, Feb. 25

[illegible] p.m. A male [illegible] exited from elevator #5 in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue and started [illegible] with [illegible] the 26th and 27th floors. [illegible] Hotline [illegible] and [illegible].

[illegible] a.m. A caller from Washington Tower reported [illegible] was [illegible].

4:56 p.m. A medical emergency was reported in Kennedy Tower. AFD transported one person to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

6:08 p.m. A Physical Plant report [illegible] was [illegible] and was [illegible]. The [illegible] was [illegible] to [illegible] Dickinson Hospital.

6:11 p.m. A caller reported that there is a trashcan and bicycle on top of her vehicle in Lot 30 on John Adams Road. The back window of the vehicle was also smashed.

4:07 p.m. A vehicle was found severely scratched on the front bumper.

10:56 p.m. A suspicious vehicle was found on Cold Storage Drive. A party said that they ran out of gas and had a friend on the way.

Saturday, March 1

1:16 a.m. An officer confiscated alcohol from people in Lot 71 on Massachusetts Avenue. A summons will be issued.

1:50 a.m.: A disturbance was reported in John Quincy Adams Tower on Fearing Street. An RA reported that a group of people was banging on doors on various floors.

3:47 a.m.: A request made for officers to respond to a very loud noise coming from a hallway in Moore Hall on Southwest Circle.

5:30 a.m.: A caller reported that there was a group of 30 to 40 people in Lot 43 on Eastman Lane having some sort of celebration or party. An officer responding reported that an area check of the parking lot for open containers was negative.

6:06 a.m.: Martin Ivanov, 33, of 990 N. Pleasant St., was arrested on a previous warrant in the UMPD station in Dickinson Hall on Hicks Way.

8:36 a.m.: A suspicious person was reported in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue. Emergency Housing reported that a maintainer requested an officer to evict a non-student causing trouble in hallways. The officer spoke to the subject.

3:29 p.m.: Two windows in the rear door of Lewis Hall on Thatcher Way were reported smashed.

3:31 p.m.: Four vehicles were found damaged on Thatcher Way. The first vehicle was found with the driver side mirror smashed. The second vehicle was found with driver side wheel slashed. A third vehicle was found with the driver side rearview mirror broken off. The last vehicle was found with the driver's side front tire slashed.

8:33 p.m.: Two arrests were made after police responded to liquor law violations in Lot 54 on Southwest Circle. Ryan M. Haffey, 18, of 87 Union St. in Watertown, Mass., was arrested and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and false possession of a liquor ID card. Colleen H. Conti, 19, of 105 Altamont Ave. in Sea Cliff, N.Y., was arrested and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

9:02 p.m.: An RA in Coolidge Tower reported a round robin on the 15th floor of the building with about 30 people involved. An officer responded to the situation and the group was dispersed.

10:25 p.m.: Liquor law violations were reported in the Student Union. An officer reported that an event in the building did have a cash bar even though UMPD was not informed of it when event coverage was requested. The officer stated that the group said they would follow up with the deputy chief yesterday.

Sunday, March 2

1:54 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Kennedy Tower on Massachusetts Avenue. An officer reported that the Amherst Fire Department (AFD) transported one person to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. While on the scene, UMPD arrested Arthur B. Huntington, 21, of 2215 Dearing Ct. in Lousville, Ky., and charged him with disorderly conduct.

9:53 a.m.: A report was made of a male student throwing bottles out of his window in John Adams Tower on Fearing Street. The area was quiet upon arrival of the officer and there was no response to knocking at the door of the student. The officer cleared the area.

1:41 p.m. A caller told officers on patrol about a vandalized door in Patterson Hall.

9:03 p.m.: A report of a wallet stolen from an unattended dorm room in Washington Tower on Friday afternoon was made.

11:54 p.m.: Officers responded to a report of the odor of marijuana from Webster Hall on Orchard Hill Drive. Officers confirmed the smell and knocked on the door. After the students answered, a search warrant was issued. Officers seized seven quarter-ounce baggies of marijuana and several kinds of drug paraphernalia, including bongs. Charges are still pending in the case.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew E. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaller Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Grey Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Three Divisions: Men, Women and Co-ed
•
Free and open to all students

ATLANTIC 10 Shoot Out

Team Hoop Shooting Contest!

$10,000

FREE T-SHIRT, FOOD AND RADIO FOR ALL PARTICIPANTS!
★
WIN AIRLINE TICKETS!
★
WIN SNEAKERS!

SHOOT!
Alternating shots from six spots on the court in 30 seconds

SCORE!
Men and women division winners win ROUND-TRIP AIR-FARE to anywhere in the U.S.
Co-ed division finalists will shoot at halftime of a men's basketball game

WIN!
Co-ed champions of each Atlantic 10 campus will compete for $10,000 at the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship in Dayton, March 14 and 15

PRESENTED BY
GMAC
NAUTICA COMPETITION THE NEWEST PLAYER IN MEN'S FRAGRANCE
new balance
US AIRWAYS Caribbean

TO ENTER LOG ON: www.atlantic10.org
OR VISIT THE INTRAMURAL OFFICE FOR DETAILS AND REGISTRATION

SHOOTOUT QUALIFYING ROUND:
Tuesday, March 4 • 7:00 p.m. • Mullins Center
CO-ED SHOOTOUT FINALS:
Wednesday, March 5 • 7:00 p.m. • Mullins Center

LOCAL SPONSORS
Coca-Cola
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN
Hampshire Mall
Domino's Pizza
University Stores
wmua fm 91

New U.N. resolution to come next week

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS (AP) - A vote on a new U.N. resolution authorizing force against Iraq will likely come next week, after the chief weapons inspectors address the deeply divided Security Council, U.S. officials said Monday.

U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte said the United States expects a vote on its resolution "quite soon" after Hans Blix and Mohamed ElBaradei update the council Friday on Iraq's cooperation in eliminating its nuclear, chemical, biological and long-range missile programs.

"Our view is that we don't need to debate this very simple and straightforward resolution," the U.S. envoy said after discussing the date for the inspectors' briefing with Guinea's U.N. ambassador, the council president for March. "We would expect a vote quite soon thereafter."

A U.S. official said "there is no current plan to vote" immediately after Friday's report. "All indications are that the vote would be next week," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The sponsors of the resolution _ the United States, Britain and Spain _ are allowed to call for a vote at any time.

The resolution declares that Saddam Hussein has missed "the final opportunity" to disarm peacefully and indicates he must now face the consequences _ an assessment that France, Russia, China and Germany reject.

Those four council nations _ all but Germany with veto power _ contend that inspections should be strengthened. France, Russia and China called Monday for Iraq to comply fully with the demands of U.N. weapons inspectors to avoid war.

The United States still doesn't have the nine "yes" votes needed to adopt the resolution, according to supporters and opponents of the measure. And even if it gets the nine votes, France and Russia have not ruled out using their vetoes. China is considered unlikely to veto the measure though it could abstain.

But diplomats said the United States is refusing to compromise.

President Bush believes that previous U.N. resolutions already give the United States authority to attack Iraq. If the council rejects the U.S.-backed draft, Bush has said he is prepared to fight with a coalition of willing nations.

"We're not backing away from our desire to see the council make a decision on whether or not the Iraqis have taken advantage of their final opportunity," a U.S. official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The rival camps have been engaged in intensive lobbying, focused especially on the half dozen council nations who are considered swing votes _ Angola, Cameroon, Chile, Guinea, Mexico and Pakistan.

"Every single day we are in touch with every single Security Council member, either in capitals or in New York," the U.S. official said.

The proposal suggests that Iraq be given until the end of March to complete a list of key remaining disarmament tasks identified by the inspectors. The council would then be asked to vote on whether Iraq was complying with its U.N. obligations, diplomats said.

Laundry equals good business

By Kathryn Corazzelli
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts students have turned a class project into Amherst's first ever laundry pick-up, delivery, and dry cleaning service. Justin Zucker, Michael Hauke, and David Gerber run Dirty Business Laundry Delivery Service, LLC, an environmentally safe laundry business that was developed in the fall of 2000 for a class project.

After presenting the idea to their Resource Economics 324 class, taught by Professor Geoffrey Allen, the three students realized that the idea might actually work, and began working out the details of the business.

"For the next year and a half we did market research, logistical planning, and financial analysis for the business of how it could work and if it could work," said Michael Hauke, co-founder and director of marketing for the business. Hauke, who is still in school, helps to run the business between his classes.

Hauke described the group as "three partners with a diverse background." Justin Zucker, who graduated last spring with a degree in Resource Economics, works full time; and David Gerber, who recently transferred to UMass, Dartmouth, majors in Finance and Psychology, and travels to Amherst on the weekends to do the bookkeeping.

The group won several competitions through the UMass Five College Entrepreneurship Club, a program designed to turn ideas into real world businesses. This helped to provide funding for the business, along with contributions from the students' own investments.

According to Hauke, the company currently has about 1200 customers right now. Their customers include students, local restaurants, hotels, restaurants and elderly care facilities.

As part of its business plan, the company is committed to ensuring that their business is environmentally friendly.

"Keeping it environmentally sound, that was the first step," Hauke said. They are currently using 100 percent post-consumer paper, and environmentally safe laundry products. They wash all clothes with hypoallergenic and biodegradable soaps, detergents, and softeners.

"That's a big part because a lot of families use our service, and they have little kids," Hauke said. "A lot of the chemicals used in the regular products aren't healthy for you. Regardless of whether they're hypoallergenic or not, they're bad for the environment."

The next step for the company is to invest in a new environmentally safe delivery van. With the help of Greasecar, a local company started by two students at Hampshire College, Dirty Business will be able to run its delivery van on straight, unprocessed vegetable oil. They will be able to accomplish this by attaching a conversion kit to a diesel run engine, and using waste oil from restaurants as fuel. Greasecar.com describes using vegetable oil as "a cleaner, safer, and less expensive alternative to petroleum based fuel."

According to Zucker, they would also be saving money because restaurants will pay to have their waste oils taken away.

"It's a money saver, and you can pat yourself on the back because you're saving the world at the same time," he said.

Dirty Business does not own its own laundry facility, opting instead to use commercial facilities. Zucker and Hauke noted they were lucky to find facilities that shared their own idea of an environmentally sound business, and invested in "greener" laundry machines.

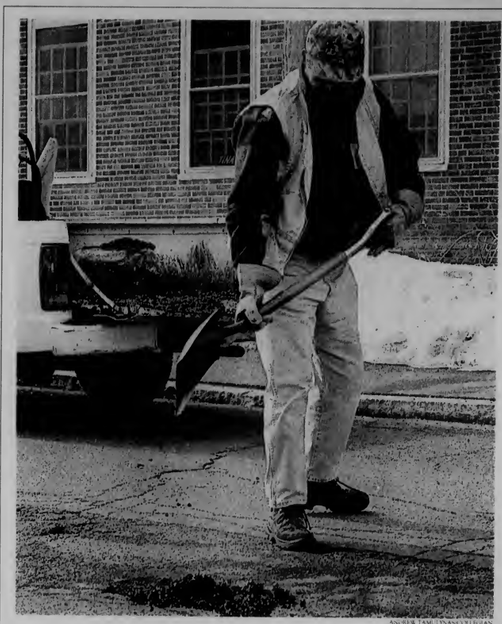
"We were very fortunate to team up with great people, in the terms of business," Hauke said. "They wanted to be innovative, and wanted to progress towards greener business. If it wasn't going to be green, we didn't want to do it."

Dirty Business is involved in the hiring and training of employees at these facilities. Hauke said that all employees are "extensively trained" so that everything is done the same way.

"Unless you have everyone on the same tee, with the same attitude about what they have to do and how they have to do it, it becomes an issue," Zucker said.

"We want our business to flourish, and we want our customers to be happy," Hauke said. "We know the customers wont be happy if things aren't done right."

While researching how to run the business, the co-owners noted they went on several "undercover missions" to investigate the competition.



"We did extensive research. (We) spent a couple thousand dollars going to places and cleaning our personal clothes," Hauke said.

"Some places we walked in, and then walked right out, based on the machines," said Zucker.

The pair said that eventually, they would like Dirty Business to become a nationwide franchise, focusing mainly on the college markets.

"This business was started by college students, so we fully understand what a hassle doing laundry can be," Hauke said in an October press release. "That is why we strive to provide a service that makes everybody's laundry experiences a little bit easier to deal with and much less time consuming."

Ultimately, Zucker said, they would like to have "Dirty Business cleaner and greener laundry mats" throughout the country, but for right now, they are setting the ground work and trying to make sure the business works in this area.

ANGELO TAMCLYN/COLLEGIAN

Pot-hole patching
In the wake of winter, a physical plant worker fills one of the many pot-holes on Orchard Hill Dr.

Information taken from 9/11 suspect

By John J. Lumpkin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) - FBI and CIA experts dug through computers and piles of other information Monday from the Pakistani home of alleged Sept. 11 mastermind Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, searching for clues that new terror strikes might be imminent.

In addition to his capture on Saturday, government officials said authorities had caught Mohammed Omar Abdel-Rahman, a son of the blind Egyptian sheik accused of inspiring the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center.

The younger Abdel-Rahman was caught several weeks ago in Quetta, Pakistan, the officials said, speaking on the condition of anonymity. Pakistani officials have suggested the Quetta arrest helped lead authorities to Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, although American sources disputed that.

Officials also said they believe they have captured a suspected financier of Sept. 11. The financier, whose nationality was uncertain, was captured with Mohammed.

Mohammed was questioned Monday by U.S. authorities seeking information about safe houses and hideouts used by the al-Qaida terror network, a Pakistani intelligence official said. Mohammed's exact whereabouts were unclear.

He had been plotting attacks against targets in the United States and Saudi Arabia in the weeks before his capture, U.S. counter-terrorism officials contended.

Such attacks might have been against commercial or other lightly defended civilian targets, officials said, although they acknowledged they did not know whether al-Qaida targets had been selected.

Intelligence about Mohammed's activities led in part to the orange alert that lasted most of February, Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge said.

"Some of the concerns we had that caused us to raise the threat level were attributable to the planning he was involved in," Ridge said. "There were multiple reasons that we raised the threat level and his relation to one of the plot lines was one of the several."

Ridge declined to discuss specifics but said the threat level was lowered last week because later information showed that plans for attacks had been disrupted and were less likely to occur.

Authorities recovered a huge amount of information about al-Qaida at the house in Pakistan where Mohammed and two others were arrested early Saturday, a senior law enforcement official said Monday.

Recovered at the home in Rawalpindi were computers, disks, cell phones and documents. Authorities believe the materials will provide names, locations and potential terrorist plots of al-Qaida cells in the United States and around the world.

Mohammed also was believed by U.S. officials to have details about the group's finances.

He was captured as he slept early Saturday. Pakistani Ahmed Abdul Qadus and an unidentified third man were also detained.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said, "We are hoping that this will lead to substantial additional information on al-Qaida, on al-Qaida's plans and al-Qaida's operations."

Officials expressed concern that al-Qaida cells could accelerate plots in the United States and elsewhere rather than run the risk of being captured. Or cell members might also go into hiding, believing their security was compromised by Mohammed's capture.

UMass police seize drugs in two separate dormitories

University of Massachusetts Police made two seizures of drugs late Sunday night and early yesterday morning in residence halls.

UMPD spokesman Jim Lyons said that RAs in Webster Hall in the Orchard Hill area of campus made a call at just about midnight reporting the smell of marijuana coming from a dorm room.

Police officers responded to the room and confirmed the odor of marijuana. Upon knocking, students answered the door. The officers obtained a search warrant and seized seven quarter-ounce baggies of marijuana and other drug related paraphernalia, including bongs. Charges are still pending in the case.

At 6 a.m. yesterday, police forces made a search of a room in Coolidge Tower. They seized several bags of marijuana, a digital scale and $378 in cash.

Two arrests were made in the incident. Jacob Lasecki, 19, of Leominster, Mass., was arrested and charged with possession of a class D substance and possession of a class D substance with intent to distribute. Stephanie Lamrose, also of Leominster, was arrested and charged with possession of a class D substance.

-Dan Lamothe

www.dailycollegian.com

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartenderschool.com

Write for News

"When our friends are afraid of us rather than for us, it is time to worry. And now they are afraid."
Veteran U. S. diplomat resigns in protest letter to Colin Powell www.commondreams.org
Hundreds of links to independent newspaper, magazine, and journal articles from around the world—solid information, from reporters, writers, and analysts who think and write outside the box.
Here's a taste:
New York Times, March 1, 2003
From the text of John Brady Kiesling's letter of resignation to Secretary of State Colin L. Powell: Mr. Kiesling is a career diplomat who has served in United States embassies from Tel Aviv to Casablanca to YerevanFrida
"...until this Administration it had been possible to believe that by upholding the policies of my president I was also upholding the interests of the American people and the world. I believe it no longer. The policies we are now asked to advance are incompatible not only with American values but also with American interests. Our fervent pursuit of war with Iraq is driving us to squander the international legitimacy that has been America's most potent weapon of both offense and defense since the days of Woodrow Wilson. We have begun to dismantle the largest and most effective web of international relationships the world has ever known. Our current course will bring instability and danger, not security
The rest of this letter, and many other stories at www.commondreams.org
Time for us to resign too---the world needs it:
Strike for Peace, Noon, Wednesday March 5
Student Union, on the steps
Don't sit this one out.
American Friends Service Committee
AFSC, 413.584.8975 / afsc@crocker.com / www.WesternMassAFSC.org

Writing Coach
Published author with 25 years' experience in meeting deadlines can help you break through writing barriers and complete important projects on time.
Call 413-467-9470 or email
Jenna@yourghostwriter.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 - Thursday 3/6/03 ONLY
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:10 4:20 7:15 10:20*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25*
BEARS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00*
DARK BLUE (R) (1:40) 4:30 7:50 10:30* (1:40) SHOWS Sun 3/2 - Sneak Preview of Agent Cody Banks (PG) 3:00pm
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 4:05 6:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 10:00
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:10
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 8:00
Senior Shows 3/5/03 - GOODS AND SENSIBLE 9:00AM
Doors open at 8:15AM
* no passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES NO Supersavers
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark-usa.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Underage offenders: Do they comprehend?

Children as innocent as their youth may make them seem do commit crimes; some of which are very heinous acts. Made-for-television movies and tell-all books dramatize many such instances.

In a growing number of cases, the gruesomeness of the offense has driven many to try more and more children as adults. A new study though shows that many of these young defendants may not be able to fully comprehend the seriousness of what is transpiring around them.

The MacArthur Foundation, a private nonpartisan organization based in Chicago, recently released a study on the competence of children and young adults about the legal process in America. Over 1400 people, with ages ranging from 11 to 24, were given intelligence tests and hypothetical situations, to determine whether they understood how to best defend themselves.

One such circumstance questioned participants about whether or not to confess to police. A third of those aged 11 to 13 and 20 percent of those aged 14 and 15 did not understand the situation or how to assist their lawyer in defending them.

"In all likelihood, a large number of juveniles who are being tried as adults are not competent to stand trial," said Laurence Steinberg, a professor at Temple University and the director of the study.

Others disagree with the study though, and claim that even though defendants may not be of adult age, they are still capable of comprehending the process. Kent Scheidegger, the director of the conservative Criminal Justice Legal Foundation, declared, "the notion that teenagers are not capable of understanding what is going on I find not credible in the case of mentally normal teenagers."

In the 1980s, many states began making it easier to try children as adults. During that decade, 49 states passed legislation to streamline the process of moving juvenile defendants into adult criminal court. Twenty-three states have no minimum age for defendants, and even in those states where some standard is specified, an "adult" defendant can be as young as 10-years-old.

There has to be some middle ground between letting an accused 17-year-old murderer get tried in a court system where he will be released at the age of 21, as happens in most juvenile courts, versus an 11-year-old being put behind bars for the rest of his life.

The study's recommendations are for either a uniform minimum age to be set or a system of evaluations be used to determine the mental competence of youth defendants.

Whenever crimes of a dreadful nature are committed, there is often a rush for judgment. In most instances, a 16 or 17-year-old would be as likely to understand as much of a court trial as the equivalent 19-year-old, for whom juvenile court is no longer an option. Trying to enforce the same code of rules though on a pre-teen, who may not even yet fully understand the ramifications of actions he or she has committed, is not the way to improve a society which continues to have an overcrowded prison system lacking in adequate reform.

When we examine our court system, let's take a long, hard look at who we are prosecuting, for in some cases, the youth may still have some semblance of innocence.

Information from CBS News was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority of The Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Dueling with death

Courtney Charles

How do you say goodbye to someone that you have known your whole life?

And when will it finally hit you that someone that has known you from the day you entered this world and cheered you all the way through adolescence, high school, and most of college has died?

When will it finally dawn on me that my grandfather has died and that I will never see him again?

He died on Valentine's Day, and was buried the day after the big blizzard. He died while I was on my way back home from school. I never got to really say goodbye. I wasn't there when I should have been and I don't think I can forgive myself for it.

He was the former city fire chief, so half the city was blocked off for the funeral procession. Our procession drove by several of the fire stations.

The flags were at half-mast, with a somber crew of fire fighters at an attentive salute in the front. It was a beautiful and respectful ceremony, but everything just felt so empty. It was like a bird without a song to sing, something that doesn't make sense without the missing half.

Why does death make us so numb? Why does it make everything in life seem like a pale surrealist's dream? Death is a tranquilizing drug that slows everything down to a near standstill.

Our humanity is that which creates a barrier for us from reality, so that we cannot grasp the finality of everything. It allows us the strength and stamina to get through some of the hardest few days we will ever have to live through. Our humanity nourishes our grief when it can't feed itself. It pushes us to a capacity that we were unaware that we possessed.

Everything I do is a blur. I try to make things make sense, but my mind won't let me process anything. Death sits on my shoulder everyday, everywhere I go.

All I want to do is sleep, but as soon as my head hits the pillow all I can do is cry until I feel empty. My life is a void of mindless routines that keeps me just busy enough to think that everything will be all right. I dread the nights that I can't sleep, when I sit up in bed drenched in sweat from a bad dream, alone and starved for an elusive closure that I search for without ever finding.

"Death is a dark lump that grows and festers in the darkest places in our hearts, feeding on the slightest weak or sad feeling."

When you experience the first death in your life of someone close to you, you think that the next time won't be as bad. But it's always just as painful. Death is one of those things that we can never get used to.

We can't truly accept the finality of it all. Death is a dark lump that grows and festers in the darkest places in our hearts, feeding on the slightest weak or sad feeling.

Seeing my grandpa's dead body and saying goodbye was one of the hardest things I have ever had to do. Watching my brother kiss him goodbye and place one of his game balls in the casket was overwhelming. I felt a depth of emotion I had no idea I was capable of. It was a raw and pulling sadness that consumed everything that was me.

It's been a couple weeks now, and I try to fool myself into thinking that things are fine. My collegiate life is an insulated bubble from reality where sadness and grief seem out of place and out of line.

I try to be my usual self, partying with my friends and having a good time, but it feels stupid and self-serving. I feel like a mannequin with a painted facade of happiness.

I don't feel like I have a right to deserve any happiness. I missed saying goodbye to someone who has been my friend and champion through all the mistakes, mishaps and triumphs that have been my life, yet I couldn't make it.

Courtney Charles is a Collegian Columnist.

Salvaging spring break

Justin Eldridge-Otero

With week-old snow turning to muddy slush and waking up to walk to class becoming more and more mind-numbing, one can't help but dream of sunny days to come. As UMass slowly reverts away from its prominent ZooMass days and weekends are becoming more and more monotonous, we seek a glimpse of sunshine in our horizon. This sunshine I speak of is none other than the eagerly awaited spring break. Aside from summer vacation and Christmas morning, is there anything we look forward to with more anticipation? I should think not. For spring break has the potential to be one of those out of body experiences, a time where the closest you get to OWLS is the local Hooters down the street from your beach house.

Speaking of beaches brings me to my point. While this proposal is far from ground breaking, it may strike a chord with my fellow couch potatoes. Think back to last spring break, what do you remember doing the most? Think of something you probably do for the majority of your day. If you're at all like myself, as you waste your time away. Well, if you haven't guessed yet I'll spill it: you watch the ever-present television. Now don't get me wrong, I am one of TV's dichard supporters, having been seemingly raised by the Fresh Prince, Homer, and Mr. Urkel himself. Herein lies my suggestion: put down the remote, cut the cable cord and get out of the house!

We need to take steps to becoming a more active generation. Our consumer-driven lives are only fed by the television we so worship. The more we sink into our recliner wasting away, unless you're just wasted (then more power to ya), we lose valuable life time. Time that could be spent exploring the world and the intricacies it has to offer. Spring break is that one week where anything goes and everyone's down to have fun. Why not wake up and join in?

I speak from experience having spent my last spring break bumming around my neighborhood wishing I had planned a trip somewhere, anywhere. How hard could it be to get away for a couple of days? You could go at it road trip style and visit a new state. Visit Canada for heavens sake.

I hear nothing but good things and you're almost guaranteed a great time. Also, if you have the slightest opportunity to leave the country and explore the actual world please do so! You will be amazed at the diversity and variety of things the world has to offer.

It saddens me to see some that have become so complacent with their lives that they seem satisfied staying in the house with their only human contact being the Dominos guy. Hey, if this is what you're all about, who am I to tell you otherwise? However, there are those that without really knowing it would gain so much from experiencing another culture. Those that have never truly ventured too far from their town and feel stuck in a "Groundhog Day" type of daze, with each day's activities becoming more and more predictable and rehearsed. Why not break from the ordinary, if only for a couple of days?

Imagine your life after college and what you will most likely be doing. For most of us we will begin what is inescapably a lifetime worth of work. From then on out it's work everyday, unless you've got some special digits and a lotto ticket. Does the thought of that 40-hour week followed by another 40-hour week not make you want to do something new, something spontaneous that you could get away with while you're still young and without burdens?

Well you can trust me, I have seen that 40-hour week and the thought of it for years to come, scares me. It scared me so bad that it makes me want to go to the beach and enjoy my youth with a brew or two in hand or hop on a plane to the Rain Forest, hang out with the natives, and explore life as it is lived throughout the world.

If you want to have any lasting memories from your spring break this year be original, do something new, break the mold, and learn from experience. So enjoy your spring break and don't waste a minute.

Justin Eldridge-Otero is a Collegian Columnist.

War 101

Allison Leshefsky

It was a cold February afternoon as I walked downtown Manhattan. Hundreds of thousands of people packed the dense city streets in opposition to the war in Iraq. I equipped with protest signs, hats, heavy winter accessories, and the warm human spirit, these people showed a collective action against President Bush's war initiatives.

Somewhere amid the vivid rainbow of winter clothing, a woman spoke softly to her child in an attempt to explain their presence on that day. She stood with her young son's arm and a sign attached to a kitchen broom on the other that read "Save Our Children."

War has taken a horrifying toll on children within the past decade. According to UNICEF in its latest report "The State of the World's Children" two million were killed, four to five million disabled, 12 million made homeless, more that one million orphaned or separated from parents, 10 million psychologically traumatized by violence, and legions of survivors who have yet to experience peace in their lifetime.

It is one thing to save our children from worldwide violence, but it is another issue to save them from violence in nature in the teachings of today's generations. Children practically everywhere in the world today are forced to grow up in an atmosphere of violence, regardless of whether their country is in the perpetrator or the victim of war.

"We cannot waste our precious children. Not another one, not another day," said Nelson Mandela, civil rights leader and former President of South Africa.

The government sponsors many programs aimed at educating the country's youth about issues such as drugs, sex, and guns. Meanwhile, it fails to recognize that the true killer of a nation's people is war. Nationwide war education may be the most rational way to go about rebuilding of mankind's belief system we must revert to the children.

"By upbringing and education, the present generation of teachers has been conditioned to the inevitability of war."

The Association for Childhood Education International, an organization for those concerned with the education and well-being of children, takes the position that a vital way to prevent war and bring about peace is to raise a generation of children who reject killing as uncivilized and as a barbaric unproductive way to deal with human conflicts.

Each American generation today has suffered a war during their childhood years. Grandparents witnessed the suffering of millions in Europe during World War II, parents protested in their youth against the Vietnam War, and children today are subjected to a constant media fascination of a war outbreak in the Middle East.

By upbringing and education, the present generation of teachers has been conditioned to the inevitability of war. These teachers are employed by public schools throughout the nation that receive some form of government funding. Meanwhile, the Bush administration supports the need for war in Iraq given the supposed threat to our nation's security. This being the case, it is virtually impossible to get such a conservative public school system to cooperate by initiating a program on war education.

It is the responsibility of teachers to facilitate classroom discussion on war related issues and introduce peace as the primary initiative.

It is also the responsibility of parents, such as the woman previously mentioned in New York City, to talk to their children about the grisly killing that is going on as a result of human conflict.

If we don't take the initiative to educate our nation's children on the horrific truths about war, they will be more likely to engage in our nation's mass corruption. After all, war is just a bunch of child's play.

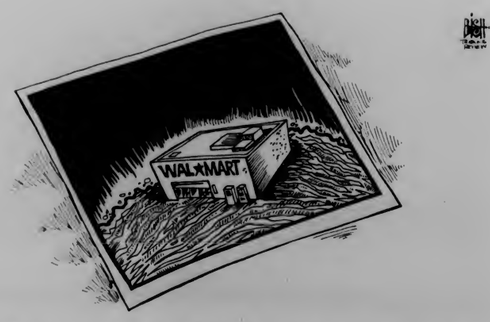
Allison Leshefsky is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

Letter to the Editor

Public protest necessitates public response

To the Editor:



Freedom of speech is a wonderful thing. It allows Collegian Columnist Jamie Loo to publish her opinion on the Toni Smith flag situation and it allows me to believe that she is dead wrong. Since Jamie based her argument on the "hypocrisy" of schools like the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, I find it only fair to point out the double standards of both her and Smith.

Turning 90 degrees away from the flag while the rest of her fellow American's salute it is clearly a sign of disrespect. By doing so, Smith is not only saying that she does not appreciate what the freedoms of America have given her, but it is a blatant slap in the face to all of the men and women who have fought so hard in the past to achieve what we have today. What we have is by no means perfect, but its and find a nation that is, I truly believe that disrespecting the flag and taking the freedoms she has for granted is equal to, if not worse than a crowd of 500 fans starting a "U.S.A." chant.

Having seen and read many stories on this issue in the past couple of weeks, I have yet to hear of any reports of physical threats or derogatory name-calling towards Smith from any of these fans. Unless attacks of that nature occur, then I have no problem with what these fans are doing. Singing for our country and even chanting, "Leave our country" at a basketball game are further expressions of freedom of speech that Smith, or any rational human being in her situation should have expected.

By making her statement through college basketball, she is putting herself in a public forum and is therefore opening herself to this type of criticism. If Smith actually wants to avoid this situation she could accomplish her goal of ignoring the flag by going back into the locker room during the national anthem or simply closing her eyes. By deciding to make her protest in such a disrespectful manner in front of hundreds of proud Americans each game, this brave woman is making herself the antagonist. If, as Jamie Loo says, the USMMA fans should be ashamed of themselves, then so should Toni Smith. Hypocrisy runs ramped in this modern political era, and yes, even Jamie Loo herself is guilty of it.

Matt DeNoble
UMass Student

STARTLING NEW SATELLITE PHOTO OF THE SURFACE OF MARS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

TALIB KWELI

meeting the artist at the Worcester Palladium

Conducted by Eric Goodman
Collegian Correspondent

Massachusetts Daily Collegian: Who influenced you to get started in the rap game?

Talib Kweli: All the pioneers gave me the inspiration to pick up a microphone. People like KRS, Slick Rick, MC Lyte, Public Enemy, Big Daddy Kane, Rakim.

MDC: What are your thoughts on mainstream hip-hop?

TK: Those are corporations, and they are going to do what they have to in order to make money. Fortunately, I was blessed to sign with a record label such as Rawkus, who were at the same position that I was at. It was more of a partnership than an actual record company, because we both had the same vision; we both were trying to make a living selling records. You can say that Rawkus is a corporation now, because there comes a point where you reach a ceiling, and you make the decision whether you want to go beyond that or if you are just satisfied with where you at. Unfortunately, we all got to make a living doing music, so sometimes you might have to do what the public perceives as 'selling out' in order to survive.

MDC: What impact has the categorization of rap music had on the art as a whole?

TK: That's one of the worst things to happen to hip-hop. It doesn't serve the music, the fans or the artists at all. It does serve the music industry, because it boxes things up and makes it easier to sell to the public, but it doesn't serve the actual music whatsoever.

MDC: Where do you see hip-hop at in five years?

TK: It's going to be wherever we are at in five years from now. Hip-hop, like any other type of music, will just follow wherever the majority of the people is at during that particular moment.

MDC: What are your thoughts on the current state of music being downloaded for free from the Internet?

TK: First of all, I don't think of music as belonging to anyone per se. I mean, I'm not a platinum artist, so bootlegging, downloading and stuff like that is not really affecting my sales the same it would for a bigger selling artist. If anything, it serves as a tool that is helping my music continue to spread. Music and business don't mix, and it's a shame you have to join the music industry in order to make a living on music.

MDC: Do you believe you have been typecast as a "conscious rapper?"

TK: Well, yes. I believe I have been labeled, but the only way I could be limited to that is if I allow myself to be limited to that.

MDC: Any plans for a new Black Star project?

TK: Most definitely. I mean, there's nothing in the works at the moment, but we are definitely going to put out another album.

MDC: Any plans to collaborate with Hi-Tek on another LP?

TK: Yes. Right now, he is busy putting together an album for MCA Records, but we are definitely going to do another record together.

MDC: How do you want your listeners to interpret your new single "Just To Get By?"

TK: I just want them to listen to it and feel it, just like any other single. I hope they just take away what they can from it. God willing, they might take something positive from it, but I just want them to feel something, anything. You know, either love it or hate it.

MDC: What are your thoughts on our current situation with Iraq?

TK: It's an unfortunate situation. The people of Iraq are not happy with Saddam Hussein, but they don't think he is nearly as evil as George W. Bush. We live in a country where we have the illusion of freedom, so most Americans don't really understand what's going on in the rest of the world. Our ignorance as U.S. citizens is being used as a tool of war, and it's a real shame. We have a moron for president who didn't even win the election, yet people still have faith in the system. But you can still speak about the issues at hand and do something about it, and that's what I believe that I have always tried to do.

Injuries in action: risks of the WWE

Corner to corner

Emilie Duggan-Hicks

Imagine this scenario. You're a professional wrestler. You're on the road more than you're home. You see your family less than you see your co-workers, and there's no such thing as personal time. Oh, and job security? It doesn't really exist in this world. There are always younger, more creative wrestlers working their way through independent federations, threatening to sweep in and make themselves comfortable in your spot on the World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) roster. But you have no real complaints about any of this, because this is the life you chose, the life you dreamed about since you were six and first watched Hulk Hogan make his way to the ring to "The Real American." Nothing can stop you and nothing can go wrong – until it does and your world is taken away from you in the blink of an eye.

It will happen without warning. The miscalculation of a stunt from the top turnbuckle can send you to the mat in a completely different landing than the one planned. Your opponent can fail to protect you properly as he or she applies a finishing move to end the match. You could adjust your own wrestling in attempts to protect one injured body part, not realizing you're damaging another by doing so.

It has happened to Steve Austin, Chris Benoit, Rhyno, Bob "Hardcore" Holly, Scotty 2 Hotty and Lita, as well as scores of other professional wrestlers in the history of the sport. As of late, one of the most common injuries – and the one that affected those listed above – seems to be to the neck, and fans can add one more wrestler to the disabled list. The WWE announced Feb. 27 the superstar known as Edge will become the latest grappler to undergo neck surgery that will fuse two vertebrae into one and derail his career for at least a year, if not longer.

Whatever the cause of injury, the result can be career ending and devastating – both physically and psychologically.

"Obviously with any injury you just don't feel like your self," Lita, a WWE diva, said in the October 2002 RAW magazine. "I lost a lot of confidence. My life came to a screeching halt."

For athletes like professional wrestlers, having neck fusion surgery means giving up a level of autonomy that most find hard to part with. These men and women put their bodies on the line every day to perform superhuman stunts. The word helpless is not in their vocabulary, and learning the meaning of it can be a very hard lesson, indeed. The inability to do the most basic of tasks – like lifting a milk carton or even walking – can cripple the psyche. Strength and coordination return slowly through rehabilitation and exercise, but the memory of the time spent completely incapacitated takes its toll on confidence and self-esteem. There's also the nagging doubt that a full recovery will happen.

So far, three superstars have returned to full-time work in the WWE ring – Steve Austin, Chris Benoit and, most recently, Rhyno. All can attest to just how hard the road to recovery is, especially when it comes to watching your friends and co-workers doing what you are no longer physically able to do. However, there are always options for sidelined wrestlers, though they may not always be appealing to the injured party.

When Lita was ready to contribute to the company again, the WWE offered her a spot commentating on the Sunday night show, "Heat," that airs on MTV. She took the position, though she knew that announcing wasn't her strength, because she needed to be as close to the ring as she could get without actually wrestling.

"It's definitely a good learning experience," she said in an article on WWE.com. "I just feel very out of my element."

Others, like Edge, won't even consider being that close to the action while out of commission.

"I would rather not be Announcer Edge," he said in an interview on WWE.com. "I'm a wrestler. I'm not an announcer. I would rather be gone and come back

Continued on page 6

The man comes around once again

NO CODE

No code

Matthew Despres

Neil Young once told us only love can break your heart, but I know now he was wrong. Johnny Cash will too.

"Hurt," as whispered by Cash on "The Man Comes Around," feels like the moment before leaving. It is the unexplained tugging at your eyes as you raise a hand to wave goodbye. The faint piano marching in its deep end are those footsteps that last only as long as you see them crossing into each other briefly before going all together. The sudden drop at the end, as the music closes up and his voice tumbles through, whispering, "I would find a way." That, too, is something we know – the line conviction is drawn at, the line expectation can crawl just a moment past before taking a final breath.

At 71, Cash still sings with an unresolved gravel in the deep of his throat, a broken inflection walking the line between anger and absolute despair. It's a smoky sweetness, a bitter chaser, a portrait of the artist as the years busy themselves, pecking away at one of the greatest gifts a man has ever shared with the world.

The whole of the album is a fragile sermon. It's a proclamation of joy and sorrow, built upon the reality of time and its eventual end.

"What have I become, my sweetest friend? / Everyone I know goes away in the end / And you could have it all, my empire of dirt / I will let you down, I will make you hurt." His voice swells in the first chorus, the impatient, mounting background rousing a young spirit in his frail body. "And you could have it all." This is the eternal Cash speaking, his honest passion breeding both tenderness and spiteful hellfire.

It's not perfect, though nobody should go looking for that quality in any collection of songs. The beauty of music shows itself in the broken moments, the commonplace phrases devastated by some variable emotion and made unrecognizable from one instant to the next. The song proud to wear its flaws is the song that ultimately speaks.

The album is not a sustained lament, as most of the songs

Continued on page 6

DMX and Jet Li team up in new action flick

Fights, chases and explosives try compensating for weak plot

'Cradle 2 the Grave'
Directed by Andrzej Bartkowiak
Starring Jet Li and DMX
Warner Bros.
Rated R
100 mins.

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
Collegian Staff

The rapper DMX isn't exactly an actor. He's too crude and simplistic in his gruff-voiced forcefulness to be considered much of one, but he does carve out a stern and commanding presence for himself. His head shaved, shiny and bald, his eyes narrow and filled with fire, he wears what appears to be five pounds of platinum and diamonds around his neck, and he uses his glass-eating voice to bark every one of his lines in the same corrosive manner of growling intensity.

He seems very uncomfortable in any of the sappy scenes he shares with his on-screen daughter, refusing to let his angry/cool façade crack (gooey sentiment fits DMX as well as humility does Kid Rock), but when he gets to erupt into righteous street-hood volatility, he seems less like another rapper attempting to tackle movie stardom than like a rabid pit bull tearing its way across screen.

In "Cradle 2 the Grave," DMX stars as Tony Fait, the leader of one of those high-tech crime gangs that concoct elaborate schemes involving subway tunnels and duffel bags full of heavy, high-tech equipment to pull off their heists. Except, this gang isn't exactly as wise as you'd expect. When they have to crack open a safe – as they not once, but twice, do in the movie – does this gang of successful thieves go quietly and use ingenuity to succeed? No. Instead, they use high-powered rockets and rifles to blow through the walls. Subtlety as an art is lost on this crew.

DMX and Jet Li star in "Cradle 2 the Grave," credited as a typical by-the-number martial arts film full of fighting and background hip-hop music.

"Cradle 2 the Grave" is one of those by-the-number martial arts buttkickers, where a hip-hop soundtrack plays behind a series of mindlessly-edited fight scenes in which limbs fly through the air and crunch into an unlucky extra's groin, arm or throat. DMX's co-star here is Jet Li, the stone-faced Chinese actor whose youthful impishness has been replaced by vicious professionalism. Jet Li is considered to be one of the best martial artists in the world today – his fists of fury slashing across the screen with the speed and ferocity of Bruce Lee. It's a funny twist of fate – and a truth of witless, dog-eared action films such as this – that what was once cool, new and fun three years ago is now the tired, unadventurous today. The zippy fights have become old-hat since Li starred in "Romeo Must Die," a piece of conventional story-telling that seemed a little more alive when it was released; now it's a big yawn when we see yet another flying kick take place in a ring of fire. Of course, it's hard to muster much excitement for a fight scene when even the star attraction looks bored.

Continued on page 6

'Cradle 2 Grave' plot suffers in new action film

Continued from page 1

Flatley has Jet Li's gang pull a heist that is centered on a big tuft of rare black diamonds, and they wind up getting ripped off by a rival gang of thieves. The diamonds are really compact nuclear warheads, weapons-grade plutonium, and the bidding to a real bad guy, Giamatti, Fait's daughter in between them. It hangs around with a Treasury cop who refuses to cooperate with Fait to retrieve the diamonds before they are sold to the highest bidder.

With half a movie, "Cradle 2 the Grave" is loud and fast and agreeably dumb, which may be enough in an era where a movie as dull and aimless as "Daredevil" can top the box office for two weeks in a row.

"Cradle 2 the Grave" piles on the chases, fights and exploding helicopters in vain attempts to distract the audience. By the time Tom Arnold, Fait's comic-relief arms dealer, rolls through in a tank and Li decimates a bad guy in a highly gruesome (and implausible) way, you get the sense "Cradle 2 the Grave" is like one of those rockets.

It's overkill.

Jet Li co-stars in "Cradle 2 the Grave." Li's talents go to waste in the film with its dry plot and mind-numbing action scenes.

Sox to face Contreras

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – Boston manager Grady Little gets his first in-person look at what might have been when Jose Contreras pitches against the Red Sox on Tuesday.

Little doesn't plan to spend time worrying about how his team lost its pursuit of the Cuban pitcher to the New York Yankees.

"We can't look back on stuff like that," he said Monday. "We know we've got to perform and play on the field, just as they do."

In his other spring training start, Contreras looked nothing like the pitcher the Yankees hoped they signed as he allowed five runs and five hits in two innings last Thursday.

Little has seen him pitch much better.

"I've seen him on video and I saw him in that game against Baltimore several years ago in spring training," he said. "look forward to seeing him."

Little, who turned 53 on Monday, expects Tuesday to be more important than the usual day in the spring training grind.

The rivalry with the Yankees means something even in exhibition games.

"The intensity of the game for the fans and the players kind of upgrades a little bit," Little said, but "I think the importance of the game is just like any other in spring training."

He plans to start several frontline players, including Nomar Garciaparra, Manny Ramirez, Johnny Damon, Trot Nixon and Jeremy Giambi. He said he didn't consider the possibility of Jeremy playing against his brother, Yankees first baseman Jason Giambi.

"I don't even know for sure Jason's even coming for that game," Little said.

Jeremy Giambi went 1-for-3 Monday against Detroit in Lakeland, Fla., and was not at Monday night's game against Minnesota in Fort Myers. The Red Sox lost to the Tigers 5-4 despite a homer by Lou Merloni, who went 2-for-2.

Giambi is competing with Kevin Millar and David Ortiz at first base, while Shea Hillenbrand and Bill Mueller are in the third-base mix. Little said he doesn't expect any controversy among the players.

"They're going to be on board with what we're trying to do," he said. "And that's for 25 guys to win games and win as many as we can and try to come ahead of the New York Yankees in the American League East."

John Burkett starts Tuesday against Contreras and figures to be Boston's fourth or fifth starter. Little said his plan for the regular season is to have Pedro Martinez, Tim Wakefield and Derek Lowe as his top three starters.

Little said Wakefield is the No. 2 starter because his knuckleball provides a sharp contrast to the others' dominating pitches – Martinez's fastball and Lowe's sinker.

Seniors lead Minutemen

Enjoy revenge

Continued from page 8

"They moved guys around a lot," Cannella said. "Defensively, I think they are very strong. They attacked us, their young guys went hard to the cage."

After the game, the ninth-year coach said he was happy with UMass' defensive play.

"I'm pleased with our defensive effort," said Cannella, whose career now sits at 66-44. "We gave up a couple goals that we would call garbage goals. We did get beat a few times, and certainly that has to be addressed. But, if you can hold a team to seven goals, I don't care who they are, you are doing a pretty decent job."

He was also pleased that the big lead gave him a chance to play everyone.

"It's great to see those guys play," the 2001 and 2002 ECAC Coach of the Year said.

NOTE: Saturday's Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference opener against Navy has been moved back one hour to a 1 p.m. start.

UMass Player of the Game

Kevin Leveille

SENIOR • M • 5-FOOT-10

Scored career-high seven goals – as many as the entire opposing team – and added three assists in 17-7 win over Stony Brook Saturday.

A 'No Code' tribute to John R. Cash

[illegible] suggest. "My name is Samuel, and I'll see you all in hell, damn your eyes," as the bustling "Sam Hall." On the title track, choosing original on par with anything else credited to Johnny R. Cash, he quotes "Revelations" through a rasping, worn-out static, in a defiant turn staunchly set against his own mortality. His pronouncement of "Sting's Hung My Head" is reborn as a methodic penance. At last, Cash's fire still burning.

Cash himself be the original Punk – this is the voice that for decades has held court with murderers and commoners, outlaws and lovers, all of whom had traveled the same road. Every song bears the same, heavy weariness; each dead-end arrived at its conclusion with a similar glimpse of hope.

The final of walk up to "The Man Comes Around" and the [illegible] agreement of Reznor, Depeche Mode and Trent McCormick as chapters worthy of inclusion, is an extraordinary roadmap. Follow it and expose yourself to the outside and. Follow it and open yourself to crippling hardships and joyous celebrations. Follow it and stroll at its descents into kitsch, cry when you realize those moments are the same ones you've shared privately in your own life. His voice is a cavern in which the human condition both loses and rediscovers itself. He is able to speak without judgment, because in each thread of his own voice rests a piece of our own sin and our own salvation.

I'm not a religious man, though I've heard the stories of Wyoma Square revivals in Lynn, Mass., where the Hells Angels roosted on humid, summer afternoons, scored by Cash's distinct call as it wrestled its way out of cheap radios burning on the pavement.

I've heard Cash at San Quentin, liberating a room full of judged and condemned souls with simple songs that damned the bars they had put themselves behind.

I've heard Cash on "The Man Comes Around," as graceful and plaintive as he ever has been. The voice that's too important for words, the weight in it that's too large to fit a song the same way twice. The preacher, the murderer, the lover. The voice that picks us up and sits us down when we need it most.

"Won't you tell them thanks for waiting for me," he sings on "Give My Love To Rose."

The thanks, sir, is entirely for you.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

'Corner to corner' and the risks of the WWE

Continued from page 8

Wrestler Stone Cold Steve Austin

Wrestler Chris Benoit

Absence makes the heart grow fonder. I'd rather let it heal and come back 100 percent. I want to come back with a whole lot of momentum."

Stone Cold is back. Chris Benoit is back. Rhyno has returned, and Lita is well on her way to being able to fly off the top rope once more. Edge is scheduled to have his surgery on March 10. Seven athletes have already paid for the risks they have taken in the ring. How many more will pay before wrestlers realize they need to slow down?

"It's not smash-up derby. It's professional wrestling," Steve Austin told WWF.com.

I never thought I'd say this but, for once, I agree with him.

Emilie Duggan-Hicks is a Collegian Columnist.

UMass falls to UConn on late goal

Drops to 1-1 with loss at Garber victory.

Continued from page 8

Tracy Mullin, the leading returning scorer for the Lady Huskies, Tracy Mullen was the focus of the defense. But it was unheralded freshman Allison Tyminski who scored the game-winning goal for Connecticut with just over three minutes remaining in the fourth quarter. The score marked the first of her career as well as the game's last.

"[It is] only the second game of the season and already our level of play is really high," Bolduc said. "If we continue to improve like we do in practice, we will be stellar in A-10s."

The last time the Minutewomen have beaten the Lady Huskies was April 25, 2001. The wait will continue one more year, unless the Minutewomen get a crack at the Huskies in this year's playoffs.

The next game for the Minutewomen against Dartmouth has been canceled. That game was supposed to take place on March 5, but has been moved to March 16 at Dartmouth. Their next opponent is Harvard. The game will take place this Saturday at Harvard. Faceoff is scheduled for 1 p.m.

UMass Player of the Game

Maura McGarrity

JUNIOR • A • ELLICOT CITY, MD

Scored a pair of goals down the stretch in 8-7 loss to Connecticut Friday at Garber Field.

get into a real greek week!

>the ultimate vacation! your latest toga [illegible] with [illegible] week? join [illegible] nights and gather with the [illegible]

>aegean classic cruise	7 days from $479
>spotlight on greece	12 days from $995
>greek island hopping	14 days from $1049
>london to athens	19 days from $1539

[illegible] rates to availability. [illegible] transportation [illegible]

contiki

see your campus travel agent
call toll-free 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com

> europe > australia > new zealand > america > canada

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist

Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Let The Black Sheep Host Your Graduation Ba-a-a-ash!

Join us for an exquisite dinner in our new downtown Amherst restaurant, plan a catered party with The Black Sheep at the location of your choice, or have us deliver hors d'ouevres, dinner, sandwiches, sweets, and more, right to your door!

CALL NOW: 413.253.3443 OR VISIT:
WWW.BLACKSHEEPDELI.COM

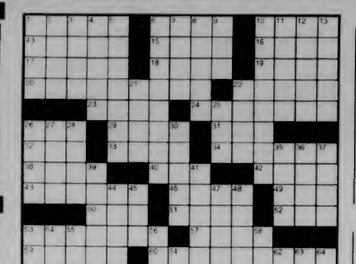
There is a weekly sports meeting every Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Collegian Newsroom. All staff members are required to attend. Interested writers are always welcome.

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

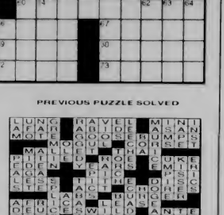
GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • BY DERRICK GENOVA



THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY CONRAD X



ACROSS

1 Down mood
5 Telecommunications
10 Helper: Briefly
14 Hughes's Blake
15 Viking name
16 Pricing spot
17 Dull-witted
18 Old deal-sealer
19 Thunder god
20 Freight hauler of yore (2 wds.)
22 Opera name
23 Unbearing
24 Lusty hatred
26 Web info
27 Tarnished heroine
31 Vows to ~
33 Dunk, the seal
34 Orchard unit
36 Largest Jem bone
40 Fuccolo
42 Butte cousin
43 West towards
46 Ode to the Scots
49 Play bumper cars
50 Juice-based drink
51 Decorated
52 Sewer
54 Bonnie's bride
57 Mary TV heiress
58 Greenish blue
59 Vice predecessor
60 Becomes popular (2 wds.)
65 Hill Manes
66 Rocker Jon
67 Bon
68 Pedro's pal
69 Labor un.
70 Tuba
71 Tiers
72 Legend
73 Ice floes
74 Toddler partners

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN

1 Smile Broadly
2 Cooker
3 Film director ___ Fincher
4 Brought on board
5 Padre furnishings
6 Hunt (2 wds.)
7 Eurasian range
8 Cloud bursts
9 Jackanory org.
10 Hardworkingness
11 Bucolic in India
12 Buttons up?
13 Condensed
21 Rajah's consort
25 Felipe or Matty
25 Moon, poetically
26 Nigel-Hyatt
27 Rogue Jackson
28 Stormy Weather singer
30 Ledger entry
35 Mackenzie, in Banks
36 Unbelievable son
37 Gentle person
39 Getting used to
41 Pulling dry
44 Pop singer Adams
45 Ruby or Sandra
47 New event
48 Envy helicopter
51 Bad Brad arts
54 Bunsen base
55 Keepsake
56 Hinge or orient
58 Dot
61 Declare
62 Your highness
63 Stove
64 Looks sleepy
66 Position

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Never. I'll never turn to the Dark Side. You've failed, your highness. I am a Jedi, like my father before me."

- Luke Skywalker

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
- High: 35
- Low:29

WEDNESDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 11

THURSDAY
- High: 34
- Low: 12

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Cuban Black Bean Soup
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegetarian)

DINNER
Cuban Black Bean Soup
- Fat Tuesday
- Chicken, Shrimp & Andouille
- Gumbo
- Southern Fried Steak
- Dirty Rice with Black Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew F. Sacco
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schaffer
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Jennifer DiMeglio
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lydell / Gerry Auger

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Jealous that you are not a Capricorn? Their horoscope is so much better than yours today.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Avoid water today. That includes snow and pools. The reason is because you're sugar baby, and you'll melt.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Your partner will shower you with gifts and affection. That thing you are hoping for is going to come true.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Expand your horizons today. Try French cuisine and Chinese finger cuffs.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
When eating at the Dining Halls avoid the lobster bisque. Opt for the brown bag lunch.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Life goes on. Long after the thrill of living is gone. So let it rock, let it roll.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Someone else is walking a mile in your shoes. They are wicked comfortable, you might not get them back.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
When you meet a girl from Jersey, ask her if she has a keg in her pants.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
A romantic stranger will be ushered in on the winds from the library.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Give a little bit of your love today. Now's the time that we need to share.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
That thing with the sink, yeah it's going to happen. Just be patient.

aquarius • JAN 20-FEB. 18
If you get a Bluewall coffee today. Watch out for the tadpoles.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for CONCERTS EVENTS SHOWS? Check out www.THA700.com for local up-to date info.

Get Greek Stuff F-A-S-T! Group orders get great discounts. Lettering, embroidery, novelties. Visit on-line at Connectsports.com 1-800-929-1897. alantran@starpower.net.

Buy/Sell Textbooks Locally @ the text-bookhub.com No Shipping Hassles No waiting period text-bookhub.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 4 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare. Experienced. Tues-Thurs afternoons/eves. UMASS call before 8 pm 549-9351

CAMPUS REPS needed to promote new energy drink mid Feb - end of semester. Easy, flexible hours. Please respond ONLY if outgoing, confident, energetic. Letter of intro + resume to mcangilieri@myc.rr.com

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS-SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE. Camp Wayne, NEPA. Counselor Specialists all Land/Water Sports inc. Tennis, Golf, Soccer,

EMPLOYMENT

Outdoor Adventure Camping, Mountain Biking, Climbing/Ropes, Roller Hockey, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Theatre, Radio, Video and more. Graduating RNs, RNs, Nurse Practitioners for Health Center, CDL Drivers, Wait Staff. CAMPUS INTERVIEWS—TUES & WED, FEB 12 & 13. Let's get the ball rolling now! Online application www.campwayne.com, email info@campwayne.com, 1-888-549-2963 (516-884-8067).

Economics / Business Development Assistant for economic software firm. Includes telephone sales. Part time or full time. Please send cover letter and resume to: Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002, fax 413-549-1038, info@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic modeling firm. Delphi, FORTRAN, MS office a plus. FT or PT. Please send cover letter and resume to: Frederick Treyz, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002 fax 413-549-1038, info@remi.com

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help videotape practices & games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship And Is work/study available. Beginning late spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Snider at 577-0319

Bartenders Needed! No experience necessary!!! Earn up to $300/Day! 1-866-291-1884 xt1047

EMPLOYMENT

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for Tour Guides, Student Admissions Reps, and Summer Orientation Counselors. Call 545-9061 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 7

Drivers & Kitchen help needed Flexible hours. Apply DP Dough Downtown Amherst.

Attention: Get a head start on your New Years Resolution. Lose weight. Make money. DIVon 1-888-232-3615 www.designthestyle.com

LOST

Lost: U.S. Passport of Michael Leuchtenburg. It found, please call 546-7296 or email Michael@dashhome.org

LOST

Last semester I lost two necklaces of high sentimental value. Both silver with a pendant. One is square, the other is a heart. If you have any info please contact me at 586-5189 or annieb@student.umass.edu. Reward it found.

ROOM FOR RENT

Two furnished rooms available. Utilities included. No lease required. $375.00 per month 253-3670

411-549-3114 Feb-June Grads Preferred Near UMASS Ask for Jay

ROOMMATE WANTED

LRG Room in furnished Home on Amherst / Belchertown Line 400+ month 253-7235

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9902

Clean Needles Save Lives. Anonymous needle exchange. Safe, nonjudgmental. Resources and support. Tapestry Health, 16 Center Street, Northampton. 586-2016 x 164

Confidential Pregnancy Testing and Counseling. Sliding fee scale. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9902 (14 words)

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days, Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials! Incl. Port, Departure, Hotel Tax! www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$. Last Chance to Book! Special Rates For Groups of 6+. www.letsrecreate.com / 800-838-8203

Montreal Madness Weekends $89+$15 Security Fee Complete (based on quad occupancy) Includes Round Trip Motor-coach, 2 Nights at a Hotel Downtown, Breakfast-Dinner, Nightclubs (The best in town!) Departs every weekend: March, April, May: 10 or more Group Discounts available mon-treadepress.net 781-979-0076

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endless-summertours.com

Absolute Best Deals for Spring Break! Acapulco, Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida; Space still available. Call us today 1-866-271-2500 www.vagabondtours.com

WANTED

Wanted Immediately For on campus student in Chemistry II & Biology IV, Graduate Student or experienced TA. Will Pay Reasonable Rate 617-868-7515 Joshtville@aol.com or Jamesjoshua@hotmail.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A whole different story

Minutemen tear into Seawolves

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last year - matchup between the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team and Stony Brook came down to the wire. UMass was forced to come from behind in that contest and, thanks to a Dan Paccione goal with less than one minute remaining, came away with an 8-7 win that UMass coach Greg Cannella called "more than just a scare."

UMass	17
Stony Brook	7

This year Kevin Leveille and the Minutemen made sure Stony Brook wouldn't give them any trouble.

"We played terrible last year when we went down there," said Leveille after UMass' 17-7 win Saturday over the Seawolves.

"We focused all week on being prepared to play and they deserved an asskicking."

Leveille did plenty of kicking, tossing in five first-half goals and seven for the game, as the midfielder scored as many goals as the entire Stony Brook team. No. 19 also chipped in three assists for a career-high 10 points to help up his team's record to 2-0. Stony Brook is 0-1.

"After the first couple went in, I just kept letting them go and just got lucky," said Leveille, who bested his previous highs of four goals and six points.

A goal from Stony Brook's Jason Cappadoro to open the second half cut the UMass lead to 8-5, but the Minutemen answered with three straight goals over the next four minutes for an 11-5 lead with 10:04 left in the third quarter. The game was never in question over the last 25 minutes, and the Maroon and White pulled away, outscoring the Seawolves 6-1 down the stretch.

The Minutemen jumped out to a 7-2 lead behind five goals from Leveille and two from Jeff Zwicki, and led 8-4 at the half.

Senior midfielder Chris Fiore scored four goals on the afternoon, upping his total to nine on the season, while Gene Tumbo, Chris Dode, Neil Lundberg and Tom Ventiquattro each scored one goal.

"The scoring was spread out pretty much, with the exception of Leveille," said Fiore, who was one of nine Minutemen to record a point in their second win of the season.

Cannella, who served as an assistant at Stony Brook from 1988-92 and considers Seawolves coach John Espey a mentor, wasn't surprised by the way his opposition came out Saturday.

Junior Jeff Zwicki scored a pair of goals, including this one while falling to the turf, in UMass' 17-7 win over Stony Brook Saturday at Garber Field.

Leveille matches SB total single-handedly

By MATT BRADY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following Saturday's 17-7 win for the Massachusetts lacrosse team, a pair of reporters approach senior midfielder Chris Fiore, eager to get some quotes on the game.

"You guys don't want to talk to me," Fiore says. "He's the superstar today."

Fiore is pointing to fellow senior Kevin Leveille, who entered this year as the preseason pick for Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Offensive Player of the Year. Following what may have looked – on the outside, at least – like a subpar outing against Sacred Heart in the season opener a week before, Leveille showed why he deserved the honor, putting up career bests in all three major offensive statistical categories – seven goals and three assists for 10 points.

"He had a great day," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Seven and three. That's a good game."

"I didn't play too well last week, so I just wanted to come out today and play like I usually do," Leveille said.

No. 19 was dominant from the very beginning of the contest, putting up a hat trick within the first 9:25 of the contest, and making it a career day with his fifth goal of the contest less than three minutes into the second quarter. From quick-sticks to rifles into the top of the net to bounce shots – Leveille seemed to have the golden touch right out of the gates for the Maroon and White.

"In the beginning, he was shooting from anywhere and it was going, so we just kept getting him the ball and he kept scoring," Fiore said.

So of course, Stony Brook decided to make some adjustments, putting more pressure on Leveille as the game went on. No problem – he'll just feed it to someone else – which he did three times to his partner in crime, Fiore, with two such tallies coming on extra man opportunities.

"It's tough to match up with both of those guys," Cannella said. "We put both of those guys in the midfield, [opponents] are going to put two poles against them and one of our attackmen is going to get a short stick. It's going to be tough for them this year. It isn't going to get any easier, that's for sure, but [opponents] have to watch out for both of them, no doubt about it. Hopefully, when that happens, other people can step as for us."

Of course, Leveille – just as he so often does on the field – is quick to dish off the credit to his other hard-working teammates.

"The whole offense was moving the ball around," he said. "Everyone was making things happen. Everybody else was creating everything, I was just on the tail end of it."

Cannella was hardly surprised at his superstar's reaction.

"Beyond everything that he did today and that he's done in his career, he couldn't care less," he said. "He cares about whether the team wins or not. You have a guy that good who believes in what we do and believes in his teammates. You put him on the back and you smile when he leaves."

The smile is even brighter when he alone matched the opponents goals scored.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 94

Independent artist talks of Women's slide show series

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Yesterday, in celebration of International Women's Day, the Everywoman's center and University of Massachusetts Campus Activities presented independent artist and scholar Max Dashu and her multi-cultural slide presentation "Female Rebels and Mavericks" to a crowd of students and community members in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union Building.

The presentation was one of eighty slide shows Dashu, the freelance teacher and author, has developed since the founding of the slide show series, Suppressed Women's Histories, in 1970. The Suppressed Histories Archive, a California based program, aims to increase awareness of female heritages and achievements from an international perspective.

The slide talk focused on audacious women who have broken the rules and have spoken out against war, racism and oppression. The visuals presented a global view, including photos of activists, radicals and visionaries from around the world.

"What this presentation examines is female rebellion," Dashu said to her audience. "You'll see images of females speaking out, disobeying and acting out against injustice. We'll also look at the attempts to silence women's speech."

Presented in the show were visuals and stories of courageous and independent women from ancient times to the present day. Dashu began presenting images from the Chinese and the Aztecs of female warriors.

The slide show exhibited visuals of women in the sex trade throughout history as well as female acrobats, dancers and healers, all of who demonstrated independence and defiance of the normal customs of their societies. The slide show also presented examples of art in temples and public areas in Mexico, Japan, Italy and Cambodia portraying women loving women.

Many of the women presented in "Female Rebels and Mavericks" were unheard of; women like the Hindu avadhutis who disregarded the norm of female dress to the Ethiopian activists fighting to stop

Continued on page 3

SAM ARTHUR/COLLEGIAN

Artist and scholar, Max Dashu, presents her slide show.

National student walk out kicks off anti-war events

By KELLY FARRELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students will be walking out of their classes and dorms and onto the Student Union Steps today to kick-off a day of anti-war events sponsored by The University of Massachusetts AntiWar Coalition.

The Peace Moratorium is in solidarity with a national one-day student strike, "Books not Bombs," which is taking place in different forms at over 300 campuses across the nation. Following the rally at noon there will be numerous panel discussions and poetry readings for students and faculty to discuss issues related to the U.S. position in Iraq.

"Books Not Bombs" is a slogan to personalize the issue for students, said Annie Tumino of the AntiWar Coalition.

"We don't want cuts in education to fund this war and we're willing to disrupt our lives for a day to show it," Tumino said.

From noon to 1 p.m. rally will feature slam poet Magdelana Gomez, Sonny Suchdez of the Office of ALANA Affairs, and Anne Ferguson, Professor of Philosophy and Women's Studies. They, and others, will join UMass students as well as other area schools, including Amherst High School.

Approximately 80 professors have signed a petition to engage in the Peace Moratorium by agreeing to participate in teach-ins or excuse their students from class to attend the teach-ins around campus.

These teach-ins and forums will be held from 1 to 5 p.m. to discuss the domestic and international consequences of a preemptive strike on Iraq. There are two panels that will be taking place from 1 to 2:30 p.m. on campus. "Labor and the War," will be at the Draper Hall Library and will feature Nancy Lesson and Charley Richardson, parents of a military soldier. "The Human Costs of War: Sanctions and Budget Priorities" will take place in Herter 601 and will feature Jo Commerford of the American Friends Service Committee, who will present a documentary slide show of her recent trip to Iraq.

Following those panels, from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m., will be "Poetry Slam Against the War" in Herter 301. This event will feature local poet Bushra Muhammad and an open microphone for students and faculty to read their own or others poetry. Also from 2:30 to 3:30 pm, in Herter 601 will be a panel discussion of "Building the Anti-War Movement," featuring Sunny Miller of the Traprock Peace Center, Martina Robinson, a graduate student and member of the AntiWar Coalition, and Thomas Roeper of the Linguistics Department, along with other speakers.

Robinson said she decided to get involved in the Peace Moratorium in order to discuss the "intersection of health care, disability rights, and antiwar organizing."

"I realized this [war] was an important issue for me when I learned the cost of one particular war plane, the Global Master Three, would pay for 5,114 years of my personal care assistance," Robinson said. "That's 5,114 people that wouldn't have to be put in institutions – just for one plane."

This afternoon, there will be a gathering at the Hatch from 3:45-5:45 p.m. People's Market is catering the event, and food and refreshments will be free. Students and faculty are invited to discuss the events of the afternoon, have a snack, and prepare for a march from Haigis Mall to Amherst Common at 5 p.m. All of the area's five Colleges and Amherst High School are participating in the march and candlelight vigil.

The following is a schedule of events for the day:

- Noon – 1:00 p.m.: Walkout and Rally, Student Union Steps
- 1:00 – 2:30 p.m.: "The Human Costs of War: Sanctions and Budget Priorities," Herter 601
- 1:00 – 2:30 p.m.: "Labor and the War," Draper Hall Library
- 2:30 – 3:30 p.m.: "Poetry Slam Against War," Herter 301
- 2:30 – 3:30 p.m., "Building the Anti-War Movement," Herter 601
- 3:45 – 4:45 p.m.: "Social and Information Gathering," the Hatch
- 5:00 p.m.: March from Haigis Mall to Amherst Common

SGA to present budget report

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The recently developed Student Government Association Senate ad-hoc committee will present their report regarding Governor Mitt Romney's newly released budget plans for 2004 at tonight's meeting.

Members of the SGA were unable to make any formal comment on the newly released budget last week, and in return looked to form an ad-hoc committee to research and form a formal response for the student body.

"Right now we're not in a position to comment on what is going on with the budget, but we will be in meetings, meetings and more meetings about it to learn as much as possible," Speaker Dan Saunders said. "We need to decide how to react, we can either have it come from the Speaker and President's office, or we can get together and form a collective response that we could present to the Administration and State."

Senator Jared Nokes proposed the formation of an ad-hoc committee in an effort to gather more information on the proposed budget cuts as well as possible switches within the University of Massachusetts system.

Rumors of dissolving the President's Office in Boston was one proposed plan expressed by Governor Romney, thus making changes in how the UMass system is funded and run state wide. Student Trustee Bill Powers commented on the proposed changes, explaining that they did not look good for UMass.

"Governor Romney's proposal potentially would eliminate the Presidents office," Powers said. "This proposal to eliminate the Presidents office could have very large ramifications, but no one has seen the details."

Nokes and his committee will explain the details learned from their research as well as the committee's official response to be sent to the Administration and State tonight.

Members of the SGA are also looking to the future Executive Cabinet as nominations for the Presidential and Student Trustee positions have closed. Members running for these two positions will be answering questions in a televised debate Sunday, March 9 at 7 p.m.

Elections will be taking place March 12-13 and students will be able to vote for their candidates as well as on referendum questions posed by the SGA. One question making a second appearance on the ballot is regarding the Greek Areas and whether or not freshman should be allowed to live in Greek houses.

"I was figuring out all the numbers and not allowing freshman to move into a house that holds 40 beds will not have as much of an effect as a house that holds 15 beds and we're [a small house], so there is a problem," President Dave Carr said. "A lot of houses won't be able to stay open if this happens, and there's already been a lot of talk about this, so I'm putting a question on the ballot regarding Greek housing and how I feel it is vital to this University."

A motion to eliminate the Diversity committee will also make an appearance on tonight's Senate agenda.

Last week, Senators debated over the idea of defining diversity within the Senate. The motion however was failed by the Senate. Members then looked to the Administrative Affairs committee to eliminate the inactive committee on grounds that each committee should represent campus diversity. A unanimous decision to eliminate the Diversity committee was passed by Administrative Affairs.

"There is going to be a motion to eliminate the Diversity committee, the motion was tabled last week back to the Administrative Affairs committee," Saunders said. "Everyone met and was able to address their concerns regarding the issue and it was passed unanimously. Now it will go before the Senate and they can vote on what they want to do."

The SGA Senate will convene tonight at the Top of the Campus Center at 7 p.m. and all meetings are open to the public.

JAMES W. HATTERS/COLLEGIAN

The SGA will meet tonight at 7 p.m. at the top of the Campus Center.

'Old Ironsides' ordered to head for the Persian Gulf

By ROBERT BURNS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army's oldest armored division, "Old Ironsides," got orders Tuesday to head for the Persian Gulf as the total of U.S. land, sea and air forces arrayed against Iraq or preparing to go neared 300,000.

The commander who would lead the war, Gen. Tommy R. Franks, met at the Pentagon with Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and was to consult with President Bush at the White House on Wednesday. Last week Franks reviewed his war plan with commanders at his Gulf command post.

The pace of troop movements and high-level consultations suggested the military was close to ready for the opening of what would be a multidirectional assault to disarm and depose Iraq President Saddam Hussein.

In addition to the U.S. troops based in Kuwait and every other country on the Arabian Peninsula except Yemen, there are five aircraft carrier battle groups nearby, each with about 30-strike aircraft aboard and including 30 to 40 vessels armed with Tomahawk land-attack cruise missiles.

A sixth carrier, the USS Nimitz, is en route to the Gulf to relieve the USS Abraham Lincoln.

Still to be resolved was the important question of whether Turkey would allow its territory to be used for tens of thousands of U.S. ground forces to open a northern front against Iraq. Three dozens ships carrying weaponry and equipment for the Army's 4th Infantry Division, which would spearhead the attack from Turkey, is waiting in the Mediterranean for a Turkey decision.

Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said a war against Iraq would be won even without Turkey's help, but he indicated he remained hopeful Turkey would change its mind.

"It will be much more difficult" to execute the war plan without Turkish bases, "and we prefer to have Turkey with us," Myers said in an interview at the Pentagon with WMAL radio's "Chris Core Show." He said U.S. commanders have multiple back-up plans if Turkey refuses.

Speaking on the same show, Rumsfeld that of the many things that could go wrong for the United States in a war against Iraq, the one that worries him most is the "very sizable risk" that Saddam would use chemical or biological weapons against U.S. troops or neighboring countries.

In Wiesbaden, Germany, home of the U.S. Army's 1st Armored Division, known as "Old Ironsides," officials said the unit received orders Tuesday to deploy to the Central Command region. No dates were released.

Portions of another Germany-based Army unit, the 1st Infantry Division, already are in Turkey to help receive and move forward the weaponry and equipment of the 4th Infantry Division. But that is on hold pending a final decision by the Turkish government on hosting U.S. forces.

U.S. may not seek United Nations vote on resolution

By RON FOURNIER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) - With other nations' opposition hardening, the White House left open the possibility Tuesday that it would not seek a United Nations vote on its war-making resolution if the measure was clearly headed for defeat.

U.S. troop strength in the Persian Gulf neared 300,000, and President Bush and his advisers were looking beyond the diplomatic showdown in the U.N. to make plans for a public relations buildup to potential war with Iraq.

One option under serious consideration was Bush giving Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein a final ultimatum, perhaps with a short-term deadline, in an address next week, two senior White House officials said.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, stressed that a variety of options are on the table and all depend on the outcome of a U.N. Security Council debate on the U.S.-backed war resolution. In a new blow, Russia's top diplomat said Moscow may use its veto against the measure.

Even without a veto from Russia, China or France, the United States still doesn't have the nine votes needed to win approval of the resolution, according to both supporters and opponents. Many undecided council members are looking for a compromise.

Secretary of State Colin Powell, in an interview with RTL television of Germany, said that early next week U.S. leaders would "make a judgment on whether it's time to put the resolution up to a vote."

At the White House, spokesman Ari Fleischer said, "The vote is desirable. It is not necessary."

Once the vote is resolved one way or another, Bush will intensify his case for war, officials said, barring unforeseen events such as Saddam suddenly disarming or going into exile.

In addition to a possible address, they have discussed a presidential news conference and a Cabinet meeting as ways for Bush to communicate his plans to the nation next week. He may stop short of a specific ultimatum, officials said, but would make it clear that war is imminent in other ways, such as warning journalists and humanitarian workers to get out of Iraq.

Meanwhile, Bush telephoned leaders of India and Egypt to discuss his plans. And officials said Powell had had two telephone conversations and a one-on-one meeting in recent days with Mexican Foreign Minister Luis Ernesto Derbez in his search for Mexican support.

The Army's oldest armored division, "Old Ironsides," got its orders to head for the Persian Gulf, and Pentagon officials said U.S. land, sea and air forces were approaching 300,000 in the region.

Tommy R. Franks, the commander who would lead the war, met at the Pentagon with Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and was to consult with Bush on Wednesday.

Still to be resolved was the military question of whether Turkey would allow its territory to be used for U.S. ground forces to open a northern front against Iraq.

At the White House, Fleischer said Turkey would lose a proposed $15 billion aid package unless it went along.

"The particular package that we've been talking to them about was predicated on assistance and cooperation in any plan for the use of force against Iraq," Fleischer said.

Until Tuesday, the spokesman had suggested part of the package would be available to Turkey regardless of whether 62,000 American troops are allowed in the country. White House officials said they were turning up pressure on Turkey in hopes that the parliament would grant the U.S. request on a second vote.

At the United Nations, meanwhile, Secretary-General Kofi Annan called Baghdad's destruction of missiles "a positive development," putting him at odds with Bush's assessment.

Russia's Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov, meeting Moscow's opposition to quick military action, indicated Russia may use its veto against the U.S.-backed U.N. resolution.

Both developments further complicated Bush's efforts to win passage of the resolution, adding significance to talk of what the administration would do if U.N. opposition hardens.

"The president has made clear, that ... whether the United Nations votes or does not vote, that we will disarm Saddam Hussein with a coalition of the willing," Fleischer said. "We are proceeding with all the plans for the vote."

"Now, if you are asking me if all of a sudden support around the world crumbles and there is absolutely no one for it, I can't predict with metaphysical certitude every eventuality," Fleischer said.

U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte was asked whether the United States would withdraw the resolution if it didn't have the votes to pass it.

"We haven't crossed that bridge," he said. "We believe that support should be there. We are not facing that kind of situation but we will cross the bridge when we come to it."

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

EPHEDRA
NOT ILLEGAL BUT STILL VERY DANGEROUS
PAGE 4

HAPPY BIRTHDAY
BON JOVI IN CONCERT ON HIS 41ST BIRTHDAY
PAGE 6

BONNIES FORFEIT
ST. BONAVENTURE CANCELS SEASON
PAGE 10

St. Bonaventure forfeits wins, will miss tourney

By JOHN WAWROW
ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLEAN, N.Y. (AP) - The St. Bonaventure men's basketball team will forfeit its Atlantic 10 conference victories and forego the postseason tournament after admitting it used an ineligible player.

The sanctions were determined Monday after the conference's 12 presidents conducted a teleconference call.

St. Bonaventure's games have been in question since last week when the school declared junior center Jamil Terrell ineligible for failing to meet NCAA junior college transfer guidelines.

School officials who said they were petitioning the A-10 to have Terrell reinstated, declined to say what guidelines he might have failed to meet.

St. Bonaventure coach Jan Van Breda Kolff told reporters Monday he couldn't discuss Terrell's case. He said he first heard of it last Wednesday.

"He was declared eligible. We went through a lot of paperwork and a lot of things that were taken care of, and everybody from here on in said everything was in compliance. So we went along with what everybody else said," Van Breda Kolff said. "Now things have changed dramatically."

Sources told The Buffalo News in Monday's editions that Terrell did not have an associate's degree from Coastal Georgia Community College in Brunswick, Ga., but had earned a certificate in welding. Course work in such a trade would not satisfy the NCAA's core curriculum requirements for junior college transfers, who must have minimum credits in core areas such as English, history and science.

Terrell joined the Bonnies last year after spending the previous two seasons at Coastal Georgia. He started 18 of the 25 games he appeared in for St. Bonaventure before sitting out last Wednesday's 94-89 overtime win over George Washington when questions of his eligibility were raised.

Terrell was declared ineligible a day later.

St. Bonaventure President Dr. Robert J. Wickenheiser took full responsibility for approving the transfer.

"Throughout the process, I made a series of well-intentioned decisions based a series of assumptions and interpretations," Wickenheiser said in a statement released by the school. "The NCAA has come to a conclusion different from the one I reached."

"I want to emphasize that none of these actions indicate any wrongdoing by Jamil Terrell," Wickenheiser said.

By agreeing to the sanctions, Wickenheiser hoped "that the NCAA will see these penalties as sufficiently severe sanctions."

The college president was in California and not available for further comment.

The school was last sanctioned in 1968 and placed on one-year probation for a recruiting violation.

St. Bonaventure initially proposed forfeiting its six conference wins but the presidents of the conference argued that it should also miss the postseason tournament.

"This is a very uncharacteristic problem regarding one of our institutions and our presidents are determined that something like this never happen again," said A-10 Commissioner Linda Bruno.

School spokesman David Ferguson informed the team of the sanctions and said the players were "devastated." He said the players have said they will not address the media.

Van Breda Kolff was not immediately available after the decision.

With the sanctions, St. Bonaventure's conference record falls to 1-15. Their overall record remains 13-14 unless the NCAA metes out its own sanctions.

Terrell led the team with 51 blocked shots, was third with 121 rebounds and fourth in scoring, averaging 6.9 points per game. Terrell had only a combined 18 points and 16 rebounds in his last five games, all coming off the bench.

In a conference call with sportswriters Monday, John Chaney, coach at Atlantic 10 rival Temple, criticized the ruling on Terrell.

"I find that the NCAA and our presidents have become more of a group that tends to punish rather than encourage youngsters," Chaney said. He suggested taking another look at Terrell's transcript to see if he has the equivalent of the associate's degree.

Continued on page 6

Women's lax falls to UConn

Huskies score game-winner in late going

By ARI JASKELOWITZ
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A tightly contested game at Garber Field on Friday ended with the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team falling, 8-7, to the University of Connecticut.

Despite two goals and a team-leading four groundballs from sophomore Maura McGarrity, the Minutewomen lost their first game of the season. "[McGarrity] is young, plays hard, and is always striving to work harder on her game," coach Carrie Bolduc said. "She is constantly looking to improve the fundamentals of her game, body position, et cetera."

UConn	8
UMass	7

Coming off last year's 15-7 victory against the Minutewomen, Connecticut – led by seventh-year coach Bonnie Rosen – looked comfortable in dealing with the new style of play coming from UMass. The Lady Huskies weathered the Minutewomen's storm of 27 shots and seven goals. Connecticut goalie April Pollock had 11 saves and thwarted many Minutewoman scoring attempts.

"We were able to shoot a lot," Bolduc said. "But we couldn't get the ball on net."

Only 18 of the 27 shots from the Minutewomen found their way to the net, and just seven of those 18 found the back of the net.

The game remained knotted at four until four minutes and four seconds into the third quarter, when UMass' Tracey Brown broke the tie with her second goal of the game to give the Maroon and White a one-goal lead. The Minutewomen were poised to go on to their second victory in as many games, but could not seal the deal, as they never increased their lead to more than one.

Although the Minutewomen outshot the Lady Huskies, and committed fewer turnovers, the key to the game was draw control, which UConn held a deciding advantage of 11-6.

"We played a close to perfect game," Bolduc said, "but we had played perfectly then we would have won."

The Lady Huskies and the Minutewomen traded goals back and forth with Hope Zellinger tallying twice to stave off the Lady Huskies' attack. But goalie Cyndi Doyle, who made her return this weekend after sitting out the second half of the last game, kept the Minutewomen in the game with 10 saves on the Lady Huskies offense.

"Cyndi played a great game and should be credited for that," Bolduc said.

Even though Jada Emery had two assists and Zellinger added two more goals to her team-leading five, the Maroon and White could not pull out the

Continued on page 6

JAMES W. HATTERS/COLLEGIAN

Lori Kain and the women's lacrosse team fell to 1-1 with an 8-7 loss to Connecticut. UMass will return to action Saturday at Harvard.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY MARCH 5

UMASS -an exhibition titled 'Julie Heffernan: A Painting Survey 1993-2002' will take place in the Herter Gallery, 125A Herter Hall. The exhibition runs until April 4, with a reception on March 10 from 4 to 6 p.m. Gallery hours are Mon through Fri 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sat through Sun 1 to 4 p.m. For more information call 545-0876

UMASS-An exhibition entitled 'Linda Matalon: Open Gates: Recent Sculpture and Drawings' begins today and runs through April 6 in the Herter Art Gallery. An opening reception will be held today from 4 to 6 p.m. Gallery hours are as above. For more information call 545-0876

MOUNT HOLYOKE -The 51st Annual Spring Flower Show will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Talcott Greenhouse. The popular flower show will feature hundreds of spring blossoming bulbs and plants, all displayed in the main Show House. This year's show, under the theme 'Down the Garden Path,' will showcase buccinths narcissus, primroses, anemones, ranunculus, daffodils, orchids, lilies, tulips, and primroses as well as the delightful colonial dairy-like cineraria and the red and yellow hued calceolaria, of the Pocketbook Plant. The Talcott Greenhouse displays a premanent, living collection of plants from around the world, including ferns, orchids, bromeliads, aquatic plants, cacti, and succulents. Admission is free. Call 538-2116 for more information.

SMITH COLLEGE -The Annual Spring Bulb Show will be held today at the Lyman Conservatory from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Admission is free.

AMHERST COLLEGE-Ash Wednesday Services will be held today at the Chapin Chapel at 12 p.m. and 5 p.m.

THURSDAY MARCH 6

SMITH COLLEGE -A lecture entitled "Principles of Investing" will be given in the Neilson Library Browsing Room at noon. This course provides an introduction to the theory of portfolio diversification and its relationship to risk and return. Topics include investing and the life cycle, stocks, bonds, and interpreting financial statements. Lunch is provided for first 70 attendees. Admission is free. The event is sponsored by Women and Financial Independence.

UMASS -A lecture entitled "The Middle East: Dynamics of a Region in Crisis" will be given at 4 p.m. in Herter Hall, room 227. The event is sponsored by the UMass history department. Admission is free and open to the public.

UMASS – Corey Flintoff of National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" will be this year's Kathryn and Paul Williamson Fund lecturer at UMass. His talk, "Questioning in Genghisland: an NPR Reporter in Mongolia," is based on an extended residence in that country, where he witnessed first-hand the political, economical and social changes brought about by the collapse of the Soviet Union. The lecture will take place at 4:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

AMHERST COLLEGE –The Center for Creative Writing Reading Series will be held at 5 p.m. today in the Babbott Room, Octagon. Reading by novelist Brian Kiteley, professor of English at the University of Denver. Author of "Still Life With Insects: I Know Many Songs, But I Cannot Sing: Each Sentence Educates the Next" and currently completing "The River Gods," a historical novel about Northampton, Mass. Refreshments will follow. Admission is free. The event is co-sponsored by the English Department. For more information call 542-8200.

SMITH COLLEGE –Sahaja Yoga will take place in the Bodman Lounge in the Helen Hills Chapel from 7-8:30 p.m. Newcomers welcome. The event is free.

UMASS –The Visiting Writers Series: Reading with Commentary will be held at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. The speaker will be Charles Simic. The event is sponsored by the UMass Department of English. Admission is free. For more information call 545-2575.

FRIDAY MARCH 7

SMITH COLLEGE –A lecture entitled 'Weapons of Mass Destruction: US War and Sanctions on Iraqi Women and Families' will be held in the Neilson Library Browsing Room at 7:30 p.m. A joint presentation by Vivian Stromberg, executive director of MADRE, and Dr. Fathieh Saudi, Jordanian pediatrician. MADRE is an international women's human rights organization working in partnership with women's community-based groups in conflict areas worldwide to address issues of justice, violence, health, education and economic development. Admission is free.

SMITH COLLEGE –The LBTA Annual Drag Ball will be held in the Davis Center Ballroom at 9 p.m. Admission is $3

SATURDAY MARCH 8

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A lecture entitled "Women and the War on Terror" will be held in the Hooker Auditorium in Clapp Hall at 2 p.m. Admission is free.

SUNDAY MARCH 9

AMHERST COLLEGE –The 'All About the Sixties Film Series' will take place at 7 p.m. in the Stirn Auditorium. This documentary includes footage shot in the late 1960s of the great black pianist and composer, Thelonious Monk. Admission is free. The event is sponsored by the Mead Art Museum. For more information call 542-2335.

UMASS–A concert entitled "Infinity Brass -Treasures Old and New" will be held in the Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the public and $4 for students.

MONDAY MARCH 10

UMASS –An exhibition entitled "Annual Midway Show: Panayot Panayotov, Jennifer Simms, Anna Arthur, and Cynthia Porrier" will be held in the Student Union Art Gallery. A variety of media featured. Reception: March 11. Open to the public. Refreshments served. Show: March 10-14. Gallery Hours: Mon-Thu 10 a.m.-5 p.m., Fri 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Admission is free. For more information call 545-0792.

UMASS –An Entomology seminar: Acoustic Communication in Butterflies and Caterpillars: Sensory Innovation in the Lepidoptera will be held in the Alexander Conference Room in Fernald Hall at 3:30 p.m. The speaker is Jayne Yack of Carleton University. Refreshments will be served at 3:15 pm in the 2nd floor Bug Collection hallway. Admission is free.

MOUNT HOLYOKE –As part of the Media and Society Lecture Series a lecture will be given entitled 'On Television, and the Death of News (And Why I am not in Mourning)' by Ron Jacobs, Assistant Professor of Sociology at the State University of New York at Albany. The event will take place in the Warbeke Room in Pratt Hall at 4:30 p.m. Admission is free with a reception to follow the event. The event is sponsored by the Mellon Foundation and the Sociology and Anthropology Departments.

TUESDAY MARCH 11

UMASS –The MIAA Boys & Girls High School Basketball State Semi-Finals will be held in the Mullins Center at 4:30 p.m., 6:15 p.m., and 8 p.m. Admission is $9, $7 for students and seniors.

MOUNT HOLYOKE –A Japanese Tea Ceremony will be held in the Eliot House at 7:30 p.m. Reservation is needed. Sign up is at the entrance to Eliot House or email nyamashi@mtholyoke.edu. Admission is free.

SMITH COLLEGE –A lecture entitled 'Native Eyes-Indigenous Women's Film' will be held in the Neilson Library Browsing Room at 4:30 p.m. The event is presented by Shelly Niro and Nora Naranjo-Morse. Internationally recognized as highly skilled filmmakers at the height of their craft, each of these women has developed a significant body of works in film after successfully pursuing extensive explorations in other artistic mediums, including painting, poetry, sculpture, and photography. Both have won awards for their work.

UMASS –The 21st Annual Jazz Showcase "Horn Band Mania" will be held at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. For tickets call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 1-800-999-UMAS. Tickets are $10 for the public and $5 for students.

SMITH COLLEGE –A lecture entitled 'Social and Economic Stabilization in Russia: Myth or Reality?' will be held at 8 p.m. in the Neilson Library Browsing Room. The speaker will be Dr. Alexander Buzgalin, Professor of economics at Moscow State University. He has served as a consultant for various Russian organizations including the Russian State Duma (Parliament). He participated in the recent World Social Forum on global economic justice in Porto Alegre, Brazil. Admission is free.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE –A lecture entitled "Writing Childhood: literacy lessons and children's diaries in the 19th century U.S." will be held at 4 p.m. in the East Lecture Hall in Franklin Patterson Hall. Speaker Karen Sánchez-Eppler, Professor of American Studies and English at Amherst College will talk about 19th century children's diaries in the United States. Admission is free and open to the public.

Compiled by Courtney Charles

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Feroltto Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist

Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2003

WRITE FOR NEWS!

McMurphy's
welcomes
Live Music
THE GUITAR DUDES
every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

The Red Lion Inn
Food & Lodging since c.1773
Stockbridge, Massachusetts 01262
www.redlioninn.com
HRTA STUDENTS
Looking for an exciting and rewarding opportunity?
Stop by The Red Lion Inn booth at the HRTA Career Day on Wednesday, March 5, 2003 in the Campus Center and meet with an HRTA alumna from the Inn.
We offer unique and customized hospitality internships in a historic atmosphere offering gracious lodging complemented by a full service dining room serving contemporary regional cuisine.
Gain "real life" experience with an internship in:
Culinary • Lodging • Food & Beverage
Discover what The Red Lion Inn can offer you!
If you miss us on Career Day, please feel free to contact Eva Sheridan at (413) 298-1677 or recruitment@redlioninn.com for further information.
www.redlioninn.com

Daisy's
Serving Breakfast, Lunch & Dinner

Open For Breakfast Wednesday thru Monday
Open For Dinner Wednesday thru Saturday
Monday 7-2
Tuesday Closed
Wednesday 7-2 & 5-8
Thursday 7-2 & 5-8
Friday 7-2 & 5-9
Saturday 8-2 & 5-9
Sunday 8-3
Eggs, toast and homefries $3.50!
1185 North Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA Close To UMASS
549-4085

United States gaining ground in war on terrorism

By CURT ANDERSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) - New terrorism indictments and a key al-Qaida capture show the United States gaining ground in the global war on terrorism, three top Bush administration officials told Congress on Tuesday.

Facing a Senate Judiciary Committee that includes prominent administration critics, Attorney General John Ashcroft, Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge and FBI Director Robert Mueller highlighted recent successes and stressed prevention efforts.

Lawmakers applauded the victories – but many questioned the government's tactics and the need to expand anti-terrorism laws that already raise constitutional questions.

Ashcroft said the weekend capture in Pakistan of al-Qaida operations chief Khalid Shaikh Mohammed was "a severe blow" that could "destabilize their terrorist network worldwide" by providing a trove of intelligence that will prevent new attacks.

He also announced that a Yemeni cleric and an assistant were charged in New York with helping finance al-Qaida. The cleric, Sheikh Mohammed Ali Hasan Al-Moayad, personally handed Osama bin Laden $20 million to finance the terrorist group, Ashcroft said.

To date, more than 200 criminal terrorism charges have been brought since the Sept. 11, 2001 terror attacks, Ashcroft said, with 108 convictions or guilty pleas. FBI Director Robert Mueller added that "well in excess of 100" terrorism plots have been thwarted worldwide.

The recent successes muted growing criticism on Capitol Hill about the slow progress of the war on terrorism. The concerns reached a high point last month when a new bin Laden audiotape surfaced and the nation was put on high alert for a possibly imminent terrorist attack.

The Judiciary Committee's senior Democrat, Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy, noted that the hearing came at "an auspicious time" because of the arrest of Mohammed, described as the mastermind of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Added Sen. Saxby Chambliss, R-Ga.: "This is the kind of success that makes us all feel better."

Ashcroft said some of the successes were the result of anti-terrorism laws passed by Congress soon after Sept. 11 that expanded the powers of the Justice Department and FBI to spy on terror suspects and use intelligence information to bring criminal cases.

Some lawmakers say the current powers threaten civil liberties and have sharply criticized a leaked Justice Department draft proposal to augment the law. They are especially upset since there has been no consultation with Congress about possible changes.

Leahy accused an unidentified Ashcroft aide of lying to his staff about whether such a bill was in the works. "I think it shows a secretive process in developing this," Leahy said.

Ashcroft denied any deception and said no decisions have been made on whether to propose changes to the anti-terror laws. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., urged the attorney general to keep Congress in the loop in developing legislation that raises so many constitutional questions.

"I'm keenly aware that the administration cannot pass legislation," said Ashcroft, formerly a U.S. senator from Missouri. "Only members of Congress can pass legislation. It would be the height of absurdity for me to have a secret matter I hope to make a law without telling Congress."

Max Dashu speaks

Continued from page 1

female genital excision. The slide talk also covered Chinese marriage-resisters, African-Americans who reclaimed the women's right to drum, and the Maliseet Women who fought both the Canadian and tribal governments' negation of their Indian identity, as well as many others.

"This specific slide talk is dear to my heart," Dashu said. "It's new, so many parts of it are still in process. One of the problems with it is that it's difficult to find pictures of these women, some of the drawings I had to do myself."

Dashu has photographed over 12,000 slides and created various shows from an array of sources including history books, newspapers, ethnographic studies and even album covers. The free-lance teacher of international women's studies has presented her work at conferences, bookstores, museums, prisons, festivals and galleries throughout North America. She has also presented at Northwestern, Princeton, Stanford and scores of other colleges.

Dashu has acted as a historical consultant for a variety of projects, including Donna Deitch's film, "Woman to Woman" and the San Francisco Women's Building mural project. She is also an artist who publishes prints and note cards.

Students found the event moving and were eager to learn more about women's history. "I thought the presentation was amazing," Ashley Lucas, a sophomore Psychology major said. "It had every role model we never learned about, there is so much about women's history we often don't get to hear about."

The host of the event, the Everywoman's center, a campus-based woman's center, has celebrated International Women's Day for thirty years, each year presenting a different event for the UMass student body and the surrounding community. Campus Activities also sponsored the event.

"This year we wanted to do something different, we have been doing music for a while, we wanted to communicate in a different way," Sandy Mandel, associate director of the center, said. "The presentation is more visual, it's very unique and very compelling, and it provides information that you don't normally get to see."

The Everywoman's center provides leadership in promoting educational access and equity for women. It currently sponsors five different programs and two projects designed to serve the UMass student body and the surrounding community. Last year in honor of International Women's Day the Everywoman's center presented a large resource fair, including female acapella groups, dance troops, massages and button making.

For more information on the Suppressed History Slide Series visit www.suppressedhistories.net.

For additional information on the Everywoman's center contact the center at 545-0883.

News meeting today at 5 for all interested and current writers

Writing Coach
Published author with 25 years' experience in meeting deadlines can help you break through writing barriers and complete important projects on time. Call 413-467-9470 or email Jeanne@yourghostwriter.com

Start your career off with a spark.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2003
At Ernst & Young, we not only offer you stimulating opportunities, we value what you, and only you, can bring to our team. We give you the latest technology, information and resources so you can feel empowered to succeed and grow. Charge up.
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Debate over separation of church and state continues

Only five days left to recite the Pledge of Allegiance. After a June 2000 ruling by the 9th District Circuit Court of Appeals, the court has stopped hearing cases on their ban of the Pledge of Allegiance in schools.

The court's move is viewed as a push to bring the case before the U.S. Supreme Court. Vikram Amar, a professor of law at the University of California's Hastings College of Law in San Francisco said:

"I construe that as a message the 9th Circuit is done with this case and moving it in the direction of the Supreme Court," he said.

And this will likely fall by the wayside once it has reached the highest court. The separation of Church and State, a tenet of the U.S. Constitution, will likely fail again as an argument for changing the nation's symbols.

A 99-0 show of support in the U.S. Senate contrasts the court's decision, as does President Bush's retort of "ridiculous." John Ashcroft, ever the champion of patriotic ideals, said that the justice department will support "the time-honored tradition."

This particular time-honored tradition is only 49 years old. The pledge was free of any inkling of God until 1954 when a cold-war frenzy of nationalism added the controversial phrase to stand out against a religion-free Soviet Union.

Patriotic decisions are more prevalent or at least more visible in times of national stress. Worries about the economy in 1931 led to the approval of "The Star Spangled Banner" as a national anthem. The 1954 decision to add "under God" came at a time of global saber rattling.

And now we see the same sort of religious cries. Bush's crusade against Iraq has seen the invocation of God on numerous occasions. Preserving the liberties and freedoms God has given us, good versus evil and very morally based arguments.

As a country we bring church and state closer together than separation would dictate.

As a country we use religious and faith-based phrases, symbols and callings to support national causes and aspirations. An end to church and state is not likely and not necessary.

Squabbling over this issue has gone on for years and will likely go on for years to come. It has run the gamut from local protests to Supreme Court cases but has always ended with the same result.

"Opaque" references to religion, as the Supreme Court labels such references, have been ruled less than volatile and the fact that they have been here this long means that they will probably endure the test of time and trial and stay in the national repertoire.

Information from CNN was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Ephedra: is it worth the risk?

Spring break and the summer are just around the corner. In magazines, newspapers and anywhere you look you're going to see ways to lose weight quick. Some are legitimate, and some are just plain wrong. Also, there are some that will flat out kill you.

"It's like sniffing coke and going on a jog, you just don't do it," says an employee at the John Quincy Adams residence hall wellness center about ephedra. Undoubtedly it works. The products that contain ephedra will make you lose weight drastically. However, a lot of people don't know why it works. Ephedra alone isn't all that effective or really dangerous. However, when mixed with caffeine, you get a potentially deadly concoction called Ephedrine. This is what speeds up your heart, and this is what has been responsible for 800 injuries and roughly 80 deaths. However, its deadly side effects have only been made public recently as high profile athletes are dying from it.

The most visible death occurred two years ago when Kory Stringer of the Minnesota Vikings died on the field of a heart attack. An autopsy revealed ephedrine, and we are awaiting reports on the death of Steve Belcher, a Baltimore Orioles pitcher who died recently. Reports said that ephedrine supplements were in his locker. Both these athletes tried shedding a few pounds before their respective seasons began.

The National Football League, International Olympic Committee and National Collegiate Athletic Association ban the substance. If Belcher's autopsy reveals ephedrine then commissioner Bud Selig will probably take actions to ban it in Major League Baseball. New York lawmaker John Sweeney wants the Food and Drug Administration to ban the substance for everyone to buy. So if you're looking to lose weight fast and easily with probably massive heart problems on the side, buy all the ephedra products you can before they become illegal!

Matt Elder

This article isn't dedicated to sports. I was simply saying that because high profile people like athletes are dying, it brought the matter to the attention of the rest of the world. It has effects on the central nervous system and heart. It is a stimulant that speeds up the heart and the nervous system. Think of Ephedrine as an unnatural adrenaline. Ephedrine dilates the bronchial muscles, contracts the nasal mucosa, raises the blood pressure and is a cardiac stimulant. Those are the medical terms. There are also a slew of mental side effects like depression and insomnia. So what does all this mean? Think about it like this. You take the pill and your heart automatically speeds up. Then you go run, and your heart speeds up even more. Eventually all this pressure on your heart will destroy it.

"Then you go run, and your heart speeds up even more. Eventually all this pressure on your heart will destroy it"

Like I said, Spring Break is only few weeks away and anyone going to Cancun, the Bahamas, etc are looking to shed a few pounds quick. You might turn to products like Phen-Fen, Hydroxy Cut, and Xenadrine. However, all of these contain Ephedrine. So you might be thinking if the FDA hasn't banned it already then it must not be that bad, right? I mean, look at cigarettes. You can smoke a pack a day and nothing will happen until 40 years down the road. Hell, that's so far away, it doesn't matter.

However, with these supplements you could die right on the spot, in the middle of a workout, like these athletes. How many people do you think would stop smoking if they could drop dead at 25, halfway through one?

Bottom line is you must weigh negatives and positives of taking the drug. Best positive: shed some pounds for your week vacation, and probably put the weight back on. Worst negative: death. To me it's a no-brainer. But I'm one of those people who's been going to the gym for the past three years, so I don't look for an overnight cure. Or possibly an over night death.

Matt Elder is a Collegian Columnist.

Election time madness

Dan Yagudin

The father got up and screamed, "If that's what you think, then you can cook your own food!"

A cautionary note to readers: stay away from Israeli families around election time. Many households are divided over who household members vote for, and despite the pledge of many families not to discuss politics at elections time, tempers flare, pots fly and like the mother in the family with which I was staying found out, the use of non-conventional weaponry in this battle, (in this case, withholding one's ability to cook) is not uncommon.

Growing up in Israel, I had my first political debate at the 'mature' age of eight. It was once again nearing election time and the kids in my class all got into the national spirit of debate. We were in third grade so understandably none of us really knew what the issues were. But that didn't keep the passion that each of us witnessed at home, when our parents debated politics around the dinner table, from being channeled to our debates during recess at elementary school.

"Israel's democracy is so vibrant that, next to soccer, throwing out the government is considered Israel's national sport."

The school was in a fairly rural area and consequently most of the students came from farming families. The farmers in Israel almost always support left-wing political parties, and so their kids were hard supporters of the left-wing parties, although, being third graders, most of them didn't really know why. And then there was me.

My home was one of the many politically split homes in Israel. My father was a supporter of the right, while my mother was a supporter of the left. Like my classmates, I too witnessed many political debates around the dinner table. At that young age, I modeled a lot of my behavior after my father, and so I supported (or at least, I thought I supported) the political right, as he did. Although I was one of the only 'supporters' of the right in my class, luckily for me, I wasn't the only odd one out. Israeli democracy is too vibrant for that.

Israel's democracy is so vibrant that, next to soccer, throwing out the government is considered Israel's national sport. In fifty-three years, fewer than half the Israeli governments finished their four-year term in office, before they were (very democratically) given the boot. The parliamentary democracy in Israel means that every election features over 20 parties, some of which can overthrow the government at will. The result is that many more constituencies are represented than in America's two party system. Are you a new immigrant? There are parties that specifically want to represent your interests. Are you an Arab? There are parties for you. Are you right or left wing? Religious? Secular? Farmer? Taxi driver? Israel's democracy has political parties for you, too. The power that some of these parties wield means that the ruling government must please the minority constituents (i.e., the farmers), or risk being overthrown by the parties that represents them.

The overthrow of the previous Israeli government is one example of Parliamentary Democracy at work. Unhappy with allocations within the national budget for Israeli settlements in the disputed West Bank, one of the parties decided to leave the ruling coalition and thus dissolve the government, and a new election was called.

The vibrancy of Israeli democracy is also reflected in terms of voter turnout. On average, over 80 percent of the eligible voters in Israel go to the polls (in the United States, the number is around 50 percent for presidential elections). Deep political involvement, coupled with the diversity of Israeli parties, meant that in my third grade class, besides the majority bloc of left wing supporters, the diversity of other parties that kids "supported" was vast: we had kids whose parents voted for the Palestinian parties, some that voted for the Jewish parties; we had some whose parents only voted for parties that demanded social justice, and we had a kid whose parents were (and therefore he thought he was) Marxist. None of us (including the kid himself) really knew what Marxism meant, but for being different, we thought he was really cool.

Understandably, our debates had little substance and a lot of screaming. (In this way, at least, our debate closely mirrored that of our electoral representatives in Israel's parliament) But aside from the screaming, the debates served a very important purpose; they prepared us for our civic duty of voting. Like the family I was staying with in Israel, Israelis are incredibly involved in politics. Many families pay a price for it. The scenario in my host family – where the father was cooking dinner – got into one of many political debates with his wife, and on that night refused to finish making dinner. This situation plays out in many Israeli families, especially near election time. But in the end, family ties triumph over partisan ties, and peace is restored. At least until the next election.

Information from the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance was used in this article.

Dan Yagudin is a Collegian Columnist. He is currently on exchange in Israel.

A lax Catholic comes clean

Regan McKendry

"You've got a little something on your forehead."

Today that question will be asked many times over. I'm sure, at least by those who are unaware its significance for Catholics.

It is Ash Wednesday- the start of Lent, the most holy season of the year. The next 40 days are to be followed with a sacrifice and no meat on Fridays, all leading up to Easter. I'm fully aware of the season's significance, but you won't be seeing any black marks on my brow.

I was born a Roman Catholic and raised the same way, however, I do fit the definition of a lax Catholic. I make sure to get to St. James Church on Easter and Christmas. I've also been to the Newman Center at times, in spurts. At times I try very hard to make Sunday evening mass and at others it's the last thing on my mind.

Despite my ineptitude at making it to church, I did attend a Catholic school for sixth through 12th grade, where presence in mass for holy occasions was hard to miss, since the school calendar was designed around the ceremonies. The only students who got out of mass were those who were not Catholic and had their parents' permission, though recently that policy has become less lenient.

We had mass on Ash Wednesday, All Saints Days, and most other significant holy days right in our chapel. We even had a mass on the first full day of school each year. Still, on that day in late February or early March, I never went up to receive ashes, choosing instead to abstain. It just wasn't my thing, and I'm fine with that.

Religion throughout history has served duel purposes. By definition it deals with a person's faith, whether in Jesus, Allah, or in nature. Religion has always been a social and political movement as well. Depending on the sect, there are numerous different cultural norms that are all supposed to be followed in order to lead a more virtuous and prosperous life. Hindus aren't supposed to eat beef; Jews, pork, and Mormons are supposed to abstain from caffeine and alcohol (those poor cougars at Brigham Young University). That's just the food rules, the list of proposed viewpoints goes on and on.

"I'm not making a statement that Jesus turned his body into bread but ran out of miracles when it came to his blood. Trust me."

As a Catholic I'm supposed to believe that abortion in all instances is wrong, regardless of a woman's choice (that's not quite my view). Sex is supposed to be confined within marriage (like that happens for most people anymore) and that it is to be between a man and a woman (don't get me started on that one). Does the fact that I disagree with my own religion on such issues make me a bad Catholic? So it doesn't.

Like many religions, Catholic ceremonies are filled with traditions, such as the ashes that will be spread today. A core part of the belief in Jesus lies in the fact that bread and wine are turned into his body and blood, which we infuse ourselves with to renew our faith and remind us of his sacrifice. When at mass I do receive the wafer (sometimes when having eaten less than an hour beforehand), but forgo the wine. I'm not making a statement that Jesus turned his body into bread but ran out of miracles when it came to his blood. Trust me.

Ceremonies, like social beliefs, are part of the climate of the Church itself, not the faith of the religion. Faith is a very personal thing, perhaps the most singular of all that makes who we are as a person. Religion helps to work as an organization around faith. It brings people together. But in the end, every-one's own views take on a personal interpretation. For myself, I place high credence in the existence of guardian angels and a special bond with those who have passed on. For others, angels may be an after thought, but that is their choice.

The same goes for active participation in rituals. I'll admit that I just feel a little bit better about myself and about life when I get to mass, but I'm not going to be punished for failing to attend. I'm partaking in my faith in my own ways and times and that is what matters more to me than anything. A quiet five minutes alone, talking in my head with an angel up in heaven, means more to me than if I make sure I don't have a steak sub on Fridays in March.

Today if I see people with a black spot (or what is supposed to be a cross) on their face, I'll know why it's there. I just hope my fellow Catholics don't look down on me because my forehead is bare.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Editor' or 'To the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial Column.' Letters may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Way Amherst, MA 01003

Trolley ride to heaven

Adrienne Bossi

This past Thursday was not a beautiful day in the neighborhood when childhood role model Mr. Fred Rogers passed away at the age of 74. Rogers had been ailing from stomach cancer, a disease, in itself, appallingly too aggressive to afflict such a kindred soul.

As a child, I religiously watched "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood." I suffered through the endless repetition of ads for James L. Sokolov, ITT tech, and thirty second infomercials advertising wondrous toys you had to be 18 years or older to buy. I was addicted. Other addicts may also recall the programming loop on PBS. The same episodes of each show would play hour after hour. I would watch an entire day of repeated "Mister Rogers" episodes. I was as close to being a groupie as a five-year-old can be – a PBS groupie.

The thing I loved the most about "Mister Rogers Neighborhood" was, of course, the land of make-believe. In this magical world, anything can happen and anybody can be your friend. A discussion of family values can turn into a full-fledged opera sung by a purple panda. This is a land where imagination runs free. How much better would the world be if the land of make-believe was an accurate reflection of reality? Every day is a musical. People talk out their problems and then rejoice in song and dance. Everyone has enough food, fun, family and friends. Each member of the kingdom gets along despite their striking differences from each other. Henrietta Pussycat mostly speaks in her foreign cat language. Despite this barrier, she is befriended by all and welcomed by the royal family. Daniel Tiger learned from his community how to control his instincts to bite people. Where would he be in the real world? Lady Elaine Fairchild is a mischievous show-off with a magic boomerang who just wants to be liked.

All of these characters can be labeled with negative stereotypes in today's world. Yet, in the land of make-believe they get a second chance. This diverse group of characters gets along so perfectly. Each offers something unique, important, and beautiful to the community. Are you seeing the parallels here? Through the characters in the land of make-believe, Fred pushes us to believe in ourselves and respect each other's differences. He uses this world as a conduit to express his ideals.

Sadly, most of these ideals remain a thing of make-believe. What happened to our enthusiasm? I was addicted to the show! Yet my childhood favorite became an easy target as I matured into cynical, sarcastic and angry teenager. He was so simple. It was too easy to mock to him. It was a sin. Rogers' perfection made us glaringly aware of our downfalls. Ironically, the very morals we joked about were the ones that would teach us how to deal with our insecurity. We could all use a refresher course in his lessons. However, Rogers never let the flack get to him. His poise and ability to laugh at Eddie Murphy's "Saturday Night Live" parody of his show is yet another maxim. He was so confident and good-natured. Fred remained successful in a society full of people questioning his authenticity.

Fred's easy-to-mock simplicity was his trademark. Yet, his timelessness is what really made him great. He refused to change his old-fashioned style, appearance, values, and production techniques in an expanding fast paced society. "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" was ageless. But, what does it mean when something timeless passes away? His death seems to add a new connotation to my childhood memories. These memories are like a piece of history now, a legend. They mark the end of an era.

Nothing marks the end of youth better than the death of one of your childhood icons. This is deep. Mr. Rogers didn't want us to face this. He knew how hard and complicated life would be when we understood the "persistence of time." That is why his show never altered. He was a rock in a developing, fast paced and high tech world. Fred outlasted all of the exceedingly popular network shows, with their graphics, guns and flashy lights. Tell me, where are the "Power Rangers?" The "ThunderCats?" "Ghost Writer?" They're all gone! Where is Mr. Rogers? He's still on the PBS programming loop. Mr. Rogers withstood time. His home, his clothing, the land of make-believe and his message were all unchanging. He was our stability.

Fred's death is symbolic of the end of our childhood. We shall carry the deliciously simple lessons we have learned with us, those of respect, compassion, understanding, diversity and imagination to build something greater than our teachers built. We won't let you down. You are our rock, our youth, ourselves. Rest in peace Mr. Fred Rogers, a loving husband, father and neighbor of a generation.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian Columnist.

Resurrecting common courtesy

Elizabeth Carter

It has come to my attention that recently a tragic death has occurred on this campus. It literally brings tears to my eyes to so much as think about it, and I just wanted to inform all the students out there that a funeral service is going to be held on Umass during the coming week. All are welcome to attend and I (sob, sob) regret to say it is for someone who I myself held very very dear: common courtesy.

Yes that right, common courtesy has died on this campus. Seeing as common courtesy has suffered such an untimely death it only makes sense that those of you who remain in the wake of "CC" (as I liked to call her) may feel free to kick me, punch me, push me, throw me down and bump me into on-coming traffic. I mean hey, if you can, why not, or at least that would appear to be the prevailing motto of so many of my fellow UMass scholars. It has gotten to the point where I cannot even count how many times I've been victim to this insufferable lack of manners. A prime example of our campus' blatant lack of regard for others occurred just a few days ago, while I was peacefully attempting to walk down the sidewalk to get to class. Minding my own business I jovially made my way past group after group of on-comers.

Yet I discovered a pattern forming. I found almost every person who was heading towards me would get this steely look of hardened determination in their eyes, square their shoulders and would then proceed to charge in my direction, linebacker style, practically throwing me into oncoming traffic while I was trying to walk by! The thing that really struck me about this experience was that this happened numerous times. Literally no one would move out of the way, and I had to seriously swerve to avoid being knocked down by the angry approaching masses. Apparently these pedestrians had made serious claims to the sidewalk earlier by peeing on it or something, because they sure seemed to believe they owned the whole thing.

After some in depth analysis of the situation I began to wonder if common courtesy was ill, or on her death bed. This next scenario led me to some serious worrying though, the situation for "CC" was beginning to look extremely dire. While sitting in lecture hall quietly reading my newspaper my peripheral vision was somewhat skewed making it so that I could not see the boy who was trying to get into my row. Obviously, since I'm not a human being or anything, I didn't deserve an "excuse me, mind if I get in" or anything of the sort. Rather than opt for one of these expressions this young fellow proceeded to kick (yes that's right) me in the shins and plow his way into my row. After the incident with this lovely fellow my suspicions of "CC's" condition were nearly cemented, however the literal "nail in the coffin" occurred while I was trying to treat myself to some of our campus's five star cuisine.

It all began in the DC when I was innocently reaching for a fork, when suddenly this person swoops in out of nowhere, also in search of cutlery. Yet he seemed to find it necessary to push my arm out of the way while nearly impaling a number of my fingers in his own quest for silverware. I mean hey don't worry, its not like I need my opposable thumb anyway pal! After this incident it was all over, it became clear to me that on this campus courtesy of any kind has kicked the bucket for good it should seem.

So here's my proposal, how about we make common courtesy, manners and politeness go the way of Christ, and rise from the dead. A little resurrection is most definitely in line, and for those of you who grew up in caves with wolves, here's a quick "how to" guide on getting yourself some on campus class, or at least showing some decency to your fellow man. If you're on a crowded sidewalk step aside for the poor person trying to squeeze by, if you're in lecture, don't pretend you're a deaf mute, you're not fooling anyone and if you are deaf, then sign to me. Honestly I don't care, just use some manners if you need to get in a row. In general just start incorporating the words, please, thank you, excuse me, pardon me and sorry, into your vocabulary. I know this is a state school, but your vocabulary can't be that bad, I mean, you got in. Overall a little effort never killed anyone, so why not aid the cause and attempt to pump some life back into common courtesy.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian Columnist.

The truth about Phish fans

Nick Ames

In case you hadn't noticed, Phish is back! After a two-year hiatus, the boys have returned in unbelievable form. After a brief New Year's run, which included an epic return to Madison Square Garden on New Year's Eve, followed by a three-night run at one of Phish's favorite venues, the Hampton Coliseum in Virginia, the foursome launched a February tour to the delight of fans across the nation. Being a pretty avid enthusiast of not only the music, but also the whole scene, I managed to secure three tickets to three separate concerts. After catching the band for both nights in Las Vegas early in the tour, followed by a miracle ticket to their show at the Nassau Coliseum on Long Island, I was absolutely stunned.

There a several reasons why you should drop everything and try and see this band live. First of all, and this a quote from the security briefing given to each arena before a Phish concert, "The typical Phish audience does not mosh or body surf. They will, however, dance and twirl in any open area made available to them. This includes handicapped seating sections, balcony ramps, lobby areas and the entire concourse. They will attempt to dance in any aisles that are not being patrolled by an usher or a member of the event staff..." This is absolutely true. There is no violent mosh pit, no stampeding, there are only thousands of people dancing in their own unique way everywhere. This is no high school dance, my friends; this is no place to be embarrassed. Sure, a bunch of funny looking trustafarians and Heady McHeads hopping around on one foot is a sight to behold, but this is no place for finger pointing and ridicule, these concerts are a special time to just let it all go and be swept away in the heady brew of sweat, patchouli, and love.

Second of all, and yes this is true, you don't have to be absolutely wasted to see these guys; sure the crowd is young, the pot potent and the liquor plentiful, but the music actually sounds good when you're sober too, and while a few hits sure does make those lights look really fun and you could swear Trey was playing just for you, even the straightedge and recovering NA and AA alumni keep coming back to shows. If you are a fan of all things sketch and plentiful, or just plain like good food, there is no place like Shakedown Street which emerges in a central area of the arena's parking lot put, an impromptu gathering of small tents, grills, blankets and tables full of wares ranging from the mystical to the sartorial, from crystals to word play t-shirts incorporating Phish songs into pop culture and brand name wordplay. In addition, the cooking is healthy and delicious. Many fans support themselves on tour by concocting delicious dishes such as pasta with organic basil and tomatoes, quesadillas bursting with fresh vegetables, scrambled eggs with oregano and Muenster cheese and for those less adventurous, grilled cheese sandwiches can be found at every turn.

Also, quite frankly, Phish does not just appeal to college aged white kids. I bought one of my tickets from a very influential Washington D.C. lawyer who would talk to me on his office phone crouching underneath his desk and whispering his address and expressing his constant regret at being unable to attend. I also would like to point out that I stood next to an African American woman in line to see the Vegas show who was clasping her ticket so tight and had that faraway look in her eye you would think she was waiting her first ride on Space Mountain.

All this leads me back to the band and the music. Just from looking at the foursome you can see that they are no typical rock band. From Trey's octagonal specs and Fishman's favorite mumnsu to Mike's collared shirts and back to Paige's receding hairline, these guys are no prima donnas looking for some Carson Daly love. Sure, they're millionaires many times over, but you'll find none of them peeing on other people or buying mansions in the Keys. These are simple men who like simple things like Ben and Jerry's ice cream, or their wives, and this is reflected in their music. It is full of the freedom and exuberance that can only come from such a pure and unassuming source. These men are artists having a blast doing what they do best, and because they love playing music for hours in front of thousands of people with such reckless abandon and unfettered emotion they, in turn, engender a strong and loyal following willing to wait huddled in the cold of a Worcester parking lot, one finger diligently pointed toward the sky, with the unwavering hope that someone will perform a miracle and grant them access to the best show on earth.

Nick Antes is a Collegian Columnist.

Jinxing the athletic department

Jesse Greenspan

Every winter, a head coach either resigns or is fired by the athletic department at UMass. On the outside, these coaches have virtually nothing in common – except for the fact I covered all three sports for The Collegian.

When I entered UMass as a freshman in 1999, I came down to The Collegian and drew the ski team assignment. Once a week, I would interview head coach Bill MacConnell, who was entering his 39th year at the helm of the team.

He was also about a 100-years-old and completely deaf. Our conversations usually went like this:

Me: "Hey coach. I'm Jesse Greenspan from the Daily Collegian and I was wondering if I could just ask you a few questions about skiing, or whatever it is you do?"

MacConnell: "What you say your name was again?"

Me: "Greenspan. G-R-E-E-N-S-P-A-N."

MacConnell: "Oh, Hickman. I think I've read your articles before."

Me: "No. It's Greenspan.

MacConnell: "Gregory, you said?"

Me: "Nevermind," I would scream. "Just tell me something about skiing – anything!

I felt like Homer Simpson talking to Mr. Burns.

The next week we would have the exact same conversation, and it went on like that until the end of the year. He was a nice enough guy, but never did correctly decipher a single word I said.

Surprisingly, MacConnell lasted another year as the head coach, but at the end of the 2000-01 season, he gracefully stepped down and allowed a younger coach with functioning ears to step in.

The next winter, I moved up in the world and covered the men's basketball team. With James "Bruiser" Flint at the helm, the team sputtered to a 2-9 start, but at least it was a joy watching such all-stars as Jonathan DePina, Willie Jenkins and Ronell Blizzard grace the Mullins Center with their presence.

"I was now two-for-two, having covered two winter sports with the coach leaving both times."

However, the team actually turned it around by the end of the year, finished 15-15 and would have qualified for the NCAAs if it had beaten Temple in the finals of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Still, this was not enough for the athletic department, and all signs pointed to Bruiser losing his job anyway. I thought he deserved at least one more year, considering how well the second half of the season went, so I wrote a long editorial describing my sincere belief that he should not be fired.

A lot of good that did. Before he could even return from the A-10 tournament and three days after my article came out, the athletic department forced Flint to resign. I was now two-for-two, having covered two winter sports with the coach leaving both times.

For my junior year, I covered the women's basketball team under head coach Joanie O'Brien. True to form, the squad got off to an atrocious start. After beginning the year 1-9, the Mullins Center was so empty during games that I was afraid to say anything bad about any of the players, lest they actually hear me.

Nonetheless, just like the men's team did the year before, the Minutewomen turned it around by the end of the season, finished 12-18 and made the semifinals of the A-10 tournament. With seven seniors coming back, it looked like there was hope on the horizon.

My beat partner and current sports editor Jim Pignatiello even planned an article on why O'Brien should be given at least one more year to turn things around. Unfortunately, he never got a chance to finish it. Not more than a few days after the end of the season, the athletic department announced it would not renew O'Brien's contract, making me three-for-three in coach firings.

Rather than test my luck for a fourth time, I decided to give the coaches a break this year and not cover a winter sport. There's still three more weeks of winter, though, and if any UMass coaches make me upset before the outset of spring, I will be out there with my pencil and notebook, jinxing them for years to come.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the Editor:

ONE TRUTH AD ONLY GIVES ONE SIDE

To the Editor:

"There are two sides to every story, but only one truth." The story? It seems a certain Palestinian made himself a suicide bomber on March 27 of the past year. On Israel's side of the fence, carnage; on the Palestinian side, patriot for the bomber's family.

Is this all? Hardly. Under the pretense of giving the reader two sides to the story, the One Truth Foundation's ad has given us only one perspective – Israel's. What then is the purpose of this ad? Surely not to bring anyone any closer to the truth. It is nothing more than thinly veiled propaganda.

This is not the sort of thing done to further our understanding of a deeply complex and deep-rooted conflict. There are, in fact, two sides to this story, but to pretend that the issue can be set in black and white (which the ad literally does) is to do a disservice to those who are trying to sift through the mire of untruth that presently exists. In addition to mentioning the financial rewards to the bomber's family, why not call attention to Israel's many incursions and its vengeful program of destruction and murder? One act of "terrorism" is met with another. There are many kinds of lies, but those of omission are the most dangerous.

Upon visiting the web site, things become clearer. A passage from campustruth.org's mission statement bears quoting: "American college students are the newest targets of the Arab propaganda machine's disinformation campaign. Our response is this initiative, which is designed to spur students to think through the issues and see the facts in their true context."

It is obvious to anyone with eyes that there are no "issues" presented here. Facts? Perhaps. Context? None. And so this "one truth foundation" is not the least concerned with truth after all. Clear evidence is the ad's paltry array of sources; we get the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Time, and Fox News. These sources speak for themselves. Clearly the folks at the "One Truth Foundation" are not interested in liberating hapless college students from propagandists. They are merely foisting their agenda upon us, either to reinforce the views of those already hardened in their support of Israel's policies or to garner new initiates for the cause. Those of us who will not be swayed in our pursuit of truth must speak up. We are not impressed.

Stephen Post
UMass student

PRESIDENT BUSH SHOULD DEBATE WITH HUSSEIN

To The Editor:

I'm writing in regards to Saddam Hussein's plea of

Furthermore, in addition to gaining domestic support, foreign support will rise as well. A debate would be highly respectable, especially when the world too is reluctant to go to war and looking for a stronger reason. As

Bush shows his evidence of Mr. Hussein's lying, which is the basis of the war, and Mr. Hussein's failure to answer will certainly acquire the world's support and a U.N. Resolution for war in no time.

Next, apart from public opinion, how revolutionary would it be for the leaders of two countries about to go to war to debate each other on a public forum? For the first time, two enemies will have a civil debate on the merits of the war before it happens. Imagine the impact on history this can have.

It could be influential on so many different levels. Imagine a century into the future; two countries about to go to war debate, citing the first time such a thing had ever happened. They would point to the United State's precedent of accepting Iraq's appeal for a debate, and the important example of civility between enemies before the brutality of war set in.

If Mr. Bush were to debate Mr. Hussein, the war would look that much more justified after Bush's win. In addition, the precedent of such respect will certainly be repeated, it could become a stigma to not debate before going to war.

Richard Harris
UMass student

www dot dailycollegian dot com
www dot dailycollegian dot com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

It's not easy being an Osbourne

I just want to warn everyone right now.

If you don't have a Kleenex beside you as you're reading this, you better get a whole box full. I'm about to inform you on the hardships of what it's like to be the daughter of the one of rock 'n' roll's richest living legends, Ozzy Osbourne.

Kelly Osbourne, 18, has it tough — let me tell you. As I read an interview with her in March's issue of Spin magazine, not only did I get mad about how this rock offspring has everything handed to her on a silver platter (including a record label and a hit single), but I also realized how little this girl appreciates having rock in her blood and a camera in her face.

Yeah, so it really helps to have Ozzy Osbourne as your daddy and a reality show that films the life of you and your ultra rock-and-goth family (which also turned out to be the biggest hit show in MTV's history). Right. I admit that it must get a little annoying having cameras on you around the clock for everyone to see. But guess what — you and your family are getting paid millions of dollars for it! Therefore, shut up and stop complaining, Kelly!

Now, if your dad was the Prince of Darkness and you felt like becoming famous one day, what would you do? If you're Kelly, all you have to do is say the word, and before you know it, Epic Records is practically on their knees with their hands folded, begging her to sign a contract. Kelly's debut album, appropriately titled "Shut Up," was released on Nov. 26 of last year. Her first hit single, which was a Madonna cover of "Papa Don't Preach," infested the airwaves in a heartbeat.

So Sarah Lewitinn of Spin magazine interviewed Kelly and asked her a few famous members of her family thought of her debut album, she calmly responded, "Jack hasn't heard it. I think he's too busy jacking himself off," and that her older sister, Aimee, hasn't even heard the single. "I couldn't care less of what she thinks of it."

Wonderful, Kelly! You just won my heart and affection.

The fact added that she only cares about Daddy Ozzy thinks of it. What about her mother, Sharon? Isn't she the one who puts up with all Ozzy's ear-piercing screams and those crazy, bratty temper tantrums on a daily basis on MTV?

I don't care what anyone else thinks — Ozzy thinks of it? I mean, I'm the rock God in the family who is the reason why Kelly even had the talent to show off her not-so-hot singing voice.

Rockin' Out

Samara Marblestone

Goo Goo over Dolls and Jovi

"Despite turning 41 last Sunday, Jon Bon Jovi can command the attention of 12,000 people like no other, and many band frontmen of today could learn a thing or two from him."

By Lizzy Nielsen
Collegian Staff

LATHAM, N.Y. — It's virtually impossible to leave a Bon Jovi concert without singing more.

During its "One Wild Night" tour Bon Jovi left notorious power ballad "Always" off the set list. The time around it was "Bed of Roses" and "Thank You for Loving Me."

Did it take away from the performance? Not at all.

Although advertised as co-headliners, The Goo Goo Dolls played for only 45 minutes. It was 45 minutes well spent as John Rzeznik, Robby Takac and company stuck to a set of all their hits off "Dizzy Up the Girl" and their latest release "Gutterflower." Judging by the average age of the audience members and the feathered 1980s hair cuts most people weren't using as the time to see their Rzeznik obviously took notice of this by

Bon Jovi and The GooGoo Dolls
Pepsi Arena
Albany, N.Y.
March 3

the fact that the packed house had only a few empty seats at 7:45, 15 minutes past the advertised start time. "Hey, all you people out in the hallways, you better get in here," Rzeznik said. "Everyone's naked from the waist down."

The Goo Goo Dolls played every major hit, and closed with a relatively emotionless rendition of its single with the greatest amount of airplay, "Iris." "Iris" traditionally begins with the hauntingly beautiful "Acoustic #3," but for some reason — perhaps time constraints — it was not included this time around. Rzeznik and company appeared like perhaps they weren't particularly thrilled about not being treated like a headlining band, as they made no mention of Bon Jovi during their entire set.

After a 20 minute break, Bon Jovi opened with the title track from their latest release, "Bounce." Regardless of the 30-something average age of the crowd, they were jumping around like the teenagers they were in the '80s. Despite 10 albums dating back to days when most of us were still in diapers, Jon and Richie Sambora can still command the attention of an arena better than most artists out there today.

Highlights of the evening included the bar anthem "Livin' on a Prayer," "Wanted Dead or Alive," and finally the power ballad "I'll be There for You" with Sambora briefly taking over lead vocals. Sambora's vocals proved he's not just a talented guitarist, but can hold his own against Jon on lead vocal. Perhaps this is something that fans would like to hear more from in the future.

Probably the most moving moment of the night was the tribute to keyboardist David Bryan's father, who had passed away the night before. "Before the record deal, before we had anything, he was there. When our drum equipment got stolen, he made sure we had some. When we had no beer, he made sure we had some," Bon Jovi said. They followed up by performing the rarely seen live number, "Runaway."

Continued on page 7

Edwards sparks crowd with electric tunes

By Chris Flouton-Barnes
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — After a fortnight spent dodging snowstorms with varying degrees of success, Kathleen Edwards breezed into town for a high-energy show at the Iron Horse. Touring in support of her debut album "Failer," Edwards treated the capacity crowd with a full, if brimming set of electric and acoustic tunes.

Back in town as a headliner after a well-received opening set last month, Edwards took control of the room immediately, kick-starting the night with "One More Song the Radio Won't Like." Countering the opening salvo was the more subdued "Hockey Skates," its lines about consequence and defiance perfectly capturing the feel of two lives diverging.

The wry pout of "Westby" swung the balance back towards full throttle with its semi-seedy tale of an underage motel romp. Edwards then unveiled a new song, a textbook example of how to build a rock song out of three chords and a prolonged crescendo. Kevin McGaughey's methodic bass provided the foundation for Colin Cripps to drape a shaky guitar solo over his own looped accompaniment.

While her band took a short break, Edwards remained on stage for three solo acoustic numbers. Though all alone in the glare of the spotlight, she gained the upper hand with acerbic witticisms and slightly edgy banter with the rather vocal crowd. It's unusual to see such a green act trade barbs with a seasoned crowd and possess the composure and confidence to keep the positive atmosphere intact. Edwards entertained the room with self-deprecating and ironic anecdotes about everything from pick-up hockey to fans' Southern restaurants.

Edwards began "National Steel" alone but was rejoined by her band in time for the first chorus. The high harmonies contributed by lead guitarist Colin Cripps provided the finishing touch to this gentle lament. The presence of Cripps in the touring outfit was a genuine treat, as the ex-Crash Vegas axeman bolstered Edwards' music with his chiming multi-layered attack and several transcendent solos. The band turned "Hellevue" into a raucous jam with Cripps' sonic palette evoking the sound of U2's David Evans.

Edwards' live version of "The Lone Wolf" was heavier than her studio take, and the atmospheric swell of "Mercury" featured a well-timed entrance from the band. The drive-time fans perked up for the catchy radio single "Six O'clock News" before the set closed with dual squalling guitars and Joel Anderson's pounding drums on "Maria." Edwards returned for a two-song encore and ended the night with a clever and smartly executed reworking of AC/DC's "Moneytalks," a fun finale to a well wrought set.

Jesse Malin opened the show with several tunes from his Artemis Records release "The Fine Art of Self Destruction." The punk rocker turned alt-troubadour showed a revealing introspection on numbers like "Solitaire" and "Almost Grown," but lacked the full command and complete musical presentation he's capable of with out his band there to back him.

Kathleen Edwards
Iron Horse
Feb 26

Kathleen Edwards excited crowds with self-deprecating and ironic anecdotes.

Free eclectic entertainment

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

World music artist Pan Morigan, along with spoken words artists Janet Aalfs, Andrea Hairston and Lenelle Moise, will be performing a free show in Northampton.

The evening promises to offer a mix of themes from Ms. Morigan's music inspired by classical Irish folk music, to poetry combined with martial arts by Ms. Aalfs, Andrea Hairston will be reading some of her unique anti-war work.

Born in Oklahoma, raised in the Midwest and now living in the Northeast, singer Pan Morigan has great affection for the land of her birth, and she speaks of it in the glowing narrative of a songwriter.

In an interview with greenlinnet.com Ms. Morigan said, "I miss the vast skies, rough winds, storms and lakes of the North American Midwest where I grew up. I miss the loud, friendly, easy-going ways of the people there. I even miss the bitter cold winters with snow piled to the rooftops and trees covered with glittering, magical icicles."

Perhaps because she knows so well the longing for a place you have left behind, it was natural for her to want to create an album like her debut, "Castles of Gold," an account in spoken word and song of the Irish immigration experience.

Morigan will be performing some work from her upcoming CD "Fire Moon and Other Mysteries," as well as some of her previous work off of "Castles of Gold." Her musical influences range from classical Greek to Irish to jazz, and many other cultures and musical forms. The style in which she plays is truly one of a kind, it contains hints of culturally specific sound that she then unites with world music and her own unique musical style.

On the 7th, Morigan will also be holding "Scoring the Action: Composing Music For Theater," a lecture and workshop with guest Beth Cohen. The lecture will be held in the Green Room of the Theater Building at Smith College. It is open to the public and especially to all up and coming theatrical musicians who would like some pointers from someone who has already been there. Morigan and Ms. Cohen will discuss the process they use when working to create scores for music and theater productions.

The show will be at the Helen Hills on Elm Street on March 8, at 8 p.m.

Information from the web site greenlinnet.com was used in this story.

Entertainment Briefs

Director of Giuliani film says he wanted to show "pain" of Sept. 11

NEW YORK (AP) – The director of an upcoming movie about former Mayor Rudolph Giuliani is defending his decision to include graphic news footage of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

"People said, 'You cannot show that,' and I got really angry," Robert Dornhelm told the Daily News in Monday editions. "It is the same hypocrisy of all the meat-eaters in this country who don't want to see what goes on in the butcher's shop. I wanted to show it in order to show the pain that this [terrorist] action has caused."

"Rudy: The Rudy Giuliani Story," is scheduled to air March 30 on the USA Network.

James Woods stars as the Brooklyn-born former mayor and Penelope Ann Miller plays ex-wife Donna Hanover in the film, which intersperses flashbacks from Giuliani's childhood and political career with his performance on Sept. 11, 2001.

Giuliani's bout with prostate cancer is included prominently in the film, as is his relationship with fiance Judith Nathan.

The film, based on a book by Village Voice reporter Wayne Barrett, was made without Giuliani's permission.

"We have nothing to do with this movie, we haven't seen this movie and therefore have nothing to say about it," Giuliani spokeswoman Sunny Mindel told the Daily News.

Compilation of Bob Hope's best jokes will be published this spring

NEW YORK (AP) – A compilation of Bob Hope's best jokes will be published this spring in conjunction with the comedian's 100th birthday.

"Bob Hope: My Life in Jokes" is being edited by his daughter, Linda Hope, who also will contribute an introduction.

"Nice to know my jokes are still working ..." Bob Hope said in a recent statement issued by his publisher, Hyperion.

Hope, whose show business career has included everything from vaudeville to television specials, turns 100 on May 29.

American Dance Music Awards to be presented March 19 in Miami

NEW YORK (AP) – Jennifer Lopez, Justin Timberlake and Kylie Minogue are among the nominees for the second annual American Dance Music Awards.

The awards, to be presented March 19 in Miami, will be hosted by actresses Juliette Lewis and Roselyn Sanchez. The publishers of DanceStar magazine sponsor the awards; fans determine the winners by voting online at dancestar.com.

Lopez, Timberlake and Madonna are nominated for best chart act, along with Angie Stone and Mariah Carey. The award honors mainstream stars who produced dance music.

Dirty Vegas' "Days Go By," Minogue's "Can't Get You Out of My Head" and Daniel Bedingfield's "Gotta Get Thru This" are among the songs nominated for record of the year.

There's even a category for "Best Use of Music in a Commercial." Among the nominees are Dirty Vegas' "Days Go By," which was used in a Mitsubishi ad, and Basement Jaxx's "Where's Your Head At," which was the background music for Pringles.

-Associated Press

Old age doesn't slow Bon Jovi dedicating it to Bryan's father.

Bon Jovi also opted to go with some pretty intense lighting for the "Bounce" tour. In the past, shows basically just consisted of the band on stage with some flashes of lights here and there. This time around, Bon Jovi opted to take some chances with the lighting and set, as they had three huge satellite dishes acting as video screens and lots of laser-beam lighting adding to their show. The lighting was a bit overpowering and maybe a bit out of place at times, but didn't take away too much from the show or the powerful performance.

The band concluded the performance with two encores, including "Always," and the anti-love anthem "Bad Medicine." The crowd never stopped wanting more, as the end of the night included a rousing rendition of the Tears for Fears anthem, "Shout." This isn't uncommon at a Bon Jovi show, as they are known to end their shows with oldies favorites like "Shout" or "Twist and Shout," depending on the night.

Despite turning 41 last Sunday, Jon Bon Jovi can command the attention of 12,000 people like no other, and many band frontmen of today could learn a thing or two from him. This was apparent on Monday night in the sub zero tundra of Albany, New York. There was not a second of the entire night that all eyes were not on Jon, and that's the way he likes it. Bon Jovi proved once again that age is relative, and that it has no bearing on a band's ability to rock an arena almost 20 years after their first record release. Best part is, they show no signs of stopping.

Poetry's place in the peace movement

By Kate Billman-Golemme
Collegian Correspondent

The newly revived anti-war movement is speaking out, and not only in prose. In addition to rallies and panel discussions, slam poetry is growing, in the Pioneer Valley and internationally, as a medium for political protest and expression.

Historically the lines dividing art and politics have been blurry, and some would argue non-existent. The early abolition of the African drum, Picasso's "Guernica" and most recently anti-war statements at the Grammy Awards, all exemplify their unity.

Recently in the news was the cancellation of the White House's symposium "Poetry and the American Voice" which was to feature the works of Emily Dickinson, Langston Hughes and Walt Whitman. The event was cancelled by Laura Bush after learning that one of the invited poets, Sam Hamill, urged fellow poets to protest the looming war with Iraq along with their presentations.

"It came to the attention of the First Lady's Office that some invited guests want to turn what is intended to be a literary event into a political forum," a White House statement said. "While Mrs. Bush understands the right of all Americans to express their political views, this event was designed to celebrate poetry."

A group called Poets for Peace, part of the United Poets Coalition, responded to Mrs. Bush by inviting her to poetry readings across the country on February 12. In the letter to Mrs. Bush, the United Poets Coalition stated, "This is not the voice of 'Political Poetry' but simply the voices of Americans who are expressing their concerns and hopes, fears and passions as we are able."

Poet laureate Stanley Kunitz's response was less subdued: "I think there was a general feeling that the current administration is not really a friend of the poetic community and that its program of attacking Iraq is contrary to the humanitarian position that is at the center of the poetic impulse."

The poetic impulse is coming to campus this Wednesday in a series of events organized around the national student anti-war walkout and "Books Not Bombs" initiative. The rally scheduled to take off at noon will feature a variety of speakers including renowned slam poet Magdalena Gomez. One of the day's panels and discussions, "Poets Slam Against War" will take place from 2:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. in Herter 301. Among others, UMass Alumna Bushra Mohammad, and senior Abe Henderson will read original pieces. Henderson, a BDIC major involved in New World Theatre, will look at how religion, music and values relate to the media in a poem titled, "Jesus and Applepie." Anyone is welcome to read poetry, original or otherwise, at the event.

Information for this article was taken from www.unitedpoets.org

Kelly Osbourne stars in 'Rockin' Out'

Continued from page 6

Kelly Osbourne has everything and yet she still finds something to moan about.

Let me just add one more thing. If my father was the personification of rock 'n' roll, much like Ozzy is, who knows how I would have turned out. Would I be as bratty as Kelly? I sure as hell would hope not. I guess that if you mix money, power, fame and rock 'n' roll, the unfortunate offspring would be a bitchy daughter who is too lazy and cranky, and complains every time she is invited to party in the Hamptons with countless celebrities.

So, whenever you think that life is too tough, just be happy that you aren't Kelly Osbourne, daughter of a rock 'n' roll legend. I know that's what she would want.

Aren't you happy that you have your Kleenex right by you now?

You can thank me later.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian Columnist.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 - Thursday 3/6/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
SHAZAM 2 THE BRAVE (PG) 1:10 4:20 7:15 10:20*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25*
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00*
DARK BLUE (R) 1:40 4:30 7:50 10:30* (*=NO SHOWS Sun 3/2- Sneak Preview of Agent Cody Banks (PG-) 3:00pm
BARBERSHOP (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 4:05 6:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 8:00
Senior Show 3/6/03 - ODDS AND SENDERALS 9:00AM
Doors open at 8:15AM
• no passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

1/2 Price Tanning Every Tuesday
OASIS
BODY WRAPS • TANNING • WEIGHT LOSS
•Open Monday - Friday until 10pm
•Check out our weekly specials
243 Russel St (Rt 9), Hadley
413-587-9742

Bonnies forfeit season

Continued from page 10

expressed anger in meetings that followed the decision and concluded that it didn't have the enthusiasm and motivation needed to compete in its final two games, schedule for Wednesday at Massachusetts and Saturday hosting Dayton.

SBU President Robert J. Wickenheiser expressed regret at what has transpired.

"My heart goes out to the [St. Bonaventure] players," Wickenheiser said. "I spoke with one of the players last evening and he shared with me the feelings of hurt and confusion the team has about not being able to play in the tournament. I very much sympathize with the emotions they are feeling at this time."

The forfeited games will count only for UMass and Dayton's conference records.

The win clinches a first-round home game in the A-10 Tournament for the Minutemen, who will hold the No. 4 seed in the East. UMass will host the No. 5 seeded team in the West on Monday at 7 p.m.

"I'm disappointed by this news, but we are looking forward to hosting an opening round Atlantic 10 Tournament game next Monday night in Amherst," McCaw said.

The Minutemen will face either George Washington or Duquesne in that matchup, with the winner heading to Dayton, Ohio for the remainder of the tourney.

The Colonials and Dukes are currently tied for fifth place in the A-10 West. George Washington hosts Fordham Saturday, while Duquesne plays host to Rhode Island. Whichever team finishes in sixth place will head to Rhode Island for their first round matchup on Monday.

Tickets for tonight's game will be honored for Monday's game. Students will be admitted to the playoff game free of charge.

They can pick up tickets with their identification card in advance on Monday, March 10 from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. at the Mullins Center box office, or pick up from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Campus Center Concourse.

Students may also present their identification cards at the gate for entry.

All other tickets will be on sale for $20.

LeBron James the perfect fix for UMass hoop woes

Continued from page 10

don't want LeBron to ever set foot in Kennedy.

Actually, lets place Mr. James in Orchard Hill. He will need his sleep, and besides we can keep him away from underage drinking since he is about 3 and a half years shy of birthday number 21! We can't have him on national T.V. with a nasty hangover now can we?

Step three:

We need to give LeBron the proper meal plan so he can continue to grow strong, so lets give him our finest. For you, our star player, we will give you our best sign him up for YCMP. After the new renovations to the Bluewall, how can LeBron pass that up? Don't worry LeBron, I'll give you a personal tour of the town and hook you up up with Antonio's. We got you covered, dawg.

Step four:

We need a mentor for our young stud. Hmmm, Rick Pitino would by skinned alive if he set foot on this campus after his debacle with the Celtics, so he's out. Bill Cosby is good, but I don't think LeBron is aspiring to be a comedian. Dr. J won't come. Calipari? No.

I know! Lets bring Marcus Camby back! He is the one that made the Mullins Center rock back in the day (I didn't know it was possible these days...I sneezed and heard someone five rows up say "God bless you.") Camby can show LeBron all our retired numbers hanging from the rafters and sell to him the UMass experience, but then again Marcus is still looking for his jersey.

Camby can always take a ride in LeBron's new Hummer to reminisce how he would dominate Tim Duncan in front of a packed house. Wait, wait, Hummer? Maybe these two aren't so good for each other. We don't want them swapping "complimentary gifts" stories with each other.

Finally, we need to somehow sell to Mr. James that the Knicks aren't going to win the NBA lottery this year (but keep those fingers crossed N.Y fans), and he wont be playing at Madison Square Garden. Just keep on whispering in his ear, "Cleveland, Cleveland, Cleveland" and LeBron will be on our campus tours come springtime.

This school needs to rejuvenate our basketball program. There is only one quick fix before we fall of the face of the map in college basketball. ESPN even conveniently screws up their telecasts of exciting UMass basketball now with "technical difficulties."

We need to form one of our famous rallies outside the student union and beg, beg, beg LeBron to spend one year, just one year of a college experience here at Amherst.

If LeBron decides not to come and chooses to play against the likes of Kobe and T-Mac while making millions, so be it, but lets recruit whoever hooked Camby up while he was here and give him LeBron's address.

It's a start, but if that can't happen, I'm sure coach Tappas will have plenty of "God-bless-yous" coming his way next time he sneezes in front of all 1,000 or so student fans at the Mullins Center.

Adam Leroy is a Collegian Columnist.

Women's tennis splits pair of weekend matches

By Nick Wright
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts tennis team played two dual matches at home over the weekend, defeating Colgate on Sunday 4-3 and losing to Columbia 5-2 on Saturday.

The victory against Colgate was a nail biter with the game going to the sixth and final singles match.

Junior captain Susan Hyams defeated Colgate's Lindsey Suffredini 6-3, 6-2 to win the match, improving the Minutewomen's spring record to 2-4 (3-5 overall).

The Maroon and White started badly, losing two of three doubles matches to the Raiders to go 1-0 down. In number one doubles sophomore Sasha Edelstein and freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz were defeated 8-3 by the Colgate pairing of freshman Sheila Rao and senior Lauren Erikson.

The Raiders also took the number three doubles matchup to take the point. Hyams and freshman Camilla Knight lost 8-4 to Suffredini and Jamie Maldow.

At the number two position, UMass' pairing of junior Jafra Depontes and Sophomore Stephanie Price, won by eight games to three, to defeat the Raiders Emily Wenink and Marissa Alikapala.

In the singles, along with Hyams victory at the number six position, the Maroon and White took points at numbers two, three and four.

At number two Stephanie Price comfortably defeated Erikson 6-2, 6-1, at number three Depontes defeated Madlow 6-3, 6-1, and at number four Iwanowicz gave the Maroon and White a lead they would not relinquish with a 6-2,6-2 win over Rao.

The two Minutewomen to lose points in the singles were Sasha Edelstein who lost to Alikapala in a close game 7-5, 7-6 at the number one spot, and freshman Jana Bartolini who was defeated 6-3, 6-2 by Rao in the fifth.

On Saturday the Maroon and White took on the Columbia Lions, and the result was a 5-2 loss.

The only Minutewoman to win a singles match was Stephanie Price, who at number two singles defeated Miriam Rahali 6-2, 7-5.

In fact, no other member of the Maroon and White took a set, with Edelstein, Iwanowicz, Bartolini, Hyams and Knight all losing in straight sets.

The other point for the Minutewomen came from wins in two of the three doubles matches.

At number two doubles, Depontes and Price won 8-0 against Molly Condit and Rahali, and at number three Hyams and Knight defeated Iana Dimkova and Eunice Chao eight games to six.

The third doubles game went the way of the Lions with Edelstein and Iwanowicz losing a tiebreak 7-4, dropping the 9-8 decision to Shelley Mittal and Lucia Anello.

The Minutewomen are next in action on March 8 when they face Binghamton and Maryland-Baltimore County in Ithaca, New York. The Minutewomen then take on Cornell on March 9 in the four-team tournament.

Spring roundup: aces struggling training. Padres pitcher Rob Ramsay pitched a scoreless seventh inning in his first appearance since surgery to remove a brain tumor on Jan. 23, 2002. He continues to receive chemotherapy treatment every six weeks. The game was called after 10 innings.

Continued from page 10

Cubs 5, Angels 4

At Mesa, Ariz., Mark Prior allowed one hit over three scoreless innings as Chicago stopped a four-game losing streak, improving to 4-2. David Kelton hit a two-run homer and scored the go-ahead run for the Cubs.

Athletics 4, Royals 3

At Phoenix, Mark Mulder allowed one run and four hits in four innings, and Adam Morrissey singled with two outs in the ninth to drive in the winning run. A's third base coach Ron Washington left the game with an apparent kidney stone and was taken to a hospital for observation.

White Sox 9, Rangers 8

At Surprise, Ariz., Juan Gonzalez hit a two-run double in his first 'A' game of the spring, but Texas wasted a 7-1 lead. Mario Valenzuela had a pair of RBI doubles for Chicago, in the ninth to tie it at 8 and the other in the 11th for the winning run off Brian Shouse. Texas starter Ismael Valdes was scratched after his neck stiffened up during workouts earlier in the day. He instead threw about 40 pitches in a simulated game.

-Associated Press

Let The Black Sheep Host Your Graduation Ba-a-a-ash!

Join us for an exquisite dinner in our new downtown Amherst restaurant, plan a catered party with The Black Sheep at the location of your choice, or have us deliver hors d'ouevres, dinner, sandwiches, sweets, and more, right to your door!

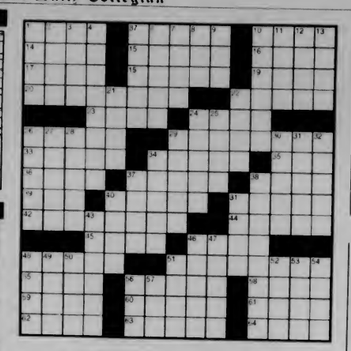
CALL NOW: 413.253.3443 OR VISIT:
WWW.BLACKSHEEPDELI.COM

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

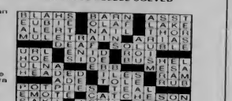
GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

WHAT SHE SAID • BY DERRICK GENOVA



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY COMRAD X

ELYSE HOOPER • BY ROBERT D. KRZYKOWSKI



ACROSS

1 Sudsy
5 Embarrass
10 Beam sprouts bean
14 Tub in the fridge
15 Pirate for media
16 Collar or jacket
17 Babysit author
18 Teased
19 Pitch
20 Once
22 Surveys
23 Parroted
24 Guardian's charge
26 Pop singer — Clara
29 Cream-colored dogs
33 Because
34 Bell telephone
35 One, to Fritz
36 Actor — Griffith
37 Exhausts
38 Whale like Shamu
39 Eatery
40 Jeered at 41 Lisa Cordial
42 Mandrew music
44 Mr. Heather
45 Do the sheltered sole
46 Means of shipping
48 Horse's ankles
51 Levelhanded
55 Liquor ingredient
56 Be accepted (2 wds.)
57 Fish-storing
58 Fish story teller
60 Proverb
61 Peep out
62 Glamorous
63 Knitters needs
64 Train for boxing

DOWN

1 Polite hank
2 Dagwood's neighbor boy
3 Band's triage king
4 Hibernation
5 Luigi's romance
6 Construct
7 Pact member
8 Saul — Marie
9 Concealed
10 Tune
11 Give or elec
12 Holiday number
13 Lions' prey
21 Touche
22 Provoker
25 Edge along
27 Like a shiny floor
28 Grant
29 Clays
30 Uncanny
31 Chopped line
32 Eskimo
34 Old tale
37 Mill
38 Eye doctors
40 Colloquial chimes
41 Fate goddess
43 Donut stop
46 Sit on the fence
47 Ben Hogan and Murray
48 Grapefruit spoonful
49 Mixed bag
50 Persuade
53 Milky Way part
54 Object on radar
55 Hysterical Rowlands
58 Pro pitcher
59 Actress — Wray
62 Mont. neighbor

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1/23/03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

for Amherst, Ma.

WEDNESDAY
- High: 44
- Low:19

THURSDAY
- High: 32
- Low: 7

FRIDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 26

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Cream of Broccoli Soup
- Captain's Catch Chicken
- Kickin' Chicken
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)

DINNER
- Cream of Broccoli Soup
- Turkey Cutlet
- Baked Stuffed Fish
- Madras Tofu Curry (Vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schaffer/Sara Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Lizzy Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jennifer Eastwood/Scott Pihl

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Itkeepsmegoingsoicantstoponeday mylittleredheartmaypopitkeepsmegoingsoicantstop

- moe, "That Coffee Tune"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Be careful of people who jump out at you today when you are exiting the bathroom.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Try some Kickin' Chicken at the DC today. You'll be glad you did when that chicken starts to kick.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
It's tearin' up my heart when I'm with you, and when we are apart I feel it, too.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
No matter how good an idea it may seem, do not use Collegians as toilet paper. You'll get cuts.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Things might seem scary and out of control right now, but your friends will help you through it.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Avoid other people today. You'll probably just make them mad.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Fear not today Leo, Hootie and the Blowfish want to hold your hand and take you to the promised land.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Look down right now. You have toilet paper stuck to the bottom of your shoe.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
If the day of the week ends with a Y, you should probably sit in your closet with a box of Cheez-its.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Sorry Scorpio, I have no idea what you should do today. Give Miss Cleo a call.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Give yourself a haircut today, and build an animal out of the scraps.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Do not leave the house without a hat today. A bird might poop on your head.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in Hospitality? Come to the HRTA Career Day on Wednesday, March 5. Fifty companies will offer internships seasonal, part and full-time jobs!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (Internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Voyager Van $1750 549-6025

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Deli Department Sales Associate part-time afternoons and evenings weekends required experience preferred call Atkins 253-9528

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + workstudy available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential! Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA (2 hours from New York and Philadelphia), A Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, motor bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20- 8/16. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory.

GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

Assistant Needed for busy office on Nantucket Island May-Aug. or Dec. Computer, accurate typing and telephone Skills necessary. Salary and housing. Fax resume to 508 228 8778 or Mail to: Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Internship For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9,300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmaill1@yahoo.com

FOR SALE

2 Good Goodyear 265/75-16 Truck Tires $40 for pair. Your old GM 78-87 M1Osize need a radiator? I have good one $50 545-1956

Furniture Sale For sale: Italian leather love seat and chair, platform bed, Surround Sound Stereo System, new A/C unit, all at great prices. For more info call 413-546-1258

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

MISCELLANEOUS

Are you driving to and from southern California over spring break? A chance to earn extra money call 545-1956

Want to know who will win the big games? Email todayspicks@hotmail.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 2bedrm apt $425+utils Aval. ASAP in Amherst on bus line, heat+water include. No deposit. Prof. Student+cat email flowerface4u@netscape.net

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days. Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials! Incl. Port, Departure, Hotel Tax! www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

Spring Break with STS. America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers. Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900.

YOUR CLASSIFIED AD COULD GO HERE!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The quick fix for Minutemen basketball

Adam Levoy

I don't like to come up with the unthinkable. Daydreaming in the basement of DuBois one day, I came even to realize that I certainly should pass on to Coach Steve Lappas. With my genius recruiting and his stellar coaching together we can get UMass basketball back to the Final Four in a year's time.

At this point I bet have all you UMass basketball diehards (those who are left) at the edge of your seats in anticipation. My master plan actually involves only one player – the missing piece to the puzzle.

Actually this player is not the missing piece but the whole damn puzzle itself. Who is this savior you ask? Well I must let the cat out of the bag. I shall. Please welcome to the starting guard – LeBron James!

We live in an age where high school players jump straight to the NBA. The league now has men vs. kids-in-training. Ten years ago, God forbid a college player starting after their second year to play in the NBA.

It is hard to provide a kindergarten-like atmosphere that will entice LeBron to play college ball. He needs the pipeline before his jump to the NBA. I say let's give LeBron some playdough and blocks and give him the kindergarten he probably never had.

So all I have to do is convince Coach Lappas and UMass that we can steal LeBron from the rest of NBA and bring him to lovely yet quaint Amherst. This will take a lot of planning, so let's think this through carefully.

Step one:

Get to LeBron that he can dribble the ball, shoot the ball, dunk the ball, do cool tricks with the ball and even pass the ball – well only fancy passes – whenever the ball is open.

Step two (and this is the tough one): Convince the lad – so if he is triple teamed Coach will allow him to dish off to one of his teammates. Not only as a last resort. I want the 24-7 LeBron James show at the Mullins Center.

Step two:

Can make LeBron feel at home here at UMass. If he comes to the NBA, he will be living out of hotels most of the time, so why not let him stay permanently in our Hilltown Campus Hotel located in the middle of campus?

Or – LeBron misses the dorm life and urban flavor. Perhaps we can place him somewhere in Southie – well with the exception of Kennedy. We

Bonnies bail on season

JAMES SCHLEIFER/COLLEGIAN

Coach Steve Lappas and the Minutemen will have the night off after St. Bonaventure forfeit the rest of its season yesterday. The Atlantic 10 is still discussing further punishment to the Bonnies for playing an ineligible player, Jamil Terrell.

Forfeit tonight's game at Mullins

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The St. Bonaventure men's basketball team has decided not to finish out the rest of its regular season, including tonight's game against UMass at the Mullins Center, according to the Bonnies' media relations department.

"We are extremely disappointed that St. Bonaventure has taken this action," Atlantic 10 commissioner Linda Bruno said, according to the Associated Press. "The A-10 Presidents Council will discuss the university's decision at its April 1 meeting."

The decision came one day after the Atlantic 10 Conference imposed sanctions on the team for competing with an ineligible player through last week. The conference penalized the Bonnies' six A-10 wins and deemed them ineligible for the A-10 Tournament next week.

The university deemed Jamil Terrell, a junior college transfer, ineligible last week. Terrell was declared ineligible for failing to meet NCAA junior college transfer regulations.

St. Bonaventure imposed a self-sanction of its six conference wins, but the A-10 decided on the harsher solution.

The NCAA may punish St. Bonaventure further. According to UMass Athletic Director Ian McCaw, the University will not suffer financially from the Bonnies' decision.

"I've spoken with the St. Bonaventure Athletic Director (Gothard Lane) and we've agreed to a mutually acceptable compromise."

When asked for further comment, McCaw claimed, "We expect to come out of this whole."

McCaw said that the A-10 conducted a conference call for its Athletic Directors to inform them of the situation. He claimed that any discussion of enforcing further sanctions on the Bonnies for their latest decision is still premature.

According to sources, the St. Bonaventure team

Continued on page 7

On to Kingston

Jennifer Butler (right) and the UMass women's basketball team will travel to the University of Rhode Island in preparation for Thursday night's first round Atlantic 10 Tournament game.

Softball gears up for weekend tournament

By JEFF BOYD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Life simply refuses to get any easier for the UMass Softball Team.

Back-to-back wins against nationally-ranked teams to close out the Fiesta Bowl tournament was, to say the least, a step in the right direction.

Wins over three more ranked teams in the Leadoff Classic not only gained the Minutewomen national recognition, but also earned them the tournament championship. Now the question remains, when will this schedule ease up?

The answer – not anytime soon.

Later this evening, the No. 16 Minutewomen will be boarding a plane that will take them to Plant City, Fla. to participate in this weekend's Speedline Invitational. Although the tropical setting should serve as a nice change of venue for the Minutewomen, participating in the Speedline Invitational is hardly a weekend in paradise.

The tournament is scheduled to begin tomorrow afternoon, and should prove to be the most trying day of competition. However, even if the Minutewomen can overcome Thursday's opposition, they are still by no means in the clear.

The first test for UMass will be the somewhat unpredictable North Carolina Tar Heels. UNC's record stands at a mediocre 9-9, yet their performance to date has been anything but average. This past Saturday, the Tar Heels posted a shutout victory against No. 18 Michigan, a team that recently won consecutive games against No. 5 Texas.

"You have to be a darn good team to beat the University of Michigan, and they did 1-0," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said.

Following the matchup with UNC, UMass will finish up Thursday's action against arguably the best team in the nation when they face No. 4 Washington. The Huskies, whose record currently stands at 17-0-1, are the only undefeated team in the top 25. The Washington offense should also serve as the ultimate test for UMass's nationally-recognized pitching staff.

Should Sortino decide to start sophomore pitcher Kelli Arnold against the Huskies, it would create a matchup between the last two players to be named National Player of the Week.

Arnold, who won the award two weeks ago after she shut down No. 14 Florida State, would be pitching to last week's National Player of the Week, Kristen Rivera. Rivera earned the honor following a five game stretch in which she batted .571 with four home runs and 12 RBI's.

Washington is coming off of an 11-0 romping of Purdue, a game in which Rivera was a perfect 3-3 at the plate with a school-record three home runs.

Sortino recognizes the types of offenses that her team will face this weekend, yet remains confident in Arnold and the rest of her pitching staff.

"I feel better about a lot of things that we are doing," Sortino said. "I think our pitching continues to rise to the occasion and gets a little bit better every week."

In the second day of competition, UMass will take to the field against the Hofstra Pride and the Ball State Cardinals.

Ball State (5-6-1) had a strong start to the season, but heads into the Speedline Invitational on a four game losing streak.

The Pride (5-6) was the early-season pick to win the Colonial Conference, but have struggled through the first part of their season.

On the third and final day of pool competition, the Minutewomen are slated to face a Northwestern team that is on the verge of cracking the top 25. The Wildcats will bring their 8-5 record into the tournament, along with bragging rights after having already beaten the defending National Champion California Golden Bears.

Bracket play will begin following the game against Northwestern. UMass will look to follow-up on their Lead-off Classic Championship by advancing to the Championship bracket on Saturday.

Contreras, Smoltz, Ankiel struggling through spring

(AP) John Smoltz, Rick Ankiel and Jose Contreras struggled in spring training outings Tuesday.

Smoltz gave up two runs and three hits in one inning as the Montreal Expos defeated the Atlanta Braves 6-4 at Viera, Fla.

The Braves' closer entered with a 2-0 lead in the fifth, and gave up Fernando Tatis' single, Ron Calloway's double, Henry Mateo's single and Wil Cordero's RBI grounder.

"I thought he threw great," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "I was more than happy with his stuff. He only gave up one hard-hit ball. He had bite on his slider, and when he throws that well, nobody can hit him."

The following inning, Calloway hit a three-run homer off Darren Holmes.

At Jupiter, Fla., Ankiel gave up three runs and five hits in one inning as the St. Louis Cardinals lost to the Los Angeles Dodgers 6-5.

Ankiel entered in the seventh with the score tied at 2. The Cardinals' reliever took the loss in his second outing of the spring, giving up four straight two-out hits.

Ankiel, who missed all of last season with an elbow injury and has been plagued by wildness, faced seven batters. He walked none and struck out one.

"Physically, I feel fine. Maybe the next time I'll get them to hit the ball at someone. But I'm happy I got my pitches to work," Ankiel said. "Facing that many batters, I got more work, and that's a positive. I can't complain. They just didn't hit the ball at people today."

Ankiel, 23, was an 11-game winner as a Cardinals starter in 2000 but lost control of his pitches during the postseason and spent most of the next season in the minors.

At Fort Myers, Fla., Contreras struggled in his second straight outing, allowing three runs and four hits in three innings, including a long homer to Boston's Manny Ramirez.

"I threw more breaking balls because I didn't feel I had a strong fastball," the Cuban defector said through an interpreter.

In his first spring training outing, the New York Yankees right-hander allowed five runs – including a grand slam to Adam Dunn – in his first inning of a 9-3 loss to Cincinnati.

"I wasn't impressed. Everybody hypes him up to be this big thing. He's average. He threw average today," Boston's Shea Hillenbrand said, adding that Contreras wasn't throwing at full speed and should be all right during the season.

Derek Jeter and Jason Giambi hit back-to-back homers as New York rallied from a 3-0 deficit to win 7-4.

In other games:

Giants 10, Padres 10

At Scottsdale, Ariz., Barry Bonds hit his third home run of the spring. Bonds hit a solo shot in the third inning and stayed at home plate to watch the ball sail onto the knoll in right field. The homer came on his seventh official at-bat of spring

Continued on page 7

2003 MINUTEMAN UMass LACROSSE Preview

A snow-crusted cab travels west toward Hadley. The driver, a burley man who is very much in the way of himself, tries to keep control of his Ford as it fishtails over the Coolidge Bridge.

"Welcome to the Pioneer Valley," he forces through a thick set of gray whiskers.

The bridge's lanes are narrowed by "endless construction," but he navigates through it with surprising agility. He moves around a curve before the path straightens to the horizon.

Rolling hills of plowed snow edge the two-lane road.

It's 5:00 p.m. on a Monday, a bad time to roll into town. Smallville establishments like Dave's Soda and Pet Food City, Stan the Vegetable Man, Sully's breakfast place and Ye Olde Hadleigh Grille are closing down for the night.

The driver reaches a gap in the snow and whips the car into a hotel parking lot.

"I hope where your headed isn't too far from here," he growls, as chained tires catapult his car into the blackness.

The Norwottuck Inn is an old wooden building tucked away in the rear of a small shopping plaza. It has only five guests tonight.

Just a couple miles down the road is Amherst, Massachusetts. The college town of 40,000 is known for its frigid winters and even colder politics. To most people, it's not even part of the Commonwealth. It's that purgatory 45 miles west of Worcester.

And it's where, we hear, the best college lacrosse team in the country is hiding out.

Last May the UMass lacrosse team was on the cusp of the Final Four. It went down to Baltimore and pushed top-ranked Johns Hopkins to the brink of elimination before falling in overtime.

Coach Greg Cannella walked into the press conference to tell the media "It was a great lacrosse game."

Since then they've all but disappeared into the Pioneer Valley – an area nearly oblivious to the team's existence and successful history.

It's been 10 months and only a few things we know for sure. The Minutemen are 2-0. They are ranked seventh in most polls. And they have someone who recently scored 10 points in a single game.

Besides that, we don't know much. Apparently, neither does the short, fair skinned female working the Inn's front desk.

"Lacrosse?" she says. "A sport? It sounds French. They play it outside. Why would anybody want to play an outdoor sport in this weather? If you're looking for the campus, it's just down the road. I don't know if they play lacrosse. But there's a bus just out front that goes there. It comes once an hour. But sometimes the snow slows it down."

A half hour after its scheduled arrival, the bus pokes through the falling snow and slides to a halt in front of the Inn.

"Not from around here?" the driver says as the transmission hisses from park to drive.

There's only one other passenger riding the cheerless vehicle. A young, college-aged woman sits under a flickering headlamp with thick-rimmed glasses fogged from the cold.

She pulls a pair of textbooks tight against her black pea coat and tucks her purple lips into a striped scarf for warmth, as the closing door traps the frigid breeze outside.

She barely acknowledges the driver's free verbal tour, as he offers an anecdote for every passing landmark.

"Well they just finished that Wal-Mart two years ago," he says. "And the Bison farm on the left has been there as long as I can remember."

But does he know anything about lacrosse.

"Hmm. Can't say that I do," he responds. "It's a sport huh? They had a good basketball team here awhile back. That's really all I can tell you. But there's a sports bar just up the road. Used to go there to watch the games. They know their sports I tell you.

"Might know something about this lacrosse."

The Hangar is a gaudy building on University Drive, just off the UMass campus. Behind a set of glass doors, patrons sit shoulder-to-shoulder at the bar as waitresses refresh their glasses of Sam Adams and Bass Ale.

Bon Jovi pours out of the speakers and the smell of Buffalo wings tingles your nostrils. At one table UMass basketball coach Steve Lappas chats with the host of his weekly radio show.

Hanging above him is a picture of Marcus Camby tipping off against Kentucky in the 1996 Final Four. The walls are almost completely tiled with sports pictures. From hockey to basketball and football, the Hangar offers the perfect sports bar atmosphere.

But no lacrosse?

"You know I hear they're very good," a sharp-witted waitress says. "I remember they were in here last year a couple times. They made the NCAA tournament or something. Did pretty well I heard."

And where would one find them?

"I'm not sure where they play. There's a bunch of fields on campus," she says. "I think I've seen them coming out of Boyden Gym. There's a field over there I'm sure."

Boyden is a lackluster piece of architecture. The roof looks like a warped soda can stuffed on a brick building. Inside it's a series of dusty hallways and old wooden doors.

Most of the offices and classrooms are locked and dark. But one door, toward the rear, is lit. Cannella's name is etched underneath Men's Lacrosse Coach. Behind the door lies an undersized office.

There are pictures of former players hanging on the right wall beside a television. And it looks like a collection of trophies, plaques and certificates rest on a table in the back.

A bright light from the rear window illuminates the desk. Through the frosted glass you can barely make out a metal gate and the echo of loud voices.

"Garber Field" is on the arch above the entrance and the soundtrack of an athletic practice rises in volume with each step.

Beyond the doorway a wide turf field is set off by heaps of plowed snow and solid metal bleachers. Near midfield, a large man, with the number 44 on his back, stands on a faded UMass logo.

"Focus while we stretch," he declares in a menacing tone.

In front of him, 40 athletic-looking lacrosse players can see their breath as they go through the motions in complete silence. When the stretching is done, the noise begins.

"Let's go Mass, let's go," a hopping player yells. "Game day's comin', Game day baby."

A teammate responds, "Be tough guys. We're out here in the snow and the cold. Nobody else does this stuff. Nobody else beats the crap out of themselves, nobody works harder."

With that, 90 minutes of intense practice begins.

There's no stopping, no breaks. Helmets stay strapped, gloves on and sticks wielded. It is go, go and go some more.

Cannella stands at midfield, with winter gear and a clipboard, organizing the session from start to finish.

When practice ends he steps away and the noise returns. Forty players, sticks raised, come together in a circle. In many ways they are alone. Anonymous to the town around them, alone in a cold, bracing land, waiting for the time to reveal themselves again.

Story written by Matthew F. Cocco

Photo by James Colagiovi

2003 UMass Lacrosse Preview

The nation's leading scorer, Kevin Leveille, was named Pre-Season Offensive Player of the Year by the ECAC.

Top talent and superior coaching make the ECAC the most competitive conference in nation

Continued from page A4

Senior Chris Stebbings is in his fourth year of starting and is the anchor that will keep a young squad together. The midfield is deep but inexperienced, with Greg Conklin leading the charge. Junior Ben Bailey was a preseason all-ECAC pick and should help to plug the loss of Eddie McKinnon. A pair of sophomores will shoulder the load between the pipes, left behind by the graduation of Jon Higdon.

Key Matchup: Saturday, @ UMass: Saturday's matchup gives the Midshipmen a chance to finish off the catapult started by last week's win over North Carolina, and start the conference season on a good note.

UMBC (NR, 1-0 overall)

The Retrievers will have to deal with the loss of a pair of talented attackmen in Jon Hrasyni and Justin Smith, but have some young talent that has impressed in the early going. The midfield will be bolstered with the movement of some former attackers to the offensive middie line. Senior Adam Shiley can kick-start the offense from the midfield. Two experienced defensemen – Brad Preisinger and Matt P. Hall – return to lead the defense, and both had strong falls to bolster confidence. Senior Tim Flanagan is one of the most experienced netminders in the ECAC.

Key matchup: April 15, @ Navy: Where the Retrievers finish will likely depend on this game, as they attempt to show last year's 11-4 lambasting was a fluke.

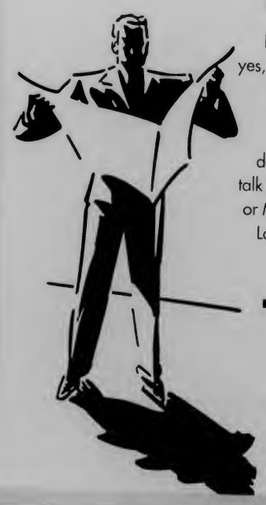
Penn State (No. 15, 1-1 overall)

The Nittany Lions need to overcome what might be the biggest loss in the conference, as attackman Will Driscoll was lost to graduation. Senior Luke Ogebby will be the key player in what is otherwise a young offense, and senior captain Marshall Feldman returns from the struggles of a hamstring injury to be the centerpiece of the midfield. Junior long stick middie Rob Bateman earned honorable mention All-American honors last year, and will be in front of a very experienced defense led by top man Matt Zappia. Senior Chris Garrity returns having posted the ninth-best goals against average in the country last year.

Key matchup: March 22, vs. UMBC: The Lions will try to avenge last year's overtime loss and jumpstart their ECAC season.

Rutgers (No. 16, 3-0 overall)

The Scarlet Knights return all but two of their top 20 letterwinners from last year, and with Jim Stagnitta in his first full season at the helm (12 consecutive seasons at D-III Washington and Lee), could prove the biggest surprise in conference. The attack is inexperienced, but junior transfer Derby Powless has been impressive in the early going. Last year's leading scorer Tim White returns to help the midfield, while the defense returns a pair of starters. Chris Kenyon will be challenged in net by a pair of youngsters in Dan Benson and Greg Havalchak.



Key matchup: March 15, @ Navy: The next true test for Rutgers, which will look to open its conference season on the right foot.

2002 ECAC STANDINGS

5-0 (12-4)
4-1 (12-3)
3-2 (8-5)
2-3 (5-7)
1-4 (8-5)
0-5 (2-12)

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!

Applicants should have some layout experience

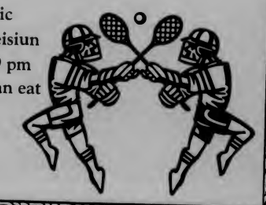
Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester

Hiring process begins April 14th!

THE HARP

all credit cards accepted

TOCMP The Off Campus Meal Plan



Irish Pub

Voted Best New Bar/Club in the Valley 2002

We support UMass Lacrosse!
(and so should you)
Stop in before or after the game for good times and great food

1 mile off campus in N. Amherst
413-548-6900

Mon : $5.95 ALL-U-CAN-EAT Buffet 8:30 - 11:00
Tues : Team Pub Trivia
Wed : Reggae Night
Thurs - Sat : Live Music
Fri : Traditional Irish Seisiun
Sun : Dinner Buffet 6-9 pm
$7.95 all you can eat

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 95

Thousands rally against war

Students overflow Ballroom

By KELLY FARRELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over 2,500 students walked out of class at the University of Massachusetts yesterday as a part of the national "Books not Bombs" campaign, participating in a rally, teach-ins and a march to Amherst center in opposition to a war with Iraq.

The rally, originally planned for the Student Union steps, was moved inside due to poor weather. Students overflowed the Student Union Ballroom with a standing room only crowd.

"I thought no one showed up for the walkout because of the rain," said UMass student Shannon Greer. "I almost didn't walk up to the [Student Union] steps, but then someone yelled that the rally was moved inside.

"I couldn't believe it," she said of the crowd of thousands, who stood shoulder-to-shoulder in the Ballroom out into the hallway.

Isaac BenEzra, a member of the Amherst Town Meeting, told the crowd that he was there for his children and grandchildren.

"I demand our government tell the world that we will not use weapons of mass destruction," he said. "Pope John Paul himself said that we should use today, Ash Wednesday, to break bread for peace and to not support this immoral war. If George Bush doesn't get that, then we're just going to have to sell it to him."

Ann Ferguson of the Philosophy Department said that she's been involved in political activism since the 1960s.

"I'm an old timer," Ferguson said. "We just completed 45 years of successfully avoiding war with the U.S.S.R. Why can't we do that now?"

Springfield poet Magdalena Gomez was featured as a guest at the rally.

"I'm writing to remember... the land of the brave and the land of the free, where nothing is free," she read, until silenced by 500 more students entering the room.

The students, from Amherst Regional High School, came streaming in late after trekking through the rain. The already present crowd cheered them loudly and parted to let the new group of students into the Ballroom.

"You are the best poem," Gomez said.

As the high school students settled in and the crowd settled down, she continued with an improvisation.

"I'm learning to remember...there is always time to interrupt a poem for an act of love," she said.

She finished her poem with cheers from the audience as she read, "America, you make me feel ashamed...and yet, America, I am thou."

There were several other speakers at the rally, including Felice Yeskel of the Campus Coalition of campus unions, Hilary Wilcox and Colette Cosner, students from Amherst High School's Students for Peace and UMass computer science student Yuval Sivan.

An estimated 1600 hundred students and local residents marched from the Haigis Mall plaza across campus and into uptown Amherst yesterday as a part of the 'Books not Bombs' national campaign. The protestors are circled around a minivan chanting and singing various anti-war slogans.

A protester's sign with President George W. Bush's head on top reads "Regime change begins at home."

"What they call shock and awe, I call terrorism," Sivan said of the Bush administration's military tactics.

Several students said they appreciated being able to discuss the issues surrounding Iraq.

"I think it's good to have a healthy debate," said freshman Ben Nathan of the Student Alliance for Israel.

Thirteen-year-old Jacob Miller came to the rally with about 100 of his schoolmates from Amherst Middle School.

"I know we can't stop it [the war]," Miller said. "But I want to do whatever I can. My uncle is 20 years old and he just got sent to Afghanistan."

University of Massachusetts students applaud during yesterdays 'Books not Bombs' rally held in the Student Union. Over 2000 people flooded the Student Union Ballroom during the protest.

A HUGE TURNOUT

Due to the larger than expected turn out of about 2,600 students total and as many as 200 students for each teach-in and poetry slam, many of the scheduled panels had to be moved from Draper Hall or Herter into the Student Union Ballroom. The first teach-in featured Nancy Lesson and Charles Richardson. Their daughter attends UMass and their son is a Marine stationed in the Persian Gulf with 300,000 other troops.

Lesson jointly filed a lawsuit against President George Bush and Donald Rumsfeld for violating the United States Constitution, which states that Congress shall have the power to declare war.

"If they transferred their power to Bush, then this is illegal," Lesson said. "Bush is not a king. If [the decision to declare war] should not, can not, and will not be made by one person."

Another panel featured Peter Pellet, a member of a United Nations task-force studying the health effects of sanctions on Iraq, and Jo Commerford of the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization. Commerford was in Iraq this summer and Pellet was there in January. Both shared what they saw and heard from the Iraqi people and presented slide shows of their individual trips.

"I thought Pellet was particularly informative," said Caroline Eckert, a member in attendance. "He really came from a scientific perspective. I didn't

Continued on page 2

Over 300 colleges join against war

By JOANN LOVIGLIO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

High school and college students across the country walked out of class yesterday to protest a war with Iraq, holding a series of rallies organizers predicted would be the biggest campus demonstrations since the Vietnam War.

Tens of thousands of students at more than 300 colleges and universities pledged to join in the protests, according to the National Youth and Student Peace Coalition. Thousands of students also rallied for peace in Britain, Sweden, Spain, Australia and other countries.

The Books Not Bombs protests were also geared to call attention to the effects of a war's costs on education, health care and the economy. But the focus was the looming threat of war with Iraq.

Manon Terrell, a 19-year-old sophomore, missed three classes to take part in a rally at Stanford University, where about 300 people carried signs that read "It's the Middle East, not the Wild West" and "The majority of us didn't vote for this war."

"This is a personal thing for me because my friends are going to fight this war," said Terrell, a civil engineering major. "It's not going to be Bush and his cronies in business suits on the front lines. They're going to take people of color and poor people."

Dozens of Stanford professors endorsed the rally, either by telling students there would be no penalties for leaving class or by canceling class. About 500 students walked out of class at the University of Maryland. In Milwaukee, 40 students lined the sidewalk in front of the Marquette University student union during an hour-long protest.

"It's good to let people know students have a say in what happens in the world," said Abir Chaudhry, 19, who carried a sign that read "God Does Not Bless America Only."

Sporadic rain fell as about 1,500 protesters – and a small number of Bush supporters holding a counter demonstration – gathered at Penn State University.

After an hour-long rally, about half the protesters marched four blocks to the municipal building, where Mayor Bill Welch accepted petitions asking the borough council to oppose war with Iraq and resist elements of the USA Patriot and the Homeland Security acts.

About 125 students and a few faculty members turned out in gray, drizzly weather for a rally at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. Ross Meyer, a junior and founder of a student peace group, said he was disappointed by the turnout.

"I am patriotic and loyal to my country," he told the crowd. Someone called out to urge the crowd to support the government if the United States invades Iraq.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

ANTI-WAR PUSH
LOCAL DIALOGUES OFFER HOPE
PAGE 4

'DARK BLUE'
RUSSELL GIVES GRITTY PERFORMANCE
PAGE 5

PLAYOFF TIME
HOCKEY AND WOMEN'S HOOP BEGIN POSTSEASON
PAGE 10

SGA supports Romney proposal

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association (SGA) Senate met last night and spent the majority of the evening debating a motion supporting Gov. Mitt Romney's recent budget proposal.

The SGA's appointed ad-hoc committee for the proposal made a presentation to explain how it would eliminate the current system of higher education in Massachusetts and affect the University of Massachusetts.

Deputy Chair of the Ways and Means Committee Jared Nokes and Senator Brian Roberts told the Senate that they felt Romney's proposal would benefit UMass-Amherst.

"Last week we voted to look more into the details of Governor Romney's proposal. And over the past week we have been able to contact a lot of people who would talk to us, but not to state representatives, including the appointed Secretary of Education Peter Nessen," Nokes said. "If approved, Peter Nessen would allocate all of our funding, not President William Bulger, which would therefore eliminate his office."

Nokes said that the proposal to eliminate the President's office would make Chancellor John V. Lombardi the President of the UMass-Amherst, as well as give him authority to distribute the budget as he views fit for the campus. The proposed plan also includes fee increases to all students' tuition, with an increase of $838 for in-state students and a maximum increase of $3,217 for out-of-state students.

"We would be working on an individual level apart from the other universities and we would have our own board of trustees. We would be competing separately from everyone else," Nokes said.

The plan calls for level funding for each UMass campus from last year until the present, and in addition we would expect a $26 million increase in revenue from just tuition increases alone, he added.

Several questions were raised, including potential problems with the UMass-Amherst campus receiving more funding from the state, in addition to concerns over how the tuition increases would affect students.

"We are not going to be knocking down any of the other UMass campuses' legs so that we can stand up. They will be level funded," Nokes said. "We are expected to grow and regain grants as a university and take on the role as the flagship university. As far as tuition, the increases are expected to be high. There is a Board of Trustees meeting next week that will decide what our increases will be for next year aside from this proposal."

Student Trustee Bill Powers confirmed rumors that student fees may be increased by up to $2,000

Continued on page 2

JAMES SHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Student Trustee Bill Powers says he is concerned with a proposed tuition increase and does not support Gov. Mitt Romney's higher ed plan.

Thousands walk out

Continued from page

get the sense that he was fulfilling his own agenda when he explained the consequences of sanctions on the Iraqi people. I had no idea that Iraq was an industrialized nation before the sanctions ruined their economy. I had the sense that then were always a Third World nation with a crazy leader."

Pellet said the sanctions are only part of the cause of the economic and political situation in Iraq.

"The U.S. has been illegally and directly targeting electric stations, water and sanitation," Pellet said. "If the U.S. does it again then will be sited for war crimes. But it's already too late."

A student asked Pellet what the Iraqi people seemed to think of their leader, Saddam Hussein. Pellet said that according to the Iraqi people, he [Hussein] is not the "demonized creature" we hear about.

"The Iraqi people want a leader who stands up to the U.S.," Pellet said.

Commerford said that Iraqis "saw us, the American people, as different than George Bush, and many wanted to know why Bush couldn't see them as different than Hussein."

Later in the afternoon there was a poetry slam in the Ballroom featuring local poets Bushra Muhammad and Abe Henderson. After they read, the microphone was opened up to anyone who wanted to read a poem of their own. UMass freshman Kamo Asatryan read his poem, "Names," which he said he originally wrote on the anniversary of Sept. 11, and quickly rewrote for the slam.

One student who stuck out during the course of the day was Amherst High School student Nate Weiss. He wore a baseball cap with a sign on top stating "Peace takes Brains" on the front and "How did our oil get under their sand?" on the back.

"I learned a lot," Weiss said. "It was moving. I was really glad to see the big turn out and it was cool when the high school students came in and everybody was cheering for us."

JAMES W. HATTRICK JR./COLLEGIAN

Protestors walk up N. Pleasant Street with an Amherst police escort. An estimated 1600 people met in Amherst center to protest.

A MARCH FOR PEACE

About 1,600 people from the local schools, as well as residents of Amherst, Northampton and other nearby towns held signs and marched to the Commons afterwards from the Haigis Mall. Police blocked N. Pleasant Street. E. Pleasant and Main Street as the march and vigil proceeded down the streets. Another rally blocked Amherst center traffic for about one and half hours after the march yesterday evening.

Protestors held signs at the Amherst Center rally with statements like "Pro America Not Pro War," "Regime Change Begins at Home" and "Support Our Troops: Bring Them Home."

Members danced, sang and chanted as they bobbed their signs up and down.

The Smith College cheerleaders also got in on the rally, putting on an unlikely "take me out to the war games" routine.

"I don't think the routine will win them the national cheerleading tournament - they seem a bit non-conventional," a member of the rally said jokingly. "but it was good."

Many of the people who were downtown at the time of the march honked their horns and waved in a gesture of peace to show their support for the protestors.

Several people at the rally on campus and in Amherst Center also did not agree with the protestors' anti-war sentiments.

The counter protest at the rally consisted of one man with a sign that read: "Bush loves you. You are just afraid."

Several people in the center of Amherst said they didn't agree with the protestors' views.

"I think it [the protest] is absolutely ridiculous," said UMass graduate student Jeremy Caron. "There are no Iraqis at any of these protests because even they think he [Hussein] should go."

Internet sales to be taxed

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – A budget-cutting package signed by Gov. Mitt Romney yesterday includes a provision paving the way for the state to collect sales taxes in the future on items purchased over the Internet.

The provision enrolls Massachusetts in a multistate collaborative that is trying to come up with a way to allow states with varying sales tax rates to charge a single uniform sales tax for Internet purchases.

Former Republican governors Paul Cellucci and Jane Swift had opposed Internet sales taxes.

The measure is included in the $586 million budget-balancing bill signed by Romney. The budget package is designed to help close an estimated $650 million gap in the fiscal year that ends June 30.

Romney said the new law not only balances this year's budget, but allows lawmakers and administration officials to devote their full attention to the new budget, and a looming $3 billion spending gap.

He conceded he did not get everything he wanted in the budget-cutting package, including cuts to Medicaid and a plan to force state workers to pay a higher percentage of their health care premiums.

He also opted not to veto a portion of the plan that would have delayed until July 1 the start of a moratorium on new school buildings. Romney had wanted an immediate moratorium, but lawmakers said some communities had been promised a chance to get their new school projects on the list.

"I didn't get everything I proposed," Romney said. "I guess some people would say, 'Get used to it.'"

Romney did veto two portions of the spending plan. One would have delayed the closing of some "tax loopholes." Romney said the delay would cost the state millions.

He also vetoed a portion of the bill that would have extended the two-year cut off of welfare benefits for those who participate in employment services programs. Romney said the extension would undermine one of the cornerstones of the welfare reform law.

Rather than adopt Romney's recommendations to cut Medicaid and hike health care premiums for state workers, lawmakers dipped into some state reserve funds, including taking $17 million from a renewable energy trust fund.

Romney said he plans to offset that decision by committing $17 million to the state's purchase of renewable energy.

Romney said the decision to dip into savings means some tough decisions will be put off until next year's budget is completed. He said he didn't blame lawmakers for opting to hold off until they could schedule public hearings.

"I don't fault the Legislature on that," he said. The bill would also allow the state to try and recover tens of millions of dollars in disputed Big Dig cost overruns from contractors by extending the current statute of limitations.

SGA supports ed proposal

Continued from page

for next year, and said he was not in support of the proposal.

"The fact of the matter is that the state needs to stop cutting higher education and they need to start saying that we are important to them," Powers said.

Nokes and Roberts then presented a motion on what the Senate's official position regarding Romney's recent proposal should be. They proposed that the SGA Senate support the proposal, specifically in restructuring the UMass system. Nokes said that they are not in support of increasing out-of-state tuition to the maximum extent, but that fees should definitely be higher for those out-of-state.

"Right now we have more knowledge about this proposal than anyone else. I spoke to Ellen Story and she was asking me numbers. The Chancellor hasn't even spoke to the people we have," Nokes said. "Our opinion is more powerful the sooner we get it out, and any further pieces of information we receive we will bring back to the Senate and do what is necessary so that we will have a strong voice throughout these changes."

Senators disagreed and the motion was called to debate twice. Members discouraged the motion on a matter of timeliness and for concerns regarding the possibility of higher tuition.

"The biggest problem with this motion is that the proposal is unrealistic to the working class for in and out of state students, and the fact that we have the possibility to give students land grants that will make this school affordable for all students," Senator Paul Pitts-Dilley said.

Members disagreed, and with a vote of 31 Senators for the motion and ten against, the Senate passed the motion.

"I was very excited to see such an in-depth debate. It just shows how serious the Senate takes this issue," Speaker Dan Saunders said.

The SGA Senate meets again next Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. All meetings are open to the public.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1967, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

McMurphy's

5th Annual
Blarney Blowout
St. Partick's Day
Celebration

Saturday March 8th
Corned Beef Buffet at 2:00pm

Live Irish music with the Tinkers
starts at 4:00pm

2003 REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS

The Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice is soliciting innovative proposals for educational activities and programs which have the following goals:

- promote mutual respect
- enhance understanding of community, diversity and/or social justice issues
- encourage collaboration between different campus communities and constituencies

Special consideration will be given to proposals which improve the undergraduate experience.

Eligibility: Undergraduates, graduate students, staff and faculty, as well as individuals or groups

Award Criteria: Proposed activities:

- must bring together persons from two or more communities or constituencies in joint activities
- must demonstrate collaboration of communities or constituencies in the proposal planning process
- must promote mutual respect and understanding on the campus or in the larger community
- should represent new programs or collaborating partnerships as opposed to annual programs or continuations of past projects
- should focus program activities during the beginning of the fall 2003 semester

Examples of Activities Which Could be Funded: Forums, speakers, film/video series, seminars, workshops, training programs, public education programs, outreach activities to secondary schools and home communities, community public service programs, faculty/student collaboration to develop new courses, performance events, printed materials, posters.

Proposal Components:

- a clear description how proposed activities will meet both the goals and award criteria
- a list of groups involved and contact person or persons responsible for the activity
- a plan for evaluating the impact and effectiveness of the activities
- a time line indicating when the activities would start and conclude
- a budget

Award Ranges: $250 to $1500, with all awards expected to total $15,000

Submission Date and Location: Mailed, e-mailed to joycea@admin.umass.edu, faxed to 577-2455 or hand delivered by noon on Friday, April 4, 2003 to the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice, c/o Office of Human Relations, 206 Middlesex House.

Proposal Review and Award Announcements: A committee of the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice reviews all proposals. Awards will be announced during the week of April 14, 2003.

Proposal Writing Assistance: http://www.umass.edu/funding/FundHowTo.html Applicants are strongly encouraged to contact the Office of Human Relations for guidance in preparing proposals.

Additional Information: Contact the Office of Human Relations at joycea@admin.umass.edu or (413) 545-0851.

At least 16 dead after bomb explosion in bus

By Jason Keyser
Associated Press

HAIFA, Israel (AP) – A bomber blew himself up aboard a bus filled with students in this northern Israeli city Wednesday, killing at least 16 people and injuring 55. The blast spread blood-splattered debris throughout a prosperous hilltop neighborhood, ending a two-month lull in suicide bombings.

About 10 of the victims were high school students – among them 14-year-old Avigail Leitner, a U.S. citizen, authorities said. Two soldiers were killed.

Police said the suicide bomber, Mahmoud Hamdan Kawasme, 20, of the West Bank city of Hebron, was carrying a letter praising the Sept. 11 attacks. There was no claim of responsibility for the bus blast.

Israel's Security Cabinet closed off the West Bank and Gaza Strip until Sunday, banning all Palestinians from entering Israel, as one of the steps in response to the attack. Israeli officials said early Thursday, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Also early Thursday, about 50 Israeli tanks accompanied by helicopter gunships moved deep into the Jabaliya refugee camp next to Gaza City. A 60-year-old Palestinian night watchman was killed and three other people wounded in exchanges of fire, hospital officials said.

Israel's new hard-line government had pledged earlier to step up strikes against militant strongholds in the Gaza area. Dozens of Palestinians have been killed in more than two weeks of raids, including at least 10 civilians.

Bus No. 37 was packed with students from Haifa University when it stopped in the hilltop neighborhood of Carmelia at 2:17 p.m. to let off passengers.

"I suddenly heard an explosion," said bus driver Marwan Damouni, an Israeli Arab, who was being treated at a hospital. "I didn't feel anything. I didn't hear anything. I opened my eyes after a minute and saw blood all over my arms."

BRIAN K. DIGGLE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Police forensics officers are seen working through the remains of a bombed bus in the northern Israeli city of Haifa, yesterday.

The explosion blew off the bus roof, shattered all its windows and toppled nearby palm trees. Floodlights cast an eerie glow on the scene, illuminating the charred skeleton of the vehicle.

The bomb was laden with metal shrapnel for greater deadliness, according to Police Commissioner Shlomo Aharonishki.

A spokesman for the Islamic militant group Hamas, Abdel Aziz Rantisi, praised the bombing but did not claim responsibility. "We will not stop our resistance," he said. "We are not going to give up in the face of the daily killing" of Palestinians.

Some Palestinians in Gaza called each other on cell phones, spreading news about the Haifa attack. Some were jubilant.

"It's about time. They've kept on hitting us and killing us, and now we've struck back," said an ice cream vendor in Gaza, who refused to give his name.

Students from Haifa University rushed to television sets to watch the coverage. Initially, a cafeteria manager refused to switch the channel from MTV, fearing arguments would erupt among students. Of the university's 15,000 students, about 20 percent are Arab, and there have been some heated demonstrations on campus during 29 months of Palestinian-Israeli violence.

Haifa is the city where Arabs and Jews live together," said Eyal Betkovic, 25, a first year Jewish biology student who was waiting for the bus to take him to an afternoon class when the blast shook the ground. "It should be an example," he said.

Powell says Iraq splitting United Nations

By George Gedda
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Secretary of State Colin Powell said Wednesday that Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein must not be allowed to split the world's nations into "arguing factions."

Powell showed his concern about the increasingly defiant attitude of America's critics on the U.N. Security Council in advance of an expected vote next week on a new resolution to authorize war against Iraq.

Leaders of several nations normally allied with the United States have said more time should be allowed for weapons inspections before any war, but Powell said the inspections are futile.

He contended that Iraq's intelligence agency in late January had taken chemical and biological agents "to areas far away from Baghdad near the Syrian and Turkish borders in order to conceal them."

Powell spoke at the Center for Strategic and International Studies a few hours after the foreign ministers of France, Germany and Russia joined forces in pledging to block the U.S.-backed resolution.

Powell said his problem with the position of the three is that they have failed to recognize that Saddam still has not made a decision to comply with Security Council demands.

"He has not made that strategic choice," Powell said. "And I don't think any one of them would argue that he has."

Powell added: "We will see in the next few days whether or not he understands the situation he is in and makes that choice."

A State Department official said Powell was not referring to a military timetable but rather a series of events in the next few days, including the anticipated Security Council vote next week.

Meanwhile, diplomatic sources said that if a war occurs, the U.S. Air Force will be able to use Prince Sultan Air Base in Saudi Arabia. It will take on 130 U.S. planes, the ostensible objective being to continue enforcing the no-flight zone over northern Iraq, the sources said.

In addition, an Arab official said Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates will provide oil to Jordan on the assumption Jordan's supplies from Iraq will be cut off in the event of war. According to the official, the amounts would be 50,000 barrels a day each from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait and 20,000 barrels a day from the UAE.

On Thursday, Powell will make a trip to New York where he will try to cajole fellow U.N. Security Council envoys to back the resolution advocating war against Iraq. At present, the Bush administration is short of the nine votes it needs to prevail in the Council vote.

Powell also will be present at the United Nations on Friday to hear the next report to the Security Council from U.N. weapons inspectors on Iraqi disarmament.

He said Iraq's "too-little, too-late gestures are meant not just to deceive and delay action by the international community" but rather to create divisions.

"That effort must fail. It must fail because none of us wants to live in a world where facts are defeated by deceit, where the words of the Security Council mean nothing, where Saddam and the likes of Saddam are emboldened to acquire and wield weapons of mass destruction."

Powell also said the United States has picked up new information about Iraqi activities since his presentation Feb. 5 to the Security Council on Iraqi violations. He said:

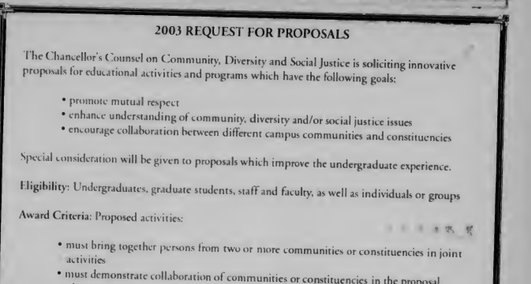
– In early February, fearing that U.N. inspectors had precise knowledge about storage locations, the Iraqis were moving prohibited materials every 12 to 24 hours.

– In mid-February, concerned about the surveillance capabilities of the U-2 overflights, Iraq was transferring banned materials in old vehicles and placing them in poor, working-class neighborhoods outside the capital.

On the Senate floor, two of the most senior senators, John Warner, R-Va., and Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., debated the administration's handling of Iraq.

"Say what you want about the president," Warner said. "I've seen a measure of courage in this kind man that I have not seen in others.

Secretary of State Colin Powell says that Iraq is splitting the United Nations.



He has said all along the buck stops on my desk and I accept responsibility."

"Courage is fine," Byrd replied. "But whether one has wisdom or vision or exercises good judgment along with courage is something else." He accused President Bush of failing to disclose the costs of the war.

Writing Coach

Published author with 25 years' experience in meeting deadlines can help you break through writing barriers and complete important projects on time. Call 413-467-9470 or email Joanne@yourpersonwriter.com

CINEMARK
THE BEST SEAT IN TOWN
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 - Thursday 3/6/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:10 4:20 7:15 10:20*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25*
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00*
DARK BLUE (R) (1:40 4:30) 7:50 10:30* (J-NO SHOWS Sun 3/2- Sneak Preview of Agent Cody Banks (PG) 3:00pm
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 4:05 6:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 10:00
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:10
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
LILTH-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 8:00
Senior Show 2/6/03 - GODS AND GENERALS 9:00AM
Doors open at 8:15AM
*-no passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

JAMES W. HATTRICK JR./COLLEGIAN

Face to Face

A student sits during an interview at yesterday's Hotel Restaurant and Travel Administration (HRTA) Career Fair held in the Campus Center Basement.

Journalist to make presentation

National Public Radio (NPR) journalist Corey Flintoff will report on his six months of teaching radio journalism in rural Mongolia today, including his encounters with a shaman, nomadic horsemen, Communist officials and a former United States president.

The lecture is at 4:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Flintoff's visit is made possible by the Williamson Fund.

"The idea of the fund is to bring a speaker who can not only talk to students in class, but also one who is of general interest to the public," said Meredith Feltus of Commonwealth College.

Feltus said that Flintoff was chosen because of his name recognition. Academic departments including communications, English and journalism, the Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society, the Williamson Fund and Commonwealth Honors are all sponsoring the event.

The fund makes it possible through an endowment to bring a speaker to UMass every year. Feltus said that Memorial Hall would be set up for a couple hundred people.

Flintoff's talk, "Questing in Genghisland: an NPR reporter in Mongolia," is based on his extended stay in that country, where he witnessed first-hand the political, economic and social changes brought about by the collapse of the Soviet Union. Flintoff is the lead newscaster on NPR's "All Things Considered," and also works as a correspondent. During 26 years of reporting, he has traveled to Alaska, Canada, Greenland, Finland, Ireland and Kosovo.

Flintoff will also be a guest lecturer in undergraduate classes as well as lead a class at Amherst Regional High School.

-Andrea Dickey

www.dailycollegian.com

2003 REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS

The Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice is soliciting innovative proposals for educational activities and programs which have the following goals:

- promote mutual respect
- enhance understanding of community, diversity and/or social justice issues
- encourage collaboration between different campus communities and constituencies

Special consideration will be given to proposals which improve the undergraduate experience.

Eligibility: Undergraduates, graduate students, staff and faculty, as well as individuals or groups

Award Criteria: Proposed activities:

- must bring together persons from two or more communities or constituencies in joint activities
- must demonstrate collaboration of communities or constituencies in the proposal planning process
- must promote mutual respect and understanding on the campus or in the larger community
- should represent new programs or collaborating partnerships as opposed to annual programs or continuations of past projects
- should focus program activities during the beginning of the fall 2003 semester

Examples of Activities Which Could be Funded: Forums, speakers, film/video series, seminars, workshops, training programs, public education programs, outreach activities to secondary schools and home communities, community public service programs, faculty/student collaboration to develop new courses, performance events, printed materials, posters.

Proposal Components:

- a clear description how proposed activities will meet both the goals and award criteria
- a list of groups involved and contact person or persons responsible for the activity
- a plan for evaluating the impact and effectiveness of the activities
- a time line indicating when the activities would start and conclude
- a budget

Award Ranges: $250 to $1500, with all awards expected to total $15,000

Submission Date and Location: Mailed, e-mailed to joycea@admin.umass.edu, faxed to 577-2455 or hand delivered by noon on Friday, April 4, 2003 to the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice, c/o Office of Human Relations, 206 Middlesex House.

Proposal Review and Award Announcements: A committee of the Chancellor's Counsel on Community, Diversity and Social Justice reviews all proposals. Awards will be announced during the week of April 14, 2003.

Proposal Writing Assistance: http://www.umass.edu/funding/FundHowTo.html Applicants are strongly encouraged to contact the Office of Human Relations for guidance in preparing proposals.

Additional Information: Contact the Office of Human Relations at joycea@admin.umass.edu or (413) 545-0851.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Letter from the Editor: Collegian advertising policy

To our Readership,

Over the past two weeks, three advertisements from an organization called Campustruth.org have appeared in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

The ads heralded one truth - two sides to every story, but only one truth. The three ads cited specific situations and quoted statistics and visuals about suicide bombers and terrorists, and compared the people of Palestine to those of Israel.

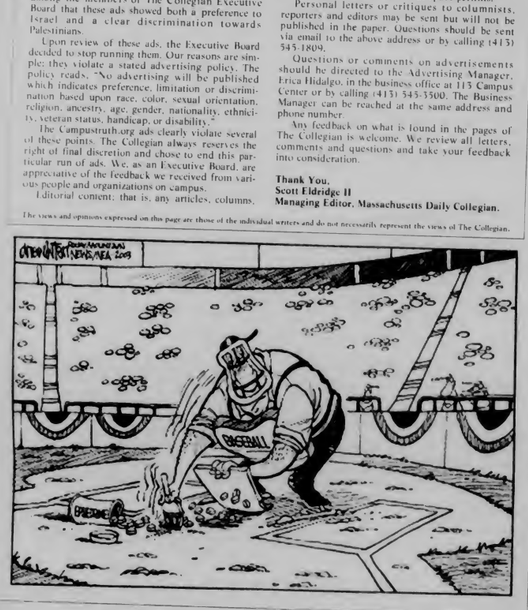
These ads, and others brought to us by Campustruth.org, showed decisive pro-Israeli and anti-Palestinian preferences. There is no doubt among the members of The Collegian Executive Board that these ads showed both a preference to Israel and a clear discrimination towards Palestinians.

Upon review of these ads, the Executive Board decided to stop running them. Our reasons are simple: they violate a stated advertising policy. The policy reads, "No advertising will be published which indicates preference, limitation or discrimination based upon race, color, sexual orientation, religion, ancestry, age, gender, nationality, ethnicity, veteran status, handicap, or disability."

The Campustruth.org ads clearly violate several of these points. The Collegian always reserves the right of final discretion and chose to end this particular run of ads. We, as an Executive Board, are appreciative of the feedback we received from various people and organizations on campus.

Editorial content, that is, any articles, columns, editorials, other written information and photographs, fall under the responsibility of the newsroom. Complaints or comments in the form of letters to the editor are received by the editorial desk and can be mailed to 113 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst, Ma. 01003 or emailed to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

Letters are reviewed by the editor of the Editorial/Opinion page, Jamie Loo, and should be addressed to the editor. They are subject to editing for content and length and should be kept to a reasonable size. Student submissions of 600 words or less are welcome and will run as space permits.



Personal letters or critiques to columnists, reporters and editors may be sent but will not be published in the paper. Questions should be sent via email to the above address or by calling (413) 545-1809.

Questions or comments on advertisements should be directed to the Advertising Manager, Erica Hidalgo, in the business office at 113 Campus Center or by calling (413) 545-3500. The Business Manager can be reached at the same address and phone number.

Any feedback on what is found in the pages of The Collegian is welcome. We review all letters, comments and questions and take your feedback into consideration.

Thank You,
Scott Eldridge II
Managing Editor, Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Letter to the Editor:

Spicing up student activism

To the Editor:

"What are they walking out for this year?"

We overheard one faculty member make this remark to another while we were passing out flyers advertising the national student walkout. This response exemplifies a common reaction to what many call "recycled protest." We have been using many of the same tactics year after year, especially on the UMass campus.

Each time an issue comes up, we mobilize with the same arsenal of tactics: we flyer, as if people read our flyers; we table, as if we're reaching a larger group of students than our friends; we hold meetings, as if we want to be there; and we stage rallies, as if we expect everyone to spontaneously join us. And while many tactics were very effective when they were introduced, and still are to some extent today, the constantly evolving world - the people, the issues, the larger society - requires us to meet challenges with fresh, creative responses. As the police, the media and other authorities (like the UMass administration and bureaucracy) continue to adapt in order to marginalize our efforts, we must strive to be one step ahead.

There are a large number of student groups dedicated to working on the anti-war cause throughout the country. Though these groups are often very effective, as students who are active on these projects, we have felt frustrated. Our frustration stems from the apathy of the general student body towards issues as important as the pending war with Iraq.

We also feel that some of the tactics that activists use to deal with an uninvolved population and an unresponsive government may be ineffective. While we don't want to minimize the work of well-intentioned people - including ourselves - we think a critical analysis of our tactics and approaches will only make us more effective as organizers. Motivated by these frustrations, we decided to try to plan an action that both reached a larger audience and tried a new approach (at least new to recent UMass organizing). Our goal was to try to do something that people couldn't ignore, or write off as the "same old stuff." A group of us took three days to plan an action we felt could address our frustrations while at the same time spread the word about the March 5 student walkout.

The result was a march styled after a funeral procession. We used a cardboard coffin, dressed in black, and carried a banner advertising the walkout. Instead of following a more traditional route of marching around the campus, we chose to actually walk through classrooms and hand out flyers directly to students. We made up a chant, "No war, no doubt, March 5 walk out," which we sang continually as we marched to and through lecture halls. We made a point of marching through the campus center and student union during the lunch hour - a time when these buildings are the most crowded with students.

This type of tactic is important because it pushes the boundaries of "acceptable" activism on campus. It also was an "in your face" way of metaphorically demonstrating the disruptive nature of war. We knew we would upset a lot of people by walking unannounced through classrooms, but that was a response we wanted. We felt that the parallel we could draw between our action disrupting the daily routine of students and the disruption to life in Iraq if war starts was just as important as promoting the walkout.

We recognize the need to mix traditional tactics - handing out flyers, chanting, writing a follow-up article - with new ideas like the one we tried. Taking risks and having a critique of the efforts we participate in is essential in keeping them alive. Intensifying an action such as the funeral procession by walking through classrooms was our way of trying to live out this ideal.

We see the action we did as one attempt at trying to find the balance between introducing new elements while utilizing tried and true methods. Only through continually critiquing our actions can our struggles and tactics evolve.

Katie Eident
Ian Trefethen
UMass students

www.dailycollegian.com

UConn/UMass senior joke

Jamie Loo

While I was tossing out junk mail earlier this week, I came across the blue and maroon card that is being sent to seniors, "The UConn/UMass Senior Campaign Challenge."

I haven't even graduated yet and the school is already asking me for money as a future alumna, in the clever disguise of a competition. Apparently, in our graduation fervor and the need to be better than UConn, seniors are supposed to start sending money to the UMass Annual Fund. We're competing with the Huskies for "the highest participation rate and average gift."

I went to the website (which looks like a high school student's computer science project). In the "UMass Giving" link, the first thing you see is how you can give with your credit card, followed by the number to the UMass Annual Fund and a link to the UMass dailyjolt.

Meanwhile, under the link "UConn Giving" is their annual senior week activities site, some additional propaganda on why you should give and a link to a page on their senior class gift committee. There are also photos of seniors at the basketball games, showing off their Husky pride. But the real kicker is that they have a link to their fight song. When you click on it another window pops up with a photo of a building at UConn. Then suddenly, rumbling out of my computer speakers was a drum roll, and the silhouette of words flashed onto the screen. The band starts playing and the words begin to light up. It was like following the bouncing ball and you could sing along with the band:

U...Conn...Hus...ky, symbol of might to the foe...fight...fight... Connect...icut...It's vict'ry...let's go..."

Wow, did I feel great to be a Minuteman at that moment. The pictures began changing and the words popped and slid on and off the screen with the next lines of the song. It lasted for over a minute and the tune was actually kind of catchy. We don't even have a long lyrical fight song, and our school is older than UConn. A similar window of "GO...GO U...Go UMASS...GO U-MASS," (which is the only fight song we have) really wouldn't have cut it.

They couldn't even write propaganda for why you should give to UMass. After my four years here, I honestly need more convincing. I've wasted precious time waiting in long lines at Whitmore, dealing with rude staffers, unwarranted tickets from parking services and waiting for the bus to get home safely after the escort service was cut.

I'm also lucky enough to graduate on time, despite all the waiting lists my name has been on for classes and all the floors I sat on because there were no more seats in a lecture hall. Lately, I've been praying that my car won't fall apart when it hits one of the many campus craters (aka potholes).

"Then suddenly, rumbling out of my computer speakers, was a drum roll and the silhouette of words flashed onto the screen. The band starts playing and the words begin to light up."

Don't get me wrong. I have a ton of school spirit and I'm a huge supporter of student life on campus. It's been a lot of fun. However, this doesn't mean I agree with the university infrastructure, and thus I can't see myself contributing to the annual fund itself. If UMass is getting any more money out of me after I leave from here, it will be in direct donations to the student groups I was involved in.

Interestingly, according to a student that works at the UMass Annual Fund, many alumni are reluctant to give because of infrastructure problems. After each phone call, workers are supposed to log in either the donation and where it's going, or why the alumnus wasn't interested in giving. One of the options for not giving, listed under this function is "PROBLEMS WITH BULGER." My source informed me that many alumni refuse to give because they read the news and think our leaders are wasting the money. Some of them were long time donors until Bulger became president, and have vowed not to give any more money until Bulger is gone.

And I don't blame them. To put it bluntly, aside from personal memories, there isn't a lot for UMass alumni to be proud of right now. It's now become a miracle to graduate in four years, and there's not much on campus for alumni to do when they come back to visit. And when they do, we overcharge them for food in the Coffee Shop.

The list is endless. I don't know about the rest of the class of 2003, but I've conceded this match. The UConn seniors will win this competition. When I stroll out of here in May, it will be with a sense of "good riddance" and a fair deal of optimism. I expect things around here to get better with Tombardi around, but who knows what Romney will end up doing to the campus system. Well, in the mean time, 'Go UMass.'

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

Discussions appeal to college community and offer hope to anti-war movement

Scott Eldridge II

Educate and activate.

A number of panel discussions and willing staff and students set to spend part of their day educating others added a dynamic to a noon-time rally that would otherwise be dearly missed.

This is the role of intellectuals, said linguistics professor Thomas Rueper. Activism, it was taught at one session, is aided by intellectual thought and academic reality.

We are all intellectuals. As we pursue our degrees - whether in the humanities, the arts, the sciences or business - we are playing the role of intellectuals. As intellectuals we have been taught to think about the world around us, the scenarios we are presented with. Certainly as intellectuals we have thought about this looming war with Iraq.

As intellectuals, however, we have not been trained to act, said Rueper. We may have our theories and thoughts about current affairs, but adding these and applying them to our actions is just as important.

Students and teachers alike can act as any free person, and can protest a war, a person or an idea. Whether you consider yourself an intellectual or not, you can rally and stand up against an idea you feel is wrong. But the Books not Bombs initiative made a direct connection between the education and the action.

Yesterday there were both. For the first time that I have seen with the latest anti-war demonstrations, they were clearly connected.

"For the first time that I have seen with the latest anti-war demonstrations, they were clearly connected."

The Books not Bombs campaign kicked off with a rally, an action. The rally featured thousands crowded into the Student Union. Students from Amherst Regional High School were there. Students and faculty from the University of Massachusetts were there. Certainly students from the other five colleges were there.

It was followed by discussions and presentations led by our own faculty, fellow students, graduate students and outside resources. Intellectuals like us.

For those listening to the panel discussion on creating an anti-war movement, our intellectual ability was applied to a cause, and actions for that cause were presented.

One speaker at the discussion, held later in the day in Herter, talked about his time as a student who was coming to the end of his studies at the University of Texas, and how he worried that he would find himself out of school and into the army. His message offered some hope.

Violence begets violence was his message. Years after the Vietnam War and the popular protests of the 1960s and 70s, the lessons learned and taught were still being applied.

He went on to discuss friends who chose to act out against the war by camping, in protest, on the White House lawn. Then President Richard Nixon said, after the protest, that he didn't notice the protestors because his attention was dominated by a Washington Redskins football game.

Years later, the speaker added, Nixon revealed that his debate over the use of nuclear armaments was deterred by the popular protests he had seen. One can't help but hope that the millions who protested worldwide have somehow stayed President Bush's hand, even if only for a short while.

Between the appeal to our intellect, the discussions and distribution of information, and the sharing of hope, yesterday's events added a new expansive element to the anti-war movement.

Now, more than ever, students have learned the facts and acted together in a nationwide effort to oppose a war. This is a sizeable impact even if it takes months or years for us to know it.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include author's name and phone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 300-600 words and must be addressed to the Editor. Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and must be addressed to the Editor. Commentaries should be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submission:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kurt Russell film piles on too much to build momentum

Director Ron Shelton's 'Dark Blue' like 'Traing Day' with less character

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Kurt Russell stars in the new action thriller, "Dark Blue." Russell's character serves a corrupt, veteran cop who comes from a long line of LAPD detectives.

It's the spring of 1992 and the city of Los Angeles seethes with anger, hatred and hostility. A young black truck driver named Rodney King has been brutally beaten to within an inch of his life by four white police officers. Those officers are now sitting in a Simi Valley courtroom five days shy of the verdict that will render them innocent of police brutality, and set the stage for the simmering resentments that have plagued an impoverished neighborhood to explode, violently and tragically, to the surface.

This festering cauldron of antipathy, a world where racial and class differences turn into violent orgies of frustration and destruction, is the major setting for "Dark Blue," a routine, if at times effective, corrupt cop drama. Thank goodness too, as the setting amps up the tension in a movie that would've seemed more like a tired struggle than a riveting drama.

"Dark Blue"
Directed by Ron Shelton
Starring Kurt Russell, Ving Rhames
Opens Friday
Rated R
110 mins.

Does this sound familiar? Older, experienced police detective working the mean streets of Los Angeles walks a morally suspect line when it comes to his job. He mentors a young rookie in the art of corruption, teaching him lessons on a cop's survival in the grungiest parts of the town – namely the willingness to do anything, to bend (or break) any rule to get the job done.

It should sound familiar. It sounds exactly like "Training Day" and that's hardly a surprise, seeing how "Training Day" author David Ayer also scripted "Dark Blue," which was based on a story by modern-noir specialist James Ellroy (entitled "The Plague Season"). The movie, despite taking pathways through old material, retains a raw power towards its subject. Ayer has a gift for writing naturalistic dialogue; the words here have the poetry of real life attached to them. Ayer writes the way people speak, avoiding overly hard-boiled and/or cinematic dialogue that sounds as though it has been processed through the screenwriter's handbook.

In "Dark Blue," Kurt Russell gets to bite into one of the juiciest roles of his career as Eldon Perry, Jr., a veteran cop who comes from a long line of LAPD detectives. Perry is a dirty cop, a man with a history of murders to his credit and a willingness to cross whatever line he needs to fulfill his duties as an upholder of the law – although his tactics put him down to the level of the criminals he is sworn to bust.

Russell gives one of his best, grittiest performances in awhile, since at least his performance in "The Thing." He makes Perry a man who's at once vicious and pathetic, a man who thinks he rules the streets but is only a lapdog for his bosses. Perry's boss, Jack Van Meter (Brendan Gleeson, in a fine, ferocious turn made with a scalding mix of racism, paternalism and apathy), is even more corrupt than Perry. When Perry discovers that the prime suspects in a brutal mass murder at a Korean market are a couple of Van Meter's prized snitches, Perry is ordered to pin it on two anonymous low-level scum.

Russell deftly captures Perry's moral ambiguities, the cop's allegiance to the force at all costs as well as the psychic toll his actions have cost him and his family. Regret slowly creeps into the cop's tough-guy exterior, first as he sees his family life crumble into divorce and alcoholism, and then as he sees how badly the life has gotten to his new young partner Bobby Keough (Scott Speedman), who has been forced to perform his own cold-blooded murder under Perry's tutelage.

Keough, meanwhile, is involved with a black sergeant (Michael Michelle) who doesn't like to reveal her last name or the precinct where she works. The sergeant is assistant and ex-lover to Chief Holland (a commanding Ving Rhames), an ambitious, do-right man who turns down a chance to lead the Cleveland police squad in order to take a chance at becoming L.A.'s first black head chief and root out corruption in Perry's SIS unit. Tensions come to a head as the Rodney King verdicts come in, and trouble boils over in South Central.

If this sounds a bit overloaded, it is. Ayer and director Ron Shelton (a long way from his sports film surroundings, he is doing as good a job as he can) pile on the story threads until the movie begins to sag under itself. This may be a rare case of one movie having too much characterization and plot details; the two-hour running time is not enough time for Ayer and Shelton to cover all their bases. "Dark Blue" has some visceral impact, but it's also sloppy and unfocused. Indeed, the only-in-the-movies coincidences cut the movie off from the realism it aims for and only intermittently succeeds at finding. The individual pieces here get short shrift when jammed so close against each other, allowing the movie to wobble and shudder whenever it careens from one plot point to another. Shelton should have trimmed either the family subplots to make for a leaner, sharper thriller, or avoided procedural elements to craft a searing character portrait of a man haunted by his dark actions. Instead, what Shelton winds up with is a film that is neither here nor there.

"Dark Blue" lacks the propulsive, kinetic punch of "Narc" and the steely grit of "Training Day." It takes a well-traveled road through well-traveled terrain, and piles on too much to build momentum. The L.A. riot backdrop lends the movie a much needed tension, and the explosive climax as Perry drives through the anger, rolling crowds in pursuit of suspects has a snapping verve... until it forces Russell to grandstand in a time honored cinematic fashion more suited to an Al Pacino movie. There's some good stuff in "Dark Blue," but its hidden in a thicket of unoriginality and lost opportunities.

An offer of warm drinks for the winter weather

Dedicated to the subtle science of microwave cookery in all its forms and variants

MICROLOGY

Jessica Pelletier

When do we first grow to love coffee? Why does this addiction develop? As a child, nothing seemed more repulsive than the stuff my parents drank every morning. True, some adhere to this revulsion until adulthood, but most of us have grown to love the brew with a passion that is fierce and undying. So, since the Amherst area is forecasted to remain in a state of perpetual precipitation, I dedicate this week's column to two hot little cups of joy for you to consume.

Chai tea has grown in popularity over the past six months, which doesn't surprise those loyal to its creamy flavor and pungent aroma. With origins around the area of India, Tibet and Nepal, this spiced milk tea acts as a digestive aid "unless you're lactose intolerant, of course," and it's amazingly easy to make your own cup at home.

1 pint water
1 pint whole milk
1 cinnamon stick
3 tbsp. brown sugar
1 tsp. cloves
2 bay leaves
2 whole peppercorns
1 tea bag (black tea)

In a one quart microwave safe container, microwave water and spices for three minutes on high. Remove spices, add tea bag, brown sugar and milk. Continue to microwave on high for three minutes or until steamy.

Mexican Hot Chocolate is a rich, thick version of traditional hot chocolate that makes the Swiss Miss Chic want to run away from the mountains crying. Real chocolate, sugar and eggs make the sweetness seem more like a dessert than a drink.

3 cups whole milk
1 egg, slightly beaten
1/4 cup sugar
1 tsp. vanilla extract
2 oz. bittersweet chocolate
1 tsp. ground cinnamon

Microwave one cup of milk, sugar, chocolate and cinnamon, stirring until chocolate has completely melted. Gradually add the rest of the milk and continue to heat until steamy. Add one cup of milk and mix to the egg and vanilla. Continue to heat, stirring frequently and serve topped with whipped cream.

Here are some other facts concerning your cup of java you may not have been aware of. Shade grown coffee has increased in popularity due to its environmentally friendly method of farming. The shade trees of the rain forest fertilize the soil for the coffee crop, which reduces the need for chemical fertilizers. The trees also provide a habitat for local birds, which consume the insects that would normally have fed on the coffee bushes. This reduces the need for harmful pesticides as well.

The Songbird Foundation is a non-profit organization that focuses on educating others about the environmental benefits of farming shade-grown coffee. To find out more information on this new farm-

Continued on page 6

AtmosphereU.com: interactive meeting place

By ERIK TAYLOR

Here at the University of Massachusetts, with a student population of around 24,000, the task of establishing a social life can seem pretty intimidating. That figure doesn't count the thousands of other students at the other four colleges located in the Pioneer Valley. Everyone ranging from outgoing partiers to the socially shy eventually find a way for the world of UMass to shrink to fit into their own needs. Now, with a vast majority of the student population connecting to the Internet, means of meeting your fellow students are becoming easier.

AtmosphereU.com aims to create closer relations with the college market (ages 17-24), and offers a full range of Internet and collegiate marketing services.

"The problem with other college life websites is that they are created by companies to cater towards the college market," said co-founders Chris McKinnon and Brett Woitunski. "AtmosphereU.com is made by students for students."

The website acts as an interactive meeting place among its members. On this online community there are ways to share pictures, movies and music with online members. Also, for the people constantly using online instant messaging, each member has the option of creating a personal profile complete with a picture and screen name. By using their online forums, students can post their own upcoming parties, discuss important UMass happenings, advertise items for sale, inquire about apartments in the area and anything else worth sharing with others.

If a person was new to the area or just wanted to learn more about the UMass community, and other cinematic dialogue that

> "The problem with other college life websites is that they are created by companies to cater towards the college market."
>
> -Chris McKinnon and Brett Woitunski

AtmosphereU.com would be the ideal site to visit. There are online profiles for local bars and clubs along with listings of DJ's and concerts. Someone who attends an AtmosphereU.com sponsored function can see if their antics were captured for display in the photo galleries. There are also special promotions for local businesses and discounts for website members. A wide variety of links to other local sites just adds to the usefulness of such a website.

On March 8 AtmosphereU.com will be sponsoring a college night at local ski area Berkshire East in Charlemont, Mass. There will be music for skiers and snowboarders alike, or for people who just want to party and win prizes. Thanks to the efforts of the staff of AtmosphereU.com, this college night is possible and is just one example of how the website is bringing college students together.

After March 4, the official launch date of AtmosphereU.com, it increased its resources in order to better provide for the student community. This increase doesn't stop there. Efforts are being made to include 200 more colleges and universities by fall 2003. This very possible nation-wide connection could do far more than bring the UMass community together.

"Say someone at UCLA is coming to the Amherst area and wants to know what's going on," Woitunski said. "He can sign on at the UCLA site and check what's happening in the Amherst area and vice-versa."

With a good start and sound ideas for its future, the creators of AtmosphereU.com may have their work cut out for them. Connecting the students of UMass may seem like a daunting task in itself, much less attempting to connect the nation. It is up to the individual members to join this free website and start using it for their own advantage.

Academy of Country Music Awards near

Nominees announced Tuesday

The following is a list of nominations announced Tuesday for the 38th annual Academy of Country Music Awards.

Entertainer: Brooks & Dunn, Kenny Chesney, Dixie Chicks, Alan Jackson, Toby Keith.

Male Vocalist: Kenny Chesney, Alan Jackson, Toby Keith, Tim McGraw, George Strait.

Female Vocalist: Terri Clark, Faith Hill, Martina McBride, Shania Twain, Lee Ann Womack.

Duo: Brooks & Dunn, Hometown News, Montgomery Gentry, Sons of the Desert, The Bellamy Brothers.

Group: Diamond Rio, Dixie Chicks, Lonestar, Rascal Flatts, Trick Pony.

New Male Vocalist: Joe Nichols, Blake Shelton, Darryl Worley.

New Female Vocalist: Kellie Coffey, Jennifer Hanson, Rebecca Lynn Howard.

New Duo or Group: Emerson Drive, Nickel Creek, Pinmonkey.

Album: "Drive," Alan Jackson; "Home," Dixie Chicks; "No Shoes, No Shirt, No Problems," Kenny Chesney; "On a Mission," Trick Pony; "Unleashed," Toby Keith.

Single: "19 Somethin'," Mark Wills; "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)," Toby Keith; "Just What I Do," Trick Pony; "Somebody Like You," Keith Urban; "The Good Stuff," Kenny Chesney.

Song: "A Lot of Things Different," composers Bill Anderson and Dean Dillon, artist Kenny Chesney; "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)," composer and artist Toby Keith; "Drive (For Daddy Gene)," composer and artist Alan Jackson; "Forgive," composers Rebecca Lynn Howard and Trey Bruce, artist Rebecca Lynn Howard; "I'm Movin' On," composers Phillip Brian White and David Vincent Williams, artist Rascal Flatts.

Vocal Event of the Year: "Beer for My Horses," Toby Keith with Willie Nelson; "Designated Drinker," Alan Jackson with George Strait; "Mendocino County Line," Willie Nelson with Lee Ann Womack; "Picture," Kid Rock with Sheryl Crow; "Whiskey River," Trick Pony and Willie Nelson.

Video: "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue (The Angry American)," Toby Keith; "Drive (For Daddy Gene)," Alan Jackson; "I'm Gonna Miss Her (The Fishin' Song)," Brad Paisley; "Just What I Do," Trick Pony; "She's My Kind of Rain," Tim McGraw; "Who's Your Daddy," Toby Keith.

Shania Twain is one nominee for Best Female Vocalist.

Associated Press

Brooke, Cher and 3LW: People in today's news

Brooke Shields' baby is due in May. The parents expect a girl.

NEW YORK (AP) — Brooke Shields is ready for motherhood.

"I'm in for a real life change, and I'm ready for it, as ready as I can be," she told AP Radio in an interview. "It doesn't scare me, it excites me, and yet I just dream that there will be so many things that I will really be getting a quick education on."

Shields and writer-producer Chris Henchy, who got married in April 2001, know the baby due in May will be a girl. They haven't picked out a name.

There's just too many cooks in the kitchen. When you start showing the list you have to your family, everybody has something to say about it, so we're kind of shelving it for a little while," the 37-year-old actress said. "Hopefully one of the names we have will stand out."

Shields provides the voice of the title character in "Miss Spider's Sunny Patch Kids," based on the children's books written by David Kirk. The animated special will air March 31 on Nickelodeon.

The actress, who began modeling as a toddler, has appeared in films including "Pretty Baby," "The Blue Lagoon" and "Endless Love." Her NBC sitcom, "Suddenly Susan," ended in 2000 after four years.

Shields and tennis star Andre Agassi married in April 1997, and filed for divorce two years later.

• • •

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Cher's production company has reported the theft of a wig valued at $8,000 to $10,000, apparently stolen from the singer's collection of tresses during a sold-out concert stop.

"The wig is described as half-black and half-teal, and it was braided," said Christie Collins, a police spokeswoman.

While police did not release the wig's value, they have classified the case as a grand larceny — meaning the value exceeds $200.

Cher's tour manager estimated the value between $8,000 and $10,000, said Larry W. Wilson Jr., general manager of the Richmond Coliseum, where the "Living Proof – Farewell Tour 2003" made a stop Feb. 23.

Cher took off the wig after singing "All Or Nothing" and put it back in a room where her other wigs were stored, Collins said.

"We're still not 100 percent sure the wig was stolen out of our facility," he said.

• • •

TOKYO (AP) — Fresh from winning his 14th Brit Award, the British version of the Grammy, and signing a $125 million contract with record label EMI, Robbie Williams would seem to be a natural export to U.S. pop charts.

"A lot has been said about me going to the States, 'Why hasn't he broken the States?'" said the 29-year-old British pop star during a trip to Japan to promote his new album, "Escapology." "I'm more excited to be doing something here."

Williams, who first found fame with boy band Take That, has sold 28 million albums – 10 million in Britain alone. His hits include "Millennium" and "Rock DJ."

"I was in New York last week," he said. "They were a really hard audience. I was really scared. When I'm in Japan, people are very respectful. It's very safe and very sweet."

Williams took home honors last month as the top British male solo artist at the Brit Awards.

His trip to Japan is his first in five years, and Williams said he was somewhat taken aback by the turnout at Monday's news conference.

"There's loads of people here," he said. "Am I the warmup? Is Michael Jackson on next?"

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — The R&B group 3LW, which became a duo last year when one member left after a bitter dispute, is once again a trio.

Fifteen-year-old Jessica Benson will join original group members Kiely Williams, 16, and Adrienne Bailon, 19. She replaces Naturi Naughton, who left in August. Benson beat out hundreds of girls who competed in open auditions, the group's publicist said.

"Just a few weeks ago I was just a high school student with dreams of a professional music career and now it's happening so quickly," Benson, of Severn, Md., said in a statement released Tuesday.

Naughton claims she was fired because she wasn't "ghetto enough," among other reasons. She has filed a lawsuit against her former group mates, the group's management and Sony Music. 3LW's label.

The group has denied her charges.

3LW's self-titled debut album went platinum, and spawned hits such as "Playas Gon' Play." However, their second disc, "A Girl Can Mack," recorded with Naughton but released after her departure, was a commercial disappointment.

Associated Press

Cher's production company has reported the theft of a wig valued at $8,000 to $10,000, apparently stolen from the singer's collection of tresses during a sold-out concert stop.

BenGeorge 7 to play at Van Meter dormitory for Alternative Spring Break

By MIKE BARRETT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts-based anti-folk artists have finally released their second full length disc. "Sing Along With the Wind Chimes..." Over the past year and a half this troublesome duo has amassed 23 tracks of lo-fi fuzz and hum, and managed to turn out a couple of pop gems that will surprise just about anyone.

Still clad in matching red and blue ski masks and sweatpants, the BenGeorge7 plays out with much frequency across the valley; an out-of-tune guitar, a ramshackle drum kit, off-key singing and an improv-like stage show that will always please. On the album, Ben and George have added a new sheen to their song-writing and production — an instrument known as the sampler.

It's really too bad that they haven't added the instrument to their live set. If you've been following their shows over the past few months, you'll be pleased to find some of their newer "hits" on the album. "Just To Make You Cry" – "Yearbook" and "Boat" have all found their way into the digital world. These pseudo-pop gems sit in a large slosh of otherwise near-incoherent post-punk noise. BenGeorge7 even nod their heads to the hardcore scene they grew out of (or just away from) on "I Cologne I or You" and "Reflections on Love." As with anything these nerds make, it'll leave the listener scratching his or her head and somehow looking for more.

Lyrics are from some other place, outside our collective conscience, but as warm as a blanket. "the harbor is covered in sunlight/ and I'm sick of waiting/ she sits in her car/ cause her car loves the driveway" from "Boat," or on "Yearbook:" "Tom Selleck in her yearbook/ she drew his face with her favorite pen/ Tom Selleck in her yearbook/ she put him there/ she put him there." Songs are sung to melodies catchy enough to keep you humming them all through your Saturday night date, but surreal enough to make you wonder why.

BenGeorge7 comes closest to sounding like Men's Recovery Project covering Will Oldham – or maybe Smog trying to break old Casio keyboards over a Tascam four-track and keep up an edge of beauty. Terms like "edgy" and "groundbreaking" get thrown around a lot, and I can't say they really apply here. No, this is way too fun, raw and cool. The BenGeorge7 is not for everyone, but should definitely be a big part of the "quintessential" college experience.

BenGeorge7 will be playing at the Alternative Spring Break benefit concert this Friday, March 7th, 8 pm to midnight, in the Van Meter dorm basement. $3 at the door.

Visit www.dailycollegian.com. Today.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST
online at www.finearts center.com
545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS FOR TICKETS

Catch the beat
Share the Joy

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12 KODO
FAC Concert Hall at 7:30pm | Main Campus

ROTTERDAM PHILHARMONIC
FAC Concert Hall at 8:30pm | Main Campus

SATURDAY, APRIL 12 MINGUS BIG BAND
FAC Concert Hall at 8pm | Main Campus

TAKE 3 and SAVE 15%
545-2511 OR
1-800-999-UMAS

TICKETS ONLY
$7, $10, $15
FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

Familiarity breeds content.

Mandatory Arts and Living meeting.
Monday.
March 10 @ 5 p.m.

AMHERST downtown we have it all!

Entertainment Briefs

Movie mania, Miss America, and high speed chases

More Americans are going to the movies, MPAA chief says

LAS VEGAS (AP) – Americans saw an average of 5.7 films each and paid an average of $5.80 per ticket last year, said the president of the Motion Picture Association of America.

"People want to get away from it all," Jack Valenti said Tuesday before delivering an annual address to the ShoWest convention of theater owners.

Valenti and John Fithian, president of the National Association of Theatre Owners, said the 1.6 billion tickets sold nationwide made 2002 the best moviegoing year since 1957. The figure represented a 10.2 percent increase from 2001.

Fithian dismissed as "mush" a lawsuit filed in Chicago last month challenging pre-movie ads as deceptive because they delay the advertised starting times of films. The lawsuit seeks class-action status and up to $75 per patron as "lost time" damages.

"There is virtually no chance these lawsuits will succeed," he said. Valenti said box-office receipts for 2002 totaled $9.5 billion, up 13.2 percent from the $8.4 billion he reported a year ago.

"The economics of the business are good," he said.

MPAA companies released 225 films in 2002, or 29 more than the previous year, Valenti said. He counted 242 films from other distributors, or 45 fewer than in 2001.

He put the average combined cost of making and marketing a movie at $89.4 million, and said that was $10.7 million more than in 2001.

About 5,700 delegates and guests are attending the convention, which ends Thursday with an awards ceremony honoring actors including Adam Sandler, Diane Lane, Catherine Zeta-Jones and Christopher Walken, director Sam Mendes and producer Brian Grazer.

Miss America and Atlantic City kiss and make up

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) – There she is. And there she'll stay – for now.

Miss America Organization officials signed a five-year contract Tuesday to keep the beauty pageant in Atlantic City, 14 months after threatening to leave.

The deal, which will continue an annual $678,000 subsidy from the Atlantic City Convention & Visitors Authority, has options that could add 10 years to the term.

As important, perhaps, is what it doesn't call for: new subsidies.

Apart from buying lighting and sound equipment needed to make Boardwalk Hall "TV ready" for the annual television show, the convention authority didn't have to sweeten the pot, said chairman Mark Juliano.

In exchange for the subsidy and in-kind services to Miss America, the authority gets an Atlantic City plug on the annual pageant telecast and use of the reigning Miss America for 10 appearances a year at trade shows and other events.

"Miss America really doesn't belong anywhere but in Atlantic City," Juliano said.

TV stations keep up coverage of high-speed pursuits

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Despite pleas from city leaders to use more restraint in televising police chases, two TV stations aired a high-speed pursuit that ended peacefully with the arrest of a man suspected of theft.

Police arrested Ray Lusky Monday after he ran into an apartment building in North Hollywood. Lusky led police on a 20-mile chase in a 1985 red Toyota, running several red lights. At one point, he put his car in reverse and drove backward for nearly two blocks, police said.

"He was a really good driver," said police Sgt. Ted Spicer.

At least two TV stations showed the pursuit, even though city officials have urged the media to reduce their coverage because it leads to dangerous situations.

The Police Commission voted unanimously in January to prohibit police officers from most vehicle pursuits – those prompted by traffic infractions such as speeding or running a stop sign.

The new policy allows for chases when drivers are being sought for misdemeanors or felonies or in cases in which officers believe a crime is about to be or has just been committed.

News executives said their coverage of chases has been fair and responsible. None said they would agree to scale back the coverage in response to the appeal.

Student guitarist making a name

By JIM CROOK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Stephen Brandano knows where he wants to be in the near future. "Hopefully on Comedy Central," says Brandano, known around campus as Stevie B. "I think I'm gonna be a standup comedian with the guitar."

Brandano, a sophomore undeclared major at UMass, has been making a name for himself around campus with his acoustic guitar and his sense of humor. A solo artist, he plays original songs, cover songs and parodies at open mic nights on campus and in town.

"I do have some original songs that aren't funny," Brandano says. "Those are the ones I have the most fun playing, but people tend to like the funnier songs more; I think if I get anywhere, it's gonna be with the comedy songs."

Short and thin with dark brown unkempt hair, Brandano – with his reddish sideburns and goatee – can be seen around campus often wearing a Detroit Red Wings jersey, a backwards baseball cap and headphones.

Born and raised in Melrose, Mass., he graduated from Melrose high school in 2001. It was during his junior year of high school that Brandano picked up a new hobby.

"My dad had a guitar and I started playing it," he says. "I guess I'm self-taught. My dad taught me how to read (guitar) tabs on the Internet, and using that I learned how to play."

He performed to his largest audience (2,000 people) at his high school graduation.

"Everybody always says to me, 'When I think of graduation, I think of your songs,'" Brandano beams.

"That was really a great moment."

Brandano brought his musical stylings to UMass, where he immediately floored the student body at the Blue Wall during freshman orientation. It was the first time he played his "funny songs" to a larger audience, and it also marked his first encore.

"I played 'Miles High' [a parody of John Denver's 'Leaving on a Jet Plane'], and everybody loved it," says Brandano. "I got off the stage and [the crowd] was just like, 'Have him come back up.'"

He returned to the stage and played a parody of "Walking in Memphis" by Marc Cohn, called "Boston Common."

"Put on my Grateful Dead shirt / Boarded the train / Touched down in the Boston Common / In the middle of a sunny day / And I'm walking at Hempfest..." he provides as a lyrical sample from "Boston Common."

"Even now, in my sophomore year, people will come up to me and say, 'Oh yeah, you played at orientation,'" Brandano says. "It was awesome."

Brandano sits on the futon in his Z-room in John Quincy Adams tower. The white walls of the room are barely visible underneath the multitude of posters (Dave Matthews, Led Zeppelin, Phish, The Simpsons, Reservoir Dogs). A portrait of Trey Anastasio, drawn during class by Brandano, also occupies space around the room. There is a Phish logo drawn by crayon on the wall next to the window.

Brandano is wearing a hooded Dave Matthews Band sweatshirt with blue jeans and a Red Sox cap turned backward. Besides his father, Brandano says Matthews was his biggest influence in him wanting to learn to play the guitar.

"It sounds corny, but I saw 'Dave Matthews – Tim Reynolds Storytellers' on VH1, and I was like, 'Wow, I want to be able to do that.'"

Brandano also lists funnyman Adam Sandler as a major influence.

Currently Brandano has limited opportunities to play to an audience outside of the casual performance around the dorm. He plays the first Friday of the month at the Black Sheep, a sandwich shop in Amherst. Every three weeks or so, there is an "open mic" at the Craft Center in the basement of the Student Union. Brandano encourages newcomers and says anyone who wishes to display their talents should do so.

"We're always looking for more people," he says. "Poetry, standup ... anything you want to do in front of the mic is more than welcome."

However, Brandano expresses frustration over the lack of open mics in the area.

"Other than [the Black Sheep and the Craft Center], I really don't know any other places to play," he says. "I think we need another place on campus that's just for (open mics). Like if the Blue Wall had Wednesday night open mic, that would be really cool. Or the Coffee Shop across the way from the Blue Wall ... just a little place where you could chill and have someone playing an acoustic guitar. I'd like something like that."

Brandano realizes playing small shows around Amherst are good for practice, but they won't get him to the big time.

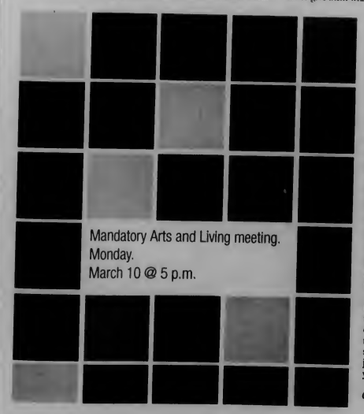
"I think I have to get out and do more. Just playing these open mics is not gonna really get me anywhere," he says, adding that he plans to play in Boston this summer in hopes of being discovered.

"I don't know what the chances are that someone's gonna find you [in Amherst]," he added.

If Brandano needed any affirmation of his song-playing talents, he received it after playing an open mic at a comedy club.

"There were a couple of real comedians [at the club] and both of them loved me," Brandano recalls. "I talked to one of them afterwards, and he was just like, 'Listen, you can do this. You can be big.' And I've always thought about that, and now it's just a matter of getting out there and doing it."

Those who have seen Brandano in concert know of his love to perform.



"I went to see him at the Craft Center, and it was the first time I'd seen him play in front of strangers," said Dan Beaulieu, a close friend of Brandano's. "You could just tell by the way he worked the crowd, by the way he was smiling the whole time, that he was where he wanted to be."

Lenny Smith, also a close friend, agrees.

"Stevie B. lives to entertain," says Smith.

Throughout his four-year career of guitar playing, Brandano's role as a crowd-pleaser hasn't changed.

"If someone from the crowd yells something out, and I know how to play it or it's one of my songs, I'm playing it," he says. "I like to give them what they want. That's what it's all about."

'Micrology'

Continued from page 5

ing technique visit songbird.org.

This last bit of information is something I've had personal interest in since I first discovered it exists. One of the rarest and most expensive teas on the market is called white tea. This delicate tea is grown in the Fujian province of China only one time during the year, and is among the rarest in the world. A quarter pound of the tea will set you back about thirty dollars. Studies at the Linus Pauling Institute have found the antioxidant levels of white tea are higher than any other variety and may be beneficial in fighting cancer.

And if you've read the article this far, and you're still not in the mood to go out and make these drinks, at least give them a try the next time you're in the mood for something warm. Who knows? It just may be a welcome change from your daily grind.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

UMass heads to Harvard

By BOB MCGOVERN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is scheduled to play Harvard in Cambridge, Mass. this Saturday for its third contest of the season.

The Minutewomen (1-1) were unable to face Dartmouth on Wednesday in accordance with an Ivy League scheduling policy.

Harvard (0-1) has played one game this season, losing to a powerful Northwestern team, 7-4. In viewing that contest, UMass coach Carrie Bolduc sees definite strengths on the Harvard side, including a well set-up defense. "They have a strong defense...we will see pressure," Bolduc said.

Most of this pressure will be coming on a midfield press, which the Crimson utilize to control the opposition's attack.

"We can't let them dictate what we do," Bolduc said. "We need to focus on our game."

Harvard sets up a hung back defense, much like previous Maroon and White opponent Holy Cross. Northwestern was able to break the pressure by forcing Harvard to contest the ball rather than a direct attack. Bolduc has a different approach.

The Minutewomen will be aggressive in their attack on the Crimson defense, Bolduc said. The Maroon and White hopes to draw defenders to open up mismatches and openings. This offense worked against Holy Cross' defense in the first game of the season.

The Crimson also exhibits a quick offense that has some good one-on-one players. Midfielders Jen Brooks and Elaine Bellisss combined for 33 goals last year, and are crucial on both offense and the defensive press.

Harvard tends to look for one-on-one matchups on offense and tries to draw defenders, much like the Minutewomen. The Maroon and White feels it will have to play aggressive but smart in order to slow down the Crimson snipers.

"We need to be sure we see what they're doing," Bolduc said.

The Minutewoman defense is well equipped for Harvard's attack style, with athletes capable of containing a one-on-one battle.

Defenders Bridget Byrne, Kelli Kurtz, Kristin St. Hilare and Andrea Valachovic have been playing well this season and will be putting pressure on Harvard's attack.

Maroon and White goaltender Cyndi Doyle will need to watch cutting Harvard players. The one-on-one matchups are intended to distract and leave room for attack. Doyle has been consistent so far this year, but will be tested by a different offense than she has seen as of yet.

The Minutewomen trail the all-time series with a 12-13 record against Harvard. The Maroon and White defeated the Crimson last year 9-5 on Garber Field.

Bolduc wants her team to stick to its game plan and work on other aspects against a formidable Harvard squad.

This may be a sign in regards to where the Minutewomen want to be playing.

"We know what they do well," Bolduc said. "We have to win based on what we're doing."

Thomas Pock finished second among Hockey East defensemen in points scored in the regular season. No. 71 tallied 32 points in 34 games for the Minutemen.

Hockey returns to HE playoffs

Continued from page 10

playoff game here," Turner said. "It's an exciting time and I think the emotions are going to run wild. It's important to make sure we go in there confident, relaxed."

Cahoon was pleased to lead the team back to the playoffs for his co-captain Turner, the fourth-best scorer in school history.

"I know Timmy can leave here with his head held high," he said.

An equally demanding task for the young team is remaining fresh should the series go to three nights. The Minutemen have not been as sharp on the second night of two-game sets all season, and a split in the first two contests would mean a third consecutive night of hockey.

"I try not to think about it, but I can tell you that the third game, both teams will be tired, not just us, but the adrenaline will be flowing," Winer said.

Degon seemed outright excited about the possibility of playing three nights in a row.

"I can't stop thinking about it," he said. "It's every kid that comes to college's dream — to just keep playing. From seeing these guys in the locker room, we're pretty well-conditioned athletes, so I don't think we're scared at all."

The Maroon and White is preparing quite a bit for the Black Bears. And Winer used the assets that he had in practice to get ready for Maine's sharpshooters.

"Having Tommy [Pock] back at the point really helps because he takes a lot of one timers and that's what Maine does," he said. "They either put Shields back for one timers or Nault back there, so it's nice having Tommy back there."

The trip north will also be an anomaly for the Minutemen, as they will be forced into a long road trip for the first time since Christmas.

"To be honest with you, some of these guys like the travel," Degon said. "The hotel beds are a lot better than dorm room beds."

Though the Maroon and White is back in the playoffs for the first time in Cahoon's tenure, a trip to the postseason is far from good enough for the third-year head coach.

"We don't want to just get into the playoffs," Cahoon said. "We want to win. I want this team to play some more hockey."

So, should the Minutemen be enthusiastic about their matchup with a top five team in a hostile road environment? Many people throughout the country have expressed their opinion that the youngsters from Amherst could be primed for an upset special.

"I was pretty surprised when I saw that too; it's good to have some support from other people," Degon said. "That win last weekend helps a lot because we know we can beat them. Upset to us is if they beat us. We're going into this weekend knowing we can beat these guys and that we have a pretty good shot at them, so it wouldn't be an upset if we win."

Brooke, Cher and 3LW: People in today's news

Brooke Shields' baby is due in May. The parents expect a girl.

NEW YORK (AP) – Brooke Shields is ready for motherhood.

"I'm in for a real life change, and I'm ready for it, as ready as I can be," she told AP Radio in an interview. "It doesn't scare me, it excites me, and yet I just know that there will be so many things that I will really be getting a quick education on."

Shields and writer-producer Chris Henchy, who were married in April 2001, know the baby due in May will be a girl. They haven't picked out a name.

"There's just too many cooks in the kitchen. When you start showing the list you have to your family, everybody has something to say about it, so we're kind of shelving it for a little while," the 37-year-old actress said. "Hopefully one of the names we have will stand out."

Shields provides the voice of the title character in "Miss Spider's Sunny Patch Kids," based on the children's books written by David Kirk. The animated special will air March 31 on Nickelodeon.

The actress, who began modeling as a toddler, has appeared in films including "Pretty Baby," "The Blue Lagoon" and "Endless Love." Her NBC sitcom, "Suddenly Susan," ended in 2000 after four years.

Shields and tennis star Andre Agassi married in April 1997, and filed for divorce two years later.

• • •

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) – Cher's production company has reported the theft of a wig valued at $8,000 to $10,000, apparently stolen from the singer's collection of tresses during a sold-out concert stop.

"The wig is described as half-black and half-teal, and it was braided," said Christie Collins, a police spokeswoman.

While police did not release the wig's value, they have classified the case as a grand larceny – meaning the value exceeds $200.

Cher's tour manager estimated the value between $8,000 and $10,000, said Larry W. Wilson Jr., general manager of the Richmond Coliseum, where the "Living Proof – Farewell Tour 2003" made a stop Feb. 25.

Cher took off the wig after singing "All Or Nothing" and put it back in a room where her other wigs were stored, Collins said.

"We're still not 100 percent sure the wig was stolen out of our facility," he said.

• • •

TOKYO (AP) – Fresh from winning his 14th Brit Award, the British version of the Grammy, and signing a $125 million contract with record label EMI, Robbie Williams would seem to be a natural export to U.S. pop charts.

"A lot has been said about me going to the States. 'Why hasn't he broken the States?'" said the 29-year-old British pop star during a trip to Japan to promote his new album, "Escapology." "I'm more excited to be doing something here."

Williams, who first found fame with boy band Take That, has sold 28 million albums – 10 million in Britain alone. His hits include "Millennium" and "Rock DJ."

"I was in New York last week," he said. "They were a really hard audience. I was really scared. When I'm in Japan, people are very respectful. It's very safe and very sweet."

Williams took home honors last month as the top British male solo artist at the Brit Awards.

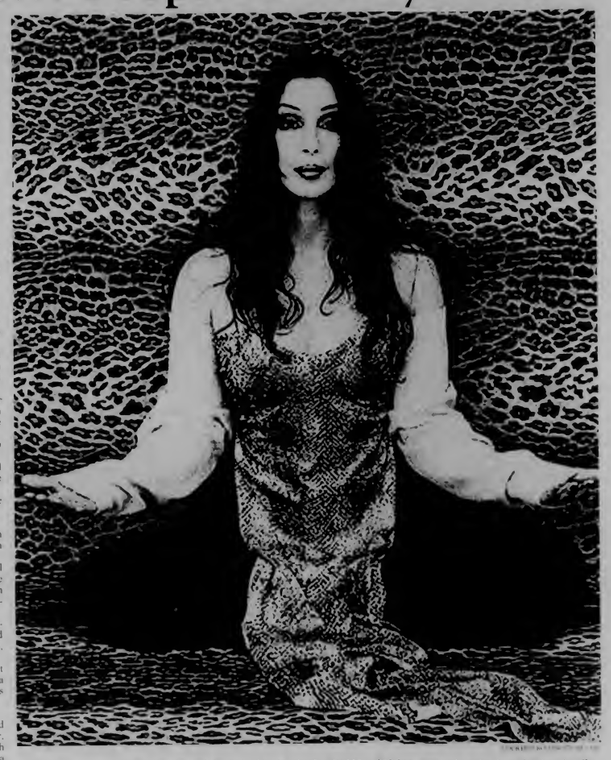
His trip to Japan is his first in five years, and Williams said he was somewhat taken aback by the turnout at Monday's news conference.

"There's loads of people here," he said. "Am I the warmup? Is Michael Jackson on next?"

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) – The R&B group 3LW, which became a duo last year when one member left after a bitter dispute, is once again a trio.

Fifteen-year-old Jessica Benson will join original group members Kiely Williams, 16, and Adrienne Bailon, 19. She replaces Naturi Naughton, who left in August. Benson beat out hundreds of girls who competed in open auditions, the group's publicist said.



"Just a few weeks ago I was just a high school student with dreams of a professional music career and now it's happening so quickly," Benson, of Severn, Md., said in a statement released Tuesday.

Naughton claims she was fired because she wasn't "ghetto enough," among other reasons. She has filed a lawsuit against her former group mates, the group's management and Sony Music, 3LW's label.

The group has denied her charges.

3LW's self-titled debut album went platinum, and spawned hits such as "Playas Gon' Play." However, their second disc, "A Girl Can Mack," recorded with Naughton but released after her departure, was a commercial disappointment.

Associated Press

Cher's production company has reported the theft of a wig valued at $8,000 to $10,000, apparently stolen from the singer's collection of tresses during a sold-out concert stop.

BenGeorge 7 to play at Van Meter dormitory for Alternative Spring Break

By Mike Barrett
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts based anti-folk artists have finally released their second full length disc, "Sing Along With the Wind Chimes..." Over the past year and a half this troublesome duo has amassed 23 tracks of lo-fi fuzz and hum, and managed to turn out a couple of pop gems that will surprise just about anyone.

Still clad in matching red and blue ski masks and sweatpants, the BenGeorge7 plays out with much frequency across the valley; an out of tune guitar, a ramshackle drum kit, off-key singing and an improv-like stage show that will always please. On the album, Ben and George have added a new slant to their song-writing and production – an instrument known as the sampler.

It's really too bad that they haven't added the instrument to their live set. If you've been following their shows over the past few months, you'll be pleased to find some of their newer "hits" on the album. "Just To Make You Cry," "Yearbook" and "Bout" have all found their way into the digital world. These pseudo-pop gems sit in a large slosh of otherwise near incoherent post-punk noise. BenGeorge7 even nod their heads to the hardcore scene they grew out of (or just away from) on "I Cologne For You" and "Reflections on Love." As with anything these nerds make, it'll leave the listener scratching his or her head and somehow looking for more.

Ben George7
'Sing Along with the Wind Chimes with The Ben George 7'
Breaking World Records

Lyrics are from some other place, outside our collective conscience, but as warm as a blanket. "The hair bor is covered in sunlight/ and I'm sick of waiting/ she sits in her car/ cause her car loves the drive way" from "Bout," or on "Yearbook." "Tom Selleck in her yearbook/ she drew his face with her favorite pen/ Tom Selleck in her yearbook/ she put him there/ she put him there." Songs are sung to melodies catchy enough to keep you humming them all through your Saturday night date, but surreal enough to make you wonder why.

BenGeorge7 comes closest to sounding like Men's Recovery Project covering Will Oldham – or maybe Smog trying to break old Casio keyboards over a Tascam four-track and keep up an edge of beauty. Terms like "edgy" and "groundbreaking" get thrown around a lot, and I can't say they really apply here. No, this is way too fun, raw and cool. The BenGeorge7 is not for everyone, but should definitely be a big part of the "quintessential" college experience.

BenGeorge7 will be playing at the Alternative Spring Break benefit concert this Friday, March 7th, 8 pm to midnight, in the Van Meter dorm basement. $5 at the door.

Visit www.dailycollegian.com. Today.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST
online at www.fineartscenter.com
545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS FOR TICKETS

Catch the beat
Share the Joy

WEDNESDAY MARCH 5 KODO
FAC Concert Hall at 7:30pm | Main Campus

SUNDAY MARCH 16 ROTTERDAM PHILHARMONIC
FAC Concert Hall at 2:30pm | Main Campus

SATURDAY APRIL 5 MINGUS BIG BAND
FAC Concert Hall at 8pm | Main Campus

TAKE 3 and SAVE 15%
545-2511 OR
1-800-999-UMAS

TICKETS ONLY
$7, $10, $15
FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown we have it all!

Mandatory Arts and Living meeting.
Monday.
March 10 @ 5 p.m.

Entertainment Briefs

Movie mania, Miss America, and high speed chases

More Americans are going to the movies, MPAA chief says

LAS VEGAS (AP) – Americans saw an average of 5.7 films each and paid an average of $5.80 per ticket last year, said the president of the Motion Picture Association of America.

"People want to get away from it all," Jack Valenti said Tuesday before delivering an annual address to the ShoWest convention of theater owners.

Valenti and John Fithian, president of the National Association of Theatre Owners, said the 1.6 billion tickets sold nationwide made 2002 the best moviegoing year since 1957. The figure represented a 10.2 percent increase from 2001.

Fithian dismissed as "mush" a lawsuit filed in Chicago last month challenging pre-movie ads as deceptive because they delay the advertised starting times of films. The lawsuit seeks class-action status and up to $75 per patron as "lost time" damages.

"There is virtually no chance these lawsuits will succeed," he said. Valenti said box-office receipts for 2002 totaled $9.5 billion, up 13.2 percent from the $8.4 billion he reported a year ago.

"The economics of the business are good," he said.

MPAA companies released 225 films in 2002, or 29 more than the previous year, Valenti said. He counted 242 films from other distributors, or 45 fewer than in 2001.

He put the average combined cost of making and marketing a movie at $89.4 million, and said that was $10.7 million more than in 2001.

About 5,700 delegates and guests are attending the convention, which ends Thursday with an awards ceremony honoring actors including Adam Sandler, Diane Lane, Catherine Zeta-Jones and Christopher Walken, director Sam Mendes and producer Brian Grazer.

Miss America and Atlantic City kiss and make up

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) – There she is. And there she'll stay – for now.

Miss America Organization officials signed a five-year contract Tuesday to keep the beauty pageant in Atlantic City, 14 months after threatening to leave.

The deal, which will continue an annual $678,000 subsidy from the Atlantic City Convention & Visitors Authority, has options that could add 10 years to the term.

As important, perhaps, is what it doesn't call for: new subsidies.

Apart from buying lighting and sound equipment needed to make Boardwalk Hall "TV ready" for the annual television show, the convention authority didn't have to sweeten the pot, said chairman Mark Juliano.

In exchange for the subsidy and in-kind services to Miss America, the authority gets an Atlantic City plug on the annual pageant telecast and use of the reigning Miss America for 10 appearances a year at trade shows and other events.

"Miss America really doesn't belong anywhere but in Atlantic City," Juliano said.

TV stations keep up coverage of high-speed pursuits

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Despite pleas from city leaders to use more restraint in televising police chases, two TV stations aired a high-speed pursuit that ended peacefully with the arrest of a man suspected of theft.

Police arrested Ray Lusky Monday after he ran into an apartment building in North Hollywood. Lusky led police on a 20-mile chase in a 1985 red Toyota, running several red lights. At one point, he put his car in reverse and drove backward for nearly two blocks, police said.

"He was a really good driver," said police Sgt. Ted Spicer.

At least two TV stations showed the pursuit, even though city officials have urged the media to reduce their coverage because it leads to dangerous situations.

The Police Commission voted unanimously in January to prohibit police officers from most vehicle pursuits – those prompted by traffic infractions such as speeding or running a stop sign.

The new policy allows for chases when drivers are being sought for misdemeanors or felonies or in cases in which officers believe a crime is about to be or has just been committed.

News executives said their coverage of chases has been fair and responsible. None said they would agree to scale back the coverage in response to the appeal.

UMass heads to Harvard

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is scheduled to play Harvard in Cambridge, Mass. this Saturday for its third contest of the season.

The Minutewomen (1-1) were unable to face Dartmouth on Wednesday in accordance with an Ivy League scheduling policy.

Harvard (0-1) has played one game this season, losing to a powerful Northwestern team, 7-4. In viewing that contest, UMass coach Carrie Bolduc sees definite strengths on the Harvard side, including a well set-up defense. "They have a strong defense...we will see pressure," Bolduc said.

Most of this pressure will be coming on a midfield press, which the Crimson utilize to control the opposition's attack.

"We can't let them dictate what we do," Bolduc said. "We need to focus on our game."

Harvard sets up a hung back defense, much like previous Maroon and White opponent Holy Cross. Northwestern was able to break the pressure by forcing Harvard to contest the ball rather than a direct attack. Bolduc has a different approach.

The Minutewomen will be aggressive in their attack on the Crimson defense, Bolduc said. The Maroon and White hopes to draw defenders to open up mismatches and openings. This offense worked against Holy Cross' defense in the first game of the season.

The Crimson also exhibits a quick offense that has some good one-on-one players. Midfielders Jen Brooks and Elaine Beltisos combined for 33 goals last year, and are crucial on both offense and the defensive press.

Harvard tends to look for one-on-one matchups on offense and tries to draw defenders, much like the Minutewomen. The Maroon and White feels it will have to play aggressive but smart in order to slow down the Crimson snipers.

"We need to be sure we see what they're doing," Bolduc said.

The Minutewoman defense is well equipped for Harvard's attack style, with athletes capable of containing a one-on-one battle.

Defenders Bridget Byrne, Kelli Kurtz, Kristin St. Hilare and Andrea Valachovic have been playing well this season and will be putting pressure on Harvard's attack.

Maroon and White goaltender Cyndi Doyle will need to watch cutting Harvard players. The one-on-one matchups are intended to distract and leave room for attack. Doyle has been consistent so far this year, but will be tested by a different offense than she has seen as of yet.

The Minutewomen trail the all-time series with a 12-13 record against Harvard. The Maroon and White defeated the Crimson last year 9-5 on Garber Field.

Bolduc wants her team to stick to its game plan and work on other aspects against a formidable Harvard squad.

This may be a sign in regards to where the Minutewomen want to be playing.

"We know what they do well," Bolduc said. "We have to win based on what we're doing."

Thomas Pock finished second among Hockey East defensemen in points scored in the regular season. No. 71 tallied 32 points in 34 games for the Minutemen.

Student guitarist making a name

By Jim Crook
Collegian Correspondent

Stephen Brandano knows where he wants to be in the near future. "Hopefully on Comedy Central," says Brandano, known around campus as Stevie B. "I think I'm gonna be a standup comedian with the guitar."

Brandano, a sophomore undeclared major at UMass, has been making a name for himself around campus with his acoustic guitar and his sense of humor. A solo artist, he plays original songs, cover songs and parodies at open mic nights on campus and in town.

"I do have some original songs that aren't funny," Brandano says. "Those are the ones I have the most fun playing, but people tend to like the funnier songs more. I think if I get anywhere, it's gonna be with the comedy songs."

Short and thin with dark brown unkempt hair, Brandano – with his reddish sideburns and goatee – can be seen around campus often wearing a Detroit Red Wings jersey, a backwards baseball cap and headphones.

Born and raised in Melrose, Mass., he graduated from Melrose high school in 2001. It was during his junior year of high school that Brandano picked up a new hobby.

"My dad had a guitar and I started playing it," he says. "I guess I'm self-taught. My dad taught me how to read (guitar) tabs on the Internet, and using that I learned how to play."

He performed to his largest audience (2,000 people) at his high school graduation.

"Everybody always says to me, 'When I think of graduation, I think of your songs,'" Brandano beams.

"That was really a great moment."

Brandano brought his musical stylings to UMass, where he immediately floored the student body at the Blue Wall during freshman orientation. It was the first time he played his "funny songs" to a larger audience, and it also marked his first encore.

"I played 'Miles High' [a parody of John Denver's 'Leaving on a Jet Plane'], and everybody loved it," says Brandano. "I got off the stage and [the crowd] was just like, 'I have him come back up.'"

He returned to the stage and played a parody of "Walking in Memphis" by Marc Cohn, called "Boston Common."

"Put on my Grateful Dead shirt / Boarded the train / Touched down in the Boston Common / In the middle of a sunny day / And I'm walking at Hempfest..." he provides as a lyrical sample from "Boston Common."

"Even now, in my sophomore year, people will come up to me and say, 'Oh yeah, you played at orientation,'" Brandano says. "It was awesome."

Brandano sits on the futon in his Z-room in John Quincy Adams tower. The white walls of the room are barely visible underneath the multitude of posters (Dave Matthews, Led Zeppelin, Phish, The Simpsons, Reservoir Dogs). A portrait of Trey Anastasio, drawn during class by Brandano, also occupies space around the room. There is a Phish logo drawn by crayon on the wall next to the window.

Brandano is wearing a hooded Dave Matthews Band sweatshirt with blue jeans and a Red Sox cap turned backward. Besides his father, Brandano says Matthews was his biggest influence in him wanting to learn to play the guitar.

"It sounds corny, but I saw 'Dave Matthews – Tim Reynolds Storytellers' on VH1, and I was like, 'Wow, I want to be able to do that.'"

Brandano also lists funnyman Adam Sandler as a major influence.

Currently Brandano has limited opportunities to play to an audience outside of the casual performance around the dorm. He plays the first Friday of the month at the Black Sheep, a sandwich shop in Amherst. Every three weeks or so, there is an "open mic" at the Craft Center in the basement of the Student Union. Brandano encourages newcomers and says anyone who wishes to display their talents should do so.

"We're always looking for more people," he says. "Poetry, standup ... anything you want to do in front of the mic is more than welcome."

However, Brandano expresses frustration over the lack of open mics in the area.

"Other than [the Black Sheep and the Craft Center], I really don't know any other places to play," he says. "I think we need another place on campus that's just for (open mics). Like if the Blue Wall had Wednesday night open mic, that would be really cool. Or the Coffee Shop across the way from the Blue Wall ... just a little place where you could chill and have someone playing an acoustic guitar. I'd like something like that."

Brandano realizes playing small shows around Amherst are good for practice, but they won't get him to the big time.

"I think I have to get out and do more. Just playing these open mics is not gonna really get me anywhere," he says, adding that he plans to play in Boston this summer in hopes of being discovered.

"I don't know what the chances are that someone's gonna find you [in Amherst]," he added.

If Brandano needed any affirmation of his song-playing talents, he received it after playing an open mic at a comedy club.

"There were a couple of real comedians [at the club] and both of them loved me," Brandano recalls. "I talked to one of them afterwards, and he was just like, 'Listen, you can do this. You can be big.' And I've always thought about that, and now it's just a matter of getting out there and doing it."

Those who have seen Brandano in concert know of his love to perform.

"I went to see him at the Craft Center, and it was the first time I'd seen him play in front of strangers," said Dan Beaulieu, a close friend of Brandano's. "You could just tell by the way he worked the crowd, by the way he was smiling the whole time, that he was where he wanted to be."

Lenny Smith, also a close friend, agrees.

"Stevie B. lives to entertain," says Smith.

Throughout his four-year career of guitar playing, Brandano's role as a crowd-pleaser hasn't changed.

"If someone from the crowd yells something out, and I know how to play it or it's one of my songs, I'm playing it," he says. "I like to give them what they want. That's what it's all about."

'Micrology'

Continued from page 5

ing technique visit songbird.org.

This last bit of information is something I've had personal interest in since I first discovered it exists. One of the rarest and most expensive teas on the market is called white tea. This delicate tea is grown in the Fujian province of China only one time during the year, and is among the rarest in the world. A quarter pound of the tea will set you back about thirty dollars. Studies at the Linus Pauling Institute have found the antioxidant levels of white tea are higher than any other variety and may be beneficial in fighting cancer.

And if you've read the article this far, and you're still not in the mood to go out and make these drinks, at least give them a try the next time you're in the mood for something warm. Who knows? It just may be a welcome change from your daily grind.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

Hockey returns to HE playoffs

Continued from page 10

playoff game here," Turner said. "It's an exciting time and I think the emotions are going to run wild. It's important to make sure we go in there confident, relaxed."

Cahoon was pleased to lead the team back to the playoffs for his co-captain Turner, the fourth-best scorer in school history.

"I know Timmy can leave here with his head held high," he said.

An equally demanding task for the young team is remaining fresh should the series go to three nights. The Minutemen have not been as sharp on the second night of two-game sets all season, and a split in the first two contests would mean a third consecutive night of hockey.

"I try not to think about it, but I can tell you that the third game, both teams will be tired, not just us, but the adrenaline will be flowing," Winer said.

Degon seemed outright excited about the possibility of playing three nights in a row.

"I can't stop thinking about it," he said. "It's every kid that comes to college's dream – to just keep playing. From seeing these guys in the locker room, we're pretty well-conditioned athletes, so I don't think we're scared at all."

The Maroon and White is preparing quite a bit for the Black Bears. And Winer used the assets that he had in practice to get ready for Maine's sharpshooters.

"Having Tommy [Pöck] back at the point really helps because he takes a lot of one timers and that's what Maine does," he said. "They either put Shields back for one timers or Nault back there, so it's nice having Tommy back there."

The trip north will also be an anomaly for the Minutemen, as they will be forced into a long road trip for the first time since Christmas.

"To be honest with you, some of these guys like the travel," Degon said. "The hotel beds are a lot better than dorm room beds."

Though the Maroon and White is back in the playoffs for the first time in Cahoon's tenure, a trip to the postseason is far from good enough for the third-year head coach.

"We don't want to just get into the playoffs," Cahoon said. "We want to win. I want this team to play some more hockey."

So, should the Minutemen be enthusiastic about their matchup with a top five team in a hostile road environment? Many people throughout the country have expressed their opinion that the youngsters from Amherst could be primed for an upset special.

"I was pretty surprised when I saw that too; it's good to have some support from other people," Degon said. "That win last weekend helps a lot because we know we can beat them. Upset to us is if they beat us. We're going into this weekend knowing we can beat these guys and that we have a pretty good shot at them, so it wouldn't be an upset if we win."

UMass heads to A-10's

Travels to Kingston, R.I. for opener with La Salle

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's hard to tell what to expect of a team in its first year with a new coach. Should the players struggle to adjust to the new system? Or will they be sparked by the change in bench generals?

For the Minutewomen, it has been a little of both. They started off the season on an 8-1 streak, the best start in team history since the inaugural 1968-69 campaign. On the flip side, UMass has struggled after a holiday trip that produced losses against Florida and Michigan.

Since then, the squad has suffered losses in 12 of its final 18 games, and limped to the end of the season minus the services of point guard Katie Nelson and shooting guard Cleo Foster, the latter of which saw action in the final game against Duquesne.

Six months ago, it wasn't easy to predict what a team that had gone 8-8 in the Atlantic 10 would do under the helm of former Cornell coach Marnie Dacko. Tonight, it will begin the final chapter in Dacko's first season, with a 6 p.m. matchup against LaSalle in the first round of the A-10 tournament.

As for predicting tonight's game, the only contest between the two teams took place on Feb. 2. The Minutewomen, spearheaded by 17 points and 15 rebounds from Jennifer Butler, ran away to a 66-51 victory at the Mullins Center. UMass put three players in double-digit scoring, including Butler, Ebony Pegues (12 points), and Nekole Smith (11) en route to the victory.

Ekaterina Markova and Jill Marano, both of whom scored 12 points, led the Explorers. Marano is also leading the squad with 15 ppg, with Davineia Payne (11.9) and Kat Foley (11.3) also averaging double digits.

LaSalle comes into tonight's game off a 58-53 win at Rhode Island that snapped a three-game losing streak. It also ended a six-game skid on the road, and at no better a place than the Ryan Center, site of this weekend's championship.

Back in Amherst, the Minutewomen – and their coach – are anxious to get to Kingston, R.I.

"We've been waiting for this the whole season," said Butler, who became the first UMass player in six years to make the A-10 All-Conference first team, as announced last night at the annual Commissioner's banquet. She is the first Minutewoman to accomplish the feat since Crystal Carroll in 1997.

"We've played strong the last two games, so we're just trying to take that into the tournament," Butler added.

Butler also earned the A-10 Defensive Player of the Year award, marking the second straight year the senior from Brooklyn, N.Y. has been given the accolade.

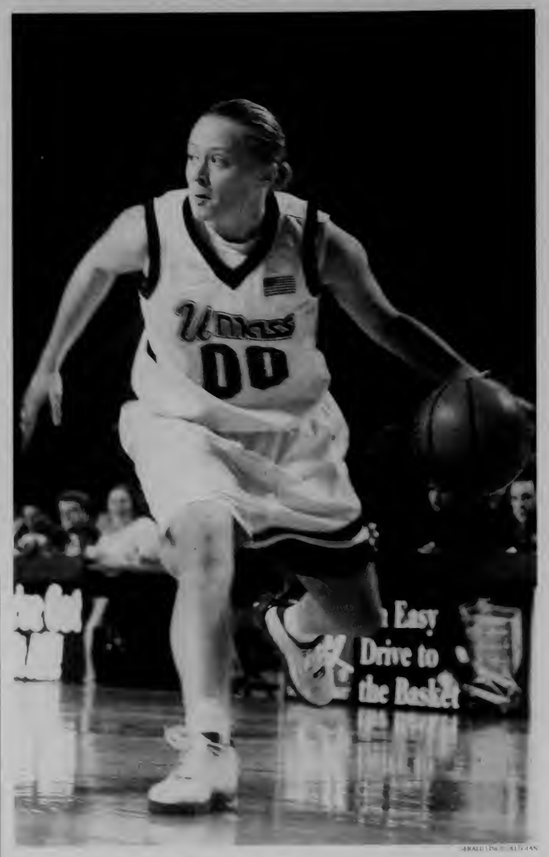
Dacko will be coaching in her first Atlantic 10 tournament, and while the road to Kingston has been rough for her crew, she remains positive.

"I'm pleased with the way we played the first half against Duquesne," she said, "but there's still things we have to work on. I didn't have any expectations coming in."

Dacko still remains cautious, though, and with good reason. The Maroon and White showed plenty of spirit against the Dukes, but still allowed them back into the game after leading by as many as 16 points.

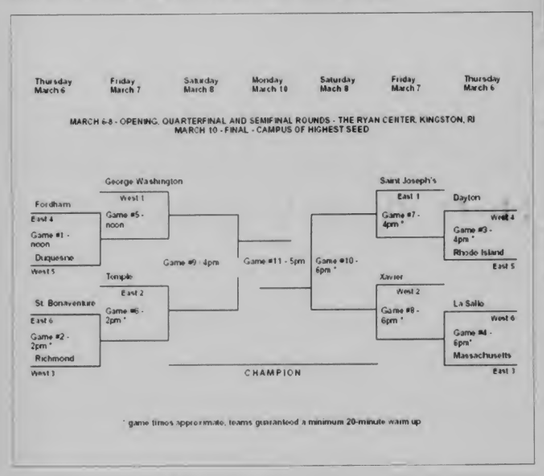
Judging from that clash with Duquesne, the result of tonight's game could come down to the performance of Dacko's five senior regulars – Butler, Smith, Pegues, Siiri Liivandi and Amber Sneed.

On Sunday, the seniors were the story – on Senior Day, no less – as all five reached double digits, and the quintet accounted for all but one of UMass' 77 points.



If the Minutewomen win tonight, they'll face West Division No. 2 seed Xavier, led by A-10 All-Conference first-teamers Amy Waugh and Reetta Piipari. UMass dropped a 77-65 decision to the Musketeers at the Cintas Center on Jan. 24.

Rounding out the first round matchups, East No. 4 Fordham and West No. 5 Duquesne will start off today's games at noon. The Rams are led by All-Conference first-teamer Mobolaji Aktode (16.8 ppg, 5.5 rebounds per game), while the Flyers counter with first-teamer Beth Friday (14.4 ppg).



Following Fordham-Duquesne, St. Bonaventure and Richmond square off. Courtney Mattingly (12.0 ppg) leads the Bunnies and Ebony Tanner (16.3 ppg) heads the Spiders.

Finally, host Rhode Island will square off against Dayton. The Rams feature Denise King (13.3 ppg) and the Flyers are led by Stefanie Miller (11.9 ppg).

The championship game is scheduled for Monday at 5 p.m. Temple, led by all-defensive player Stacey Smalls, will look to defend its title.

UMass senior Siiri Liivandi will play in her final Atlantic 10 Tournament this weekend at Kingston, R.I. The Minutewomen open tonight against La Salle.

Bonnies' no-show boosts Minutemen to 4th place

By ADAM GORLICK
Associated Press

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) – It was their only easy win in a disappointing season. But, stunned Massachusetts players still called it a hollow victory.

The Minutemen clinched 4th place in the Atlantic 10 and a home game in the opening round of the conference tournament when St. Bonaventure didn't show up for Wednesday's game.

"We automatically get a home game. That helps," said sophomore point guard Anthony Anderson. "But you never really want anything handed to you like that. You kind of want to earn it."

After being barred from the conference tournament and having to forfeit six Atlantic 10 conference wins for using an ineligible player, the Bonnies' players voted to skip the remaining two games of the season. School officials agreed to abide by their wishes. The Bonnies' game against Dayton on Saturday was also canceled.

The decision came two days after the conference ruled that junior center Jamil Terrell, a transfer from Coastal Georgia Community College, failed to meet NCAA junior college transfer guidelines.

The forfeit still left Massachusetts – coming off a 65-58 loss to Rhode Island and an 88-46 drubbing by Temple – with a losing record and little hope of postseason play.

The Minutemen were 11-16 overall and 5-9 in the league going into the game that wasn't played. The forfeit boosted their league mark to 6-9.

"As a whole, I'm pretty bummed out," said co-captain Micah Brand.

Both Brand and Anderson have said they would have played if they were in St. Bonaventure's position.

"I'm a senior so it's one less game I get to play," Brand said. "It's one less game we can put out there and try to put the chemistry together before the conference tournament starts."

Their last encounter with the Bonnies in February had provided one of the few bright spots in the season with the Minutemen coming out on top, 82-76,on St. Bonaventure's home court.

"We were really excited about playing," Brand said.

"I think we would have had a pretty good shot tonight," he said. "Every time we've played them, it's always been a tough game. It's always come down right to the wire."

UMass Coach Steve Lappas said he regretted the lost opportunity for his players.

"What are we in this for? We're in it for the competition," Lappas said. "We have some kids with three games left in their career. Now all of a sudden, they have two. It's not fair to them."

"We have a young team. We want to have as many games as possible," he said. "It would have been a great opportunity for our kids to get out and get a little more experience."

Ian McCaw, Massachusetts' athletic director, also said he was disappointed in St. Bonaventure's decision.

"I think you want to encourage your student athletes to finish the season," he said. "But I recognize they are in a tough situation."

St. Bonaventure has agreed to reimburse the university for lost revenues from ticket sales and concessions, McCaw said.

He said he had no firm figures, but estimated the losses could range from $50,000 and $100,000.

E-mail us at:
Sports@
dailycollegian.com

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 ► Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 ► A great place to get contact lenses
3 ► Convenient hours and location
4 ► FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 ► Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

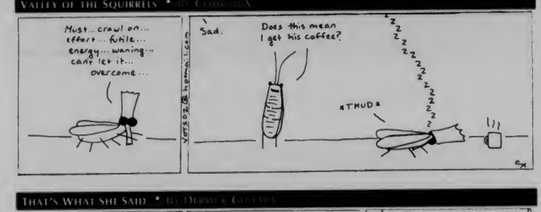
CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Carlo Rossi All varieties 4Lt. $7.99
Rubinoff Flavored vodkas 1.75Lt. $9.99
Monday Saturday 9am 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584-8174

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Kreeke
Cold Duck Campfire
Saint Le Mars
Green Crossing
Rosy Daughter
UPSTAIRS AT THE ABC
POOL / DARTS / PINGPONG
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT
24-26 N. Pleasant St. • Amherst MA
413.253.4400
www.amherstbrewing.com

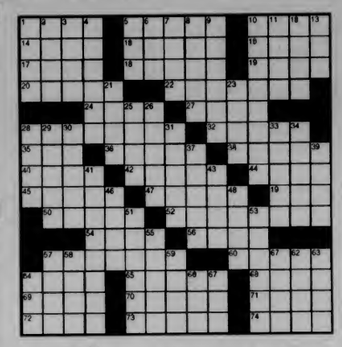
GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY



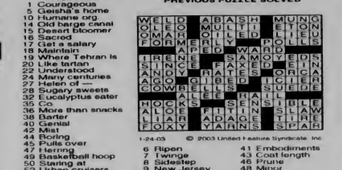
GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

THE TORQUES • BY TOM TOLES



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY CHRIS A.

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • BY DERRICK CURTIS



ACROSS
1 Courageous
5 Geisha's home
10 Rename org
14 Old barge canal
15 Desert Bloomer
16 Sacred
17 Get a salary
18 Maintain
19 Where Tehran is 20 Like tartan
22 Understood
24 Many centuries
27 Helen of ___
28 Sugary sweets
32 Eucalyptus eater
35 Lie
36 More than snacks
38 Barter
40 Genial
42 Mist
44 Boring
45 Pulls over
47 Herring
49 Basketball hoop
50 Stamp at
52 Urban cruisers
54 Bound
56 Stereo system (hyph.)
57 Passed a bill
60 Easily damaged
64 Pickling ingredient
67 Mexican cola
68 Amscray
69 Renown
70 Ice sheets
71 Early Coloradans
72 Recipe qtys.
73 Ticket prices
74 Type

DOWN
1 Electronic reminder
2 By mouth
3 Mean money
4 Contradicted
5 Bump hard
6 Ripen
7 Twinge
8 Sidestep
9 New Jersey airport
10 Yacht repair place
11 Telly opening
12 Fifty
13 Writer — Bland
21 Student's quarters
23 Grime
25 Votes against
26 Arguments
28 Processes cotton
29 Wed
30 "Bones" on "Star Trek"
31 Dozed off
33 Gene Tierney movie
34 Wing it (hyph.)
37 Abraham's wife
39 Shade trees
41 Embodiments
43 Coat length
46 Prune
48 Mirror telling out
51 Disembark
53 Tend
53 Talk show
55 Perry's secretary
57 Sorrowful cry
58 Rundown dwelling
59 Famous label
61 Parking lot sight
62 Old Roman road
63 In case
64 Behind, on a ship
66 Kind of neckline
67 Feminine ending

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-24-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
- High: 31
- Low: 6

FRIDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 26

SATURDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 25

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Tomato Rice Soup
- Cheese Quesadilla (vegetarian)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- Tomato Rice Soup
- BBQ Chicken Quarters
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Old Fashioned Beef Stew with Biscuit
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schaffer
COPY EDITOR
Jesse Greenspan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Mike Kulak / Dan Simmons
Lizzy Nielsen

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The haves have not a clue."
- Pearl Jam

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You needn't take things quite so seriously today – and yet you yourself will surely be taken seriously.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't lose sight of things you most want to attain. It may mean you have to go without something.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Someone close to you is likely to want to get even closer today, and it will surprise you both.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
The more unusual it is, the more you're going to like it – whether at the workplace or at home.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
The unlikely may well prove likely today – and vice versa. You may have to address certain issues.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You may come in contact with someone who knows how to make sense of issues you've found difficult.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You won't find yourself waiting around too much today; be prepared to swing into action early on.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Now is no time to neglect your home in any way. Keep things neat and tidy.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Take care that you're not living too much in your head at this time. Trust something that you're not likely to forget.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
What begins with excitement is likely to develop quickly today into something that you're likely to remember.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
What you need to know now is how to spend some time fine-tuning. The major push is over.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You may have reason to regret a recent decision today, but before long you'll realize that it is okay.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Voyager Van $1750 549-6023

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Deli Department Sales Associate part-time afternoons and evenings weekends required experience preferred call Atkins 253-9528

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + workstudy available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours from New York and Philadelphia), A Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, motor bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20- 8/16. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

Assistant Needed for busy office on Nantucket Island May-Aug. or Dec. Computer, accurate typing and telephone Skills necessary. Salary and housing. Fax resume to 508 228 8778 or Mail to: Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Internship: For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9,300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmaill1@yahoo.com

FOR SALE

2 Good Goodyear 265/75-16 Truck Tires $40 for pair. Your old GM 78-87 M10size need a radiator? I have good one $50 545-1956

Furniture Sale For sale: Italian leather love seat and chair, platform bed, Surround Sound Stereo System, new A/C unit, all at great prices. For more info call 413-546-1258

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX

www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Are you driving to and from southern California over spring break? A chance to earn extra money call 545-1956

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 2bedrm apt $425+utils Aval. ASAP in Amherst on bus line, heat+water include. No deposit. Prof. Student+cat email flowerface4u@netscape.net

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health. 27 Pray Street. Amherst. 548-9992

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Panama City Beach, Boardwalk Beach Resort $199, Includes 7 Nights Hotel, 6 Free Parties, 24 Hours Free Drinks! Cancun & Jamaica! From $459. www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

Spring Break with STS. America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Their time is now

Senior co-captain Tim Turner will be the only Minuteman on the ice during this weekend's best-of-three playoff series at Maine with any collegiate playoff experience.

UMass in HE tourney for first time in three years

By MATT BRADY
Collegian Staff

Third season.

It's a pair of words that haven't been thrown around in the Pioneer Valley in nearly three years. But following a solid non-conference run and the most Division I conference wins in school history, the Massachusetts hockey team is prepped and ready to go for the Hockey East playoffs.

The Minutemen (17-16-1, 10-14-0 HE) have a trio of obstacles to overcome for this weekend's series against Maine (24-7-5, 14-6-4 HE). They have never won a Hockey East playoff game, have never won a game at Alfond Arena and no team has ever defeated Maine at Alfond in the Hockey East Playoffs. Still, UMass coach Don Cahoon never likes to talk about the past.

"We know it's a challenge," he said. "I hope we have a good first period. They know what they're up against. They know that we can put a game together."

And the players are far from intimidated by playing in one of the most intense environments in college hockey.

"I'm pumped," freshman defenseman Marvin Degon said. "Where else is there a better environment for playoff hockey? We beat them, we went up there early in the year – when we didn't really know anything about each other, still a young team, not much chemistry – and a 1-0 loss, one goal, in that building, is a big deal."

"I'm pretty solid," goalkeeper Gabe Winer said. "I'm all excited to go for Thursday. The trip there is not going to be too fun, but Alfond is probably the most fun rink to play at."

Winer, following a brief struggle during the month of January, appears to be back in early season form by stopping 86 of the last 94 shots he has faced. According to Cahoon, goaltending will be a crucial matchup for the Minutemen – and with rookie phenoms Jimmy Howard and Frank Doyle staring down Winer from the other end, it should make for a tough scoring series.

"We're not going anywhere without [goaltending]," Cahoon said. "Chances are both goalies [Winer and his counterpart] will be playing well."

Senior captain Tim Turner also seemed unenthused with the bus ride that loomed ahead.

"I do not want to go on a four-hour bus ride," he said. "But I'm excited. It's a great place to play, a nice college hockey rink. It's going to be fun."

The Minutemen have already played the fourth-ranked Black Bears four times this season – dropping three of the four, but winning a 4-2 decision in Amherst that was one of the most impressive outings of the season for the Maroon and White. In its only trip north to Orono, UMass fell 1-0 on a Colin Shields tally in the second period.

One concern for the Minutemen has to be experience, as just two players on the team have played in the Hockey East playoffs, and one – Kelly Sickavish – has not been in the lineup since December with a head injury.

"Me and Kelly are the only ones that have played in a

Continued on page 7

Captains lead in different ways

By ANDY VOGT
Collegian Staff

They are two generals standing on opposite sides of the Plexiglas war zone.

But Kelly Sickavish, one of the co-captains of the UMass hockey team, stands on the outside looking into the battleground, wishing he still could be leading his troops. Meanwhile, senior co-captain Tim Turner has been left to handle the majority of the on-ice leadership, so critical for the young Minutemen as they prepare for a Hockey East playoff matchup with Maine.

Turner and Sickavish are the only Hockey East playoff-tested Minutemen on the roster, and it was a brief appearance at that, when they were unceremoniously thumped out in two games by Boston University three years ago. But after slowly revamping its look under third-year coach Don Cahoon, missing the conference playoffs is no longer an option for the Minutemen.

Sickavish has been stuck in an unenviable position since mid-December, sidelined with a concussion suffered Dec. 6 against BU. Missing the second half of his final collegiate season has been understandably difficult for the defenseman, but he has tried to make the best of the situation from the sidelines. Sickavish still attends practice and offers encouragement to the younger Minutemen still learning the collegiate game.

"It's tough when I'm in the position I'm in," Sickavish said. "But I think Timmy's done a pretty good job with demonstrating [on the ice]."

"I guess I'm more like a coach."

So that leaves Turner to instill the on-ice playoff mentality into a lineup that could potentially field 17 underclassmen against the Black Bears. But it's not as if the newcomers have ever faced a high-pressure situation in their hockey careers. The résumé of the young Minutemen includes high school state champions, prep school champions and one World Junior champion.

"When you've played hockey for this long, you know what you're getting yourself into," Turner said.

"I've got to be more 'lead-by-example,'" he added. "There's only so much you can say at this point."

Turner, with 32 points on the season, has amassed 104 points in his four years in Amherst, good for fourth all-time on the UMass scoring chart. And Sickavish had been a defensive regular for four years in the Minuteman lineup prior to his injury. But most importantly, they have been the anchors of a turnaround that saw UMass go from a struggling, green bunch to a Hockey East force in a single year.

"It means a lot, and Kelly and I will be watching these guys down the road, and they'll be even better," Turner said.

Head to Head: UNH 2-0-1

National rank: 5
19-8-4 HE (T-4th place)
24-7-6 overall
Leading scorers:
Lance Galik 21-25-46
Colin Hemingway 17-23-40
Steve Saviano 5-24-29

National rank: NR
4-16-4 HE (8th place)
11-18-5 overall
Leading scorers:
Ed McGrane 19-21-40
Steve Slonina 8-17-25
Andrew Martin 10-11-21

Series keys: Out of any of the lower seeds, Lowell may have the best chance of knocking off the Wildcats, who play in the biggest rink in Hockey East. If Dominic Smart can play his heart out in goal, the River Hawks could certainly pull off the upset.

Head to Head: Maine 3-1-0

National rank: 4
14-6-4 HE (3rd place)
24-7-5 overall
Leading scorers:
Martin Karsa 13-35-48
Lucas Lawson 21-14-35
Francis Nault 10-25-35

National rank: NR
10-14-0 HE (6th place)
17-16-1 overall
Leading scorers:
Greg Mauldin 19-19-38
Stephen Werner 13-21-34
Thomas Pock 16-16-32

Series keys: UMass has played Maine well all three times the two have squared off in conference games. Should the Minutemen forget they are young and inexperienced, they could certainly pull off the upset.

Hockey East Finals/Semifinals
Friday 3/14
Saturday 3/15
Fleet Center
Boston

Head to Head: BC 2-1-0

National rank: 6
16-6-2 HE (2nd place)
21-9-4 overall
Leading scorers:
Ben Eaves 17-36-53
Tony Voce 20-21-41
Dave Spina 17-17-34

National rank: NR
7-13-4 HE (7th place)
12-16-6 overall
Leading scorers:
Brent Gough 10-12-22
Marco Rosa 10-12-22
Matt Johnson 8-13-21

Series keys: Merrimack lambasted BC 6-1 earlier this season, but that was at the dorm room-sized Volpe Center. Losing Marco Rosa for the year will likely put Merrimack down and out, but the Warriors will be seeking revenge for the cheap shot put on him – by BC.

Head to Head: Providence 2-0-1

National rank: 13
12-9-3 (4th place HE)
19-12-5 overall
Leading scorers:
Ion DiSalvatore 17-27-44
Devin Rask 17-26-43
Peter Fregoe 22-20-42

National rank: 10
13-10-1 (5th place HE)
21-12-5 overall
Leading scorers:
Frantisek Skladany 11-20-31
Mark Mullen 11-13-24
John Sabo 10-13-23

Series keys: Providence comes in one of the hottest teams in the nation and has dominated BU all three times they have played this season. But BU is very talented, and should they find a way to solve Nolan Schaefer between the pipes, they could easily move on.

NATIONAL RANKINGS

#1 Johns Hopkins

Current Record: 1-0
2002 Record: 12-2
2002 ended: In NCAA semifinals
Head Coach: Dave Pietramala
Attack (1-10): 8
Midfield (1-10): 10
Defense (1-10): 8
Goal (1-10): 8

Key game: @ Syracuse, March 15

Outlook: The Blue Jays will have one of the most talented, well-balanced teams in the country. As usual, Hopkins is one of the top contenders for the NCAA Championship.

#2 Virginia

Current Record: 2-0
2002 Record: 11-4
2002 ended: In NCAA semifinals
Head Coach: Dom Starsia
Attack (1-10): 9
Midfield (1-10): 10
Defense (1-10): 9
Goal (1-10): 10

Key game: @ Hopkins, March 22

Outlook: The Cavaliers have big shoes to fill, in graduated attackman Conor Gill, but the team may actually be improved from last year's. Favorite to win the ACC.

#3 Syracuse

Current Record: 1-1
2002 Record: 15-2
2002 ended: National Champions
Head Coach: John Desko
Attack (1-10): 10
Midfield (1-10): 8
Defense (1-10): 7
Goal (1-10): 8

Key game: Hopkins, March 15

Outlook: Preseason No. 1 fell to Virginia last week, but remains a serious threat for the title. Mike Powell may be the best attackman in the country.

#4 Princeton

Current Record: 0-1
2002 Record: 10-5
2002 ended: NCAA runner-up
Head Coach: Bill Tierney
Attack (1-10): 9
Midfield (1-10): 9
Defense (1-10): 9
Goal (1-10): 8

Key game: @ Syracuse, March 22

Outlook: Must replace graduated B.J. Prager, last season's leading scorer. The preseason No. 2 Tigers fell to Johns Hopkins to open the season. Play three contenders next three weeks.

#5 Maryland

Current Record: 1-0
2002 Record: 9-4
2002 ended: No tourney
Head Coach: Dave Cottle
Attack (1-10): 7
Midfield (1-10): 8
Defense (1-10): 10
Goal (1-10): 10

Key game: @ Virginia, March 29

Outlook: The Terps, who lost four games by one goal last season, will rely on one of the best defenses in the country this season. Must find a way to win March 29 at Virginia.

#6 Georgetown

Current Record: 1-0
2002 Record: 12-3
2002 ended: NCAA Quarterfinals
Head Coach: Dave Urick
Attack (1-10): 9
Midfield (1-10): 9
Defense (1-10): 9
Goal (1-10): 7

Key game: @ UMass, April 19

Outlook: Hoyas lost their top scorer and goalie from last season, but still come in as one of the favorites to win the ECAC. Attack will remain one of the best in the nation.

#7 Massachusetts

Current Record: 2-0
2002 Record: 12-4
2002 ended: NCAA Quarterfinals
Head Coach: Greg Cannella
Attack (1-10): 8
Midfield (1-10): 10
Defense (1-10): 8
Goal (1-10): 8

Key game: Georgetown, April 19

Outlook: Will go as far as midfield tandem of Kevin Leveille and Chris Fiore will take them. Looking to build on ECAC Championship from a year ago.

#8 Duke

Current Record: 2-1
2002 Record: 8-7
2002 ended: NCAA Quarterfinals
Head Coach: Mike Pressler
Attack (1-10): 8
Midfield (1-10): 7
Defense (1-10): 7
Goal (1-10): 7

Key game: Virginia, April 12

Outlook: Third ACC team in top 8. May struggle on defense, having lost two starters in back. Return four of their top five scorers from last season.

#9 Navy

Current Record: 3-0
2002 Record: 8-5
2002 ended: No tourney
Head Coach: Richie Meade
Attack (1-10): 7
Midfield (1-10): 8
Defense (1-10): 8
Goal (1-10): 8

Key game: Georgetown, March 30

Outlook: In a tough spot as the No. 3 team in the ECAC. Navy must knock off either UMass or Georgetown, two 2002 tourney entries, in order to land in the NCAAs.

#10 Loyola

Current Record: 3-0
2002 Record: 9-4
2002 ended: No tourney
Head Coach: Bill Dirrigl
Attack (1-10): 9
Midfield (1-10): 7
Defense (1-10): 7
Goal (1-10): 7

Key game: Princeton, April 22

Outlook: With the return of three talented veterans, Loyola possesses one of the top five or six attacks in the nation. If the rest of the squad can keep up, will land in the top 10.

#11 North Carolina

Current Record: 1-1
2002 Record: 8-5
2002 ended: No tourney
Head Coach: John Haus
Attack (1-10): 8
Midfield (1-10): 8
Defense (1-10): 7
Goal (1-10): 8

Key game: @ Maryland, March 22

Outlook: Most of last year's 8-5 squad returns, including starting goalie Paul Spellman and top scorers Jed Prossner and Mike McCall. Underdog to make the tourney.

#12 Cornell

Current Record: 1-1
2002 Record: 11-4
2002 ended: NCAA Quarterfinals
Head Coach: Jeff Tambroni
Attack (1-10): 7
Midfield (1-10): 8
Defense (1-10): 9
Goal (1-10): 6

Key game: Princeton, April 19

Outlook: Led by All-American Ryan McClay. Cornell has one of the top defenses in the country. Good thing, since its goalie situation is a clear weakness after the loss of Justin Cynar to graduation.

#13 Notre Dame

Current Record: 2-0
2002 Record: 5-8
2002 ended: No tourney
Head Coach: Kevin Corrigan
Attack (1-10): 7
Midfield (1-10): 7
Defense (1-10): 8
Goal (1-10): 7

Key game: Maryland, May 3

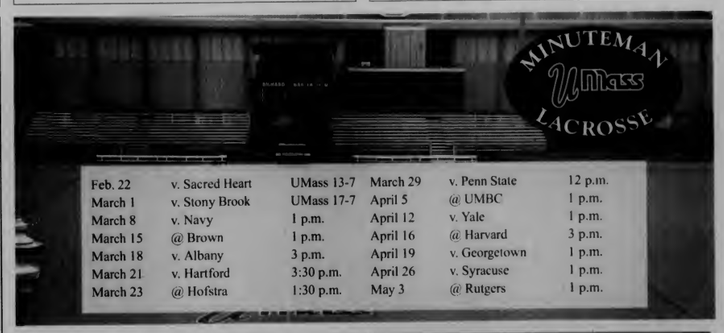
Outlook: Corrigan's team lost seven games last year by a total of 10 goals. Will have to learn quickly, as roster claims just six seniors and will rely heavily on underclassmen.

#14 Towson

Current Record: 1-1
2002 Record: 7-5
2002 ended: No tourney
Head Coach: Tony Seaman
Attack (1-10): 6
Midfield (1-10): 7
Defense (1-10): 7
Goal (1-10): 7

Key game: Hofstra, April 4

Outlook: The duo of defenseman Adam Baxter and midfielder/defenseman Dan Cucchi will have to play stellar defense as the Tigers make a run at the CAA title.



#15 Hofstra

Current Record: 1-1
2002 Record: 11-3
2002 ended: Snubbed; no tourney
Head Coach: John Danowski
Attack (1-10): 6
Midfield (1-10): 6
Defense (1-10): 7
Goal (1-10): 7

Key game: Syracuse, April 17

Outlook: Should look completely different from last year's squad that felt disrespected after missing out on a tourney bid last season. The Pride could play 12 freshmen this season.

Daisy's
Serving Breakfast, Lunch & Dinner
Open For Breakfast Wednesday thru Monday
Open For Dinner Wednesday thru Saturday
Monday 7-2
Tuesday Closed
Wednesday 7-2 & 5-8
Thursday 7-2 & 5-8
Friday 7-2 & 5-9
Saturday 8-2 & 5-9
Sunday 8-3
Eggs, toast and homefries $3.50!
1185 North Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA Close To UMASS
549-4085

Feb. 22	v. Sacred Heart	UMass 13-7	March 29	v. Penn State	12 p.m.
March 1	v. Stony Brook	UMass 17-7	April 5	@ UMBC	1 p.m.
March 8	v. Navy	1 p.m.	April 12	v. Yale	1 p.m.
March 15	@ Brown	1 p.m.	April 16	@ Harvard	3 p.m.
March 18	v. Albany	3 p.m.	April 19	v. Georgetown	1 p.m.
March 21	v. Hartford	3:30 p.m.	April 26	v. Syracuse	1 p.m.
March 23	@ Hofstra	1:30 p.m.	May 3	@ Rutgers	1 p.m.

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist

Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Layout and design by Eric Soderstrom, Matthew F. Sacco, Jim Pignatiello and Mike Kulak.
Rankings and team capsules compiled by Jim Pignatiello.

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass Amherst

The lax factory

This is the story of a man named Garber and the offense that has changed the professional game

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It is a sterling day at Harbor Yard. The sun casts its warmth on the field and a steady gust off the Connecticut River keeps the temperature at an agreeable level. This is the type of afternoon Sal LoCascio would usually revel in.

The corpulent Italian and rookie coach of Major League Lacrosse's Bridgeport Barrage has spent enough man-hours behind a goalie mask and pads to know the idyllic conditions for practice.

So instead of using his position as an excuse to hold down the sidelines during one of Bridgeport's preseason scrimmages, LoCascio has taken to the crease to tutor his green squad from up close.

But as his team is running through a basic shooting drill, LoCascio looks uncomfortable. A midfielder beats him on a deep shot that he'd usually scoff at. Then a rookie handcuffs his coach on a skip-shot from the wing.

Here he is: arguably the games greatest goaltender. The man who is undefeated in international competition, who once made 29 saves in an NCAA tournament game against Johns Hopkins, who was named All-American four times. And he looks out of place playing net against a roster full of 20-somethings.

Sure, say he's out of shape, too old, past his prime. But this guy came back from a major back injury and, a few pasta dinners over his playing weight, was nearly unbeatable for Long Island in an MLL Championship win.

It's got to be something else. After practice ends, he delivers an unusually brief speech and sends his squad to the showers. LoCascio though, black hair soaked with the sweat that graces his practice gear, grabs his cell phone and heads for the nearest quiet corner.

"What's the score?" he says through winded lungs. The reaction on LoCascio's face reads close game.

The man on the other end of the phone is Mark Millon. Millon, an attackman, and LoCascio share some common ground. They're both widely considered to be the best to ever play their position. And both are proud alums of the University of Massachusetts.

"Having played at UMass is a common bond," LoCascio says. "It made us instant friends."

Millon is at Homewood Field in Baltimore, watching his alma mater erase a six-goal halftime deficit to take Hopkins to overtime in an NCAA quarterfinal.

The pair spend the next 10 minutes on the phone and in between Millon's crack play-by-play, they wax on about the past.

They talk about the up-tempo style that present coach Greg Cannella has used to bring his Minutemen back into the game against Hopkins. The same strategy they used during their playing days in Amherst.

"That's the way the game should be played," LoCascio says.

That style implemented by legendary coach Dick Garber is what LoCascio says made his professional career so successful.

"I learned an awful lot by playing at UMass," he says. "That style of play, the high tempo, it helped prepare me for the professional game. You watch the outdoor league with the shot clock and you look at us when we played in college and you'd think we had a shot clock too. We had no interest in holding the ball for too long."

Millon would have to agree. Garber's style made his transition to the pro game almost seamless. Just one year post graduation, Millon was already the game's top attackman. He was the best of the best at the '94 World Games and in two seasons of Major League Lacrosse he has two MVP awards.

Cannella started his coaching tenure eight years ago with a scheme very much the antithesis of Garber's. He played a deliberate offensive strategy designed to keep the game close and the ball away from more explosive teams.

But after the first consecutive losing seasons in the program's history, Cannella decided to open it up. Since then, five UMass players have been drafted, including four this past year.

None have yet demonstrated the blue chip talents of LoCascio or Millon, but it was playing at UMass that gave them the tools to make it in the pro game.

"We play a wide open style," Cannella says. "It allows people to be creative and make decisions on their own. It allows them to make their own plays and it makes them more versatile."

One of the four draftees, Dan Paccione, didn't come to Amherst with the fanfare of a top recruit. In fact, he had only seven points in his first two seasons, but now he's played his way into a role with New York of the indoor league.

Why?

Because playing under Cannella "gave me confidence," he says.

"We give them the ball," Cannella says. "We allow them to make plays and gain confidence. Confidence is huge. Look at all the guys that have played here and they have a tremendous amount of confidence in their own ability."

LoCascio agrees.

"I felt like if my team played even with the other team," he says. "We were going to win because I was confident that I was going to play better than the other guy."

Scott Hiller, a four-time All-American, is such a pupil of the Garber school of lacrosse that he implemented it with MLL's Boston franchise.

"The reason you see guys succeed is because they aren't constrained," Hiller says. "You're given a window to freelance and if you make a mistake you know you're not going to get benched. Lacrosse is supposed to be fun. And playing at UMass made it that way."

That's why, in a league like MLL that teems with Syracuse and Princeton alums, UMass is considered a factory.

"If I had a few more picks I would've picked a couple more UMass guys," LoCascio says of last season's MLL college draft. "Because I know what they've been through and that they have the dedication and mindset to play the game the way it's supposed to be played."

You could definitely say we play a pro style," Paccione says. "But as far as the hard work we did, I can tell you guys from other schools have no idea what we went through. We are definitely one of the hardest working teams in college.

"You know that UMass guys don't play just on the weekends."

So, hard work, confidence and an up-tempo style...sounds like a pretty good formula.

"But most schools don't play the fast paced game," Hiller says. "Guys at other places are real worried about being benched. I let guys play, just like Dick Garber did and Greg Cannella is doing now. Guys aren't afraid to take chances with them."

If last year's Minutemen were afraid to take chances, that tournament game against Hopkins might never have been close. Down 8-2 at halftime, the offense finally clicked and 10 second-half goals beckoned overtime.

Unfortunately, Millon would have to relay news of a Blue Jay gamewinner to his pal in Bridgeport. But the somber mood was brief, and the pair was soon back to chatting about old times.

After all, lacrosse is supposed to be fun.

UMass media relations

The UMass bunch (clockwise, from top center): present coach Greg Cannella, MLL MVP Mark Millon, MLL Coach of the Year Scott Hiller, greatest goalie ever Sal LoCascio, NCAA winningest coach Richard F. Garber, Boston Cannon Don Little, former All-American Matt McFarland, New York Saint Dan Paccione.

Sophomore Scott Doyle and his midfield mates will play a big role in UMass' run to a second consecutive ECAC title and NCAA tournament bid.

ECAC yields the nation's elite

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Spanning the entirety of the lacrosse belt – from the grid of the nation's capital to the near-arctic conditions of western Massachusetts – is the most competitive conference in college lacrosse.

The fourth-year Eastern College Athletic Conference features five of its six teams currently in the top 20, and could see any of them at the top of the heap when the war known as ECAC lacrosse is over.

"There's some great lacrosse players, some of the best in the nation," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "When you look at the other coaches involved in it – all of them, besides myself, have been involved in some kind of national championship. I think you have a lot of pretty well-coached teams."

The cream of the crop over the past two years has been the northernmost team – Massachusetts – and the southernmost team – Georgetown. The Hoyas were victorious in the conference's first two seasons, but were topped by the Minutemen last year in what has become one of college lacrosse's best and most bitter rivalries.

At the center of that matchup are the key midfielders on each team. UMass' Kevin Leveille was picked as the conference's top preseason offensive player, while his counterpart on G-Town, Kyle Sweeney, was named the ECAC's top defensive player.

"We're two competitive teams, two teams that have a lot of depth, that like to play up and down," said Cannella, who is in his ninth year at the helm of the Maroon and White. "Sweeney is probably the best long-stick defender in the country and we think Kevin is really special. I think that [rivalry] will go on probably beyond UMass-Georgetown with those guys playing pro next year."

But despite the expectations of the ECAC's top two teams, the conference features a myriad of teams that could climb the ladder to the top of the conference. Even last year's bottom feeders – Rutgers – have jumped out to an early 3-0 start.

"I wouldn't count anybody out," Cannella said. "The last two years it's been between Georgetown and us, but the year before it was Navy and Georgetown. Rutgers is 3-0, Navy is ninth, Georgetown is sixth – you have every team in the conference but one in the Top 20."

UMass (No. 7, 2-0 overall)

The Minutemen lost a lot of talent up front from last year's high-octane offense in the tandem of attackmen Dan Paccione and Marc Morley, but a hearty helping of midfield talent should provide quite a bit of offensive punch. Leveille and fellow senior Chris Fiore form one of the top middie duos in the nation, and should anchor the offense this season. The two have already combined for 22 points in the team's opening two games. The defense will be spearheaded by Tom Fallon, one of the nation's hardest hitters, and a pair of up-and-comers – Matt Garcia and Chris Gervat. Attack could be a question mark for the Minutemen, but sophomore Gene Tundo and junior Jeff Zywicki look to handle the pressure of stepping up.

Key matchup: April 19, vs. Georgetown: Will the road team win this game for the third year in a row?

Georgetown (No. 6, 1-0 overall)

The Hoyas still have a boatload of talent despite the loss of Steve Dusseau, who was far and away the team's leading scorer. Still, Mike Hammer and Neal Goldman are incredibly solid up front, but it remains to be seen what they will do without a player like Dusseau in the lineup. Sweeney will anchor the defensive middies, and two seniors – Brant Gresham and Pat Collins – will be solid to lead the D. The biggest question mark will come in goal, where inexperienced Rich D'Andrea will have to fill the sizable shoes of departed Scott Schroeder.

Key matchup: April 19, @ UMass: The battle for ECAC supremacy should be again decided in this matchup of the titans.

Navy (No. 9, 3-0 overall)

The Midshipmen lost a lot of talent in the offseason, but a deep roster could see them suffering only minimal drop off, if any at all. The Navy defense was one of the most solid in the nation last season, and kept the team just a few goals away from some huge wins.

Continued on page A2

The Daily Collegian

Friday, March 7, 2003 | New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 | Volume CIX Issue 96

Dissection Choice Bill discussed throughout Massachusetts

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

The Dissection Choice Bill, if passed, would allow Massachusetts public school students to "conscientiously object" to participating in dissections within the classroom.

During recent months, the bill – officially known as House Bill 1252 – has been debated within the Massachusetts State Legislature. The bill, sponsored by the Ethical Science Education Coalition (ESEC) and Representative Kafka, stems from questioning whether or not dissections of lab animals are crucial to the learning experience of a class.

Students who "conscientiously object" to participating in dissections within the classroom would be absaining for ethical, moral or religious reasons. Students would not be exempt from the work involved. Rather, they would learn the material through an alternative method – including relative videotapes or an interactive computer program simulation.

Opting not to participate in the dissection would not change the expectations for the students. Those who choose not to actively participate in such labs would still need to take the same exams and demonstrate the same level of competency as fellow students who had been involved.

In the winter of 2002, the bill had nearly made its entire passage through the legislature with the backing of 18 legislators and the ESEC, when the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) lobbied against it during the final stages. The stalling tactic of the MTA worked, and the bill was stalled long enough that the Massachusetts Legislature went into what is called its "informal session." There, votes on controversial issues are not allowed.

This does not mean the bill has been completely defeated.

Currently, eight states have similar legislation to the Dissection Choice Bill: California, Florida, Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Louisiana and Maryland. School Districts within the cities such as Austin, Chicago, Columbus and Virginia Beach also have similar laws.

The Massachusetts controversy stems from the staunch viewpoints both the ESEC and MTA hold on the bill.

The ESEC proposed that dissections are both, "inhumane and environmentally damaging." The ESEC gathered their factual backing for the bill from studies published by the Associated Press, The Boston Globe and various federal agencies. They consider dissections inhumane due to the various methods used to supply the animals for dissection.

The ESEC also considers the practice environmentally damaging, because endangered species are used in dissections. Danger is also present when using chemicals to preserve dissection specimens, the group added.

"Dogfish, frog and turtle populations are being depleted at an alarming rate, as the specimens used in dissections are 'wild-caught'," said Tracy Johnson, Program Associate of the New England Anti-Vivisection Society (NEAVS), an affiliate of the ESEC.

She also spoke of the problems resulting from dissections.

"Millions of Formaldehyde-ridden specimens must be disposed of every year," Johnson said. "Formaldehyde is a hazardous waste and a carcinogen."

Members of the Massachusetts Teachers Association did not necessarily rebuke the claims made by the ESEC. Instead, they opposed the bill for primarily different reasons. The MTA claims the bill will interfere with teachers' authority. There is no need for the bill, because dissections are generally not a problem since a student's choices are not violated, they added.

One crucial factor to consider is the setting of the dissection.

"If the class is required, then the student shouldn't be forced to perform the dissection," Sara Laliberte, a junior Biology major said. "[But] if the class is an elective, then I believe that the dissection should be mandatory. It is a valuable learning experience that adds to the class."

Eric L. Bittman, Endocrinology and Physiology professor at the University of Massachusetts, expressed his thoughts on the issue. When asked if dissections are crucial, he said, "Yes, for upper level students who are contemplating careers involving work with animals."

And there are students at the University that agree. When asked if

Continued on page 3

Frat Row in for a change

As part of frat row, located on North Pleasant St., the buildings of Alpha Epsilon Pi, Sigma Alpha Mu and Delta Upsilon (pictured above) may roost in new locations in the future.

Fraternities face potential loss of housing

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

The appearance of North Pleasant Street could change drastically in the near future, as four fraternities may potentially lose their housing.

According to Michael Wiseman, director of the Office of Greek Affairs and Inter-Fraternity Council advisor, the ATG Corporation is pulling out of managing the properties.

The corporation currently sponsors and owns the house for Alpha Tau Gamma, is affiliated with the Stockbridge School of Agriculture and also owns the houses for Zeta Beta Tau, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Alpha Mu and Alpha Epsilon Pi.

"That corporation has been contemplating selling those properties, either all together or as individual lots," he said.

However, ATG has released no final decisions, according to Wiseman.

"The corporation met this past weekend and made a decision about what to do," he said. "But I have not received any official notification as to what the decision was."

For Alpha Tau Gamma, the corporation purchased the property at 118 Sunset and plans to relocate the fraternity. This address is the former location of the local fraternity Omega Delta, which recently moved onto the row.

Wiseman also commented that it remains unknown what will replace these fraternities on the row.

"There is no decision yet as to what will happen with these properties," Wiseman said. "If the properties are sold, the new owners will decide what to with them.

"It is my understanding that the corporation wants to get out of the property management business and focus on supporting their chapter," he added.

He added that each fraternity will have the option to purchase its housing, but added this will only happen if the fraternities can manage the large financial obligations this entails.

In the event some or all of the fraternities must vacate their current property, it is not necessarily the case that the houses will be torn down, Wiseman stressed, adding that in order for the houses to remain standing, a fair amount of work will be needed to keep them in compliance with new building codes.

He also said if the facilities are lost, the fraternities will have to face new challenges.

"It will be next to impossible to find new housing given the restrictions placed by the zoning codes of the Town of Amherst," he said. "Those chapters – or any new chapters that come to campus – will have to learn how to thrive without a chapter facility."

This is because any new purchase of the property will most likely not involve a fraternity, Wiseman noted. These properties, he added, once lost by the frats will probably no longer be used as facilities for fraternal activities.

Wiseman also denied knowing of any closings and asserted that such rumors cannot be true.

"I am not aware of any rumors," he said. "I think I would know if the chapter was being closed. The national headquarters would have contacted our office."

Searching for bin Laden

By Kathy Gannon
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) – Pakistani and American forces intensified the search for Osama bin Laden along a southwestern stretch of the border of Afghanistan and carried out raids this week based on information from a newly captured al-Qaida deputy, Pakistani intelligence and military officials said Thursday.

Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, thought to be the No. 3 figure in the terror network, told interrogators he met bin Laden just weeks ago in a rendezvous set up through a network of phone calls and intermediaries, an intelligence official said.

At least two raids have been carried out in Pakistan's southwestern Baluchistan region based on information from Mohammed since his capture last weekend, another Pakistani intelligence official said, also speaking on condition of anonymity. There were no major arrests from the raids, the official said.

Telephone numbers taken from Mohammed's mobile phone are being tracked. The phone contained numbers inside and outside Pakistan, said a government official.

"The people he contacted in Pakistan have naturally been put under surveillance and we suspect the American agencies are doing the same," the official said.

Since Mohammed's arrest, joint Pakistani and U.S. forces have been searching for bin Laden and his son, Saad, along the 350-mile stretch of border from the Baluchistan town of Chaman to the Iranian border, a Pakistan military source said.

Villagers contacted in Dal Bandin, 170 miles south of the Baluchistan capital of Quetta, said two military aircraft landed at their small airstrip and American forces got off. There was no confirmation from the U.S. or Pakistani military.

The activity apparently generated rumors that bin Laden had been captured, but officials in Washington and in Pakistan said it was not true.

Since the weekend, residents in Chaman said U.S. aircraft swarmed overhead, dropping Pashtu-language leaflets on both sides of the border reminding them of the $25 million reward for bin Laden.

U.S. special forces and Pakistani soldiers are also farther north along the border, trying to flush out Taliban and al-Qaida fugitives in South Waziristan, in the North West Frontier province.

Mohammed's meeting with bin Laden took place somewhere in Baluchistan or farther north along the border, a Pakistani intelligence official told The Associated Press.

The official was one of a team of Pakistani and CIA agents who interrogated Mohammed for hours after he was nabbed in a pre-dawn raid in Rawalpindi on Saturday.

The intelligence official quoted Mohammed as saying of bin Laden, "The sheik is a hero of Islam and I am his tiny servant. Life, family, money, everything can be sacrificed for the sheik." The official did not reveal what Mohammed and bin laden discussed.

Mohammed told his interrogators he didn't know bin Laden's exact whereabouts, but that he was in the remote border region.

On Monday, the AP received similar information about bin Laden's supposed location from a former intelligence chief of the ousted Taliban regime.

In a telephone interview from Afghanistan's southern city of Kandahar, the former Taliban member said bin Laden had been seen less than two months ago meeting with Taliban members in South Waziristan. His report could not be independently verified.

Several sources say bin Laden moves with only a few guards, changing locations nightly and never using satellite telephones that could be used to pinpoint his location.

Instead, he reportedly sends messages through intermediaries, according to another former Taliban interviewed by AP.

Western diplomats say it's intriguing that Mohammed was arrested in Rawalpindi, a city of four million near Islamabad that is home to army generals, top military officials and President Pervez Musharraf.

Mohammed was arrested at the house of Ahmed Abdul Qadus, an activist within Pakistan's oldest religious party, Jamaat-e-Islami, which has close links with the Pakistan's state InterServices Intelligence, or ISI.

Jamaat-e-Islami activists worked closely with Pakistan's intelligence service to help Afghan insurgents during the 80s, when the United States bankrolled an anti-communist war in Afghanistan.

Editorial/Opinion — Page 4
Arts & Living — Page 5
Sports — Page 8
Comics — Page 7
Classifieds — Page 7

Romney's plan — Could hurt the students of UMass — Page 4
Minus 5 — McCaughey speaks on Reid and Wilco — Page 5
Mass Attack — UMass upsets Maine in hockey East playoffs — Page 8

NPR's Corey Flintoff discusses role of radio journalism overseas

By Andrea Dickey
Collegian Correspondent

"It's hard to get [Mongolian reporters] to see news as something for people to relate to," said National Public Radio's Corey Flintoff yesterday to an audience of about 30 at Memorial Hall. Flintoff traveled through the country teaching Mongolian reporters modern radio techniques and production, working mostly through a Russian translator.

Flintoff's talk, "Questing in Genghisland: an NPR reporter in Mongolia," was based on his extended stay in the country, where he witnessed first-hand the political, economic and social changes brought about by the collapse of the Soviet Union. Mongol officials haven't had to be accountable in the past, according to Flintoff. The news is what they were told to report.

Flintoff compared Mongolia to the most desolate part of the United States, minus 50 degrees. Half of the 24 million people still travel by horseback or camel.

"The nearest Starbucks is in Beijing," Flintoff said.

Socialism is still going strong in Mongolia and is viewed nostalgically, said Flintoff. Hotels and old apartments still have radios built into the wall. There is no dial to adjust the frequency; the only control is volume. The government ran all broadcast and news.

Flintoff remembers hearing ABBA's "Dancing Queen" blasting in the town square. "Socialist radio is not yet dead," he said. "Seven decades of socialism stifle individualism."

Flintoff's interest in Mongolia was sparked at age 11, when he received a copy of Harold Lamb's "Genghis Khan." It came back to him a couple of years ago when he wrote some articles about NPR for the Encyclopedia of Radio. He subsequently met Bill Siemering of NPR who had a stack of photos from travels in Mongolia.

One of the photos showed a man "in a steeple-topped cap, perched on a camel in a wintry desert.

"I had to go," Flintoff said.

The Knight International Press Fellowships enabled Flintoff to make

Continued on page 3

Corey Flintoff spoke of the role of radio journalism overseas yesterday at Memorial Hall.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What did you think of the walkout?"

By Emilie Duggan-Hicks

Levi O'Brien
Junior
Political Science & Economics

"It's great to see students coming together and getting national press for it."

Kara Lighiburn
Sophomore
Psychology

"I believe it was a good thing. If we don't protest, we're susceptible to what our nation believes in."

Jen Stone
Senior
Journalism

"Quite honestly, I don't know that much about it ... but I thought it was a very strong way to protest the war."

Nicole Thurnau
Sophomore
Communication Disorders

"I don't think walk-outs do anything. I think subtle activism is more effective."

Beth Abramson
Junior
Psychology

"I don't think it's going to carry any weight."

Michelle Kaplan
Senior
Sociology & Natural Resource Studies

"I think it's better for people to speak their minds, whether it's by walking out or by some other way."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stumm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

europe
from $55 per day

>unbeatable values to europe!

>vacations include: accommodations, most meals, sight-seeing, luxury coach, and all the fun you can handle!

Call your nearest AAA Travel agent today and hit the road this summer!

contiki
VACATIONS for 18-35 year olds europe australia new zealand asia canada

AAA Travel
Open to the Public • M-F: 9-5:30; T/Th: 9-7; Sat: 9-2 www.aaa.com
West Springfield 150 Capital Dr. 739-5663
Springfield Five Town Plaza 796-7252
Hadley Route 9 586-5547

McMurphy's

5th Annual
Blarney Blowout
St. Partick's Day Celebration

Saturday March 8th
Corned Beef Buffet at 2:00pm
Live Irish music with the Tinkers
starts at 4:00pm

Hillel celebrates Purim holiday

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

The annual "Latke vs. Hamentash Debate," held in recognition of the Jewish holiday Purim, is tradition for the University of Massachusetts Hillel House. Each year, Hillel recruits professors who debate on which of the two holiday foods – latke or hamentash – is better. This year, the event begins on Sunday, March 9 at noon.

The debate will feature four professors arguing within the confines of their respective fields of study. Each professor has developed an angle to present and has titled the argument accordingly. Professors Michael Ash, Max Page, Joya Misra and Icek Aizen are each scheduled to participate.

Latke is a round potato pancake served during the winter holiday of Hanukkah that celebrates the Maccabee victory over the Syrian Greeks.

Hamentash, a three-sided cookie filled with poppy seeds or jelly, is served during Purim, the Jewish holiday remembering cruelties Jews once faced in Persia. The cookie is meant to resemble the hat of the evil villain of the Purim story.

Ash, an economics professor, is on the pro-latke team with an argument titled, "Why Circles are More Perfect than Triangles." His co-debater, Page, is a professor of fine arts and is arguing on the topic, "Strength, Utility, and Delight: The Latke."

The opposing team consists of Misra, a sociology professor, with the argument "Rationalization, Latkes, and Anomie: How Hamantashen Challenge the McDonaldization of Society" and Aizen, a professor of psychology, with "The Roots of Evil: Psychopathology of a Latkephile."

After the professors finish debating the issue, the members of the audience will decide the result based on the presented cases.

In traditional Purim spirit, Hillel is combining a social action initiative with the event. At 1:30 p.m. Hillel's social action group, Tzedek, will compile baskets of food to distribute to senior citizens of Holyoke in need.

Tzedek is also still needs items for the food packages. Their list is specific and includes plastic, three-packs of applesauce, UHT treated milk such as Parmalat, cans of corn, beef stew and fruit as well as jars of peanut butter and jelly. These items may be dropped off at Hillel's table in the campus center today or brought to the event.

On the net: http://www.umasshillel.org

Britain delivers deadline for Iraq inspectons

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS (AP)– Britain took the lead Thursday in trying to forge a compromise a day before a critical Security Council meeting, offering a short deadline for Iraq to prove it has eliminated all banned weapons or face war.

But British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw made clear that any compromise on the U.S.-backed resolution must still include an authorization for military action.

Straw spoke hours before President Bush was to hold a rare prime-time news conference in an effort to counter stiff opposition to his plans for disarming Iraq. Bush had said he is willing to wage war even without new U.N. authorization.

Earlier Thursday, China became the latest council power to throw its support behind France, Germany and Russia, which have vowed to prevent the resolution's passage. Straw's demand was unlikely to be acceptable to those countries, which favor more weapons inspections to disarm Iraq peacefully.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan appealed to council members to discuss the crisis calmly, noting there were several proposals on the table.

"The positions are very hard now," he said. "I am encouraging people to strive for a compromise to seek common ground," adding, "to make concessions, you get concessions."

Secretary of State Colin Powell arrived in New York on Thursday for crucial talks to try to win support for the resolution from undecided council members. But Powell faced an uphill struggle to get nine "yes" votes and avoid a veto by one of the permanent members opposed to war now – France, Russia and China.

With some 300,000 U.S. troops in striking range of Iraq, he said the threat posed by Saddam Hussein must be dealt with now, not after thousands of people die when his "horrible weapons" of mass destruction are used.

Powell and other foreign ministers will attend a Security Council meeting on Friday where chief weapons inspector Hans Blix and his counterpart, Mohamed ElBaradei, will brief members on Iraq's cooperation in eliminating its banned weapons. For many council members, Friday's reports will be key in deciding whether to vote for the U.S.-backed resolution.

Stop, drop and roll!

Dressed in full gear, complete with oxygen tanks and safety helmets, student firefighters practice routine training exercises on campus.

Winter snowstorm causes traffic pileup in Attleboro

ATTLEBORO, Mass. (AP) – Police and emergency officials responded to dozens of crashes and spin-offs in the southeastern portion of the state Thursday, as a fast-moving snowstorm wreaked havoc with drivers.

The southbound lanes of Interstate 95 were closed off between the Rhode Island border and Exit 5, near North Attleboro, a nearly 10-mile stretch, after up to 100 vehicles were involved in spin-offs and crashes starting around 11:15 a.m., said state police Sgt. David Paine.

Crashes were also reported on I-95 Northbound, but those lanes remained open, Paine said.

There were reports of multiple injuries, but officials said none appeared life-threatening.

"There doesn't seem to be one specific area where this is taking place. It seems to be spread out all across the region," Paine said.

Authorities were unsure if an initial accident had been responsible for a "chain reaction" causing the other accidents.

The injured were being taken to area hospitals, while others were being transported to a staging point at the Assembly of God Church in South Attleboro. Cars were being towed to that location, so their owners could retrieve them, said state police Lt. Paul Malonev.

Authorities were also responding to reports of multiple accidents involving between 30 to 40 vehicles on Route 3 near Kingston and more than 20 vehicles on Route 24 near I-495, Paine said.

– The Associated Press

Radio journalism

Continued from page 1

the trip with his wife Diana Derby and his daughter, Claire. He compared it to "a journalistic Peace Corps, helping the growth of free media in developing democracies."

Flintoff was known as the lead newscaster on NPR's "All Things Considered" and a news correspondent. Earlier in the day, Flintoff guest lectured on campus and led a class at Amherst Regional High School.

The speech marked the third annual Williamson lecture, sponsored by the Communication, English and Journalism departments as well as the Phi Kappa Phi honor society.

Controversy over new dissection bill

Continued from page 1

dissections were a necessary part of the learning experience. Thomas S. Blaine, UMass junior, reported, "Absolutely. I also believe it is necessary for everyone to participate in one dissection in their lives regardless of their field of education."

Because of the controversy, debate on the bill in the Massachusetts Legislature is sure to continue.

"This is not a new issue," Professor Joe Kunkel said, though he offered hope for a possible compromise. "The wording of any legislation to allow students to opt out of dissections must be carefully worded so as not to restrict the freedom of expression and choice of material by the teacher."

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Writing Coach

Published author with 25 years' experience in meeting deadlines can help you break through writing barriers and complete important projects on time. Call 413-467-9470 or email Jeanne@yourghostwriter.com

New WORLD Theater Fine Arts Center Univ. of Massachusetts Amherst
SPRING 2003 SEASON featuring NWT commissions and collaborations

Playback Theater NYC
March 11 & 12 8 pm, East Street Studios, Hadley MA. An Open Mic follows the show

Open Mic Series Word for Word Free!
Wed. March 12
East Street Studios
Hosted by Baba Israel, following the Playback Theater performance
Tues. April 15, 9 pm
Atlantis Restaurant Amherst (down the alley behind Antonio's Pizza)

Soular Power'd
Full Circle Productions
Thursday & Friday, April 24 & 25
8 pm, Bowker Auditorium

blessing the boats
Written & performed by Sekou Sundiata
Wed & Thur April 2 & 3
8 pm Bowker Auditorium

www.newworldtheater.org
$15-general public; $8-low income/seniors; $5-students
Call the FAC Box Office, 545.2511
New WORLD Theater 413.545.1972 The Ford Foundation

U Card
U Get Credit!
Coca-Cola

Swipe your Ucard when you purchase any Coca-Cola product, and you are automatically entered to WIN $100, $50, $25, or $10 credit on your Ucard!

GO U UMASS !!!

Get 600 Whenever Minutes® for only $39.99

600 Whenever minutes
Unlimited weekends
Free long distance and roaming
$39.99 a month

Whenever minutes means whenever savings.

ONLY $49.99
FOR A MOTOROLA C332
AFTER $50.00 MAIL-IN REBATE
SRP $99.99

INTRODUCING T-MOBILE
GET MORE WITH THE WORLD'S LARGEST ALL GSM NETWORK
T··Mobile·
authorized dealer

2000 / T-Mobile
241 King Street
Northampton, MA 01060
(Located in Potpourri Plaza across the street from Stop & Shop)

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SGA needs to slow down its decision making process

Wednesday night the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) passed a motion 31 to 10 in favor of Gov. Mitt Romney's new higher education proposal.

Romney's proposal calls for a complete overhaul of the University of Massachusetts system and of all other colleges, universities and community colleges in the Commonwealth. It includes many provisions that could potentially benefit the University – increased revenue up to $26 million, level funding for the Amherst campus next year – but too many things remain uncertain to be making proclamations in favor of a proposal that will raise the tuition for in-state students by 15 percent and out-of-state students as much as 22 percent. Before the student body supports such a costly proposal, some serious soul searching needs to be done. Tuition could be going up by as much as $2,000 next year.

Premature decisions like this have a direct effect on the student body and need to be avoided. The SGA represents the student body, and needs to take care in making sure they do so in the best manner possible.

At the SGA Senate meeting Wednesday, Jared Nokes, deputy chair of Ways and Means Committee, said the SGA had been in contact with numerous people involved with the details of Romney's plan, including Peter Nessen, his appointed Secretary of Education.

This is admirable, and it's what any good government body at any level should do: communicate. In many of ways, however, it appears the SGA is supporting the plan wholeheartedly so early, more to appear cutting edge and less to represent the concerns of the general student body.

"Over the past week, we have been able to contact a lot of people who would talk to us, but not to state representatives," Nokes told the Senate Wednesday.

While their ability and efforts to understand the issue should be commended, do they truly understand the issue? Or are they jumping the gun?

Leaders in various capacities at the Amherst campus have already expressed, at the very least, suspicion toward Romney's plan. State Senator Stanley C. Rosenberg, a UMass alumnus, said he feels we could have a "wolf in sheep's clothing" with the plan. Ron Story, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said the plan's tuition hike can't become a replacement for the search for funding elsewhere. James Shaw, president of United Auto Workers Local 2322, said the proposal will make a bad situation worse at UMass. It places everything great at the University under attack.

With all these leaders hesitant to support the proposal in such a clear-cut manner, why is the SGA? Even Shaw, a man with strong anti-Bulger sentiments, is slow to support a plan that would eliminate the President's Office from the system because of other details.

The SGA needs to carefully consider the ramifications of all aspects of Romney's higher education proposal as the details are revealed, slowly and clearly. Only then can a worthy judgment be made.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Choosing a vision for Umass

Eduardo Bustamante

What is your vision for UMass' future? only ask because we stand at a crossroads.

Two competing visions for the University are colliding. The first vision, as stated by the Provost: "The University's mission is to provide an affordable education of high quality and conduct programs of research and public service that advance our knowledge and improve the lives of the people of the Commonwealth."

This vision is at the heart of UMass' conception. UMass was created as a land grant institution to provide the opportunity for higher education to those who could not otherwise afford it – farmers and ex-soldiers.

For the many who share this historic vision, UMass is a success only to the extent that it uplifts the tax payers of the Commonwealth who are willing to work hard to attain higher education and do not have the means to gain access to private institutions.

This vision aspires to use UMass as a tool to optimize the fundamental American ideals of freedom, equality and justice – to create a level playing field by making those in the Commonwealth with money give some of it to provide people who don't have it with the opportunity to attain higher education.

Elitists and politicians push the opposing vision for UMass' future. This second vision has most recently reared its inflated dome in the form of Mitt Romney's budget proposal and was well-captured by Peter Nessen, Romney's top education advisor. Earlier this week, Nessen spoke to the Associated Press in reference to the tuition hikes for UMass.

"There is a real desire to attract out-of-state, worldwide students to make it [UMass] the world class institution that we want it to be," he said.

The emphasis in this second vision for UMass is prestige. It is for prestige that Romney wants to add 15,000 students to the UMass-Amherst campus in the next 10 years and distinguish Amherst as an independent campus.

Prestige is more important than serving the people (those who follow this vision). There is more prestige for an elitist if appearing as the head of an elite cash-cow private school than there is as the head of a non-profit land grant school. So understand that when Romney proposes separating the Amherst campus and replacing state funding with student fees and private donations, he is taking the first step toward transforming UMass into an elite, cash-cow university.

Prestige is a desirable goal, but Romney proposes to put it in front, and at the expense, of educating the children of the small taxpayer by increasing student fees 15 percent for in-state students and 22 percent for out-of-state students. This injustice hits poor and middle class students and their families hardest. Not only do they have to pay higher tuition while simultaneously enduring diminishing educational quality, but many also will be bused off campus, because they can't afford the tuition hikes.

Pretend for a moment you are an elite business owner and politician: what would your ideal UMass be? An institution that creates efficient workers for cheaper, minimizes anti-capitalist/anti-American sentiments, gives your offspring the competitive advantage in the future and ensures that your morals, religious beliefs and political ideology remain intact? Perhaps you could even use it as a tool to further your career and try not to pay a cent for any of the aforementioned benefits?

"We need reasonable in-state fees and enough state funding to provide a quality higher education for those who don't have the finances to attend private colleges."

Well, Romney's proposal does all these things. First, he proposes UMass get "outside business people" to help decide the curricula and believes vocational training should be the focus of public higher education. Second, by balancing the budget through increases in student fees and not increasing taxes, he will bolster his political career, and no rich people – himself included – will have to pay an additional cent in this time of financial crisis to help the people that most need it. The poor and middle class families will not be able to afford quality higher education, which from the elitist's point of view translates into less competition for their offspring. More importantly, the absence of the poor from higher education means less exposure for wealthy offspring to those poorest and most dissatisfied groups (single mothers, minorities, immigrants and non-traditional students) who are so acutely aware of the injustices and inequalities of this country.

The Romney proposal has its pros: it would be great to make Amherst the undisputed flagship campus, cut a couple hundred million dollars worth of unnecessary "slush jobs" from this huge bureaucracy, create greater accountability by downsizing, have tuition kick back directly to the University and end President Bulger's shady $14 million office. But should we the people agree to a 15 percent tuition increase because layers of bureaucracy need to be cut?

The realization of Romney's prestigious vision for UMass will do irreparable damage to the people of the Commonwealth. Massachusetts already houses Harvard, MIT, Amherst College, Mt. Holyoke, Smith, Hampshire, Northeastern, BC, BU and Tufts to name a few. We don't need another prestigious, elite, money making private club in Massachusetts. We need reasonable in-state fees and enough state funding to provide a quality higher education for those who don't have the finances to attend private colleges.

The time to choose a vision for the future is fast approaching, and there are serious questions we need to answer and communicate to officials in the coming weeks: Inclusion or exclusion? Diversity or uniformity? Vocational or liberal curricula? Taxes or tuition hikes? Do we want to buy prestige by becoming larger and more elite or by earning it and uplifting the people of the Commonwealth?

Information in this column was used from the New York Times, Boston Globe and Valley Advocate.

Eduardo Bustamante is a Collegian Columnist.

Lies disguised as the truth

Yousef Munayyer

Propaganda is a funny word. I thought so since I first heard the word in elementary school. But it also has a not so funny side. In fact, it can be blatantly ugly, racist and hateful.

Whenever there is conflict, discovering the absolute truth about what is going on may be very difficult to achieve. Many times, we as people purposely skew, bend or change the truth to paint a different picture to the innocent bystander. At other times, we witness sheer lies and hate speech. It seems as though this has existed throughout the history of man: we are an enemy making people. It is almost as if it is part of the way we identify who we are. We separate good from evil; us from them. And when the tensions between us grow, we tend to dehumanize the other side. If you look at propaganda throughout history, this has been a reoccurring theme. We portray our enemies as fat, blood thirsty and sometimes even as wild animals – just to emphasize how much different they are than us.

However, Erich Maria Remarque reminds us that our enemies – whoever they are – are human. They too have a mother and brothers and children. They too feel pain. They also cry. They also feel the wrath of war or the terror of occupation.

Propaganda tends to make us forget that, and we should not allow it to. The most recent propaganda I have come across was in university papers in recent months. An organization called campustruth.org (talk about irony) is on a mission to fill many college newspapers with propaganda that skews the truth about the Palestinian conflict. Generally, it buys up some advertising space and places some misleading pictures or misleading "facts." If campustruth.org is attempting to persuade people that Israel is suffering on the bloodier side of this conflict, their claim can be rebutted by one simple fact. As of Feb. 17, the most recent accurate count I have been able to find, 2,960 people have been killed in this conflict since September of 2000. Approximately 2,210 of them have been Palestinian and 694 Israeli (the remainder being foreign nationals).

"The organizations we need should not skew the truth but present us with facts that can be accounted for and thoroughly debated."

But I would not be doing any of us any good if I were to simply berate Israel and attempt to skew facts either. The fact I mentioned above is not propaganda. It's what has happened. Take that and other facts into consideration when thinking about this conflict. Do not allow worthless propaganda campaigns to sway what you think.

This propaganda does not aim to help resolve the conflict. It does not aid it in anyway. In fact, I see no good coming out of this whatsoever. It completely misleads people and dehumanizes Palestinians as well.

Campus newspapers have pulled these ads, but that doesn't mean campustruth.org has raised the white flag. They have faced rejection before and will continue to spread lies about the conflict.

The Rutgers University paper, The Daily Targum, also had encountered this problem with campustruth.org. They are no longer running any more ads, because of protests from the Arab American community. They have come to realize that hate speech and racist propaganda does not belong in their publication.

Campustruth.org also went to the University of Chicago's Daily Maroon, the University of Illinois' Daily Illini and the University of Michigan's Daily. I read through the archives of those publications, and (surprise, surprise) all those publications have received letters to the editor against the racist ads. Most have written editors' notes or retractions apologizing for any harm or alienation the ad may have caused. The editor-in-chief of the Rutgers' Daily Targum even told me they ran a counter ad just to satisfy the uproar they received from anti-discrimination groups.

I still can't figure out what campustruth.org was thinking putting this stuff in the University of Michigan's paper – a school with one of the highest Arab student populations in the nation. But I am glad to see you do not have to be a Palestinian or an Arab to be appalled by racist propaganda of this nature. Seeing that all types of people can be united against hate shows me we are progressing as a people. I'm happy I won't see any more of this propaganda any time soon, but it definitely is an obstacle to peace. The organizations we need should not skew the truth, but present us with facts that can be accounted for and thoroughly debated.

Stephen Hawking said, "The greatest enemy of knowledge is not ignorance but the illusion of knowledge."

I think he got it right. Propaganda makes us think we know how things are, but this illusion of knowledge we have is actually the greatest enemy to the truth and knowledge itself. An entire population should not be thought of as evil because some of them may do bad things. Organizations that try to push this on us through propaganda or in any other way are not seeking the truth. They are pushing hate on us – that very thing they claim to be working against.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Where have all the parties gone?

When I came to UMass as a freshman, this place was awesome. I mean the people, the parties and school life was so much fun, but nowadays, I'm not so sure of that anymore.

What happened to all those nights where you could just go out with your friends and find at least three decent parties to go to with no problem? The times when the hardest part of your night was deciding whether or not to drink it straight or with a chaser?

Jen Hodson

Or what about frats that used to have actual dance floors where people could get down and dirty whenever they liked? What happened to getting dressed up and ready to go out on a Thursday night? Thursday nights aren't even party nights anymore. What's up with that?

It seems as though parties on this campus have gotten pretty lame. Back in the day, I can't remember a weekend that didn't go by where I didn't think to myself, "What an unbelievable time!" Remember those funny moments that made your weekend special? For me, walking home drunk from frat row with half of my friends, having dance parties in the hall or seeing my best friend throw up on someone the next morning at the DC and laugh my ass off are just a few. I mean, that stuff was hilarious. Am I wrong? Remember those inside jokes about the weekend that made you smile or waking up the next day and not knowing where you were or how you got there? These are precious moments kept in time.

Students need the weekends to get their minds off their studies, and what good is a weekend if you are stuck sitting at home watching old reruns of the Osbourne show? Not that I have a problem with that delightful, comedic performance of Ozzy on TV, but I mean Ozzy's gotta party too! There's a time for work, and then there's a time for play. "Playtime" is an important part of a student's life that doesn't get recognized as much as it used to.

Where did all the parties and the fun people go? I know some of you are still here, just waiting for another good party to arrive. I've heard student's even talk about it in classes when the subject arose. I've heard some say, yeah, this campus is totally dead or this school was so much fun when I came here my freshman year.

The thought of that saddens me. I think we, as students, need to make a conscious effort to bring back good parties to UMass. We need to step it up a notch and make an honest effort to return those crazy, wild nights that once made us proud to be part of one of the biggest party schools in the country.

"'Playtime' is an important part of a student's life that doesn't get recognized as much as it used to."

For those who know of any good parties that are similar to old school, please let me know, and I will be more than happy to attend. For example, this one party I went to last weekend had Amherst High School students at it. The only thing I thought when I walked in the door was, "Did I take a wrong turn before my 6th period P.E. class?" How the hell did that happen? Who invited the birthday party? I mean get real. Another example was a party I went to last semester where some freak decided to light the house that everyone's in on fire. Who does that? This isn't the fourth grade.

If you can't handle all the excitement, get out. How about those jerks at the party who decide to give everyone a hard time only to make it worse when something bad happens and thus cause people to go home? No one needs that nonsense.

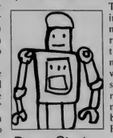
Moments in college are ones that should be treasured for a lifetime. You're only young once, and it's up to you whether or not you're going to live it up and take advantage of opportunity that's sitting right in front of you. Now I'm not saying everyone likes to party, but I think that when I state my opinion on this matter, I am representing the majority of those who just know how to go out and have a good time. So please this weekend when you're thinking of picking up the remote, don't and instead pick up a beer.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Robot' offers enough fun to fill an arena

Most of my columns do not touch on the subject of computer gaming. The reason is basic. Consoles essentially dominate most of the video game industry. (Some may disagree, as you and your buddies play "Counter Strike" on the computer until 4 a.m. every night.) Even still, there's room in the market for PC games to take hold.

Press Start to Play

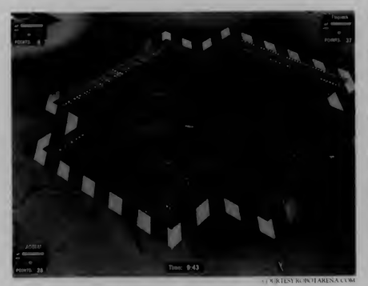
Reid Davenport

"Robot Arena 2," one such PC game, is adapted from such shows as "Battle Bots" and "Robot Wars." The player can choose from a set of pre-made robots to battle it out in realistic looking arenas. Or, if you enjoy spending hours on hours designing, you can build your own robot. This really makes this game worth buying. I have probably spent about six hours alone trying out new designs in the short time I've had it. The sky is pretty much the limit when you create your robot. You can make lifters, stabbers, crushers, slammers, bashers and so on. The available weapons arsenal is decent in size. One can add spikes, saws, maces, clubs and axes to dismantle other robots. This whole process takes some getting used to. The design controls will initially be disorienting. However, seconds later, another computer robot will destroy them. Here are some tips to help you get going.

"Robot Arena 2" PC Publisher Infogames Rated E

Tip 1: Make a big design when putting the robot together at first. It allows you to add more items, and you can get more compact and better at designing. Do not forget you need a power source, wheels, weapons and a control board in order to have a functional robot.

Tip 2: Learn the controls slowly. The controls seem really confusing at first. You have to click each wheel motor with an analogue control so you can program what keys make it go forwards, backwards and turn. Also, if you have something like the device to smash things with an axe, you need to program a button to make it smash when the button is pressed. It takes a while, but eventually you'll get the hang of it.



Graphically, this game is decent in the amount of stuff you can do with it. The robots can end up looking really excellent if you mold them right and put the right finishing touches on them. The arenas are no masterpieces, but they are what you would expect to see if you went to a real robot arena. Little pits, hammers, spikes and flames can be used for or against you. Basically, this game is based more around its high fun factor over its lack in graphics.

The one complaint most people have is that the game randomly crashes on you in the middle of game play. Needless to say, I nearly smashed my computer to bits when I was working on a design and the game closed on me. The up side is that Infogames is aware of this problem and will be releasing a patch on their website, robotarena.com. The site is also useful if you want to download other robot models made by other players and to get the latest updates on the game.

Possibly the coolest part of the game is the ability to play online against four of your friends. This can be done through LAN, Network or "Game Spy." You can pick your robots, design a team and let the games begin. It is possible this could become the newest online obsession for college students as the game costs only $19.99.

Overall this game delivered far much more than I expected. I have spent more of my time creating a robot of mass destruction over doing homework. Then again, I always tend to choose video games over homework. So, I guess, if you want to add another item to advance your procrastination of that report due next week, you might want to get your hands on "Robot Arena 2."

Reid Davenport is a Collegian Columnist.

"Robot Arena 2," an Infogames PC game, allows the player to design robots with various features.

Entertainment Briefs

Stones roll on; 'X-Men' settle

ROLLING STONES TO PLAY LARGEST ASIAN CONCERT IN THAILAND

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The Rolling Stones will arrive in Thailand next month to play the biggest Asian concert of their 40th-anniversary world tour, an organizer said.

The Stones will perform April 8 for a capacity crowd at the 11,500-seat Impact Arena on the outskirts of Bangkok, Neil Thompson, a promoter at BEC-Tero Entertainment, told The Associated Press Wednesday.

"The Bangkok venue is the biggest venue in Asia," he said. "They're bringing everything in, sound and lights." The Stones have not played in Thailand before.

Thompson said the rock band would spend three days in Bangkok after stops in Shanghai and Beijing, China. They also will play in Hong Kong, Singapore and India on the Asian leg of their "Forty Licks" tour.

With prices ranging from $35 to $188, tickets are expensive by Thai standards, but cheaper than those for some of the band's other Asian dates –front-row seats in Beijing go for $750.

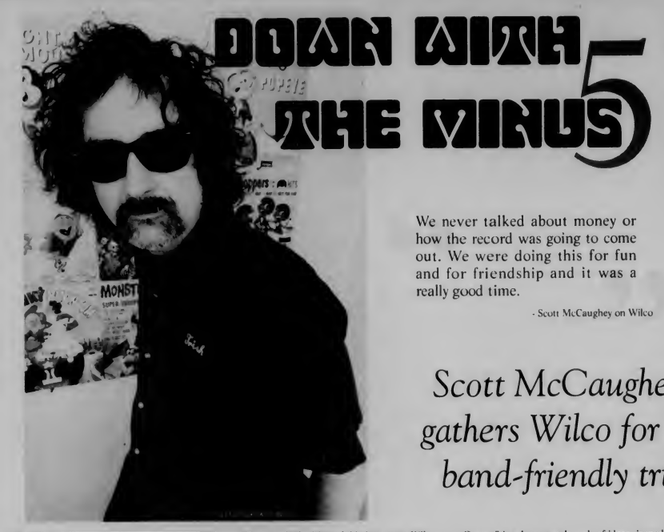
Tickets for the Bangkok concert go on sale Saturday.

MARVEL, FOX SETTLE LITIGATION OVER 'X-MEN' CHARACTERS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comic book publisher Marvel and 20th Century Fox have settled a federal lawsuit over licensing rights to the "X-Men" characters.

Terms of the settlement were not released, but the dispute was "amicably resolved" and both sides are looking forward to expanding the relationship, according to a Fox statement issued this week.

Fox produced the 2000 film "X-Men," a hit based on the comic book characters. A sequel is scheduled for release this year.



Marvel and the studio sued each other in 2001. Fox sued Marvel Enterprises, Tribune Entertainment and Fireworks Entertainment, claiming their syndicated TV show "Mutant X" violated an agreement licensing the "X-Men" characters for future films.

Marvel counter-sued, asking the court to dismiss Fox's claims and arguing that "Mutant X" used different characters.

A federal judge in New York ruled that the series could proceed as long as no reference was made to the original "X-Men" comic books, characters or Fox movie.

The judge allowed Fox to pursue a breach of contract claim.

- Associated Press

We never talked about money or how the record was going to come out. We were doing this for fun and for friendship and it was a really good time.

- Scott McCaughey on Wilco

Scott McCaughey gathers Wilco for a band-friendly trip

By MATTHEW DESPRES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Time has finally caught up with Scott McCaughey.

"Do you think we can do this later in the week?" he asks, bashfully. "I had an interview I didn't think was happening and they need me back at the studio and ..."

A moment later he's off, weaving through the hallways of the Wedgewood Hotel on his way back to work. The "they" in question is R.E.M., and the studio at hand is set aside for the band's new album, currently being recorded half a world away in drowsy Vancouver. It's a job that would consume most, but McCaughey is a voice for all seasons – a studio and live aid that has brightened R.E.M.'s sound for nine years, he is again mounting a war against music with his own band, The Minus 5.

GREAT NEWS AROUND YOU

At home, a scant 48 hours later on Valentine's Day, McCaughey is able to joke with an approachability that dismantles the length of phone wire his voice is strung along. It's some feat for a musician whose band will drop "Down with Wilco" in less than a week, the 2001 collaboration with the Chicago-based outfit that was mired in contractual tape and is only now settling into record store shelves.

"You know, it's that 'Wilco curse,'" he laughs, referring to the record label drama that unfolded around the release of "Yankee Hotel Foxtrot" last year. "I didn't have, like, 30 major labels bidding for my services, but I immediately had four or five really great ones I would have been happy with. I went with Yep Roc; I liked the vibe and ... [laughs] Nick Lowe is on the label."

For someone whose music is so stoutly rooted in the best of the pop tradition – or, as he'll call it, "a verse, a chorus, and if I'm lucky, another verse" – it's not surprising that McCaughey's business motivations are led by similar tastes. Since his launch of the Young Fresh Fellows in the early 80s, a band he dissolved in 1993, McCaughey has seemingly turned each moment of downtime with friends into a fruitful recording adventure. "The Lonesome Death of Buck McCoy" – his second effort with the 5 – was a handshake with guitarist Peter Buck. McCaughey's words draped over Buck's classically jangled guitar produced the band's most decisive and well-received effort to date. His relationship with the "other man" – Wilco's Jeff Tweedy – dates back some 13 years, when overlapping schedules in Chicago sparked a handful of one-off shows and creative impulses that have finally been given a proper resting home on "DWW."

"Peter and I had been lobbying to get Wilco on an R.E.M tour for a long time, so that worked out really, really well," says McCaughey. "[Jeff and I] wrote some songs together backstage and that sort of thing. It really gathered impetus for us to do a record; we were talking about it as long ago as '99 and going, 'We've got to do a record together sometime.' It finally worked out."

NEW ADVENTURES IN HI-FI

McCaughey and Tweedy come off as would-be brothers on "Down with Wilco," a pair of ragtag, musical misfits lit by a common end of the musical spectrum. McCaughey's smooth chirp willingly yields to Tweedy's grazing, occasional tone (altogether, he sings a song and a half). The common denominator for the two is the band left behind the curtain – the remainder of Wilco, reborn as the latest edition of McCaughey's 5.

"With the early Wilco and early Minus 5, you could see that we were really compatible," says McCaughey. "You can hear some of the same influences on "Being There" as on the Minus 5 records. I think we had a lot in common and still do; there's always something we can spring on each other."

McCaughey is one of the few musicians who can reference "we" with the proper humility to stand upon. Much of the album shuffles forward at a pleasantly odd tilt, the scattershot sounds that decorate it a natural outgrowth of the free-form atmosphere coloring nearly every track. The divergent melodies, criss-crossing patterns and abstract textures atypical of McCaughey's work were the result, he says, of simply being taught to follow his own discomfort.

"It was pretty organic. On this record most of the songs I kind of had, but some of them I left pretty open ended. I wanted to play the songs for the Wilco guys really stripped down, basic, and see what would happen. The way they added to the arrangements with very little to go on, except the very basic song ... that really made the record what it is."

"Down with Wilco" is, in part, the result of good friends looking to buck a trend and explore alternative methods for simply writing rock songs. It's also a ground for McCaughey's sustained penchant of playful duality, wrapping colorful melodies and passages together to "sing woeful lyrics over the top of." It's a form that reveals the album piece by piece; the surprise of a downtrodden lyric comes long after the underscoring melody has lodged itself in your head. The ethereal feel to the songs as they sway between transitional moments and seamless pop structures is bound to handcuff writers into cyclical explanations. That's a trap, however, that McCaughey says isn't as difficult as it may seem. "Daggers Drawn" is a loose patchwork of ideas, ironed over by a vocal turn from Rebecca Gates that came around "without really thinking about it too much," he says. Likewise, "What I Don't Believe" literally stops time with its piano driven meter – it's in a song like this that the greater ambition and ease of the album can be found.

"I played [it] for Bill Frieslin [Ministry, NIN] the other night, and he's going, 'You know what that drum part is? It's totally Devo," chuckles McCaughey. "And I was like, 'You're right!' But the genius of [drummer Glenn Kotchke] thinking of putting a Devo drum part on a 3/4 piano waltz song was awesome. It was kind of like a really weird, Devo version of 'Satisfaction.' Just insane."

That lightness proved to work as a control, striking a balance in uncertainty, and helped to influence the way McCaughey began watching a band regain its own center – the moment-to-moment evolution of Wilco unwittingly preparing for the next big step.

"I think it was actually a really good time for them to play, because they were just getting their legs as a new band, really," says McCaughey. "It was really the first thing they did without [Bennett]; I didn't know until about a few weeks before I went out there that Jay wasn't going to be a part of it. They were feeling really free and easy and excited about being a band together. I think [Jeff] felt like he wanted all of them to a part of it, because they were feeling like they were going to be a band together, those four guys, so I think it was actually great timing."

WHERE WILL YOU GO?

A reprise in Vancouver, and a return to hazy afternoons locked away in a studio with his "other" band. McCaughey is as at home here as he is with the 5. Or the Fellows. Or Tuatara. Or Wilco.

"I'm totally excited about [the new R.E.M. record]," says McCaughey. "I'm really there to facilitate getting a good take of a song. That's not to say that I won't on occasion have an idea and do an overdub, but Peter and Mike can pretty much do anything I can do ... better [laughs]. I'm there to be a part of the band so we can rock out live and get a good basic track to work with."

In the fringe moments he calls downtime, McCaughey is hoping to band together with Wilco for at least one date – an April 29 gig on "The Late Show with David Letterman" – to celebrate the album publicly and, naturally, see old friends.

"The R.E.M duties have gotten pretty time consuming, so I think the best thing we can hope for is the [TV show]," he says. "That's looking pretty good, so at least we can convene for one song [laughs]."

Game two; round three

A popular Hollywood myth states that Kevin Bacon is somehow connected to every other actor in show business by no more than six degrees, where a degree is a single link between the given movie star and someone else who has appeared on-screen with him/her. Rumor states that every puzzle has at least one route.

Send your answers to collegianbacon@hotmail.com by no later than noon on Sunday. With your solutions, please include:
Your name
Your university/college
Your class year
Your major

This game will end on April 25.
Points are awarded as the following:
GOLD (15 points) - Shortest route, fastest time
SILVER (10 points) - Fastest time only
BRONZE (5 points) - Most creative/thematic route
HONORABLE MENTION (1 point) - All other players with valid solutions

This week's puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & LAURA DERN

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

Jake D. Lewis

Book signing at Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop to showcase UMass professor

This Saturday, March 8, The Jeffery Amherst Bookshop will host a reading and discussion on "A House Divided: The Antebellum Slavery Debates in America, 1776-1865," the latest editorial work of Mason Lowance. Professor Lowance is currently a professor at both the University of Massachusetts and Harvard University. His teaching career in Amherst began more than 35 years ago. He is a member of the American Antiquarian society.

Other works published by Professor Lowance include "The Language of Canaan: Metaphor and Symbol in New England from the Puritans to the Transcendentalists" and "Increase Mather." In addition, Lowance is the editor of "Against Slavery: An Abolisionist Reader" and "The Stowe Debate: Rhetorical Strategies in Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Previously inaccessible documents have been included in this volume of work, such as Bible-based arguments both for and against the institution of slavery and examples of race theory that attempted to prove white "superiority" through scientific research.

Additional contributors to the volume include: Sandra Duvivier, Christopher Hanlon, Melba Jensen, Arthur F. Kinney, Dean Grodzins, Adam Linker and William Pannapacker. These persons include graduate students and professors from some of the country's leading universities such as Eastern Illinois University, the University of Scranton, Michigan's Hope College and North Carolina State University.

The reading will take place at 1 p.m. and refreshments will be provided. Anyone seeking further information may call (413) 253-3381.

- Jessica Pelletier

The Tale of the Tape

Jennifer Butler	Name	Cathy Joens
Center	Position	Guard
Massachusetts	Team	G.W.
17.0 (3)*	Points	17.9 (2)*
14.4 (1)*	Rebounds	5.0 (NR)*
1.8 (NR)*	Assists	3.37 (12)*
2.41 (1)*	Steals	2.07 (7)*
1.3 (5)*	Blocks	0.04 (NR)*

*Numbers in parentheses signify team rank in top 20 among Atlantic 10 players.
Figures are per game statistics.

A-10 continues to disrespect UM has struggled mightily since its point guard and 3-point threat Katie Nelson went down with a knee injury in late January. The team, which started out 8-1 finished the year 3-7 after Nelson went down with the season-ending injury.

So how much sense does that make? It isn't the Atlantic 10 Women's Basketball Best Player on the Best Team Award – that would clearly go to Joens. It isn't even the Atlantic 10 Women's Basketball Most Valuable Player Award which would at least garner a debate regarding a team's success. This is the conference's Player of the Year Award, so give it to the best darn player in the A-10.

This isn't the first time the Atlantic 10 coaches have missed the boat on Butler. Last year, No. 21 led the conference in rebounding with 11.6 per game (fifth in the nation) and placed ninth in scoring at 13.2 points per game. She also placed second in the conference in blocked shots and fifth in steals. But, somehow, the coaches couldn't find a spot for her on the All-Conference first team. Instead, one of the two or three most dominating players in the A-10 last season was relegated to the second team – a nice feat, but Butler deserved more.

It isn't even just Butler who was overlooked last year by the A-10 coaches. Then-freshman Katie Nelson was, incredibly, left off the conference's All-Rookie Team. This despite she took command of the starting point guard spot from day one, playing over 36 minutes per game and having the second highest scoring average (9.5 ppg) on her team as well as among rookies in the A-10.

For some reason, the coaches seem to disregard what happens in Amherst as being on par with the rest of the conference. How else could they look at those numbers and these players and not see what would be blatantly obvious to any rational person?

Whatever the reason for the snub, Jen Butler is definitely the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year to those who aren't affiliated with any rival team.

Congratulations Jen, on a great season and a great career.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

Martinez makes first spring start

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – After a spring training full of talk about options, contract extensions and the possibility of batting the team, Boston Red Sox ace Pedro Martinez finally played in a game on Thursday.

Martinez threw 51 pitches in two innings, striking out four after a slow start in the Red Sox' 3-0 exhibition loss to the Minnesota Twins.

"I knew it was going to be a good outing once I threw the first pitch," said Martinez, who gave up two hits and two runs, one earned, in the first inning, but struck out the side in the second.

He is more confident this spring than last spring after coming off a 2001 season when he was limited to 18 games by a shoulder injury.

"I am more secure," he said. "I went through a whole season last year and I didn't get hurt and my arm felt great, especially at the end. I kept feeling better and better and better, and it seems like that has carried over to this spring training."

Martinez just exudes more confidence this spring, manager Grady Little said. And that in turn, makes the coaching staff and the entire organization feel better.

Martinez came into camp insisting that the team pick up his option for the 2004 season and that he get a contract extension to keep him in Boston for the rest of his career. Without that, he said, he would leave the team.

But at the same time, Martinez said he had a good relationship with team ownership and was confident it would meet his demands. Ownership also said it was confident it could give Martinez what he wants. The sides have been meeting.

Contract talk was off limits on Thursday Almost.

"You know what, I said I'm not going to talk about it and I am going to leave it just like that," he said. "But yes, I am comfortable that everything is going to take its place. So I am not talking about that anymore."

Tuscaloosa trip gets UMass out of gym

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone knows what he needs.

After six weeks of hitting in the cage, fielding fungos on a gym floor and running outfield drills between men's and women's lacrosse practice on Garber Field's artificial turf, his team needs to play ball – on a diamond.

"It's just time to get out on the field and play," Stone said. "We've been in the gym for what seems like forever and the guys are itching to let the real stuff begin.

"It'll take a little time to get used to actually being back on the diamond, and we're obviously going to be conscious of that, but we're all sick of running the same drills over and over."

As Stone's troops take the field tonight, he'll be asking for them to take a rather large leap; from hacking around in the Boyden Gymnasium to clashing with one of the more vaunted programs in college baseball, the Alabama Crimson Tide.

"It's a challenge going down to a place like Alabama," Stone said. "They're obviously a great program and they have great teams year in and year out.

"It'll simply be about coming to play for us. We can't get overwhelmed and try to do things we're not capable of. We just need to focus on the game and play good baseball."

Alabama, as is the custom with all southern schools, have a distinct advantage over its northern counterparts in the fact that it has been able to workout outside since the middle of winter. Stone hopes, however, that after the initial grace period he intends to allow his team, they will be ready to compete.

"[Alabama has] been outside for a while," he said. "But I in the end, it'll just come down to who focuses and plays better baseball."

The coaching staff will use the three-game set in Tuscaloosa to make a solid assessment of both their position players and their young pitching staff using the competitive environment to test themselves under true game conditions.

"We've got a lineup set for the first night, but that's it," Stone said. "We're just going to plug guys in here and there to see what they can do and see where we're at as a team.

"As far as pitching is concerned, we're pretty young and have a lot of untested arms. Again we'll try a lot of them in various roles in the three games and then reassess where we are after that."

Stone also added that highly-touted Ohio State transfer John Toffey may see his first action as a Minuteman in a relief role, if needed.

Alabama enters the game ranked No. 24 in the nation, however, they dropped a game to the University of Rhode Island last weekend, and Coach Stone hopes the Minutemen will fare as well as their A-10 rivals.

"We're going there to win," Stone said. "Of course, we need to get on the field and finally play a game, but the bottom line is that we are going down there trying to beat Alabama.

"We've done the indoor stuff so much, we can do it in our sleep," he added. "That's how I know we are ready."

Skiing pulls off major upset at nationals

By Art Jankelowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's ski team has enjoyed success this season, but to have predicted it would have been impossible.

There were too many obstacles against the Minutewomen, with Sierra-Nevada having nationals at their home mountain and having recruits from the Norwegian national ski team. It seemed those advantages would propel Sierra-Nevada to yet another national championship.

The United States Collegiate Skiing Association agreed in their season preview, picking the Eagles to finish first nationally.

The Minutewomen, however, paid no attention to these predictions and won the giant slalom on Wednesday, putting them in position to win the national championship, located in Tahoe, Calif.

Tahoe Mountain is the Eagles' home. They held all the cards Wednesday – their women's team has won the combined (slalom and giant slalom) championship 10 out of the last 12 years.

The Sierra-Nevada team swept every race in 2002, having its racers take first, second and third all year long. The National Championships were no exception; the team swept there as well. With that in mind, they clearly were the favorites this year.

But the UMass women's first place finish on Wednesday makes an Eagles national championship less likely, and with only three skiers to qualify after some devastating injuries before the nationals, they are in a tight spot.

On Wednesday, the Maroon and White placed four of its five racers in the top 15.

The Minutewomen came into the event after winning the Eastern Division regional championship, which is one of five divisions represented at Nationals.

This week marked the first where only athletes who won Athlete of the Week were skiers. Senior Carolyn Lewenberg won the award after winning the combined regional championship. It was her second such honor of the year. Junior Beau Gibson was named as co-recipient.

Lewenberg is joined in Tahoe with classmate Molly Lyon, sophomore Nikki Smith and freshmen Caitlin Doughty and Lisbet Raah.

With the slalom left on Saturday, the Minutewomen are in prime position to win the combined.

The men's squad also competed in the giant slalom today, but results were not available at press time.

Eastern Regional champ Gibson looks to wrap up an already spectacular season with good placing in the slalom and giant slalom. Joining Gibson are seniors Chris Pomeroy and Jay Robbins, graduate student Nick Kulkarni, junior David Pomeroy and freshman Patrick Bachant.

The women's slalom will take place on Friday, while the men's slalom is slated for Saturday.

CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT
FIRST ROUND
UMass basketball VS. COLONIALS OR DUQUESNE DUKES
MONDAY
MARCH 10th
7:00 pm
FREE STUDENT TICKETS
JUST BRING YOUR STUDENT I.D. TO THE GAME ON MONDAY!
FOR MORE INFO CALL 545-0810
WWW.UMASSATHLETICS.COM

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
29 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0743
143 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

www.dailycollegian.com

WHEN SOMEONE ASKS YOU WHAT YOU DID IN COLLEGE, WHAT WILL YOU TELL THEM?
THE AMHERST FIRE STUDENT FORCE WILL BE RECRUITING NEW MEMBERS FEB 25-27 AT THE CAMPUS CENTER.

OR COME TO OUR OPEN HOUSE.
FRIDAY MARCH 1ST AT THE NORTH FIRE STATION (UP THE HILL FROM SYLVAN) @6PM.
OR CALL AT 549-5419.

Burgers • Hot Dogs • Chicken
Seafood • Fries • Onion Rings
Shakes • Smoothies • Soft Serve
GREAT 8 ATE Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick Top 8 Burgers in New England "Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
NOW SERVING BREAKFAST
287 RUSSELL ST
ROUTE 9 • HADLEY
585-0241
CREDIT CARDS OCMP
PETE'S DRIVE-IN peterestaurants.com

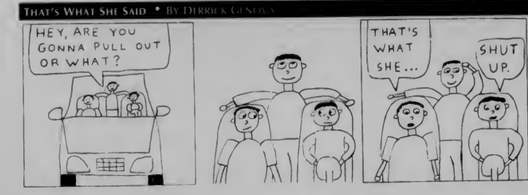
Completely Confidential
TAPESTRY Health
1-800-696-7752
in Amherst call: 413-548-9992
Hours: Monday 8:30-4:30 Tuesday-Friday 10-6
New! Sunday hours 12-4
www.tapestryhealth.org

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/7/03 - Thursday 3/13/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
TEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:20*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:05 7:30 10:00*
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:15 4:20 7:15 9:35*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:25
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 3:10 5:00 7:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 9:45
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 9:40
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:05 10:15
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 9:50
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:05
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 7:45
Senior Show 3/13/03 - BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE 10:00AM
DOORS OPEN AT 9:15
*-no passes/supersavers
+NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

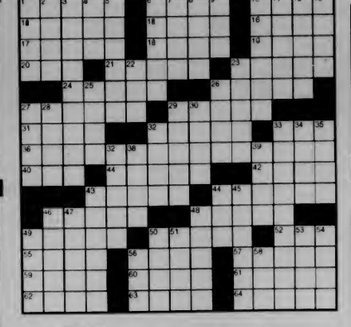
ESSIE HOOPER • By Kristen D. Kenyon

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

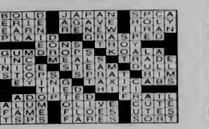


GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley



GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Gendvil



ACROSS
1 Horsesbiker
6 Fitness centers
10 Hatchet handle
14 Gloat
15 Gleam
16 Dazzles
17 Fire chief's suspicion
18 Movie lioness
19 Carefree escapade
20 Sugar unit
21 Objectives
23 Inserts a word
24 VCR button
26 Cuts calories
27 Accompany
29 Nuisance plants
32 Large parrot
33 Sandwich
35 "Baby Baby" (Linda Ronstadt)
36 Winter sports gear (2 wds.)
40 That ship
41 Large marsupial
42 To be, in Montreal
43 Face warmer
44 Dilettante
46 Bogged down
48 Raw-fish delicacy
49 Panhandler's request
50 Silt deposit
52 Trippet
55 Kind of leopard
56 EEC currency
57 Sod grass
60 Beattie and Blyth
61 Throw rocks at
63 Abrasive
64 Jokester Martha
65 Pub orders
66 Rodeo prop

DOWN
1 Weasley's wife
2 Next after Earth
3 Clouseau, e.g.
4 Boxing win
5 Closet item
6 Fantastic
7 Bellow
8 Talk
9 Hub cap
10 Moon phenomena
11 Expect
12 Spice producers
13 Regaining ducks
22 Mo. for Libras
23 Apple drink
25 Lives and rules
26 Auto mishap
27 Delineate
28 Tenderness
29 Was willing to
30 Sea eagle
32 Wild tumult
33 Big birds
34 Soup vegetable
35 Makes tracks
37 Candied
38 Libya neighbor
39 She loves, to Tomas
43 Watch shop
44 Tumulus mummy
45 Sigmund Freud
46 Food from leaven
47 Sarcasm
48 Piggy bank features
49 Russian ruler
50 Sword fight
51 ___ Stanley Gardner
53 Fuss
54 Rochester clinic
56 Bath, colloquious org.
58 GP group

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-25-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
- High: 33
- Low: 24

SATURDAY
- High: 45
- Low: 30

SUNDAY
- High: 41
- Low: 11

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- N.E. Clam Chowder
- Roast Turkey
- Clam Roll
- Greek Style Tofu (vegetarian)
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- N.E. Clam Chowder
- Salmon with Miso Glaze
- Veal Madeline
- Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan-Hicks
COPY EDITOR
Matt Despres
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Adam Shane / Gerry Auger

QUOTE OF THE DAY

When you are looking for obstacles, you can't find opportunities.
- J.C. Bell

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You've been asked to take part in something that is not a "sure thing," but your involvement might better the odds.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It won't take you long to figure out today just where you stand and where you want to be.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
It is a good day to keep your fingers crossed and hope for the best.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
The cosmos are in a tizzy of the movement of Jupiter over Saturn. Better stay in bed.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You're going to step on a crack today, but fortunately it won't break your mother's back.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your future is cloudy. Try out something new today. It might help clear the air.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today will be trying, but don't worry. It will pay off in the end.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Try to be nice today. It will result in good things for everyone you meet.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It'll be essential to get messages sent ahead of time today if you expect things to get done.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
This is a good day for hammering out an agreement with someone who has been at odds with you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
What you get today is not likely to be what you originally bargained for.

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Work may have you traveling far from home today, so be prepared.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

Got anything to do this Saturday nite March 8th? Come to the 4th annual greek stroll competition. Doors open at 1pm - $6 general admission - $4 Greeks

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Nissan Stanza Four Door autotrans sunroof 71k A/C very nice vehicle 2550. 582-9103.

95 Voyager Van $1750 549-6023

Purchasing a used car? Having sour car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise line entry level on board positions or year round. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

Deli Department Sales Associate part-time afternoons and evenings weekends required experience preferred call Atkins 253-9528

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + workstudy available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours from New York and Philadelphia), A Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, motor bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20- 8/16. Call (800) 852-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

Assistant Needed for busy office on Nantucket Island May-Aug. or Dec. Computer, accurate typing and telephone Skills necessary. Salary and housing. Fax resume to 508 228 8778 or Mail to: Rafael Osuna P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

EMPLOYMENT

Internship: For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9.300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmaill1@yahoo.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Party @ Atlantis 3/10 10-1 18+ Dance to HipHop $5Cover Sponsored by UMass Equestrian Team

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

2 Good Goodyear 265/75-16 Truck Tires $40 for pair. Your old GM 78-87 M10size need a radiator? I have good one $50 545-1956

Furniture Sale For sale: Italian leather love seat and chair, platform bed, Surround Sound Stereo System, new A/C unit, all at great prices. For more info call 413-546-1258

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 2bedrm apt $425+utils Aval. ASAP in Amherst on bus line, heat+water include. No deposit.

SERVICES

Prof. Student+cat email flowerface4u@netscape.net

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health. 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK! Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days, Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials! Incl. Port, Departure, Hotel Tax! www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummerours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A hockey shocker

Stephen Werner and the UMass hockey team became the first team ever to beat Maine in a Hockey East Playoff game at Alfond Arena. Game two of the best-of-three series will take place tonight at Alfond at 7 p.m.

UMass takes game one of playoff series at Maine

By MATT BRADY
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine – Take that, history.

The Massachusetts hockey team walked into Alfond Arena last night having never won in a visit Maine and having yet to win a Hockey East quarterfinals game.

UMass	5
Maine	3

The Minutemen walked out on top of a wild 5-3 victory over Maine in the first game of the best of three series.

"Obviously it was a real intense affair. We had to weather the storm early when they got that five-on-three goal," head coach Don Cahoon said.

"We were able to get that goal right back, and even get a bigger second goal to get that lead. That lead gave us a big advantage going through the rest of the game not coming from behind, but playing out in front."

Stephen Iacobs notched the gamewinner at 1:54 of the third period. Tim Vitek left the puck for Iacobs on the far boards and fired an odd-angle wrist shot that beat Frank Doyle (13 saves) between the pads to give UMass a 4-3 lead. That goal came just 18 seconds after Gray Shanchenger knotted the game at three and brought the Maine crowd back into the game. It was Iacobs's first career goal and just his third career point.

"Tim Vitek made an unbelievable play along the boards," Iacobs said. "I was just trying to get it on net and get a rebound."

"That goal was huge, because it gave us a life," Cahoon said.

Along with Iacobs, unlikely scorers included sophomore defenseman Dusty Demianiuk, who scored his first goal of the season, and Peter Trovato, who posted his fifth of the year on a nifty move that chased Jimmy Howard (nine saves) from the contest.

"We were real pleased just getting the puck to the cage, getting a little puck luck, and that's what it's going to take," Cahoon said. "You can't get through a playoff series depending on just your key scorers. It's the most unlikely guys out there that can make the difference."

The Minutemen posted their 16th four-goal output of the season and won for the 10th time. Greg Mauldin tacked on an empty net goal to finish off the Black Bears.

Maine opened the scoring at 8:07, courtesy a five-on-three power play. With sophomore Jeff Lang and freshman Matt Anderson in the box, Maine used good puck work to break an 11-game scoring drought for Martin Karlsa. Karlsa took a feed from Lucas Lawson in front of the net and deposited it past Winer.

But the Minutemen answered back with a pair of first period goals on unlikely circumstances. Matt Anderson made it 2-1 on a backhander from 35 feet out that handcuffed Howard and found its way to the back of the net. Just over a minute and a half earlier, Demianiuk put home a wrister from the point off a Maine stick that bounced over Howard's glove to open the Maroon and White scoring.

UMass took a two-goal lead early in the second when Josh Hanson stole the puck from Travis Wight behind the net and fed in front to Peter Trovato, who brought the puck to his forehand and beat Howard blocker side. That chased No. 33 from the net, having only saved eight of the 11 Maroon and White shots he faced on the night. Doyle then came in relief and made all eight saves in a solid second period.

Men's hoop readies for final tune-up

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team can probably assume that three positive things will come out of what coach Steve Lappas has called the strangest week he's experienced in 20-plus years as a college headman.

First, Lappas was able to get some recruiting done during the middle of this week – something he doesn't get to do too much during the season.

Second, the Maroon and White (11-16, 6-9 Atlantic 10) will almost definitely become immortalized as a Trivial Pursuit answer to the question, "What Atlantic 10 program was set to host St. Bonaventure's men's basketball team on March 5, 2003, before the Bonnies called off their season with two regular season games to go?"

Finally, and most importantly, the forfeit win clinched a first round home matchup for the Minutemen in the first round of the A-10 Tournament on Monday.

Otherwise, tomorrow's game against Saint Joseph's (21-5, 11-4 A-10) could have been a huge contest for the Minutemen. It could very well have been for the right to host a home playoff game on Monday.

Instead, UMass will celebrate Senior Day for its two captains, forwards Jackie Rogers and Micah Brand, while trying to get back on track before Monday's second-season opener.

Rogers, who transferred to UMass from junior college before the 2000-2001 season, leads the Minutemen in scoring (12.7 points) and rebounding (5.5 boards). Brand, meanwhile, is forth on the team in points (7.5) and third in rebounding (4.1).

While Senior Day normally marks the last time a player will compete on his home court, Rogers and Brand will get one more game at the Mullins Center; Monday's playoff contest against either George Washington or Duquesne. The two squads are currently tied for fifth place in the A-10 West Division. The fifth-place team will place against the Minutemen on Monday night.

Though the Minutemen are playing a game Saturday, two other games will actually affect their destiny more than their own. GW will host Fordham, which had just one conference win before the St. Bonaventure fiasco upped its total to three, while Duquesne will host Rhode Island.

As for the matchup with St. Joe's, the Minutemen won't have to deal with the Hawks leading scorer, Delonte West (18.5 ppg), whose team has already clinched the A-10 East Division title. West, who was diagnosed with a stress fracture in his right fibula, will sit out the contest in hopes of resting it for the playoffs.

West dropped 19 on the Minutemen in their first meeting, a 76-47 loss at SJU Fieldhouse on Jan. 11. It could have been more, but the sophomore played just 28 minutes because of the insurmountable lead.

While West will be out of action, UMass will still have to worry about his backcourt mate and Preseason All-Conference First-Team Selection Jameer Nelson. Nelson, who scored 12 points and dished out eight assists in the win, currently ranks sixth in the A-10 in scoring (18.3 points), just behind West, and third in assists (4.96).

The Minutemen are coming off a loss at Rhode Island that saw them give up a nine-point half time lead and eventually fall 65-58. Brand led UMass with 18 points, including a 10-for-10 performance from the free throw line.

The Minutewomen had just one player (Butler) in double-digit scoring most of the way. Smith scored her 10th point on a layup with 5:55 to go.

The Explorers, after being down for much of the first half, pulled ahead of the Minutewomen, and held a 12-point lead with 10:21 to go. Butler was the only UMass player scoring consistently, and when La Salle locked down the double team, her effectiveness was diminished as well.

Chrissy Walker set the Explorers off on an 11-0 run, stepping into a passing lane and making the breakaway layup to give La Salle a 41-58 lead, and Coach Dacko cause to rally her troops.

Amber Sneed stepped up as the emotional leader for UMass, making a 3-pointer and professing all the way back down the court. "We're not playing anymore! Let's go!"

Both squads struggled early in the second half, and Smith scored the first basket two minutes in give the Minutewomen a 33-32 edge.

La Salle's Meghan Willkinson was repeatedly left alone outside, and capitalized for three 3-pointers. Shaurne McLaughlin also splashed two from downtown to give the Explorers their first lead with 20 seconds to go. The teams headed into the locker room with the Explorers up 32-31 and with the momentum.

Marnie's Army exits early

Knocked out of A-10 tourney in first round

By ANDREW MERRITT
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – Call it an upset.

Big La Salle Explorers came into the Ryan Center seeming as the underdog Ranked No. 6 in the West bracket, they were, on paper, the subordinate team.

But the Massachusetts women's basketball team managed just two players in double-digit scoring, and despite the record-breaking efforts of Jennifer Butler (24 points, 25 rebounds, 4 three-point shooting), UMass was the weaker team. With a 67-62 win, La Salle advances to the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Championship.

Butler thought by many to be stubbed for A-10 Player of the Year – George Washington's Cathy Joens received the nod – set a conference championship record with her 25 rebounds.

The game was a story of two halves as the Minutewomen dominated the opening stanza, and La Salle took over after the break. UMass fought back from a 12-point deficit with key points from Butler, but the Explorers held on for the win.

Butler highlighted a number of things that handicapped the Minutewomen, most of which occurred when La Salle had the ball.

"Just our defense, period, and a lack of rebounding on the defensive end," she said. "We didn't get out on their 3-point shooters. We had a couple lapses on defense, and it really cost us."

"We were flat," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We didn't come to play. We felt that way this morning; the coaches felt that was this afternoon, and we just didn't have the supporting cast that goes around Jen. If I was playing Jen, I'd put four people on her too."

"When you look at who's shooting the ball," Dacko said, "it's Jen, it's [Nekole Smith], it's Thom [Pegues] and Thom's not hitting for us. We didn't have good guard play, and we have no depth. We have no depth on the team."

Evidence of UMass' short bench was the 14 minutes doled out to Kristin Cannon, who had just two points in her increased floor time.

Jill Mariano splashed a 3-pointer with 1:43 to go, giving La Salle a three-point lead. The Maroon and White bounced back, with Smith sinking both ends of a one-and-one. Davinecia Payne brought the Explorers lead back to three with a jumper, and Mariano added two from the foul line.

The Minutewomen had just one player (Butler) in double-digit scoring most of the way. Smith scored her 10th point on a layup with 5:55 to go.

The Explorers, after being down for much of the first half, pulled ahead of the Minutewomen, and held a 12-point lead with 10:21 to go. Butler was the only UMass player scoring consistently, and when La Salle locked down the double team, her effectiveness was diminished as well.

Chrissy Walker set the Explorers off on an 11-0 run, stepping into a passing lane and making the breakaway layup to give La Salle a 41-58 lead, and Coach Dacko cause to rally her troops.

Amber Sneed stepped up as the emotional leader for UMass, making a 3-pointer and professing all the way back down the court. "We're not playing anymore! Let's go!"

Both squads struggled early in the second half, and Smith scored the first basket two minutes in give the Minutewomen a 33-32 edge.

La Salle's Meghan Willkinson was repeatedly left alone outside, and capitalized for three 3-pointers. Shaurne McLaughlin also splashed two from downtown to give the Explorers their first lead with 20 seconds to go. The teams headed into the locker room with the Explorers up 32-31 and with the momentum.

Atlantic 10 misses the boat on Butler's stellar season

Jim Pignatiello

Congratulations to UMass women's basketball center Jennifer Butler for being named Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year and earning a spot on the all-conference first-team. Those are impressive accomplishments, and the recognition they've brought the school and the women's hoop program has been tremendous.

But let's all be completely honest here. Butler was completely hosed Wednesday night at the conference's banquet. It was at that event in Newport, R.I. held just 24 hours before UMass would open its postseason with a first round game against La Salle on Thursday, that the A-10 announced its end-of-season awards.

And Jen was screwed over.

Sure, she was awarded the above honors, as well as a spot on the all-defensive team, but Jennifer Butler was the best player in the Atlantic 10 this season, and she clearly deserved the Player of the Year Award. Instead, the conference bestowed it upon George Washington guard/forward Cathy Joens, who is a great player, but not nearly as good as Butler.

Clearly, the conference's coaches have a different idea of what constitutes being a player of the year means.

As I understand it, the best player in the conference, the one who has had the best season, is the player of the year.

That's Butler. There is little doubt of this.

Let's pull a roto-geek move and look at the statistics.

Joens is a scorer, ranking No. 2 in the conference with 17.9 points per game. The Irvine, Calif. native is also good for 3.37 assists (12th in the conference), 2.07 steals (seventh) and five rebounds (outside top 20) per game. As a perimeter player, Joens has managed just one blocked shot all year, but otherwise, those aren't bad stats in what are considered the big five categories.

However, they pale in comparison to Butler, who recorded a league-high 23 double-doubles in 2003. UMass' senior center is right behind Joens in scoring with 17 ppg. She led the entire nation in rebounding at 14.4 per game while leading the A-10 with 2.41 steals. Butler was also good for 1.5 blocks (fifth in the conference) and 1.8 assists.

It is clear Butler put up far better numbers than Joens this season. And the coaches even admitted she was the best defensive player in the conference. So why, then, was Butler so ridiculously overlooked by the A-10?

Because Joens plays on a better team.

Joens suite up for the Colonials, which ran up a 21-6 overall record, including an impressive 13-1 conference record heading into last night's postseason tournament.

Butler, meanwhile, plays for UMass, which

Continued on the Page 7

Senior Amber Sneed and the Minutewomen fell to sixth-seeded La Salle last night in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass Weekend Schedule

TIME HOME VISITORS

FRIDAY, MARCH 7

Away

Ice Hockey at Maine (7 p.m.)
(First round of Hockey East Playoffs. Game two of best-of-three series)
Softball at Speedline Invitational
Doubleheader vs. Hofstra (10 a.m.), Ball State (noon)
Women's Indoor Track at ECAC Championship (noon)
Women's Skiing at USCSAs (12:30 p.m.)
Baseball at Alabama (7:30 p.m.)

SATURDAY, MARCH 8

Home
Men's Basketball vs. St. Joseph's (noon)
Men's Lacrosse vs. Navy (1 p.m.)

Away
Softball at Speedline Invitational
(vs. Northwestern, 1 p.m.)
Women's Lacrosse at Harvard (1 p.m.)
Women's Tennis at Ithaca, N.Y.
Doubleheader vs. Binghamton (9 a.m.), UMBC (4 p.m.)
Women's Indoor Track at ECAC Championship (noon)
Baseball at Alabama (5 p.m.)
Men's Skiing at USCSAs (12:30 p.m.)

SUNDAY, MARCH 9

Away
Women's Indoor Track at ECAC Championship (noon)
Women's Tennis vs. Cornell (at Ithaca, N.Y., 1 p.m.)
Baseball at Alabama (3 p.m.)

MONDAY, MARCH 10

Home
Men's Basketball vs. Duquesne or GW (7 p.m.)
(First Round of A-10 Tournament)

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 97

SGA candidates split on election issues

Student trustee candidates Jason Bissonnette, left, Gladys Franco, Hannah Fatemi and Bryan Thompson field questions from a three-student panel yesterday as a part of a pre-election SGA debate. Elections are this Wednesday and Thursday.

Romney higher education plan heads list of concerns at debate

By COURTNEY CHARLES
Collegian Staff

Candidates for Student Government Association (SGA) student trustee and president met last night for a formal debate of issues facing them as elections draw near.

SGA elections are Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The candidates were questioned by a panel of three student journalists in a televised debate at UVC-19.

Hannah Fatemi, a candidate for trustee, had trouble with a proposed smoking ban that the Faculty Senate has recently passed.

"How can they make a policy where 24,000 students don't have a voice? We need to change that," she said.

Candidates for both the student trustee and president positions all spoke largely on the need for an improvement in the student voice and in informing the general student body about what functions the SGA serves within the campus community.

"Outreach has always been a problem," David Carr, incumbent SGA president and candidate for re-election said. "A lot of students are uninformed about what we do on a daily basis."

"People don't take the SGA seriously and don't think they have any power," Alysha Cooper, a presidential candidate, said.

The four candidates for student trustee are Jason Bissonnette, Gladys Franco, Hannah Fatemi and Brian Thompson. The five candidates for president of the SGA are David Carr (incumbent), Alysha Cooper, Mark Morrison, David Falvey and Cornelius Nugent.

The idea of "working for students and not paychecks" was mentioned by Thompson. Thompson, along with his running mate Falvey, is focusing on changing the politics and the group of friends in the SGA.

"I will work for the best interests of the students, not politics," Thompson said.

Falvey wants to get to know senators on a more personal level.

Carr's main point was that he has the experience to continue with the position next year.

"I think I do a great job serving the voice of the students," Carr said. "It's hard to represent 18,000 people on a daily basis."

"When it comes down to what's important, it's the students – and without them, there wouldn't be a school," Cooper said.

Budget concerns and Gov. Mitt Romney's higher education proposal were also a point of contention last night.

According to Fatemi, Romney's budget plan sounded good at first, but it could end up costing $20,000 to $30,000 for out-of-state students to attend school. That doesn't seem to fit with the universities' mission of being affordable, she said.

Franco agreed that the University must be affordable to any student and that it does not need to become an elite institution.

Bissonnette said that the proposal has "great potential."

"It would allow this campus to main-

Continued on page 2

United States in race for votes

By DAFNA LINZER
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS – The United States and France were locked in a last-minute race yesterday for Security Council votes that could make or break international support for war in Iraq.

As Washington worked the phones, the French foreign minister headed to Africa to try to persuade undecided council members to reject a U.S.-backed resolution which gives Saddam Hussein a March 17 ultimatum to disarm or face war.

U.S. diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the United States would announce Monday that it would seek a council vote for Tuesday or Wednesday, noting they may need a little more time.

U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte told the council he ready to cast their votes by Tuesday – leaving Washington with less than 48 hours Sunday to round up enough support.

President Bush has said the United States is prepared to forcefully disarm Iraq without Security Council approval. But U.N. support would give the war international legitimacy and guarantee that members of the organization share in the costs of rebuilding Iraq.

Much could change before the council meets Monday afternoon.

Key swing voters, such as Mexico and Pakistan, which want to come on board with the United States, are asking for a few extra days to negotiate a deadline beyond the March 17 date proposed by Washington.

But the United States clearly was ready to move forward.

"We're delayed out and we're definitely moving forward with a vote this week," said Richard Grenell, spokesman for the U.S. mission at the United Nations.

The U.S. resolution, backed by Britain and Spain, needs nine votes to pass. But even if Washington can muster the support it must prevent France, Russia or China from vetoing the measure. While Paris has implicitly threatened a veto, Moscow and Beijing have been more cautious.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said Sunday there was a strong chance the United States could get nine or even 10 votes, adding that most of the undecideds were making up their minds over the weekend.

He spoke amid indications that Cameroon, a former French colony, was throwing its support behind the resolution. U.S. diplomats said they were now concentrating on council members Angola, Guinea and Chile. The foreign minister of Guinea will visit administration officials this week in Washington.

Appearing on Fox News Sunday, Powell said it would be "unfortunate if France decided to veto," although he would not be surprised.

"Even though France has been a friend of ours for many years, will be a friend in the future, I think it will have a serious effect on bilateral relations, at least in the short term," he said.

But the French – who are leading the anti-war camp in a very divided Security Council – mounted a last-ditch diplomatic bid Sunday to defeat the resolution.

If it passes, war would be automatic anytime after March 17 unless Saddam comes up with a move dramatic enough to convince a majority of the council that Iraq has fully disarmed – a scenario deemed highly unlikely by most diplomats.

Still, French Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin headed Sunday to the capitals of the three African council members – Angola, Cameroon and Guinea.

"France will not allow a resolution to pass that authorizes the automatic use of force," de Villepin said before leaving Paris.

An Iraqi woman walks past guards at the entrance of the Al Tweitha site, Iraq's former nuclear program center, on the outskirts of Baghdad yesterday.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

MISINFORMED?
PROTESTORS NEED TO LISTEN ALSO
PAGE 4

FUTUROCK!
GRÜVIS MALT REACHES NORTHAMPTON
PAGE 5

UMASS SHOCKS MAINE
MINUTEMEN DOWN BLACKBEARS 4-2
PAGE 8

Powell pressing for Iraq ultimatum

By SCOTT LINDLAW
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Secretary of State Colin Powell held out hope yesterday that the U.N. Security Council, allies across the globe and the American public would come to support an American-led war with Iraq, as the United States pressed for an ultimatum giving Saddam Hussein until March 17 to prove he has disarmed.

Powell said he was within "striking distance" of the necessary nine votes to win a majority on the 15-member council. But he conceded on "Fox News Sunday" that the French appeared set to "do everything they can to stop it" by using their veto. Such a veto, he warned, would "have a serious effect on bilateral relations, at least in the short term."

He said it remained unclear where two other veto-bearing nations, Russia and China, stood on a vote that could take place as early as Tuesday.

Nevertheless, Powell said he was leading intensive efforts over the weekend to win over several other governments, hoping to muster the nine necessary votes.

The foreign minister of Guinea, a Security Council member, will visit administration officials this week, national security adviser Condoleezza Rice said on ABC's "This Week." Asked whether the administration was trying to entice potential backers with promises of financial aid, as it sought to do with Turkey, Rice said, "We're talking to people about their interests."

Rice refused to say which nations the United States is counting on for supportive votes.

Powell and Rice took to the airwaves in a series of news interviews Sunday amid a tide of opposition to war from foreign leaders and their constituents, and from many Americans. Police arrested five anti-war protesters outside the ABC studios in Washington where Rice was interviewed, and several demonstrators followed her to the CBS offices where she was interviewed by "Face the Nation."

Thousands of protesters converged on the White House to voice opposition to war Saturday, and additional demonstrations were planned for Sunday.

Powell and Rice said the administration is following the hard but necessary course to protect Americans, and predicted public opinion would swing the administration's way. "Sometimes public opinion trails behind very difficult decisions," Rice said on CBS.

"As a matter of war and peace, most people would prefer to be on the side of peace – I would prefer to be on the side of peace," Powell said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

War "is always unpopular," Powell said. "I've seen it in a number of crises, whether it was going into Panama or the Gulf War, where public opinion is against you until the moment of truth comes when you go in and you find out what they have really been doing, you liberate a people and you create a better life for that country, for the people of that country – then you see that public opinion will change."

But Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien and Democratic presidential contender Howard Dean warned that a U.S.-led war would give license to other nations who felt they needed to pre-emptively attack.

"It might be considered as a precedent for others to try to do the same thing," Chretien said on ABC. "Where do you stop? You know, if you can do that there, why not elsewhere?"

Continued on page 3

Physical Plant cleared after fire breaks out

By JAMIE LOO
Collegian Staff

A fire that broke out in the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant led to heavy smoke and a closing of the building Friday afternoon.

Amherst Fire Chief Keith Hoyle said the University of Massachusetts Police Department contacted them around 2:46 pm and said that there was a potential fire on the first floor of the physical plant. Four engines and a ladder truck were called to the scene.

"It looked like the fire originated from a pile of cardboard boxes, but it's still under investigation," said Hoyle.

Amherst Engine No. 2 was the first on the scene. Upon entering the building, firefighters found heavy smoke and a fire. The fire began in the larger part of the plant, known as the bag house. Physical Plant Director Pat Daly said the bag house filters the soot that comes from the cold boilers, which resulted in the smoke that comes out through the smokestack.

"Normally, you can hardly see the exhaust that comes from the smokestack but right now you can see the heavy smoke," said Hoyle.

The fire department closed off the building until 6:05 p.m. after they were certain the fire was completely out. A state fire marshal is currently investigating the scene to determine the exact cause of the fire, which is believed to be electrical.

Daly said that there's a tendency for these types of fires, especially towards the end of the winter when the bag house has had a lot of activity due to the cold weather. The filters are working harder than they normally would because of the heating system. While the likelihood is high, Daly said these fires are not routine occurrences.

"It's happened before. We had one about four or five years ago," said Daly.

The fire didn't affect heating or power on campus Friday afternoon, and was working up to its normal capacity. Daly said if it was the middle of the week things could have been worse.

"If we ran into very cold weather and it was the middle of the week things could have been a lot worse. Fortunately, it's the week end and the plant has less of a steam load," said Daly.

This is at least the third fire of the semester. On Feb. 9, a fire starting with an electrical failure in a bathroom ceiling tan led to the destruction of two apartments in the North Village family housing section of campus. Another fire on the night of Feb. 12 started when a Van Meter resident tossed a cigarette butt into his trashcan.

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell, left, and chief U.N. weapons inspector Hans Blix listen as chief atomic energy inspector Mohamed El Baradei delivers a report on Iraq Friday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A hockey shocker

Stephen Werner and the UMass hockey team became the first team ever to beat Maine in a Hockey East Playoff game at Alfond Arena. Game two of the best-of-three series will take place tonight at Alfond at 7 p.m.

UMass takes game one of playoff series at Maine

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

ORONO, Maine – Take that, history. The Massachusetts hockey team walked into Alfond Arena last night having never won in a visit Maine and having set to win a Hockey East quarterfinals game.

UMass	5
Maine	3

The Minutemen walked out on top of a wild 5-3 victory over Maine in the first game of the best of three series.

"Obviously it was a real intense affair. We had to weather the storm early when they got that five-on-three goal," head coach Don Cahoon said.

"We were able to get that goal right back, and even get a bigger second goal to get that lead. That lead gave us a big advantage going through the rest of the game not coming from behind, but playing out in front."

Stephen Iacobs notched the gamewinner at 1:54 of the third period. Tim Vitek left the puck for Iacobs on the far boards and fired an odd-angle wrist shot that beat Frank Doyle (13 saves) between the pads to give UMass a 4-3 lead. That goal came just 18 seconds after Gray Shuneberger knotted the game at three and brought the Maine crowd back into the game. It was Iacobs's first career goal and just his third career point.

Tim Vitek made an unbelievable play along the boards," Iacobs said. "I was just trying to get it on net and get a rebound."

That goal was huge, because it gave us a life," Cahoon said.

Along with Iacobs, unlikely scorers included sophomore defenseman Dusty Demianiuk, who scored his first goal of the season, and Peter Trovato, who posted his fifth of the year on a nifty move that chased Jimmy Howard (nine saves) from the contest.

"We were real pleased just getting the puck to the cage, getting a little puck luck, and that's what it's going to take," Cahoon said. "You can't get through a playoff series depending on just your key scorers. It's the most unlikely guys out there that can make the difference."

The Minutemen posted their 16th four-goal output of the season and won for the 16th time. Greg Mauldin tacked on an empty net goal to finish off the Black Bears.

Maine opened the scoring at 8:07, courtesy a five-on-three power play. With sophomore Jeff Lang and freshman Matt Anderson in the box, Maine used good puck work to break an 11-game scoring drought for Martin Kariya. Kariya took a feed from Lucas Lawson in front of the net and deposited it past Winer.

But the Minutemen answered back with a pair of first period goals on unlikely circumstances. Matt Anderson made it 2-1 on a backhander from 35 feet out that handcuffed Howard and found its way to the back of the net. Just over a minute and a half earlier, Demianiuk put home a wrister from the point off a Maine stick that bounced over Howard's glove to open the Maroon and White scoring.

UMass took a two-goal lead early in the second when Josh Hanson stole the puck from Travis Wight behind the net and fed in front to Peter Trovato, who brought the puck to his forehand and beat Howard blocker side. That chased No. 33 from the net, having only saved eight of the 11 Maroon and White shots he faced on the night. Doyle then came in relief and made all eight saves in a solid second period.

Men's hoop readies for final tune-up

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team can probably assume that three positive things will come out of what coach Steve Lappas has called the strangest week he's experienced in 20-plus years as a college headman.

First, Lappas was able to get some recruiting done during the middle of this week – something he doesn't get to do too much during the season.

Second, the Maroon and White (11-16, 6-9 Atlantic 10) will almost definitely become immortalized as a Trivial Pursuit answer to the question, "What Atlantic 10 program was set to host St. Bonaventure's men's basketball team on March 5, 2003, before the Bonnies called off their season with two regular season games to go?"

Finally, and most importantly, the forfeit win clinched a first round home matchup for the Minutemen in the first round of the A-10 Tournament on Monday.

Otherwise, tomorrow's game against Saint Joseph's (21-5, 11-4 A-10) could have been a huge contest for the Minutemen. It could very well have been for the right to host a home playoff game on Monday.

Instead, UMass will celebrate Senior Day for its two captains, forwards Jackie Rogers and Micah Brand, while trying to get back on track before Monday's second-season opener.

Rogers, who transferred to UMass from junior college before the 2000-2001 season, leads the Minutemen in scoring (12.7 points) and rebounding (5.5 boards). Brand, meanwhile, is forth on the team in points (7.5) and third in rebounding (4.1).

While Senior Day normally marks the last time a player will compete on his home court, Rogers and Brand will get one more game at the Mullins Center: Monday's playoff contest against either George Washington or Duquesne. The two squads are currently tied for fifth place in the A-10 West Division. The fifth-place team will place against the Minutemen on Monday night.

Though the Minutemen are playing a game Saturday, two other games will actually affect their destiny more than their own. GW will host Fordham, which had just one conference win before the St. Bonaventure fiasco upped its total to three, while Duquesne will host Rhode Island.

As for the matchup with St. Joe's, the Minutemen won't have to deal with the Hawks leading scorer, Delonte West (18.5 ppg), whose team has already clinched the A-10 East Division title. West, who was diagnosed with a stress fracture in his right fibula, will sit out the contest in hopes of resting it for the playoffs.

West dropped 19 on the Minutemen in their first meeting, a 76-47 loss at SJU Fieldhouse on Jan. 11. It could have been more, but the sophomore played just 28 minutes because of the insurmountable lead.

While West will be out of action, UMass will still have to worry about his backcourt mate and Preseason All-Conference First-Team Selection Jameer Nelson. Nelson, who scored 12 points and dished out eight assists in the win, currently ranks sixth in the A-10 in scoring (18.3 points), just behind West, and third in assists (4.96).

The Minutemen are coming off a loss at Rhode Island that saw them give up a nine-point half time lead and eventually fall 65-58. Brand led UMass with 18 points, including a 10-for-10 performance from the free throw line.

Marnie's Army exits early

Knocked out of A-10 tourney in first round

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – Call it an upset.

The La Salle Explorers came into the Ryan Center yesterday as the underdog. Ranked No. 6 in the West bracket, they were, on paper, the subordinate team.

But the Massachusetts women's basketball team managed just two players in double-digit scoring, and despite the record-breaking efforts of Jennifer Butler (29 points, 23 rebounds, 44 percent shooting), UMass was the weaker team. With a 67-62 win, La Salle advances to the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Championship.

La Salle	67
UMass	62

Butler thought by many to be snubbed for A-10 Player of the Year – George Washington's Cathy Joens received that honor – set a conference championship record with her 23 boards.

The game was a story of two halves, as the Minutewomen dominated the opening stanza, and La Salle took over after the break. UMass fought back from a 12-point deficit with key points from Butler, but the Explorers held on for the win.

Butler highlighted a number of things that handicapped the Minutewomen most of which occurred when La Salle had the ball.

"Just our defense period, and a lack of rebounding on the defensive end," she said. "We didn't get out on their 3-point shooters. We had a couple lapses on defense, and it really cost us.

"We were flat," UMass coach Marnie Ducko said. "We didn't come to play. We felt that way this morning, the coaches felt that way this afternoon, and we just didn't have the supporting cast that goes around Jen. If I was playing Jen, I'd put four people on her too."

When you look at who's shooting the ball," Ducko said, "it's Jen, it's [Nekole Smith], it's Thom [Pegues] and Thom's not hitting for us. We didn't have good guard play, and we have no depth. We have no depth on the team."

Evidence of UMass' short bench was the 14 minutes doled out to Kristin Carrion, who had just two points in her increased floor time.

Jill Marano splashed a 3-pointer with 1:45 to go, giving La Salle a three point lead. The Maroon and White bounced back, with Smith sinking both ends of a one-and-one. Davneia Payne brought the Explorers lead back to three with a jumper, and Marano added two from the foul line.

The Minutewomen had just one player (Butler) in double-digit scoring most of the way. Smith scored her 10th point on a layup with 5:35 to go.

The Explorers, after being down for much of the first half, pulled ahead of the Minutewomen, and held a 12-point lead with 10:21 to go. Butler was the only UMass player scoring consistently, and when La Salle locked down the double team, her effectiveness was diminished as well.

Chrissy Walker set the Explorers off on an 11-0 run, stepping into a passing lane and making the breakaway layup to give La Salle a 41-38 lead, and Coach Ducko cause to rally her troops.

Amber Sneed stepped up as the emotional leader for UMass, making a 3-pointer and professing all the way back down the court, "We're not playing anymore! Let's go!"

Both squads struggled early in the second half, and Smith scored the first basket two minutes in give the Minutewomen a 33-32 edge.

La Salle's Meghan Wilkinson was repeatedly left alone outside, and capitalized for three 3-pointers. Shaune McLaughlin also splashed two from downtown to give the Explorers their first lead with 20 seconds to go. The teams headed into the locker room with the Explorers up 32-31 and with the momentum.

Continued on page 6

Atlantic 10 misses the boat on Butler's stellar season

Jim Pignatiello

Congratulations to UMass women's basketball center Jennifer Butler for being named Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year and earning a spot on the all-conference first-team. There are impressive accomplishments and the recognition he has brought to the school and the women's hoop program has been tremendous.

But let's all be completely honest here. Butler was completely bested Wednesday night at the conference banquet. It was at that event in Newport, R.I. held just 24 hours before UMass would open its postseason with a first round game against La Salle on Thursday, that the A-10 announced its end-of-season awards.

And Jen was screwed over.

Sure, she was awarded the above honors, as well as a spot on the all-defensive team, but Jennifer Butler was the best player in the Atlantic 10 this season, and she clearly deserved the Player of the Year Award. Instead, the conference bestowed it upon George Washington guard/forward Cathy Joens, who is a great player, but not nearly as good as Butler.

Clearly, the conference coaches have a different idea of what constitutes being a player of the year means.

As I understand it, the best player in the conference, the one who has had the best season, is the player of the year.

That's Butler. There is little doubt of this.

Let's pull a rotisserie move and look at the statistics.

Joens is a scorer, ranking No. 2 in the conference with 17.8 points per game. The Irvine, Calif. native is also good for 3.37 assists (12th in the conference), 2.07 steals (seventh) and five rebounds outside top 20) per game. As a perimeter player, Joens has managed just one blocked shot all year, but otherwise, those aren't bad stats in what are considered the big five categories.

However, they pale in comparison to Butler, who recorded a league-high 23 double-doubles in 2003. UMass' senior center is right behind Joens in scoring with 17 ppg. She led the entire nation in rebounding at 14.4 per game while leading the A-10 with 2.41 steals. Butler was also good for 1.3 blocks (fifth in the conference) and 1.8 assists.

It is clear Butler put up far better numbers than Joens this season. And the coaches even admitted she was the best defensive player in the conference. So why, then, was Butler so ridiculously overlooked by the A-10?

Because Joens plays on a better team.

Joens suits up for the Colonials, which ran up a 21-6 overall record, including an impressive 15-1 conference record heading into last night's postseason tournament.

Butler, meanwhile, plays for UMass, which

Continued on page 6

Senior Amber Sneed and the Minutewomen fell to sixth-seeded La Salle last night in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass Weekend Schedule

TIME HOME VISITORS

FRIDAY, MARCH 7

Away
Ice Hockey at Maine (7 p.m.)
(First round of Hockey East Playoffs. Game two of best-of-three series)
Softball at Speedline Invitational
Doubleheader vs. Hofstra (10 a.m.), Ball State (noon)
Women's Indoor Track at ECAC Championship (noon)
Women's Skiing at USCSAs (12:30 p.m.)
Baseball at Alabama (7:30 p.m.)

SATURDAY, MARCH 8

Home
Men's Basketball vs. St. Joseph's (noon)
Men's Lacrosse vs. Navy (1 p.m.)

Away
Softball at Speedline Invitational
(vs. Northwestern, 1 p.m.)
Women's Lacrosse at Harvard (1 p.m.)
Women's Tennis at Ithaca, N.Y.
Doubleheader vs. Binghamton (9 a.m.), UMBC (4 p.m.)
Women's Indoor Track at ECAC Championship (noon)
Baseball at Alabama (5 p.m.)
Men's Skiing at USCSAs (12:30 p.m.)

SUNDAY, MARCH 9

Away
Women's Indoor Track at ECAC Championship (noon)
Women's Tennis vs. Cornell (at Ithaca, N.Y., 1 p.m.)
Baseball at Alabama (5 p.m.)

MONDAY, MARCH 10

Home
Men's Basketball vs. Duquesne or GW (7 p.m.)
(First Round of A-10 Tournament)

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2003

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890

VOLUME CIX ISSUE 97

SGA candidates split on election issues

Romney higher education plan heads list of concerns at debate

Student trustee candidates Jason Bissonnette, left, Gladys Franco, Hannah Fatemi and Bryan Thompson field questions from a three-student panel yesterday as a part of a pre-election SGA debate. Elections are this Wednesday and Thursday.

By Courtney Charles
Collegian Staff

Candidates for Student Government Association (SGA) student trustee and president met last night for a formal debate of issues facing them as elections draw near.

SGA elections are Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The candidates were questioned by a panel of three student journalists in a televised debate at UVC-19.

Hannah Fatemi, a candidate for trustee, had trouble with a proposed smoking ban that the Faculty Senate has recently passed.

"How can they make a policy where 24,000 students don't have a voice? We need to change that," she said.

Candidates for both the student trustee and president positions all spoke largely on the need for an improvement in the student voice and in infunning the general student body about what functions the SGA serves within the campus community.

"Outreach has always been a problem," David Carr, incumbent SGA president and candidate for re-election said. "A lot of students are uninformed about what we do on a daily basis."

"People don't take the SGA seriously and don't think they have any power," Alysha Cooper, a presidential candidate, said.

The four candidates for student trustee are: Jason Bissonnette, Gladys Franco, Hannah Fatemi and Brian Thompson. The five candidates for president of the SGA are David Carr (incumbent), Alysha Cooper, Mark Morrison, David Falvey and Cornelius Nugent.

The idea of "working for students and not paychecks" was mentioned by Thompson. Thompson, along with his running mate Falvey, is focusing on changing the politics and the group of friends in the SGA.

"I will work for the best interests of the students, not politics," Thompson said.

Falvey wants to get to know senators on a more personal level.

Carr's main point was that he has the experience to continue with the position next year.

"I think I do a great job serving the voice of the students," Carr said. "It's hard to represent 18,000 people on a daily basis."

"When it comes down to what's important, it's the students – and without them, there wouldn't be a school," Cooper said.

Budget concerns and Gov. Mitt Romney's higher education proposal were also a point of contention last night.

According to Fatemi, Romney's budget plan sounded good at first, but it could end up costing $20,000 to $30,000 for out-of-state students to attend school. That doesn't seem to fit with the universities' mission of being affordable, she said.

Franco agreed that the University must be affordable to any student and that it does not need to become an elite institution.

Bissonnette, said that the proposal has "great potential."

"It would allow this campus to main-

Continued on Page 3

United States in race for votes

By Dafna Linzer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS – The United States and France were locked in a last-minute race yesterday for Security Council votes that could make or break international support for war in Iraq.

As Washington worked the phones, the French foreign minister headed to Africa to try to persuade undecided council members to reject a U.S.-backed resolution which gives Saddam Hussein a March 17 ultimatum to disarm or face war.

U.S. diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the United States would announce Monday that it would seek a council vote for Tuesday or Wednesday, noting they may need a little more time.

U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte told the council to be ready to cast their votes by Tuesday – leaving Washington with less than 48 hours Sunday to round up enough support.

President Bush has said the United States is prepared to forcefully disarm Iraq without Security Council approval. But U.N. support would give the war international legitimacy and guarantee that members of the organization share in the costs of rebuilding Iraq.

Much could change before the council meets Monday afternoon.

Key swing voters, such as Mexico and Pakistan, which want to come on board with the United States, are asking for a few extra days to negotiate a deadline beyond the March 17 date proposed by Washington.

But the United States clearly was ready to move forward.

"We're delayed out and we're definitely moving forward with a vote this week," said Richard Grenell, spokesman for the U.S. mission at the United Nations.

The U.S. resolution, backed by Britain and Spain, needs nine votes to pass. But even if Washington can muster the support it must prevent France, Russia or China from vetoing the measure. While Paris has implicitly threatened a veto, Moscow and Beijing have been more cautious.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said Sunday there was a strong chance the United States could get nine or even 10 votes, adding that most of the undecideds were making up their minds over the weekend.

He spoke amid indications that Cameroon, a former French colony, was throwing its support behind the resolution. U.S. diplomats said they were now concentrating on council members Angola, Guinea and Chile. The foreign minister of Guinea will visit administration officials this week in Washington.

Appearing on Fox News Sunday, Powell said it would be "unfortunate if France decided to veto," although he would not be surprised.

"Even though France has been a friend of ours for many years, will be a friend in the future, I think it will have a serious effect on bilateral relations, at least in the short term," he said.

But the French – who are leading the anti-war camp in a very divided Security Council – mounted a last-ditch diplomatic bid Sunday to defeat the resolution.

If it passes, war would be automatic anytime after March 17 unless Saddam comes up with a move dramatic enough to convince a majority of the council that Iraq has fully disarmed – a scenario deemed highly unlikely by most diplomats.

Still, French Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin headed Sunday to the capitals of the three African council members – Angola, Cameroon and Guinea.

"France will not allow a resolution to pass that authorizes the automatic use of force," de Villepin said before leaving Paris.

An Iraqi woman walks past guards at the entrance of the Al Tweitha site, Iraq's former nuclear program center, on the outskirts of Baghdad yesterday.

Physical Plant cleared after fire breaks out

By Jamie Loo
Collegian Staff

A fire that broke out in the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant led to heavy smoke and a closing of the building Friday afternoon.

Amherst Fire Chief Keith Hoyle said the University of Massachusetts Police Department contacted them around 2:46 pm and said that there was a potential fire on the first floor of the physical plant. Four engines and a ladder truck were called to the scene.

"It looked like the fire originated from a pile of cardboard boxes, but it's still under investigation," said Hoyle.

Amherst Engine No. 2 was the first on the scene. Upon entering the building, firefighters found heavy smoke and a fire. The fire began in the larger part of the plant, known as the bag house. Physical Plant Director Pat Daly said the bag house filters the soot that comes from the cold boilers, which resulted in the smoke that comes out through the smokestack.

"Normally, you can hardly see the exhaust that comes from the smokestack but right now you can see the heavy smoke," said Hoyle.

The fire department closed off the building until 6:05 p.m. after they were certain the fire was completely out. A state fire marshal is currently investigating the scene to determine the exact cause of the fire, which is believed to be electrical.

Daly said that there's a tendency for these types of fires, especially towards the end of the winter when the bag house has had a lot of activity due to the cold weather. The filters are working harder than they normally would because of the heating system. While the likelihood is high, Daly said these fires are not routine occurrences.

"It's happened before. We had one about four or five years ago," said Daly.

The fire didn't affect heating or power on campus Friday afternoon, and was working up to its normal capacity. Daly said if it was the middle of the week things could have been worse.

"If we ran into very cold weather and it was the middle of the week things could have been a lot worse. Fortunately, it's the weekend and the plant has less of a steam load," said Daly.

This is at least the third fire of the semester. On Feb. 9, a fire starting with an electrical failure in a bathroom ceiling fan led to the destruction of two apartments in the North Village family housing section of campus. Another fire on the night of Feb. 12 started when a Van Meter resident tossed a cigarette butt into his trashcan.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

MISINFORMED?
PROTESTORS NEED TO LISTEN ALSO
PAGE 4

FUTUROCK!
GRÜVIS MALT REACHES NORTHAMPTON
PAGE 5

UMASS SHOCKS MAINE
MINUTEMEN DOWN BLACKBEARS 4-2
PAGE 8

Powell pressing for Iraq ultimatum

By Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Secretary of State Colin Powell held out hope yesterday that the U.N. Security Council, allies across the globe and the American public would come to support an American-led war with Iraq, as the United States pressed for an ultimatum giving Saddam Hussein until March 17 to prove he has disarmed.

Powell said he was within "striking distance" of the necessary nine votes to win a majority on the 15-member council. But he conceded on "Fox News Sunday" that the French appeared set to "do everything they can to stop it" by using their veto. Such a veto, he warned, would "have a serious effect on bilateral relations, at least in the short term."

He said it remained unclear where two other veto-bearing nations, Russia and China, stood on a vote that could take place as early as Tuesday.

Nevertheless, Powell said he was leading intensive efforts over the weekend to win over several other governments, hoping to muster the nine necessary votes.

The foreign minister of Guinea, a Security Council member, will visit administration officials this week, national security adviser Condoleezza Rice said on ABC's "This Week." Asked whether the administration was trying to entice potential backers with promises of financial aid, as it sought to do with Turkey, Rice said, "We're talking to people about their interests."

Rice refused to say which nations the United States is counting on for supportive votes.

Powell and Rice took to the airwaves in a series of news interviews Sunday amid a tide of opposition to war from foreign leaders and their constituents, and from many Americans. Police arrested five anti-war protesters outside the ABC studios in Washington where Rice was interviewed, and several demonstrators followed her to the CBS offices where she was interviewed by "Face the Nation."

Thousands of protesters converged on the White House to voice opposition to war Saturday, and additional demonstrations were planned for Sunday.

Powell and Rice said the administration is following the hard but necessary course to protect Americans, and predicted public opinion would swing the administration's way. "Sometimes public opinion trails behind very difficult decisions," Rice said on CBS.

"As a matter of war and peace, most people would prefer to be on the side of peace – I would prefer to be on the side of peace," Powell said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

War "is always unpopular," Powell said. "I've seen it in a number of crises, whether it was going into Panama or the Gulf War, where public opinion is against you until the moment of truth comes when you go in and you find out what they have really been doing, you liberate a people and you create a better life for that country, for the people of that country – then you see that public opinion will change."

But Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien and Democratic presidential contender Howard Dean warned that a U.S.-led war would give license to other nations who felt they needed to pre-emptively attack.

"It might be considered as a precedent for others to try to do the same thing," Chretien said on ABC. "Where do you stop? You know, if you can do that there, why not elsewhere?"

Continued on page 3

U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell, left, and chief U.N. weapons inspector Hans Blix listen as chief atomic energy inspector Mohamed El Baradei delivers a report on Iraq Friday.

Pro-Palestine group to make presentation on trip to West Bank

By Felix Poon
Collegian Correspondent

John Petrovato and Jonathan Elsberg will present some of their experiences on the West Bank today in a lecture entitled, "What We Saw in Palestine."

The presentation, at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 163, consists of photographs and short videos.

Elsberg, a University of Massachusetts graduate student and employee, spent two weeks in the occupied West Bank participating in the International Solidarity Movement (ISM), assisting Palestinian emergency medical personnel and school children.

Petrovato, a co-owner of The Raven Used Books, located in Amherst center, spent six weeks in Palestine in October and November of 2002, also as a participant of the ISM.

"The reason why I went over there was to try to better understand what was going on," explained Petrovato. "It's confusing to those here in the U.S., you get pieces of details through the media, and you can't really put it together unless you really do some research on it."

According to Petrovato, the motivation for the event is educational.

"We're just trying to present what life is like every day in Palestine," he said. "People can draw their own conclusions from that. We want people to be critical of what's going on, and you can't have an opinion on what's going on if you don't know, and most Americans have no clue what's going on."

Petrovato said the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is not about two sides battling each other.

"I hate to be so harsh – the conflict is about ethnic cleansing. Israel is ethnically cleansing Palestine."

According to Petrovato, 400,000 Israelis have been transplanted from Israel to Palestine, and Israeli settlement is the root of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Petrovato said that every Palestinian he met condemns suicide bombings.

"I've never seen suffering by the hands of the state like I had there, the brutality of the Israeli military to civilian children," he said.

According to Petrovato, Israel has many documented human rights abuses, including "unlawful killings, torture, making medicine inaccessible because of military checkpoints, using Palestinian citizens as human shields, preventing children from education."

"The ISM is an international Palestinian-led movement of Palestinian and international activists working to raise awareness of their position. The event is free and open to the public.

Delay of bond package criticized

AMHERST, Mass. – Gov. Mitt Romney's decision to delay approval of a $371 million bond package for construction at the University of Massachusetts has caused investors to back out and could cost the state millions, a spokesman for UMass president William M. Bulger said.

"The deal is dead," Bulger spokesman John T. Hoey told the Union-News of Springfield. "This highly unusual action has resulted in investors pulling out."

Hoey said Bulger's office is confident Romney's administration will eventually approve the financing "once they realize the gravity of their decision." But the delay will likely result in interest rates higher than the previously locked-in rate of 1.8 percent.

"We lost the best possible interest rate," Hoey said, adding that an increase in even a few percentage points could add millions to the project.

Romney halted the bond package at the last minute Wednesday, saying UMass officials had not informed his administration about it. Administration officials said they only learned of the bonds when a bond agency salesman asked for an otherwise pro forma approval.

Romney's decision came a week after he proposed an overhaul of the UMass system, including the elimination of Bulger's office. Romney aides said the decision was not directed at Bulger, but rather at bringing the UMass system under tighter administrative control.

UMass officials say the administration was aware of the plan, that it had already been approved by the Swift administration and that the bond was the only way the system could raise money to make capital improvements.

The $371 million bond package is part of a $1.2 billion, 10-year capital improvement plan approved in August by the UMass board of trustees.

It includes $82.3 million for the Amherst campus, including construction of a science building that is a key part of a biomedical research partnership with Baystate Medical Center in Springfield. The capital improvement plan also includes an art building, a school of nursing and several repair projects.

Romney spokesman Eric Fehrnstrom said the administration would not approve millions of dollars in state spending without oversight and review.

Interest rates have been low for several months "and there is every indication a low interest rate environment will continue," Fehrnstrom said.

He said only investment bankers would benefit from rushing the bond issue, not UMass or taxpayers.

Romney, speaking in Springfield Friday, reiterated that he wants to review the bonding before authorizing it.

"I don't think there are any projects which we have any concerns about," he said. "We just haven't seen a review at all. We want a review before we sign off on anything."

-Associated Press

Social action project aids needy

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

Hillel's social action special interest group, Tzedek, took a step this weekend to aid the needy in conjunction with their annual celebration of Purim.

The project, which assembled packages of food for distribution to the elderly poor, was spearheaded by freshmen Emily Blonder and Jennifer Weinstein. Blonder and Weinstein have been involved with the group since they came to the University of Massachusetts this past fall.

"I had done community service in high school," Weinstein said. "I like doing it; I like helping out. It's a good Jewish value."

The two led a group yesterday in assembling the packages, which included cans of corn, peanut butter, Ultra High Temperature-treated (UHT) milk, apple sauce, and other goods. Within the next couple of days, the bags will be brought to the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts in Hatfield, Mass.

In Hatfield the food will be used in what the Food Bank calls its Brown Bag program. The program brings monthly bags of food to senior citizens in many of the communities of Western Massachusetts. In this case, Hillel has assembled many of the brown bags that will be used for the elderly community in Holyoke, so the food that would normally be going to that area can be diverted to help other causes including Brown Bag programs for other towns and various shelters in the area.

According to Devon Fitzig, who serves as the faculty supervisor of Tzedek, the list of food that Hillel needed and used in their packages was compiled under specific instruction of the Food Bank. She also said that the Food Bank is non-denominational and that Hillel's responsibility for this project has no affect on who receives the food.

Fitzig said that the Bread and Circus and Stop and Shop supermarkets, both in Hadley, made this project possible by acting charitably.

"They were wonderful," she said.

Bread and Circus donated 64 jars of jelly, several boxes of the UHT milk and all of the paper bags. Stop and Shop did its part by issuing a gift certificate that Tzedek used to purchase additional food products for the packages. Fitzig estimated 10 percent to 15 percent of the material contributions for the project came from students.

"Most of it we bought ourselves," she said.

The money for the purchase of food not donated came from a Hillel fund specifically marked for use in Tzedek projects. A large amount of the funding was used on this project, Fitzig said.

Commending Blonder's and Weinstein's efforts on this project, she commented that they "really helped organize this and they did a great job."

The idea for this project surfaced last semester at one of Tzedek's regular meetings. Also discussed at the meetings were many other plans on which Tzedek now works, including a Meals on Wheels project.

Jillian Marcus, a student at the University who coordinates the group and is in charge of this project, said that Meals on Wheels combines efforts with people at the Newman Center who are also interested in community service. The Newman Center has been doing the project for the entire year, but Hillel recently joined forces with them at the beginning of the semester, Marcus said.

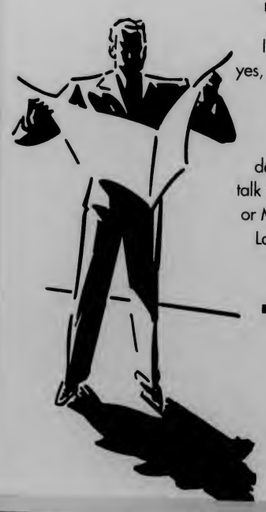
Every two weeks, students at the Newman Center and students at Hillel come together to prepare meals for residents of the Ann Whalen house in downtown Amherst. Marcus said that their project borrows the name from the true Meals on Wheels organization, which delivers meals to the house during only the weekdays. This project brings in food on the weekends to supplement the service already being offered.

Marcus said that inter-faith initiatives are important in community service because although she feels social justice is a central value in Judaism, she recognizes the importance it has to other groups as well. She said that through coordinating efforts, it is possible to build bonds with other groups on campus, something she feels is vital for Hillel.

Over 60 bags of food were prepared in this weekend's effort. By 2:30 p.m. yesterday, the bags were loaded into a van, and the task was completed. The Food Bank will receive the bags today.

NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!

Applicants should have some layout experience.

Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.

Hiring process begins April 14th!

MAJOR JUNIOR WEAR LABEL

WAREHOUSE SALE

Ladies and Men's 50-75% off original mall store price

GOT CLOTHES?

5 DAYS ONLY

WARE SALE

NOBODY'S PERFECT

WAREHOU

WAREHOUSE SALE

UMass Student Union Ballroom

Candidates argue issues in pre-election debate

Continued from page 1

tain flagship status and ultimately, to grow," Bissonnette said.

Carr said that he spoke last week to Chancellor John V. Lombardi about Romney's proposal.

"The devil's in the details," Carr said. "And right now we don't have enough details."

"The proposal is just that: a proposal," Morrison said, adding that the SGA has done a good job handling the issue so far.

Fatemi said the University needs to be advocated for better in Boston, especially concerning budget problems.

"Luckily we have a new chancellor who is very gung-ho right now about raising private funding, but that is not enough," Fatemi said.

Candidates also debated a referendum question that will determine whether or not Greek students will be considered as commuter students on future ballots.

"The SGA should be dedicated to [Greeks] defining themselves," Morrison said. "Students should be able to choose where they live."

"The issue comes down to listening to what they have to say," Falvey said.

"The Greeks have done a lot of good, they have done a lot of community service which they are not recognized for."

Candidates are split on whether having a police dog on campus is a good thing or not.

"It's not exactly clear yet what the dog will be used for, but if there are rapes on campus, then we certainly need extra help," Falvey said.

"I believe a dog impedes students' rights. Everyone has a right to privacy," Cooper said. "I don't believe one dog is going to make a change on campus."

Nugent refused to answer any question directly all night, responding to each question with something totally unrelated and often vulgar. Nugent made reference to his genitalia in response to one of the questions.

"It's hard to think of original ways to climb through air vents," he said in response to a question on Romney's budget proposal.

"The most interesting part of that question is that it's not interesting at all," Nugent said in response to the question on Greek status. "Elvis is my hero."

Elections will be held Wednesday and Thursday at all dining commons, the Campus Center, and the Newman Center.

Powell pressing for ultimatum

Continued from page 1

"What is to prevent China, some years down the road, from saying, 'Look what the United States did in Iraq – we're justified in going in and taking over Taiwan?'" Dean said on NBC.

Dean, the former governor of Vermont, said President Bush had not made the case that military action against Iraq was justified. "Going into Iraq has very little to do with protecting the United States of America," he said.

House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi of California drew a standing ovation from the Communications Workers of America Sunday as she stated her opposition to an Iraq war at this time. Bush has alienated allies in the war on terror, she said.

"Our country has never been greater," Pelosi said. "And yet we have never been more dependent on our friends and allies to keep our country secure."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., and the top Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, said war could threaten the United States by fanning anti-American sentiment.

Children ahead?

A 'Slow watch out for children' street sign on Lincoln Street leads motorists to the University of Massachusetts, where a student stands.

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

WHEN SOMEONE ASKS YOU WHAT YOU DID IN COLLEGE, WHAT WILL YOU TELL THEM?
THE AMHERST FIRE STUDENT FORCE WILL BE RECRUTING NEW MEMBERS MARCH 7,10,11 AT THE CAMPUS CENTER.

CALL AT 549-5419

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist

Casimir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Spring Break BLOWOUT

Take us with you

March 10–March 28

SAVE 25-50%*

• All Fleece • All Long Sleeve Tees • And more!

University of Massachusetts UMASS UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619

*Not valid with any other offer, expires 3/28/03, while supplies last.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Government needs to make travel safety a priority

The threat of war has caused the airline industry and major airports to ask for help from the government.

American Airlines, United Airlines, Delta Airlines, Continental Airlines, and U.S. Airways announced this month that they are planning on waiving ticket price change fees, which can cost as much as $100, in case the country enters a war. American and U.S. Airways will also waive some fees if the country is put on a Code Red Terror Alert. U.S. Airways has created a policy that lets customers use an unused ticket's full value towards future travel within 90 days of a war or Code Red alert. Airlines changed some of their ticketing policies during the 1991 Gulf War.

If the war on terrorism interrupts travel, none of the airlines are planning on offering refunds. Most airlines are actually losing money at this point; United and U.S. Airways sought bankruptcy protection from their creditors last year.

Airports are also asking for greater protection from the government to ensure the safety of travelers. It will cost our nation's airports an estimated $5 billion to continue to update security measures.

Gina Marie Lindsey, a representative from Sea-Tac airport in Seattle, told a congressional hearing Thursday that, "airports are scrambling to pay for a host of critical and competing priorities...There has never been enough money to go around."

Over the past year, airports have cut jobs and have put off $500 million in projects due to the costs of remodeling terminals to accommodate new baggage screening machines and to make changes in other security systems.

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) was planning on reimbursing airports for baggage screening machines, which run approximately $1 million a piece. However, the TSA is experiencing a budget shortfall this year and might not be able to help the airports.

We at The Collegian feel that citizens should demand more of our government when it comes to airline and airport security. With the threat of war looming, the possibility of an attack is increased. For this reason, safety is paramount over all else.

There has long been a generally negative connotation by the American public towards the airlines, viewing them as aging behemoths that hemorrhage money out every possible orifice. This stereotype has been derived from years of government bailouts when bad business practices have led many airlines into the red.

The current situation is different. Airlines and airports need the government's assistance in helping keep the American public safe. The general well being of each and every citizen is a direct responsibility of our leaders, not just CEOs of transportation giants.

With spring break fast approaching, many students are in the process of finalizing their vacation plans. Safety is of the utmost importance. Hopefully, the government agrees.

Information from CNN.com was used in this editorial. Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Boston sports fans and the left

Robert Carey

A popular claim in the leftist community is that sports serve as a public distraction to the political evils going on around the world.

Liberals have a general disgust for hyper-patriotic events like the Super Bowl, which allegedly whip the general public into a nationalistic fury. For these people, sports are just another distractive evil keeping the masses uninformed and unenlightened. It is this reason that your average, war-loathing, hippie will take great pride in sneer at anything that seems remotely competitive.

If these liberals are right, and sports are a central evil draining the concentration of the public, then nowhere is this demon's work more prevalent than in Boston. Entire books have, in all likelihood, been written on the subject of Boston sports history. In Boston, we are passionate and competitive beasts, and sports serve as an outlet for that.

The Boston newspapers reflect this attitude. In the highly right-wing Boston Herald (incidently, a paper that doesn't sell very well in the Western parts of the state), the sports section often makes up half of the paper. This guy I worked with over the summer would pick up the Herald every morning. He'd skim past the headlines about war-mongering, and the injustices of knee-jerk spending by the government, and head straight for the sports section, which is about 50 pages long. The Herald must employ about half of the sports columnists in Boston, and every day they prattle out what's wrong with every sports team in Boston.

The Globe is slightly different, because of its leftist ideology. But even its sports coverage is grandiose, especially since they merged with The New York Times, which has encouraged the Globe to concentrate on more local stories. Therefore, the Times can have a monopoly reporting on foreign affairs.

Feeding off the strong history, the Boston sports media have grown powerful. They have destroyed people and teams with their bitter words and sharp cynicism. And largely they can be blamed for impeding in the success of many Boston teams over the years. For instance, look at the overwhelming scrutiny the Boston Red Sox are put under every season by the sports media that has virtually pounced on any potential flaw with the team. This has obviously led to immense strain and pressure on the players. Using the Bill Buckner case, the Boston sports media acts like the mafia waiting to tear to shreds any athlete that doesn't live up to the Boston standard of a quintessential athlete.

> "They have destroyed people and teams with their bitter words and sharp cynicism. And largely they can be blamed for impeding in the success of many Boston teams over the years."

If baseball is the most sensitive issue in Boston, football, hockey, and basketball are only slightly less sensitive because the teams have actually won at least one championship in the past ninety years. However, these sports still, in some regard, suffer from the powerful Mafioso attitude of the Boston press.

Recently the Boston sports press has been harping on the latest bungle by the Celtics general manager for trading away the third best player on the team for Vin Baker, a staggering drunk well past his prime who was never that shining to begin with. However, in the defense of the Celtics' GM, Baker wasn't a drunk until he came to Boston and began to suck. However, it's hard to be so judgmental of the Celtics these days. Because, after all, the competition for the Eastern Conference finals is, at bottom, a competition for who is going to donate their body to the Western Conference Champions in the finals.

In hockey, the Bruins have, in typical Red Sox fashion, started the season on fire before smoldering out into competing for the last playoff spot in their division. This is in spite of having one of the best offensive lines in the league. The consistent debasing and nitpicking by sports editorialists have only contributed to the obvious confidence problems the team is going through.

I have always had an appreciation for the competitive arts. And nowhere can this appreciation be more satisfyingly nourished than in Boston. Incidently enough I'm also, more or less, a leftist by default. However, despite fellow radical thinkers, I feel that sports should be appreciated, rather than scorned for their nationalistic affiliation. This is especially true in Boston, where sports history is so vivid. As far as sports acting as a distraction for the general public, I don't think it's all that bad of a thing. There has always been a thirst for competition in the human race, and the only practical way for a society to quench it is to send the entire male population off to war, engage in large societal hunting trips, or to give them games. In fact, if it weren't for sports the competitive majority of the population would probably turn against anti-war protestors and those who dared to think outside the "walls" of conformity. Who knows, perhaps on some very base level, there is a relationship between the increased number of radical thinkers and the amount of politically apathetic sports fanatics in this part of the country.

Robert Carey is a Collegian Columnist.

Misinformed protestors

Dan Barrett

There has been a marked increase in protest activity lately. Across the world, colorful signs can be seen in several languages, saying "No Blood For Oil," depicting Bush as Hitler, denouncing American arrogance and screaming for disarmament not of Saddam Hussein, but of America itself. Students from UMass and area high school students left class to insist on higher funding for education – shouting slogans, waving signs, demanding capitulation and screaming for peace.

I oppose the war. I was there. I saw the protest. And I was terrified.

Not of war, not of violence, but of mindlessness, conformity, and ignorance.

It is time for the anti-war movement to wake up. You are doing more harm than good, in ways you don't even imagine.

First, it is absurd to walk out of class to protest for education. Only through educating one's self can you have the tools with which to defend your beliefs; the protestors were depriving themselves of the only weapons they truly have to oppose the war. In this way, protestors injured only themselves, not the policy makers they sought to target.

Second, few of these peace activists have any clear conception of the issues at hand, or what is at stake. Many are late-comers to politics, and have only the vaguest notion of what they are talking about. How, many protestors read the newspaper every day? Once a week? In place of researching the issues and forming their own opinions, they are content to accept the opinions of their classmates on faith; the slogans printed on leaflets, signs, and shouted from podiums become truth, without the need for verification or to think for one's self. Among the protestors' favorite contentions, is that the war is based solely on the U.S. government's desire for oil, control of the Middle East, or the desire for revenge for Hussein's attempted assassination of Bush Sr. These are all unfounded, unproven, and absurd. In the midst of a screaming mob, however, the need for evidence vanishes, and there is only the common truth, accepted without hesitation. Those outside the "protest experience" can see the obvious holes in these arguments, and this drives many of the all-important moderates away from opposing the war. Instead of halting the war machine, by clinging to blatantly ridiculous arguments the protestors may be hastening its approach.

> "Instead of halting the war machine, by clinging to blatantly ridiculous arguments the protestors may be hastening it's approach."

Some of the protestors' arguments go beyond ridiculous, however. Some of them are misleading, or actually dangerous. It must be accepted as fact that some protestors seek, not a specific political aim, but power, love, and the admiration of others. In their rush to be respected they oppose anything and everything, discarding objectivity and coming dangerously close to a complete loss of values. The arguments that America is "arrogant" by wishing to see democracy in other countries, or that Bush is comparable to Hitler, are examples of this. They claim that democracy is no better than any other political system; that the Iraqi people are so different from you or I that they do not desire the freedoms that a democracy promises. Or that Iraqis enjoy living under a dictator in a country where disagreement means imprisonment or death, that our President is comparable to a dictator who buried his country in corpses. The protestors must know these things are not true; it is plain to anyone who wishes to think logically. Yet, in their quest for respect, they will say anything, portray anything as truth; they will discard values, logic, even their own minds in pursuit of that goal. Their followers accept these tenants, not knowing that giving up values, that believing that nothing is better than any other is death. They are killing their own minds.

Misled, lied to, refusing to think, the protestors are not individuals, but a group. They give up their sense of self; they accept anything. Since there is no such thing as a communal thought, thought is abolished. They are absorbed. If you think for yourself, you are ostracized. They become a hive of bees.

As I walk through the lines of protestors these days, I silently wish for someone to talk to me about the war. I wish for someone to tell to me about the alienation of Europe, about strengthening the inspections program, about the failing economy, about not finding Osama Bin Laden, about forgetting Afghanistan. I wish for someone to speak logically, to give me a reason. But that wish never comes true. I might as well be walking through an empty room.

There are many intelligent, reasonable protestors, but I fear these hard-working people are greatly outnumbered. Stop shouting. Start reading. Start thinking. And let's stop the war, not by force of numbers, but with the strength of our arguments.

Dan Barrett is a Collegian

Missing voice on Faculty Senate is costly

As Student Government Association (SGA) elections approach, we as students must take care to elect representatives that will take their role seriously, and work for their constituents and not for the perks of the position. We pay $38 per student per semester to the Student Activities Trust Fund, which the SGA handles. But are they doing their job?

The SGA has an ex-officio seat as a voting member of the Faculty Senate (Bylaws: Section 3: Membership, 4-32) but in two years I have seen a representative of the student body speak only once. That representative was the then-student trustee (who was unfortunately not there to represent the SGA on a consistent basis).

The Student Government Association is our representation as students on a large campus under an unwieldy and slowly functioning administration. Another group that falls under the administration, but perhaps above students on the University's food chain, is its faculty. The faculty, like students, has a representative body that meets bi-weekly and works hand in hand with the administration; this body is known as the Faculty Senate.

The Faculty Senate is comprised of 120-140 senators, including nine senators who sit on the Rules Committee, and University of Massachusetts Chancellor John V. Lombardi (who acts as the President of the Faculty Senate). Additionally in attendance at each meeting are key administrative players such as the Provosts and Vice Chancellors. During the meetings there is a time for "Principal Administrative Officers" to address the Senate for any reason that they wish. Those titles listed under Principle Administrative Officers include not only those mentioned above but the president of the Student Government Association.

The Faculty Senate is a key legislative body on campus with influence on policies, atmosphere, and critical decisions and recommendations for the University (that encompasses students too, for those of you who prefer to consider yourself separate - you are one of the individuals who make up the University community and who should be as involved as you are indebted). By not sending representatives of the student body to this central assembly's meetings, the SGA fails to effectively represent students. The title under announcements may imply that it is the president of the SGA who needs to attend, but a representative from his office would be completely acceptable as well.

S.J. Port

When the Senate met on Feb. 13 to discuss the recommendation by the University Health Council for the Senate to motion to make the campus smoke-free, there was no SGA representative present.

Following the Senate's decision the administration had twenty days to reject or counter the motion. In the days that followed the SGA and students went wild with the news that the recommendation had carried. SGA members discussed the motion as if they had no prior knowledge of its discussion at the Senate assembly. However, the Senate posts their agenda online and mails it to all members, as well as interested parties, at least five days prior to meetings (two days if an emergency meeting is called).

> "SGA members discussed the motion as if they had no prior knowledge of its discussion at the Faculty Senate assembly."

According to the SGA, the Faculty Senate stepped on their toes by creating a tobacco-free campus. The SGA quickly responded with a motion of their own calling for the administration not to rule on any Senate recommendations, "regarding areas under the jurisdiction of the SGA." But no matter what their action following the motion, the SGA has no excuse for not being at the meeting to act as a voice for student smokers. They knew about the planned motion ahead of time. In the scant chance that the SGA is not on the Faculty Senate's list or does not have access to the Internet, I suggest they take care in the future to read Faculty Senate agendas for important motions and attend meetings at which they will take place.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the Editor:

SGA opinion misrepresented on Romney's proposal

To the Editor:

In Kristin Shrewsbury's article on the Student Government Association meeting on March 5, there were some mistakes made regarding the nature of the motion on Romney's proposal debated that night. The SGA did NOT vote to support the Governor's proposal. The SGA did vote on a bill that supported specific parts of the proposal, and expressed faith in the Secretary of Education designate. However most of the debate centered around the proposed hikes in tuition. This new proposal would cause our tuition fee to remain on campus (which is wonderful). It would also raise it by over $800, which is horrible. That was not what the motion before the student senate was about. That motion only made one mention of tuition, and that was in my friendly amendment, which read as follows:

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the University of Massachusetts should remain affordable and accessible, and that any increase in tuition or fees directly harms the ability of the University to remain affordable and accessible."

Although most of the debate centered around the problem of making this University more expensive, the only thing the motion under consideration stated was that ANY increase is a bad idea.

However, errors were not made only by those who debated against this motion. Some who debated for the motion, rather than talking about the motion itself, tried to defend hikes in tuition. In my opinion, this was a strategic mistake as well as a failure to represent the student body. Only a small handful of die-hard conservative students would say they would rather have tuition hikes, than see state taxes (corporate, income, etc) rise. A tuition hike is in effect a tax hike on a statistically poorer segment of the population, and this effect is even more pronounced given that this is a public school. I would love to see a vital student body, as a whole, act to fight a tax on the poor. Even as the extremely wealthy are getting tax break after tax cut, the shrinking middle class and everyone "below" them is getting shafted. Shafted in terms of services, in terms of effective taxation, and in terms of representation in government. This is most certainly a class war, and at the moment, one side is calling the shots, and throwing the punches. The other side is, except for a few weak and feeble cries, taking it.

The students of this University should fight any hike in tuition or fees. They should fight to make sure this University improves, rather than declines into a state college. The students should know that the Senate is squarely on their side. The motion passed condemned hikes in tuition or fees, and supports the parts of Governor Romney's proposal that help our University.

Daniel Pozmanter
SGA senator, Central-at-Large

Protestors need other tactics

To the Editor:

This is in regard to the letter that appeared in the March 6, Collegian.

It was written by a couple of UMass students who were among those involved in the "Walk-out" that took place on Wednesday. I'm all in favor of protests and demonstrations, when they are conducted in a respectful manner. However, on Thursday, February 27 several people barged into my Biochem class during an exam, shouting "No war, no doubt, March fifth, walk out!" Despite teachers' and TAs' best efforts, they lingered for several minutes, chanting and waving signs. The letter that appeared in the Collegian a week later stated, "We felt that the parallel we could draw between our action disrupting the daily routine of students and the disruption to life in Iraq if war starts was just as important as promoting the walkout." In an ideal world, everyone would understand that little metaphor. But this isn't an ideal world, and most of the people in that Biochem midterm were just annoyed, as evidenced by the abuse and writing implements they hurled at the chanting "funeral procession."

Now, don't take this wrong way – I'm very much against war in any form or location. But when protestors in New York march with toy missiles attached to their groins singing anti-war-modified Doors songs, and here at UMass demonstrators drive away potential support by disrupting important exams, I have to tell you I'm not too hopeful. Someone once said, "Evil will always triumph, because Good is dumb." I never believed it until now. If war is to be averted, then the anti-war camp needs to stop yelling, and start thinking.

Will Wagner
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Getting free condoms; and What diseases come and go?

GOT SEX & SEX HEALTH QUESTIONS? SEND TO: sexiversity@hotmail.com Your questions could be posted in the next Sex-iversity column. Confidentiality is always respected.

Question: Where can I get free condoms?

Sex-iversity
Sara Brumfield& Winnie Chen

Answer: Excellent question. I mean, we all love getting free stuff. There are a few resources on campus that have been known to distribute free condoms. However, if you can't find free condoms, that's no excuse to not use one. It's just about the cheapest method of prevention and much cheaper by far than any sort of STI testing. Emergency Contraception prescription or abortion. You can drop a few dollars now or a few hundred later. Simple math.

Now, above all else, your Residential Advisor should have an endless supply for their residents. These condoms are 100 percent free. They're given to the RAs by Residential Life solely to distribute to residents. Some RAs have set up little baskets or such outside their door or in the bathrooms. If not, simply go and ask your RA personally. If your RA isn't there, ask another one. It's really not much trouble considering you're getting it for free.

If you're in the Central neighborhood, you can always swing by UHealth Services or the Peer Health Educators. Peer Health Educators and Not Quite Ready for Bedtime Players both come to classes and student groups to do workshops or skits and always make condoms available for free.

Also, if you find yourself in dire need and still lack an Interdisciplinary Gen Ed, sign yourself up for "My Body, My Health." Depending on the professor, free condoms are available at least once a semester. It can be a free-for-all at times, because some professors just dump them all out on a table to take as many as desired. Just remember everyone else will be doing the same thing.

Planned Parenthood now makes their own brand of condom that they distribute freely to those who are in need. The closest Planned Parenthood is in Springfield – about 35 min. from campus without heavy traffic. Planned Parenthood does have a student group here on campus that works as an extension of the organization, (Vox: Voices for Planned Parenthood which often have condoms they distribute at certain events.)

If you're a regular at Pride Alliance meetings, Tuesday nights at 7 p.m., then you know this yet another place on campus where you can get free condoms.

Of course if worst comes to worst, go to Hampshire College and swipe some from their bathrooms. All bathrooms at Hampshire keep a ready stock of both male condoms and dental dams.

Now, I'm sure these aren't the only resources in the area, but they're all good places to start. I mean free is free. It's worth a little effort.

Question: What's the name and symptoms of diseases that come and go? Like herpes for instance.

Answer: There are two very important things to know about STI/STDs. One – Just because you don't have symptoms doesn't mean you don't have a disease. Two. Just because your symptoms go away doesn't mean the disease is gone. In the case of viral diseases, symptoms often come and go, but the disease can stay in your system for life. There is no cure for viral diseases.

Viruses to be aware of:

Cytomegalovirus (CMV)

Symptoms include:

*Swollen glands, fatigue, fever and general weakness. (CMV causes eight percent of the cases of mononucleosis.)

*Irritations of the digestive tract, nausea, diarrhea

*Loss of vision

CMV also causes pennanent disability, including hearing loss and mental retardation for 4,000 to 7,000 babies a year. It is also very dangerous to people with weakened immune systems and can cause blindness and mental disorders.

How it's spread: in saliva, semen, blood, cervical and vaginal secretions, urine and breast milk. There is no cure, but symptoms may be managed with a variety of drugs. Treatment doesn't work during pregnancy however. Condoms may reduce the risk of infection during vaginal, anal and oral intercourse, but kissing and intimate touching can spread the virus.

Genital Warts a.k.a. Human Papilloma Virus (HPV)

Symptoms include:

*Warts appear on the genitals, in the urethra, in the anus or in the throat (commonly known as genital warts).

*Genital warts are soft to the touch, may look like miniature cauliflower florets and often itch.

*Untreated genital warts can grow to block the openings of the vagina, anus or throat and become quite uncomfortable. It usually takes two to three weeks after infection for warts to develop.

How it's spread: Through vaginal and anal intercourse, very rarely to the fetus during childbirth and oral sex.

There are more than 100 different HPVs. Studies suggest that as many as 75 percent of adults in the United States have been infected with at least one type of HPV. Thirty percent of the HPVs that are genital infections affect the sexual and reproductive organs. Although some cause genital warts, most genital HPV infections have no visible symptoms. Some HPVs have also been related to cancer of the cervix, vulva or penis.

There is no cure for HPV. There are prescription medications available for genital warts and other treatments, including surgery, application of podophyllin or acid, laser surgery (vaporizing them), cryosurgery (freezing the wart) or injection of interferon.

Condoms reduce the risk of HPV, but the virus can be spread through skin-to-skin contact beyond the condoms protective layer.

Hepatitis

The most commonly sexually transmitted form of Hepatitis is the B virus (HBV). Hepatitis A virus (HAV) is transmittable through sexual acts, but it's less common. Sex play has a limited role in the transmission of Hepatitis C virus (HCV) but is more serious one than HAV and HBV.

Continued on page 6

Redefining a genre

Energizing with eclectic sounds

Grüvis Malt
Pearl Street
March 6

By Scott Pihl
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – The energy in the room heightens, as the lower stage at Pearl Street Nightclub becomes packed tighter with enthused fans of Grüvis Malt. The crowd pushes and shoves, as the band members reach for their instruments. Having just sat through the lethargic stylings of M.C. Mt. Sinai, the crowd is energized by the presence of Grüvis Malt.

Lead vocalist, Brendan, livens up the audience with a well-reciprocated greeting. As they jump straight into their set, Grüvis Malt thrusts the listeners into a musical realm free of tedious replication derived from the pop music scene.

GM opened with the unreleased track "The Heart Transplant You Can Afford." This started the show with an upbeat and punk-like vibe. The song starts with a deceivingly unexpected 4/4 time signature, but quickly adapts to a more Grüvis-esque variation of time changes. Similar to many other GM tracks, this song does not follow a typical verse-chorus structure. The melodies travel to unexpected destinations and lead the listener through a labyrinth of sound. This unexpected structure is complimented by the diverse layering of each instrument's unique role within the song.

"You guys are so tight!" was the rewarding response by fans for the remainder of the show.

The anticipation of the crowd grew, as they waited to see what tricks GM had in store for this long awaited Pearl Street show. The hardcore GM fans knew to expect remixes of old songs, variations, jams and unreleased concert favorites.

Songs from their latest album, "With the Spirit of a Traffic Jam," including "Low Concept/High Maintenance" and "Destination," were modified for a concert-worthy display of Grüvis Malt's ability to reinvent older material. Mid-tour, the band will come together and not only vary set lists and selection, but also will rewrite many of their works to keep their fans on their toes.

At the end of "Low Concept," Brendan quickly grabs his djembe and starts the tribal intro into the fan-favorite combination of "Aggression," and "Then Silence," from "With the Spirit of a Traffic Jam."

"Aggression" is a powerful ballad, which incorporates jarring sax melodies with strong guitar lines. The song builds slowly in order to climax straight into "Then Silence." The rewritten version of "Then Silence" was a surprise to many and intrigued the ears of dedicated fans.

To display their true skill and tight musical communication, GM threw a new instrumental song into the mix. This composition, remaining nameless, dropped jaws and widened eyes. The spastic movement of notes and rhythms, while remaining in perfect syncopation, floored the onlookers. This cumposition was thoroughly enjoyed by the many musicians in the audience. As this song came to its emotional and dramatic close, the audience bellowed with approval.

To top off their performance, Grüvis unleashed their most energetic hip-hop track to date. "Bit12" is a compilation of gripping staccato rhythms and addicting chord melodies. This angst-charged song proved to the audience that, along with mastering their emo ballads, Grüvis Malt has obtained a domineering attitude in their creativity. "Bit12," eagerly awaiting release in GM's next recording, has been a concert favorite on this tour across the country.

Grüvis Malt not only played their invigorating set, but also performed as the back up band for hip-hop guru Sage Francis. With Sage's profound spoken word supplemented by the vibrant sounds of GM, a culmination of emphatic jams managed to blow the audience to the ground.

The Pearl Street show was the last scheduled show on the "Live Band/Dead Poets" tour with Sage Francis. This tour has been GM's first trip out into the country in attempt to hit nearly every major city in the United States. Grüvis Malt will be taking a much-needed hiatus for the next couple weeks, but will be appear in their hometown of Providence, R.I. for two homecoming shows.

The majestic essence of Grüvis Malt's sound is a product of the unique chemistry between its six skilled members. The sextet consist of kid vocalist and percussionist Brendan Bell, keyboardist and back up vocalist Gavin Bucuvalas, guitarist Steve Gottlib, bassist Brian Bucuvalas, saxophonist Erik Nilsen and drummer Scott McPhail.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian: Who and what have your musical influences been?

Steve: [illegible]

MDC: What groups did you guys grow up on?

Gavin: I think [illegible]

Brendan: We [illegible]

Erik: I feel like it was [illegible]

MDC: At most of your shows, you guys tend to play mostly unreleased and remixed material as opposed to playing songs taken solely from your available albums. Why have you chosen to take this route?

Scott: [illegible]

MDC: So how are you getting the material out there?

Scott: [illegible]

Brendan: [illegible]

Steve: [illegible]

MDC: How would you guys describe a typical Grüvis Malt fan?

Brendan: Smart

Steve: [illegible]

MDC: How would you describe the new [illegible]

Steve: [illegible]

MDC: You've all your musical style futurock. How would you define the new [illegible]

Steve: [illegible]

Brendan: [illegible]

MDC: Your two previous albums, "With the Spirit of a Traffic Jam," and "Sound Soldiers" have very different vibes and styles. What can we expect from a new release?

Steve: [illegible]

World Music Artist conducts rally in a different key

Chapel filled with poetry and songs

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Over 100 people piled into the pews of Helen Hills Chapel in Northampton on Saturday. But the crowds weren't there for a mass.

The chapel was crammed full of people waiting to see World Music Artist Pan Morigan and her show entitled "Seeds of Peace, Seeds of War."

Janet Aalfs opened the show by redefining the phrase "poetry in motion," with her unique mix of martial arts and poetry. While performing a complex looking series of maneuvers, she recited her work "Blue Fire." The selection told of rebirth of the human spirit and the limitlessness of our potential.

Then she introduced the band. A figure slightly shorter than the other five – sporting straight red hair that flowed nearly to her knees – was introduced as Pan Morigan. An array of string instruments from around the world surrounded her. The mix included pieces from acoustic guitars to a mandolin to a violin. Nearby sat an original instrument created by band member Peter Blanchette – called the Arch guitar. (It had 11 strings and a stubby broad body.)

When Morigan began to sing her first song, it was as if a gentle musical storm came out of her mouth and blew the audience away to the places of her songs' inspiration. First it was off to Ireland for a sad story about saying goodbye to everything loved. Morigan's haunting lyrics along with the slow music did not leave many dry eyes in the house. However, a happy mandolin solo toward the end of the piece changed the mood, and the journey continued.

Morigan addressed her political views before the next piece.

"Tonight I am going to sing about war, but I am also going to sing about love," she said. "I believe war happens when some people think their lust, greed, money, oil or property are more important than our little love songs. I disagree."

Then the high, vaulted ceiling of the chapel resounded with the jazzy sound of the next number; people nodded and tapped their feet as if in a classic smoky jazz club.

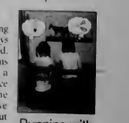
Andrea Hairston, a local spoken word artist and a member of the Chrysalis Theater group, soon took the stage. Her piece "Soldiers in the Closet," quite lengthy, told of tiny soldiers and terrorists that have infested her home and have absolutely nothing to say for themselves for ruining her day.

Soon it was back to the music and off to Sarajevo for a love ballad sung in its original language, Spanish. Next it was to the Mediterranean and then the New York subway and another interlude with Hairston's soldiers and their pointless infestation of her life.

Then the musical storm carried us off and away again. But now, a few people were starting to filter out of the chapel. Seeing this, Morigan simply waved with a smile and said, "That makes me want to tango." And she made good on her claim, then inviting the remainder of the crowd to join her.

World Music Artist Pan Morigan performed her show "Seeds of Peace, Seeds of War" Saturday at Helen Hills Chapel in Northampton.

When Hairston took the stage for her final verse, Morigan orchestrated a bit of Turkish background music for the performance. The poem closed with Hairston's little girl asking her, "If no one sees [the soldiers], does it mean that they're not there?"



The loudest ovation of the evening went to the final spoken word artist, Lenelle Moise. Her piece "Lots Wife" centered around a forbidden love that was torn by war, and the spirited voice of Moise moved the entire audience nearly to tears.

Then it was back into the gentle auditory storm of Morigan, and it was time she brought her audience home: a return to the Emerald Isle.

After her 13th song, which was to be the closer, Morigan giggled and said, "OK, now we'll just play you all a slow little lullaby to out you to bed." The encore was a song she had written for her brother entitled, "Innocent Blues."

As Morigan's voice died out in the high domed ceiling of the chapel, you could leave knowing exactly what was meant when Pan Morigan was categorized under "World Music." Though her songs have elements of jazz, folk, blues and traditional cultural music, it is her ability to take her audience to places with her music that earns her the title.

How to sport your springtime wear

Running with Scissors
Melissa Hammel & Lizzy Nielsen

Let's face it. The old adage that clothes make the man (or the woman) has a ring of truth to it, and it's no different during spring break. That is why the ladies of "Running with Scissors" are here to offer you our expert advice on what both men and women should fashionably wear on a trip.

SWIMWEAR

DO

A collective groan goes up among both the ladies and some of the guys when the word swimsuit is mentioned. We understand and feel it too. It seems unnatural that after hibernating in a freezing cold New England winter since early November and eating all the cheese curls we could handle that we might be asked to don a swimsuit. But have no fear. We are here to help. Plain and simple, tailor your swimsuit to your body frame. If you are trying to hide some extra poundage in the stomach region, then go for a one piece or a tankini. Hate your butt ladies? Go for a sarong.

DON'T

There are only two rules for swimwear.

One. If you are a man, never ever wear a speedo. They are ridiculous and only worn by skinny foreign men or 60-year-old males trying to regain their youth. If you want to show off that much of your body, then go to a nude beach. At least people won't laugh at you there, hopefully.

Two. Both the ladies and the guys should avoid swimwear that rides up in the back. In English, we mean don't go wearing a thong on the beach or a bathing suit so small that it looks like you wrapped yourself up in a hand towel. The thong in general is unnatural and just gives you a perpetual wedgie. Couple that with sand, and you could have a major vacation wrecker on your hands. Enough said.

Continued on page 6

'Sexiversity' looks at disease symptoms

Continued from page 5

Symptoms include:

Extreme fatigue, headache, fever, hives

Lack of appetite, nausea, vomiting, tenderness of the lower abdomen

How HBV is spread: In semen, saliva, blood and urine, which includes intimate and sexual contact from kissing to vaginal, anal and oral intercourse.

How HAV is spread: Oral contact with fecal matter through oral and/or anal sex play, other kinds of sex play, sharing needles with intravenous drug use and any exposure to fecal matter on the hands or body that could inadvertently come in contact with a persons mouth. (This means wash your hands really well after using the rest room.)

HBV and HAV are highly contagious, but HAV is only contagious for a short period of time.

Although 90-95 percent of adults with HBV recover completely, the virus can cause severe liver disease and death. Those infected within an hour of birth, and 90 percent of infants born to women with HBV will carry the virus.

There is no treatment. However, symptoms of infection clear up within a few weeks. Some people remain infected for the rest of their lives. The only way is if you are not currently infected you can receive permanent protection through a series of HBV vaccinations.

Condoms may offer limited protection during vaginal, oral or anal intercourse, but the virus can still be passed through kissing and other intimate touching.

Herpes

There are two types herpes simplex virus-1 and herpes simplex virus-2. Although herpes-1 is most often associated with cold sores and fever blisters, both forms of herpes can be sexually transmitted.

Symptoms include:

"Recurring rash with clusters of itchy or painful blistery sores appearing on the vagina, cervix, penis, mouth, anus, buttocks or elsewhere on the body.

"Painful ulcerations that occur when blisters break open

"The first outbreak may cause pain and discomfort around the infected area, itching, burning sensations during urination, swollen glands in the groin, fever, headache and a general rundown feeling.

Symptoms usually appear from two to 20 days after infection, but it could take years for an outbreak to show up.

How it's spread: Touching, sexual intimacy (including kissing), vaginal, anal and oral intercourse. It can be passed from one part of the body to another wherever contact is made with an active herpes virus (both 1 and 2). Oral sex can pass herpes from the mouth to the genitals or vice versa.

There is no cure. Symptoms and recurrences can be reduced with a series of different drugs.

Partners should refrain from sexual intimacy from the time they know the blisters are going to recur until after the scabs have completely fallen off the healed sores. Condoms provide some protection from the virus between outbreaks.

Molluscum Contagium

Symptoms include:

"Small pinkish-white, waxy, round, polyp-like growths in the genital areas or on the thighs. There is often a tiny depression in the middle of the growth. Symptoms usually appear between two to 12 weeks after infection but can take years to appear.

How it's spread: Vaginal, anal and oral intercourse, as well as other intimate contact. Casual contact can also spread the disease, as growths have been known to appear on other parts of the body, especially the abdomen.

Growths may be removed with chemicals, electrical current or freezing. Condoms reduce the risk of the disease, but it can be spread through skin-to-skin contact.

■ ■ ■

While the diseases discussed below can reoccur and stay in your system for life, all untreated diseases can have reoccurring symptoms. Many have no symptoms at all. It is important to be tested regularly for all STI/STDS through blood, urine, pap smear and swab tests. Consult your physician.

Sara Brantfield and Winnie Chen are Collegian Columnists.

Minutemen's last gasp falls short against St. Joe's on Senior Day

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

After Saint Joseph's demolished the Massachusetts men's basketball team, 76-47, in their first matchup on Jan. 11 on Hawk Hill, many pointed out that SJU point guard Jameer Nelson had Anthony Anderson's number.

St. Joseph's	52
UMass	49

In that contest, Nelson scored 12 and dished out eight assists while holding Anderson to just five points while making five turnovers.

In Saturday's regular season finale, however, Anderson held his own, but Nelson beat the entire UMass team (11-17, 6-10 Atlantic 10) with a game-high 28-point performance in 39 minutes of play.

Anderson scored 15 of UMass' first 14 points and 18 for the game, but it wasn't enough as Saint Joseph's won the contest 52-49 and improved to 22-5 (12-4 A-10).

With seven seconds left and UMass down by six, freshman Jeff Viggiano drove to the lane and was fouled by John Bryant. Viggiano made his first attempt from the foul line, and his second shot came off the rim. Senior Jackie Rogers grabbed the offensive rebound for the easy putback to cut the deficit to three with five seconds remaining.

After a UMass timeout, Viggiano stole the Hawks' inbound pass in the corner and heaved a desperate 3-point attempt that clanked off the rim at the buzzer.

"I was at the baseline," UMass coach Steve Lappas said. "I saw it coming. I thought it had a chance."

The Minutemen trailed throughout the second half, but stayed within striking distance the whole way, thanks to a terrible 4-for-21 performance from the Hawks in the second half.

"That's as bad as we've played all year," Saint Joseph's coach Phil Martelli said. "Offensively, that's discouraging. That's not good basketball at all."

But the Hawks were able to hold off the Minutemen thanks to 27 second-half free throws. Nelson was the main beneficiary, shooting 15-for-20 from the charity stripe.

In fact, Nelson drew so many fouls – knocking out Anderson and backcourt mates Marcus Cox and Mike Iasme – that Lappas had to play junior walk-on Paco Kotaridis for the final minute of the game.

"I can't think of the last time I had to play a walk-on player in a game we were still trying to win," said Lappas, who coached four years at Manhattan and nine at Villanova before coming to UMass prior to last season.

The game had no bearing on the Atlantic 10 standings, as Saint Joseph's had already clinched the East Division title before the game and the Minutemen were guaranteed the fourth seed in the conference tournament.

A plea for your support

Jim Pignatiello

I know.

I realize that the men's basketball team hasn't inspired much excitement from the student body this season.

I'm not a rah-rah supporter-the-team-no-matter-what guy. I understand that students have a million options around here and they don't feel like heading all the way down to the Mullins Center to watch the team lose another game.

It all started with the Boston College game on Dec. 7. It was on ESPN and you hate the Eagles, so you showed up. 6,392 total. It was by far the highest total of the year and the Minutemen's one chance to win you over.

And you felt gypped.

UMass didn't play hard and lost 80-62 to a struggling Eagles team. You booed. You took your frustrations out on Troy Bell. You showed your disgust by not coming the next week, when only 3,273 showed up for the 67-62 win over Florida International. The Minutemen continued to struggle, both on the court and in the stands – where drawing even 4,000 fans was barely achievable.

No students have been seated behind the baskets. Old folks have been sitting there without fear of chaotic student behavior – no additional lyrics to the "Hey" song, no chants aimed at referees or opposing players. Just white-haired people sitting on their hands.

I feel for you, I really do. I don't blame you for missing the Columbia game or the Fordham game. I'm not sure I would have shown up, either.

But let me ask you something. Do you want this program to turn around? Do you want the Mullins Center to return to its former, impossible-for-a-road-team-to-win homecourt? Do you want more strong recruits like this year's freshmen Jeff Viggiano, Mike Iasme and Gabe Lee and next year's Rashaun Freeman, Art Bowers and Stephen Briggs?

If so, go to tonight's playoff game.

Good high school players look at attendance numbers. They look at fan support. They look at postseason success.

Tonight, some spotlight will be shining on the UMass basketball team. Even more will shine if it manages a win and moves on to play No. 11 Xavier on Thursday.

Will the Minutemen win the A-10 Tournament and move on to the NCAA Tournament? No. Almost definitely not.

But if you show up, and you bring a few friends, and they bring a few friends, UMass will win tonight's game. George Washington had a major homecourt advantage in these teams' first matchup and the Minutemen still pulled out the win behind a tremendous Mike Iasme 24-point performance.

A win and a trip to Dayton, Ohio to play Xavier can do nothing but help the Minutemen improve for the future.

How much does the UMass Athletic Department want you to go to the game?

The Atlantic 10 has a policy that students pay to get into tournament games. This includes on-site games. But the Athletic Department believes that since students were able to get into all home games for free all season, that agreement should continue. So the department is picking up the tab, having to pay the conference $5 for every student who shows up to tonight's game. Therefore, if 2000 students come to tonight's game, UMass will have to shell out $6000 to the Atlantic 10.

Obviously, they think it is important for you to show up tonight.

If you have any interest in the program, if you want it to return to glory, you must go tonight.

The Athletic Department will pick up the tab.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian Columnist.

Winer up to the task

Continued from page 8

University in December, he performed brilliantly in UMass' 4-2 win over Maine at home in February, and now he has led the Minutemen to the program's two biggest wins in its young history.

Not bad for an 18-year-old.

Conversely, Maine coach Tim Whitehead probably shouldn't start a School of Goaltender Management in the near future. Pulling Howard in the first game after only 23 minutes could be questioned, since only one of the three goals surrendered (Matt Anderson's backhander which deflected off Howard's shoulder) could have been steered aside.

Still, his replacement Frank Doyle played well (making 13 of 14 stops) and gave the Black Bears a much-needed lift after being down 3-1. Furthermore, Doyle had played well all year in splitting time nearly down the middle with Howard, including a shutout against UMass just two weeks ago.

So why not go with the hot goaltender in Doyle? Instead, after starting, and subsequently yanking Howard on a second consecutive night, Maine's coaching staff has probably shattered its young goaltender's confidence for the rest of the season.

"I was shocked that he was starting [on Friday]," UMass' Mike Warner said. "I knew we had to get at him early, because he was going to be thinking about [Thursday]."

So while Howard might win the league honor for best freshman, Winer and UMass have something much more important: a trip to the FleetCenter.

Andy Vogt is a Collegian Columnist.

The spring wardrobe

FOOTWEAR

DO

If you are planning a vacation to a warm tropical climate place or staging a journey to a destination in Canada, the proper footwear essential. If you are planning a trip that requires a great deal of walking, you might want to pack a sturdy pair of sneakers and a clean pair of socks. However, if you are going someplace with sand and water, be sure to survive your trip in a good mood, sandals are necessity.

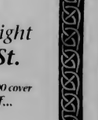
DON'T

On the other hand, common sense is required. Your favorite pumps do not have a place on the sandy beaches of the Bahamas. Or on the reverse side, flip-flops are just not warm enough this time of year for you to show off your stylish new flip-flops.

CLOTHES

DO

One important part about a spring break vacation is how it makes you feel. You do not need to go out and scour the stores for a whole new set of clothes just to go on vacation. What you do need to do is look at a few pieces of your wardrobe that you usually wear during and that make you feel confident, comfortable and attractive. There is nothing worse than bringing a bunch of clothes on your destination to find your clothes don't fit you well or that you really don't like them.



Another thing is to point two. Try on your clothes before you actually pack them if it has been a while since they have been in circulation.

The worst kind of death on any vacation is not packing enough weather. One half of the "Running with Scissors" duo ran into an ugly situation one spring break when they packed clothing not right for the cold New York City winter. In order for you to avoid the [illegible] that she suffered, perhaps you should check the weather first. Don't assume that Caribbean islands don't have their winters as well. There is no need for Britney was to scream "tourist" than to bring sweaters, shorts and tank tops with you to a place where the temperature is hovering at 65 most days.

Hammed and Jazze Nielsen are Collegian columnists.

Game two; round three

Last week's puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & LAURA DERN

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon
Jake D. Lewis

In this round, I tried to pull a trick over on the players, but many caught on and figured out that Kevin Bacon played an UNCREDITED role in "Novocaine." (2000).

Bravo to everyone else who were able to see through the foolery!

SILVER SOLUTION: FASTEST TIME ONLY - 10 POINTS
Laura Dern was in "Jurassic Park III" (2001) with William H Macy; William H. Macy was in "Murder in the First" (1995) with Kevin Bacon.
Submitted by Brian Jones
UMass Junior, Math
Total Accumulated Points: 11

BRONZE WINNER: MOST CREATIVE/THEMATIC ROUTE - 5 POINTS
"The Batman Connection"
Laura Dern was in "I am Sam" (2001) with Michelle Pfeiffer (Catwoman); Michelle Pfeiffer was in "Batman Returns" (1992) with Micheal Keaton (Batman): Michael Keaton was in "She's Having a Baby" (1988) with Kevin Bacon.
Submitted by Jennifer Eastman-Lawrence
UMass Undergraduate Admissions
Total Accumulated Points: 21

HONORABLE MENTION: ALL OTHER PLAYERS WITH VALID SOUTIONS - 1 POINT
Daniel Reiche (17), Deb Eskie (12), Shawn Nickerson (12), Marcos Bachman (3), Mike Dunn (3), Justin Hiller (3), Russell Howell (3), Marty Worden (3), Mike Ouellette (3), Adam Shapiro (3), Camille Torres (3), Julie Chan (2), Melanie Chase (2), Jon Davenport (2), Molly O'Mara (2), Steve Titcomb (2), Caitlin Crosby (1), Jess Enos (1), Matthew Heltman (1), Chris Johnson (1), Adam Polanger (1), Erin Wallace (1).
This game ends April 25.

Spring Break Week is coming - But first - come party for ST. PATRICK'S WEEK!!!
THE HARP
IRISH PUB
The North Valley's Great Irish Pub!
St. Patrick's Week drink specials: Murphy's Irish Stout, Harpoon Hibernian Ale $2.75 pt. All Irish Coffee Combos $3.95
St. Patrick's Week food specials: Smoked Salmon Fillet, Fresh Oysters, Corned Beef Dinner and more....
Monday March 10th - Irish Dinner Buffet! $5.95 all you can eat 6pm-10pm
Tuesday March 11th - Irish Pub Trivia Night
Wednesday March 12th - The Dance Party Night
Thursday March 13th - Spring Break / St. Pat's Party with the Bill Eagen Band $2.00 cover
Loads of cool prizes and giveaways - t-shirts, glasses, weird stuff...
Friday March 14th - The Irish Seisiun
Saturday March 15th - Spancil Hill no cover
Sunday March 16th - You're down south, have fun, be safe, see you when you get back!
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst - 548-6900
"Start your own tradition!"

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY - FRIDAY
Bacon 'n' Cheese Skins $4.95 4.48
Fried Shrimp Tempura $7.25 3.63
Sweet Potato Fries $4.25 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
TOCMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
www.judiesrestaurant.com
51 N. Pleasant Street 253-3491

Jack Daniels presents...
Blackjack Night at McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Tuesday, March 11th
"Beat the Dealer"

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4232
Schedule for Friday 3/7/03 Thursday 3/13/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
YEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:20
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:05 7:30 10:00*
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:15 4:20 7:15 9:35*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:00 10:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
DOGS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:25
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 3:10 5:00 7:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:00 4:10 7:10 9:45
BRADDOCK: MISSING IN ACTION III (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 9:40
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:15
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 9:30
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:05
LOTR: THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 7:45
Easter Show 3/13/03
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE 10:00AM
DOORS OPEN AT 9:15
*-no passes/supersavers
*NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

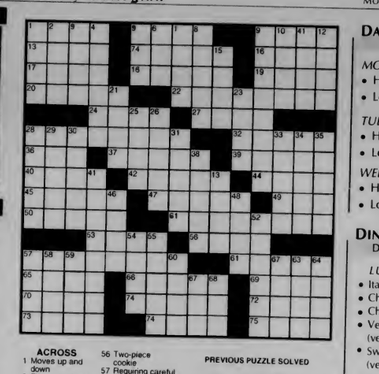
UMass HOCKEY AT THE FLEET CENTER
Student tickets for Friday and Saturday night's game at the FleetCenter can be picked up starting today at 8:30 a.m. at the Mullins Center box office. Tickets are $10 for students (with a student ID) for each night and can be purchased until Tuesday at 5:00 p.m.

ELSIE HOOPER • By Kyle T. Dickerson

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Stewart

THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredette

THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredette



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Conrad X

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Geneson

ACROSS
1 Moves up and down
5 Floppy contents
9 Caspian Sea tributary
13 Knighted Guinness
14 Revise
16 "Nautilus" captain
17 Fibber
18 Kitchen appliance
19 Paneling feature
20 Theme
22 Frostbite symptom
24 Without a tan
27 Barn neighbor
28 Goes in all directions
32 Wahlstand items
36 Read goo
37 Fergie's first name
39 Not deserved
40 Poet's eyes
42 Gaias
44 Racehorse parent
45 Fork part
47 River-mouth formation
49 Bounder
50 Damascus is its capital
51 Faintly
53 Applaud
56 Two-piece cookie
57 Requiring careful handling
61 Enthusiastic
65 Corduroy rib
66 Smears
69 Count on
70 Mad scientist's aide
71 Kelps
72 Like before
73 Clothing
74 Protein source
75 Divine archer

DOWN
1 Liniment
2 Melange
3 Cop's rounds
4 Handwriting
5 German article
6 Physician's org.
7 Mo. neighbor
8 Black cattle
9 Mysteries
10 Painter — Magritte
11 Gridder — Alonzo Stagg
12 House sites
15 Half, pref.
21 Waller or Domino
23 Strong cheese
25 Turn pages
26 Miscalculated
28 Quits
29 Tote
30 Trellis
31 Cleys
33 Decree
34 Nonurban
35 Not well-kept
38 Parrot's word
41 Giggles
43 Mix up
46 Nerve
48 Screenwriter James —
52 Husky-voiced
54 Opera by Verdi
55 Choir selection
57 Taunt
58 "Othello" heavy
59 Congest
60 Mammoth
62 Clock part
63 "Tickle Me" doll
64 Hearty loaves
67 Moo's companion
68 Hardened, as cement

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-14-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

MONDAY
• High: 27
• Low: 8

TUESDAY
• High: 37
• Low: 22

WEDNESDAY
• High: 31
• Low: 10

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Italian Minestrone Soup
• Chicken Cacciatore
• Chili Nachos
• Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)
• Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

DINNER
• Italian Minestrone Soup
• Savory Baked Chicken
• Veal Cutlet
• Southern 7 Bean Stew (vegan) (Franklin only)
• Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald H. Ling
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Scott Ciruso / Fedrich Torres

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Mr. Brady, it is the duty of a newspaper to comfort the afflicted and afflict the comfortable.

- "Inherit the Wind"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your interests are similar to the interests of someone you've been avoiding.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Love is in the air – but very likely not in your heart! Someone has a hard time getting your attention.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Someone may be trying to keep you emotionally off-center today.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your warm and sensitive side is likely to be revealed today.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Someone in your inner circle may object to your methods or motives today.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You'll find yourself in a situation today that requires you to solve problems in a creative way.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't look too far back today, or you'll find yourself getting lost in a fog of memories.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're being too possessive today. You cannot admit that your emotions are getting the better of you.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Both people and situations are likely to prove far more forgiving than you may expect.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Someone is likely to surprise you today by being right there for you.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The closer you are to home today, the stronger and more confident you will feel.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Despite what you have been saying all week long, luck is indeed a factor today.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlinco lnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) In all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota Camry wagon automatic 175k regularly maintained $2,250. 549-5448

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Acts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball,

EMPLOYMENT

SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-399-CAMP or check out our website at www.independentlake.com and apply online.

SUMMER JOBS!
Help new students get off to a good start. Peer Advisors needed for Summer Orientation. ~Competitive Salary~20hrs/week~ Mid-May to Mid-July. Applications 615 Goodell. Deadline April 11.

EMPLOYMENT

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + workstudy available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

Internship: For Innovators, Rebels, Seeking leadership outside the box Average pay $9,300 For info call 549-3746 or email jmaill1@yahoo.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Party @ Atlantis 3/10 10-1 18+ Dance to HipHop $5Cover Sponsored by UMass Equestrian Team

ENTERTAINMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

Boxing Lessons for self-development in Amherst Area with retired pro Djata Bumpus 413-584-1966

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts. Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

YOUR AD COULD GO HERE!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Unbelievable!

Mass Attack stuns No.4 Maine in Orono to sweep first round playoff series

By Andy Vogt
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Many predicted a sweep in the Massachusetts hockey team's playoff series, but few foresaw the fashion in which it would be completed.

The sixth-seeded Minutemen made history for the second consecutive evening, knocking off third-seeded and No. 4 Maine 4-2 to sweep the Hockey East quarterfinal series. With the win, UMass has earned its first trip ever to the Hockey East semifinals.

"This is what we're aspiring to be, a program that is well thought of, and to hang in the circles of the great programs in this country," a beaming UMass coach Don Cahoon said after Friday's historic win. "We've got a long ways to go, but this is a pretty darn good place to start off."

Mike Warner's power-play goal with 8:15 remaining in the game gave UMass an insurance tally and sealed the fate of the Black Bears who had been buzzing up to that point. Warner gobbled up Thomas Pock's blast and roofed a shot just under the crossbar for the two-goal lead.

"It was definitely my biggest goal since I've been at UMass. We haven't had a lot of games where we've been in that situation, so it was awesome to get that," Warner said.

The Minutemen jumped out to an early 3-0 lead after the first period to quiet the raucous Alfond Arena crowd and chase Maine netminder Jimmy Howard for the second straight evening. Pock got the Maroon and White on the scoreboard three minutes into the game off a failed Black Bear clearing attempt. Pock chased after the loose puck and fired it back at the net. The puck caromed off a Maine defenseman's skate and past Howard for the 1-0 UMass lead.

UMass	4
Maine	2

Chris Capraro doubled the advantage eight minutes later, as Warner crossed the puck to Capraro and the freshman outstretched the lead into the bottom left corner. Stephen Werner capped off the first frame as he tipped home Pock's blast from the blue line to send Howard to the showers after only 16 minutes of action.

"Any time you come into Maine and score three goals in the first period, it's an amazing boost," UMass senior captain Tim Turner said.

"Credit has to go to UMass for being opportunistic and popping those pucks in the net," Maine coach Tim Whitehead added. "They're going to be a dangerous team down the stretch."

Maine would snort jump back into the game, however, as Todd Jackson put home Robert Liscak's rebound past fallen UMass goaltender Gabe Winer to put the 4,100 in attendance at Alfond on their feet. The goal put electricity into the Black Bears' bench, as the final six minutes of the second period was played almost entirely in the UMass end.

Maine was finally able to crack Winer again early in the third period, as Derek Damon stuffed home a loose puck to cut the deficit to 3-2. But the Minutemen held off the Black Bears the rest of the way, sending Maine to its first Hockey East quarterfinal defeat since 1994.

Meanwhile, UMass will be looking to make even more noise when they clash with New Hampshire in the Hockey East semifinals on Friday evening at 5:00 p.m.

"I can't happen to a better group of guys, and the fact that we came here and swept Maine in the first two games is astronomical," Turner said.

Tim Turner and the Minutemen turned the hockey world upside down by stunning Maine 4-2, to complete a 2-game sweep in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs.

Winer wins battle of youthful netminders

Andy Vogt

Two of college hockey's up-and-coming goaltenders faced off against each other in this past weekend's playoff series between Massachusetts and Maine.

On one end stood Minutemen's rookie Gabe Winer, who entering Thursday had seen in action in 28 of 34 UMass games, and had shown signs of brilliance throughout the year despite average numbers (3.19 GAA, .870 save percentage). Standing in the other net was Maine's Jimmy Howard, a leading contender for Hockey East Rookie of the Year. Howard, while cooling off as of late, still posted brilliant stats for his rookie year, with a microscopic 2.21 average and a save percentage of .924.

But it was Winer who performed like a cagey veteran, while the Black Bears will spend the next few weeks trying to get their once invincible goaltender out of his funk.

"Gabe was solid and gave us a lot of confidence by the way he composed himself," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of his young netminder.

Winer steered aside 46 of Maine's 51 shots on goal on the weekend, but more importantly provided the backbone of the UMass defensive effort that stood tall when the Black Bears sustained a furious pressure in Friday's second period. Maine outshot the Minutemen 10-1 in the frame, but could only squeeze one past Winer, a put-back by Todd Jackson on a rebound.

"Gabe came up huge," senior Tim Turner said. "He was poised, he made the saves, and we weathered the storm and came in to regroup for the third period."

Winer has stepped up and shown the most poise this season in several of the team's biggest wins. He regrouped from a poor start to defeat Boston

Continued on page 6

A win to remember and a night never to be forgotten

By Matt Brady
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ORONO, Me. – "Wow. Wow."

Perhaps Matt Walsh's words following Friday's 4-2 win over Maine that clinched a sweep for the visiting Minutemen best captured the emotions of everyone around UMass hockey.

As the final seconds ticked away and the hockey world felt shockwaves that had an epicenter located in the middle of Maine, it was easy to feel the entire UMass family smiling.

When the final buzzer sounded, those on the ice did an about face and those on the bench hopped over the boards to swarm freshman goaltender Gabe Winer, who played with the maturity and poise of someone who had been in that position a number of times.

But the truth is, nobody in UMass hockey history – or Hockey East history, for that matter – had been in that position before. The Maine Black Bears had been 21-0 in the conference quarterfinals at home, and had lost just one quarterfinal game overall, in their storied history. Yet here were the visitors – a lineup that featured just four upperclassmen – poised to not only beat, but sweep, coach Tim Whitehead's team on the road.

The Minutemen played with the skill that they have shown throughout the season, but brought with them the composure of a veteran squad. Yet following Friday's victory, they turned the switch off and enjoyed the moment.

Each player came off the ice greeted by not only their teammates, but also a small collective of the UMass faithful who made the voyage to the vast stretches of forest that characterize the middle of Maine. They got high fives all around as they entered the tunnel to get to the locker room.

First came the younger players, all smiles. Then came the more established players – Greg Mauldin yelling coming off the ice, embracing Mike Warner, through the gauntlet and towards the locker room. Thomas Pöck, smiling and pumping his fists, getting punches from everyone. Finally, co-captain Tim Turner, getting his pats on the back and embracing injured co-captain Kelly Sickavish.

"I've dreamed of this for a long time, but I didn't think it would ever happen," Turner said. No doubt Turner was going back through all the playoff trials and tribulations he and Sickavish had experienced – a grand total of two games (a 2000 sweep at the hands of BU) and a pair of years sitting on the outside looking in. The yelling continued as the team finally made it into the locker room. "Fleet! Fleet! Fleet," went the chants.

After changing into their warm-ups, the team came back into the arena, taking in everything they had accomplished. As a crew put the covering back on the Alfond Arena ice, a team other than the Black Bears celebrated – an occurrence that has not come to fruition in quite some time.

Matt Anderson takes a picture of the scoreboard. Coaches and players lean on the concourse railing, taking everything in that has transpired. Mauldin seeks out Cahoon for a photo opportunity. Parents and players call anyone they can think of to tell them of the joy that they are experiencing in rustic Orono.

They celebrate for now, but the celebration will be short-lived. Cahoon and his staff will have this team back to business within a day or two. This is just the first step, as Cahoon sees it. His team is just two wins away from an NCAA Tournament berth.

But first, the Maroon and White will head to the FleetCenter to take on New Hampshire. Back to the drawing board and back to business. Two wins down, two to go.

Game on.

UMass ready for unexpected home playoff game with GW

By Jim Pignatiello
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After some of the strangest circumstances imaginable, the Massachusetts men's basketball team will host George Washington in the first round of the A-10 Tournament tonight at the Mullins Center.

Not long ago, the Minutemen needed some luck and some wins to host a tournament game, but after a scandal that has rocked the college basketball world, they will host the game without winning a single game on their home court since Feb. 23.

St. Bonaventure, which led UMass by two games before the A-10 handed down sanctions for playing with an ineligible player, gave up their wins and then the rest of their season to propel the Minutemen into the No. 8 spot – the lowest ranking seed to host a home game – despite losses to Rhode Island and Saint Joseph's.

"We are disappointed in their decision, but look forward to hosting an A-10 Tournament game," UMass Athletic Director Ian McCaw said at the time.

The Maroon and White (11-17, 6-10 A-10) will host the Colonials (11-16, 5-11 A-10), who clinched the No. 5 seed Saturday with a win over Fordham. Senior guard Chris Monroe leads a young team with 20.2 points per game (third in the conference) and has posted the most 20-point games in the league this year (15 overall, seven in A-10 games).

The rest of the George Washington starting lineup is littered with underclassmen. Sophomore T.J. Thompson, who is second in the A-10 with 6.12 assists per game, starts at point guard. In the frontcourt, freshmen Pops Mensah-Bonsu, Mike Hall and Omar Williams roam the inside. Mensah-Bonsu and Hall could both end up on the A-10 all-rookie team.

In the teams' first meeting at GW on Jan. 25, the Minutemen pulled out a 75-70 come-from-behind win despite Monroe's 28-point performance on the afternoon. Monroe achieved the 2000 career points milestone in that contest as well.

Freshman Mike Lasme notched 24 points on 9-for-16 shooting from the field. Classmates Jeff Viggiano and Gabe Lee chipped in with a combined 28 points and 12 rebounds on the afternoon. The Minutemen overcame a minus-four turnover ratio and a minus-seven rebounding differential to earn their first Division 1 win of the year outside of the Mullins Center.

UMass comes into the contest on a three-game skid, while GW snapped a two-game losing streak with its win over Fordham.

Tickets for the contest are $20 and may be purchased at the Mullins Center Ticket Office today from 8:30 a.m. until tip-off. Students can get into the game for free by showing their I.D. at the ticket office or in the Campus Center Concourse from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Also, those with tickets to last Wednesday's cancelled St. Bonaventure game may use those tickets to get into tonight's playoff game.

GERALD LINSCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Brennan Martin and the Minutemen will host George Washington in a first round Atlantic 10 Tournament game tonight at the Mullins Center.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 98

Student found dead in fraternity

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

A fraternity brother was found dead Sunday afternoon at Phi Sigma Kappa.

Francis Dippolito, 19, of Revere, Mass., was a sophomore member of the fraternity and was found dead by his roommate at the house on 510 N. Pleasant St., according to Jamie Magarian, a detective at the Amherst Police Department (APD).

"We've ruled out foul play," Magarian said. "It could be anywhere from three to six months before the toxicology report comes back."

Magarain said that no cause of death has been determined at this time and that there was nothing on the scene likely to have contributed to his death.

The incident is still under investigation by APD, with Sergeant Ron Young as lead investigator.

According to UMass spokesperson Barbara Pitoniak, Dippolito was an undeclared major and a member of Commonwealth College.

Michael Wiseman, director of the Office of Greek Affairs, said that Mental Health Services and the Newman Center will be actively involved in grief counseling and that they had already met with the chapter Sunday night.

Father Sean McDonagh, director of the Newman Center, said that about 40 people gathered in the Newman Center Sunday night for counseling.

"The Newman Center would be available after spring break if Frank's friends wanted to gather to pray and remember the goodness of a very talented and evidently very loyal young man," McDonagh said.

No arrangements for an on-campus memorial service or anything of that nature have been made at this time, according to Wiseman.

"Obviously we are waiting for the family to make arrangements," Wiseman said. "Given the timing of everything, most likely any kind of memorial service would be after spring break. We will certainly notify the public so that anyone that wishes to attend the service will know when it is."

UMass Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin released a statement yesterday expressing grief for the University community.

"This is a sudden, tragic loss to our community. All of us at the University extend our heartfelt condolences to Frank's family and friends, and to the Greek community," it stated. "The many resources of the University are

Continued on page A8

COURTESY ANDREW JAMI/UMASS COLLEGIAN

UMass student Francis Dippolito was found dead of undetermined causes at Phi Sigma Kappa on Sunday. Dippolito's death is the second at the University of Massachusetts this year.

Teach-in held to help UMass

By Barbara Lotto
Collegian Correspondent

An estimated 200 University of Massachusetts faculty members will participate in a teach-in today and tomorrow as part of this year's Building UMass campaign.

Students, faculty and staff are boosting their efforts to halt budget cuts and rally support for the University. This year they are backed up by the All-Campus Union Coalition, which was created to protest the lack of funding of University employee contracts.

Last year's teach-in from the Save UMass campaign resulted in the delivery of about 10,000 letters to the Statehouse, Ron Story said. Story is the president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, one of the major organizations sponsoring the teach-in.

Story said that there are enough professors participating this year that the University could possibly match that number.

"We're doing our part, but the students are the most important," Story said.

In his letter to The Campus Chronicle, he said that for this year's campaign, "we will project a positive but concerned message that students will convey in their own way."

Story encourages out-of-state students to write directly to Gov. Mitt Romney about their concerns because non-Massachusetts residents will be experiencing major tuition increases.

"We have experienced some serious cuts in the last few years with significant cost increases," Story said. "There is every reason to believe that if Romney's plan goes through, costs will skyrocket."

Economics professor Stanley Malinowitz will be urging all 690 of his students to participate.

"We will encourage – but not pressure – students to write to representatives to get funding restored, which is a real uphill battle," Malinowitz said. "We will try to get across to students what's at stake for our school and society."

According to Malinowitz, the ultimate aim of the campaign is to keep some of the funding for the University, while maintaining the quality of education and the low cost of attending the school.

"I think that all of us here – students, teachers, staff – all have a large part in this," Malinowitz said.

"We need to give opportunities to people who wouldn't ordinarily have them. UMass plays a big part in that, I think it's tragic if we get cut enough that we can't participate in it."

Ann Ferguson, Philosophy and Women's Studies professor, emphasized that this is a long-term project.

"We're going to need students to think of themselves as advocates for the University," she said.

"This is not just a one-time event, but the beginning of a campaign."

Ferguson said students should send personal letters to their legislators urging them to minimize budget cuts. She also suggested that students enlist their parents' assistance in the campaign.

"We are confident that we can make significant difference," Ferguson said.

Story expects that all of the letters will be delivered to the State House early next week. He said that it is important to have the letters ready before spring break because the legislature is currently working through the budget proposals.

During the teach-ins, students will be provided with information about how to take further action if they choose to become more involved. Voter registration forms will also be available to students who are not yet registered.

According to a fact sheet that will be handed out to professors for the teach-in, funding for higher education in Massachusetts decreased by three percent last year, leaving it more than 10 percent below the national average. The state already ranked last nationally in funding for higher education in 2001.

Whether or not Romney's reorganization plan takes effect, next year's budget for higher education is likely to be cut. Hopes are that the teach-in will keep the worst of the cuts from occurring.

In conjunction with the teach-in, there will be a coffee break for UMass faculty and staff on the Student Union steps and the Whitmore ramp at 10 a.m. on Wednesday.

Bulger attacks Romney's university proposal

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

BRIDGEWATER, Mass. (AP) – University of Massachusetts President William Bulger on Monday called the governor's proposal to reorganize the state's public college and university system an "attack on public higher education."

Bulger's comment came in remarks prepared for delivery to a joint legislative Ways and Means committee hearing at Bridgewater State College.

The proposal "seems to have been something just thrown together without very much study," he told reporters before he was to appear in front of the lawmakers Monday afternoon.

It was Bulger's first public appearance since Gov. Mitt Romney, in his fiscal 2004 budget, proposed eliminating the UMass president's office as part of the reorganization.

Romney aides have said the decision was not directed at Bulger, but rather at bringing the UMass system under tighter administrative control.

At an unrelated appearance in Somerville on Monday, Romney said, "This is a proposal we would be making regardless of who was president of the University of Massachusetts."

Romney's top education advisor, Peter Nessen, told the committee hearing that the reorganization plan will save about $150 million and not hurt students or their education.

Also under the proposal, some colleges would be merged and student tuition would be increased.

Some lawmakers raised concerns that increasing costs would hurt students. But Nessen said the state would guarantee financial aid to every student who needs it.

"My great concern is that while we wrestle with a state fiscal gap of $3 billion dollars, we not pass the cost onto students," Nessen said.

Romney's plan also calls for privatizing the UMass Medical School in Worcester and spinning off the flagship Amherst campus from the current five-university system.

Bulger said he's afraid that will weaken the other UMass campuses by reducing them to job training schools.

"I'd say that's a very limited view of education," Bulger said.

Mr. UMass pageant hosted for charity

By Lizzy Nielsen
Collegian Staff

Thought pageants were just for the ladies? Think again.

Tonight, for the first time in school history, 10 men will compete for the coveted title of "Mr. UMass" at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium of the University of Massachusetts. All money raised will go to the UMass Medical School Center for AIDS Research.

The pageant was organized by UMass senior journalism major Bill Boyce, and is being presented by Boyce and UVC-TV 19.

The "Guitar Dudes" from McMurphy's will open the show. Contestants will then be judged by a series of criteria, including a swimsuit competition and a talent portion.

After the formalwear portion, the field will be narrowed from 10 to four contestants.

These four will proceed to the question and answer portion of the judging, where another two will be eliminated.

At this point, the cheering of the crowd will determine the winner.

The judges are several well-known UMass faculty, including Ralph Whitehead and Steve Simurda from the Journalism Department, Kim Jones from the School of Management and Richard Wikander from the Communication Department.

Charity work isn't foreign to Boyce, as each year during college he has produced a different charity event for a different organization including "Make a Wish" and breast cancer awareness. AIDS was selected to be the benefactor this year.

"Over 40 million have died from AIDS so far, and one night wouldn't make a dent in money flow for charity, but I want to increase awareness. Not only are you coming out to see contestants participate in Mr. UMass, but you're assisting a just cause," Boyce said.

This is the first time that an event of this caliber has ever been produced on this campus, but Boyce hopes that it will catch on and become a tradition. "I feel more awareness needs to be brought to campus. I would like to see this become a tradition, that every year we raise money for an organization that needs help," Boyce said.

Anticipation for this event is growing on this campus, as fliers and word of mouth helped to promote the occurrence.

"It's a joy to put in so much work and have people buzzing about this on campus. This thing is going to be awesome: a lot of laughs and a good time," Boyce said.

UVC will be taping the event for a later broadcast on channel 19 on campus. The station also provided some financial backing as well.

The festivities begin at 8 p.m. and the winner will be crowned at approximately 10:30 p.m. Admission is $2 at the door, and donations will be accepted.

ANDREW AMULTANO/COLLEGIAN

Jonathan Elsberg speaks to students about his work in Palestine with the International Solidarity Movement.

Palestinian experiences discussed

By Felix Poon
Collegian Correspondent

Jonathan Elsberg and John Petrovato presented "What We Saw in Palestine" last night to 35 people as a form of what they call "active non-violent resistance" in the Israel/Palestine conflict.

The two spent time in the West Bank working with the International Solidarity Movement (ISM). They recounted their experiences and presented video clips and slides.

Elsberg began by speaking of his experience accompanying ambulances crossing through Israeli military checkpoints.

"There have been a number of cases where the ambulance was not allowed through, in one case resulting in the death of the patient," he said.

According to Elsberg, pregnant women were sometimes forced by Israeli soldiers to give birth in the ambulance instead of a hospital. Elsberg said that the births often had complications.

An audience member asked if a driver had ever taken advantage of the ambulance to aid suicide bombers. Elsberg said that this was never the case, however, all drivers he met had been shot at by Israeli soldiers before.

Elsberg's four video clips ranged from the demolition of a civilian family's home, to the demolition of several small family businesses, to ISM volunteers escorting children to school each morning. The ISM clip showed several Palestinian children in the forefront, while a large tank rolled into the background as the children began to run away. Some children threw rocks at the tank. The tank proceeded to pass through with an individual in the tank singing in Hebrew.

According to Elsberg, the song translates to "come on piss-ant pugs. Come on and try to get us." The tank then shot a blank shot.

After Elsberg's 45-minute presentation, Petrovato prepared his slides. "The first night I was [at the refugee camp] at around three in the morning. I heard these noises I had never heard before," he said.

He went on to explain the noise was the Israeli military "spraying bullets." According to Petrovato, he and other ISM volunteers crouched shivering with fear as bullets flew through the window. A Palestinian family came to offer tea and coffee.

"They go through this all the time," Petrovato said as he showed a slide of a wall riddled with bullet-holes.

Towards the end of his presentation, Petrovato described the "olive harvest campaign." According to Petrovato, olive trees are not only symbolic of heritage, but also a significant source for the Palestinian economy. He went on to say that the Israeli military as well as Israeli settlers harassed and shot the harvesters. Slides

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7
PLAYING THE GAME
THE REAL REASON WE COMPETE IN SPORTS
PAGE 4
RAISING THE ROOF
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE PREDICTABLE FUN
PAGE 5
MINUTEMEN FALL
SEASON ENDS FOR UMASS BASKETBALL
PAGE 12

police log

Registered sex offender arrested

compiled by Dan Lamothe

Monday, March 3

12:25 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Washington Tower on Fearing Street. One patient was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

6:36 a.m.: Police searched a room in Coolidge Tower on Massachusetts Avenue with a warrant. Jacob K. Lasecki, 20, of 63 Theodore Dr. in Leominster, Mass., was charged with possession of a class D substance and possession of a class D substance with intent to distribute. Stephanie Ann Lambros, 19, of 133 Sylvan Ter. in Leominster, was arrested and charged with possession of a class D substance. Police forces seized marijuana in plastic bags and a digital scale from the site.

10:24 a.m.: A larceny was reported in the North Village Apartments on N. Pleasant Street. A caller reported a black men's five-speed bike stolen.

11:17 a.m.: A traffic stop on Massachusetts Avenue resulted in the arrest of Ian K. Hammond, 29, of 80 Centre St. in Nantucket, Mass. Hammond was charged with having no inspection sticker and with unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle.

3:55 p.m.: Officers served a warrant following a March 2 search of a dormitory in Webster Hall. Derek I. Carme, 20, of 577 Wethersfield St. in Rowley, Mass., was arrested and charged with possession of a class D substance, possession of a class D substance with intent to distribute, possession of a class C substance and possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

6:27 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in the Curry Hicks Cage. The Amherst Fire Department (AFD) transported one person to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Tuesday, March 4

5:43 a.m.: A caller reported a male and a female fighting in a dorm room in Mackimmie Hall. Victims' rights were given and refused by the victim in the disturbance. The responding officers removed one of the people from the room and advised him not to go back.

6:23 a.m.: Vandalism was reported in Lot 13 on Olympia Drive. A caller reported that someone smashed his front driver side window sometime during the evening.

8:51 p.m.: A pedestrian reported being hit by a vehicle at the intersection of Hicks Way and Commonwealth Avenue. The operator stopped and gave her information after hitting her. She was advised to come to the police station the next day if a full report on the incident was wanted.

Wednesday, March 5

8:12 a.m.: A maintainer found marijuana and money in Brett Hall.

10:40 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported at the intersection of Massachusetts Avenue and Lincoln Avenue. An ambulance responded to the scene and a refusal of medical treatment was signed.

4:36 p.m.: A suspicious person was reported in the Hampshire DC on Southwest Circle. A caller requested an officer for assistance with an irate customer.

6:20 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in Berkshire Hall on Southwest Circle. The party signed a refusal of medical treatment for AFD.

Thursday, March 6

2:14 a.m.: An officer reported that he will be checking on three vehicles in Lot 44 on Sylvan Drive with the driver's side windows smashed and radios missing.

12:52 a.m.: A report of a vehicle damaged overnight in Lot 22 on University Drive was made. The vinyl rear window was ripped and pushed in and the zippers were broken on both vinyl door windows. A Jensen amplifier was taken from under the seat and a sub-woofer and custom-made box were taken from behind the rear seat. Three CD cases were taken with approximately 108 CDs in them.

6:00 p.m.: A caller in Crabtree Hall on Eastman Lane reported a missing wallet.

8:24 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in the Lederle Research Towrise building on N. Pleasant Street. The subject was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

10:04 p.m.: A caller reported that someone smashed out her car passenger window and tried to pry out her radio while the vehicle was parked in Lot 22 on University Drive. No items were taken from the vehicle. The caller was advised to call her insurance company.

Friday, March 7

12:37 a.m.: An automobile accident in Lot 44 on Sylvan Drive led to the arrest of Paul Potenzone, 20, of 4202 74th Terrace East in Sarasota, Fla. Potenzone was charged with operating under the influence of alcohol and leaving the scene of property damage.

1:37 a.m.: A caller in Lewis Hall on Thatcher Way reported an individual trying to get into his room and threatening him. Housing reports that the disturbance is a housing issue and that they will be standing by as mediators.

2:28 a.m.: A vending machine in the basement of Mary Lyon Hall on Eastman Lane was reported smashed.

1:37 a.m.: A disturbance in Van Meter Hall was reported. The caller said that a female threw a glass of wine in his face.

7:58 a.m.: A breaking and entering was reported in Lot 22 on University Drive. The front passenger window of a vehicle was reported to be broken.

4:15 p.m.: Police responded to liquor law violations in Lot 50 on John Adams Road. Four arrests were made. Nicole Marie Lodosky, 19, of 48 Beverly Hill Dr. in Shrewsbury, Mass., was charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and possession of a false liquor ID card. Ashley Smith, 20, of 9A Ashley Rd. in Southborough, Mass., Matthew Mota, 20, of 951 Barnum St. in New Bedford, Mass., and Darren Fleurent, 20, of 1030 Shelburne St. in New Bedford, Mass., were charged with possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

11:21 p.m.: A caller reported a possible fight in the Haigis Mall, with five males tackling another male. He also said he didn't know if it was a real fight. When police responded, no one was on the scene.

Saturday, March 8

1:50 a.m.: Emergency Housing called to report two suspicious people behind the Hills House on Infirmary Way. The area was searched and no one was around.

3:19 a.m.: A disturbance was reported in Baker Dorm on Clark Hill Road. A caller reported two males arguing in the hallway.

4:57 a.m.: Police responded to a disturbance in John Quincy Adams Tower and arrested Jeffery G. Baxter, 19, of 29 East St. in Melrose, Mass. Baxter was charged with assault and battery and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Police spokesman Jim Lyons said that people on the floor reported that Baxter was throwing glass bottles at residents.

8:18 a.m.: Police arrested Daniel Grande, 22, of 1 Appalossa Dr. in Methuen, Mass., on a previous warrant.

2:43 p.m.: Police responded to a reported assault and battery at Garber Field.

3:36 p.m.: A caller reported that his vehicle was broken into some time during the previous evening, resulting in the smashing of a sliding glass rear window as well as a panel in the driver's side area. Two 12-inch subwoofers in a box, about 70 CDs and a CD player face plate.

7:19 p.m.: Police responded to a report of a black male knocking on doors in Kennedy Tower asking for a phone and lighter. A caller reported that he overheard the individual talk about going downstairs to steal from some people. Police responded and arrested John Bracey, 23, of Springfield, Mass. Bracey was charged with possession of a class D substance on the scene. Upon further investigation, it was discovered that Bracey had outstanding warrant for multiple charges in multiple states, including some under another name, Calvin Carr. Bracey is also a registered sex offender.

8:40 p.m.: An officer reported a vandalized gas cap and mirror on an automobile in Lot 32 on University Drive.

Sunday, March 9

1:10 a.m.: A caller in Mackimmie Hall on Sunset Avenue reported people throwing objects at his windows. The caller said the objects were coming from the house on Sunset Avenue. The call was referred to APD.

4:21 a.m.: An RA in Coolidge Tower reported that there is a group of people on the third floor hallway possibly getting ready to start a fight. She heard someone say something about a fire extinguisher.

6:21 a.m.: Two cars were found vandalized in Lot 22 on University Drive. Two vehicles had windows broken out and there were muddy boot prints on both vehicles underneath where the windows were broken.

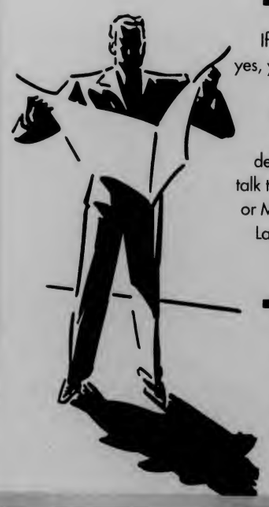
11:00 a.m.: A medical emergency was reported in John Adams Tower on Fearing Street. AFD responded to the report of a 19-year-old female with heart palpitations.

1:00 p.m.: Four vehicles were found vandalized on Thatcher Way. The driver side mirror was broken off on one and the passenger side mirror was broken off on the other three.

3:49 p.m.: A report of skateboarders causing problems near the Fine Arts Center was made.

6:44 p.m.: A breaking and entering in Lot 22 on University Drive was reported. A vehicle was found with a broken passenger side window and the glove box reportedly gone through.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a bi-weekly publication since January 1934. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!

Applicants should have some layout experience.

Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.

Hiring process begins April 14th!

MAJOR JUNIOR WEAR LABEL

WAREHOUSE SALE

Ladies and Men's 50-75% off original mall store price

GOT CLOTHES?

5 DAYS ONLY

WARE[illegible]

NOBODY'S PERFECT

Monday 3/10 9-9
Tuesday 3/11 9-9
Wednesday 3/12 9-9
Thursday 3/13 9-9
Friday 3/14 9-3

WAREHOUSE SALE

UMass Student Union Ballroom

Turnin' up the Heat
A fireman attempts to open a Physical Plant door to make sure there is no internal fire remaining, as fellow firemen watch holding a firehose pointed at the door.

COURTESY SAM NORATIAN

Romney to close 36 state offices

By STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOMERVILLE, Mass. (AP) – Gov. Mitt Romney, targeting what he called "outdated 1950's style bureaucracy," announced Monday he will close 36 human service offices statewide, a move he said would save $2.3 million.

The move is one piece of the governor's plan to restructure the state's 10 Health and Human Services agencies. In doing so, Romney said, the state will save $60 million in the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The office reductions would leave 128 local and regional HHS offices, down from 164.

"Once the consolidation plan is in place, most of the offices will be located in areas where the greatest number of clients would travel the least distance," said HHS Secretary Ronald Preston. The offices will be located near public transportation, he said.

Human service advocates said the plan seemed to make sense at first glance, although they raised concerns about the closing of two welfare office in Westfield and Haverhill. The workers in those offices will be moved to locations in Springfield and Lawrence.

Advocates also said they were worried that the plan was driven more by the need to save money than deliver services.

"We must question if the basic motivation is trying to make the system better for the clients or is the main motivation to save money to support the governor's no new taxes pledge?" said Steve Collins, executive director of the Massachusetts Human Services Coalition.

Preston said there would be no layoffs as a result of the plan, which doesn't require the approval of lawmakers.

The offices will be closed and consolidated as leases run out, Romney aides said.

"Some cities and towns are going to be sorry to see the state moving out and consolidating offices, but if we don't need the space, it doesn't make any sense for the taxpayers or service recipients to have us unnecessarily rent additional space," he said.

Romney made the announcement, which he previously outlined in his 2004 budget proposal, in Somerville, where he said $108,000 would be saved by moving a local Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission office into a nearby office rented by the Department of Transitional Assistance.

"It's just plain common sense to join two agencies together rather than having two offices half empty," Romney said.

Of the 36 offices closed, the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission lost the most, 14, all of which were moved into nearby welfare offices.

Other agencies with offices slated to be closed include the Department of Mental Health (6), the Office of Child Care Services (5) and the Department of Mental Retardation (3).

Registered sex offender with outstanding warrant arrested in Kennedy Tower on Sat.

Continued from page A2

Second student dies this year

Continued from page A1

available to anyone who feels a need for help in dealing with this very sad occurrence. Students especially are encouraged to seek assistance through the Dean of Students Office."

Doctor Harry Rockland-Miller, director of Mental Health Services, said that counseling is available both for individuals and groups "whenever there is a significant event like a student death."

"The main thing that I'd want to pass on is our availability to students," he said.

Rockland-Miller said that anyone seeking counseling should call Mental Health Services at 545-2337.

Dippolito's death is the second at the University of Massachusetts this year. On Jan. 22, senior Jessica Harpin, 21, died after going into cardiac arrest in a Belchertown apartment.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Speakers discuss peaceful protest

Continued from page A1

pictured heavily armed Israeli settlers.

One such event consisted of thousands of Palestinian harvesters, ISM volunteers, and Israeli peace activists who picked olives from the field as a demonstration.

"Israeli peace activists were always working with us," Petrovato said while some members of the audience applauded. "Literally thousands of Israelis came to help."

According to Petrovato, the Israeli military helped the demonstrators only when they realized the presence of the international media coverage.

A question and answer session came after Petrovato's presentation. One audience member asked how the Israeli government should defend against suicide bombings while upholding human rights. Elsberg responded by saying the occupation must end.

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA

• Only pr[illegible] MA
• Ha[illegible]
• National cert[illegible]
• Lifetime [illegible]
• Ca[illegible]
• Resume
• Spe[illegible]
• Convenient [illegible]

Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Styles by Deborah

Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit

$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut
with student ID
EXPIRES 05/15/03

$5 off Clipper Cuts
with student ID
EXPIRES 05/15/03

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

VOTE!
SGA General Election 2003
All the DC's or in the Campus Center March 12 & 13
10:00 - 2:00 and 4:00 - 7:00

U Card
U Can Get Credit Too!
Coca-Cola
Swipe your Ucard to purchase any vended Coca-Cola and you are entered to win $50, $25, or $10 credit on your Ucard!

product, automatically WIN $100,
Michael Keating won $100!
GO UMASS !!!

Let The Black Sheep Host Your Graduation Ba-a-a-ash!

Join us for an exquisite dinner in our new downtown Amherst restaurant, plan a catered party with The Black Sheep at the location of your choice, or have us deliver hors d'oeuvres, dinner, sandwiches, sweets, and more, right to your door!

CALL NOW: 413.253.3443 OR VISIT:
WWW.BLACKSHEEPDELI.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Gay soldiers: Out of the closet and serving proud

As America gears towards war, like it or not, another issue involving the military is once again surfacing.

The "don't ask, don't tell policy."

Instituted a decade ago by President Clinton as a hollow compromise, this policy has been brought under numerous scrutiny by both sides of the issue about having open homosexuals serving in our nation's military.

There are those on the far right who feels that the armed forces must go back to the old method of expelling all homosexuals from the military. Some have even called for a question of one's sexuality to be asked upon enlistment and that all who answer in the affirmative are not allowed to join up.

"Gay activists and their allies in the media are trying to wrap their radical agenda in the flag of 'national security' and 'military necessity,'" declared Elaine Donnelly, president of the conservative Center for Military Readiness.

Those flags of national security and military necessity are of course more prevalent due to the current state of affairs in the world. As war seems to be looming on the horizon, a war that is far from universally supported, one would think that the military would want every possible person that they could find who was willing to go fight. This is not the case, however, as officials still maintain that normal discharging procedures, with regards to people who are found to be exhibiting openly homosexual actions or conversations, will continue.

Those on the other end of the spectrum, who strive for an all-inclusive military, are incensed that gays continue to have to serve in concealment.

"They're willing to put their lives on the line to defend freedom when they're denied freedom at home. They can't talk to their loved ones on the phone, they can't embrace when they get on aircraft carriers to sail off to war," proclaimed C. Dixon Osburn, the executive director of the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network. Osburn estimates that there are already approximately 7,500 gay troop members deployed in the Persian Gulf, as part of the 250,000 person force.

It is time for the American military to join the real world like other organizations have had to. Homosexual soldiers are allowed to serve openly in the armed forces of most of the NATO member nations. Why should the United States, the beacon of freedom, be any different?

Old arguments about openly gay servicemen disrupting morale don't hold any water. These soldiers are trained professional in an occupation where they must, at all times, follow orders, as well as the example of their superior officers. If leadership in our military would conform to the change, the trickling down affect would most easily take affect.

Gay soldiers aren't joining up in the military for the opportunity to perhaps have a steamy one-night stand. Rather, they, like those around them, seek to serve their country with honor and dignity in its purposes of the protection and safety of our country and its way of life all over the world. Who they chose to love makes no difference in their abilities to be able to carry out their jobs to the highest potential.

With all the struggles in the Middle East, the military should at least solve this relatively simple one at home first.

Information from CBS News was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Action over ignorance

Lindsey Elder

The days of "ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country" are approaching their end faster and faster with each passing hour. "Books not bombs" supported by walking out of your class? Makes perfect sense to me. Disrespecting my professor, who of course has a huge influence on whether or not we do in fact go to war, is the best way to voice my opinion on avoiding action in Iraq.

The truth of the matter is that whether or not you agree with the decision to go to war, we cannot win abroad when we're still battling ignorance and one another here.

"President Bush is too trigger happy," "it's all about oil," I think we've heard all the reasons why action on Iraq shouldn't happen. But consider if this war and recent conflicts before it were really "all about oil." We could just fabricate a reason to attack Venezuela or Mexico and launch a war right from our own back yard. As for being too trigger happy, a year and a half ago President Bush could have turned the entire Middle East into a sandbox and would have had the world's complete understanding and support. Today, after offering a peaceful settlement for a dictator to stand down, resolving to action after words have failed labels us an over controlling super power.

Post 9-11, everyone and their uncle considered themselves a true, devoted American by putting a flag on their antenna. The country was painted red, white, and blue with pride and support of the nation's strength and future. Now however, that "thank you" to those in the armed forces has returned to a "screw you," and our friends, family and neighbors in uniform who were regarded as heroes are back to being seen as baby killers.

America is not a war-focused nation, not now, nor has it ever been. The war on terrorism is the first time since WWII that the country is fighting for itself, and not for the defense or service of another nation. Taking action in Iraq is worth the effort now because we're motivated by more than just Hussein's ignoring an order of the UN, it is worth it just to be done with it. In dealing with a dictator who f—— his country and his people, unless you've already forgotten about Desert Storm, this is not a conflict we want to keep boiling up every decade for the next generation to deal with.

Collateral damage is something that always gets thrown at America's military leaders whenever there is talk of an invasion or war, no matter how justified the cause may be. In actuality, no one understands the reality of collateral damage more than the U.S. military. For instance, there is a reason why Fort Benning, Fort Hood and other essential locations of the armed forces are not smack in the middle of New York or Los Angeles. You do not keep your resources and weapons in the middle of populated cities near your women, children and families for a reason; a reason that apparently leaders in the Middle East don't consider the way we do. They know the risk and if they're willing to use their own innocent civilians as a defense, then that's their mistake, not ours.

> "There is a reason why Fort Benning, Fort Hood and other essential locations of the armed forces are not smack in the middle of New York or Los Angeles."

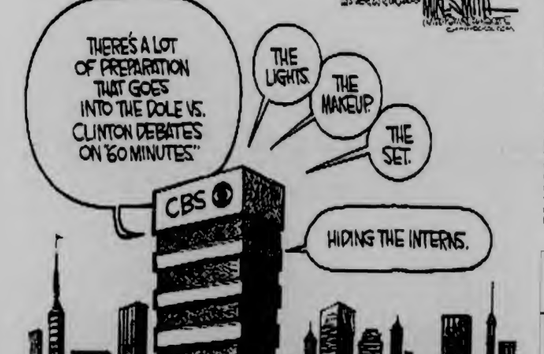
Protestors will gather to yell and squawk that violence is not the right recourse for what is going on. What is going on for most of us is only what we see on television. What you don't see on television is that Saddam Hussein has built 48 palaces for himself since the Gulf War alone, some of which have gold plated faucets, and man-made lakes that use pumping equipment that could have been used to help with civilian water and sanitation needs.



The U.S. is dependent on making sure that U.N. sanctions are followed because we are the most powerful nation in the world and when the decisions and orders of the U.N. are being blown off like a student council request, then for the sake of democracy and the respect of the U.N. orders in the future, it needs to be shown that it will not be ignored.

It is always easy to say that the U.S. is only stepping in or helping in situations like this to benefit itself. Well in all honesty, that's how diplomacy works. You give a little now; you get a little in the future. Just like charity here in America: make a contribution, and it looks good for your company's record, or as an individual and you can write it off in your taxes. It doesn't make your generosity any less appreciated. If you want to talk about squandering of funds, ask Saddam Hussein about the shipments of baby milk, bottles, powder, and other infancy items that he sold on the market on the Gulf to make a profit, instead of distributing them to his suffering people.

For anyone upset that we're jumping the gun in going to war, keep in mind that this country has built itself up to the most powerful nation in the world in just the last 200 years, and would not seek to put any of that achievement at risk for a war that was not justified. America is the only country whose tactics usually entail waiting for the enemy to fire first, and then when we do win, its up to us to support, feed and educate the people who would have just burnt us to the ground and started the celebrations.

If the U.S. decided to ignore the issues and play the "world peace" card with France and the rest of our allies, then when all hell broke loose in the Middle East, or when North Korea started the countdown on their nuclear weapons, all of the people who are now protesting against action would be the ones drying their eyes when they hear the numbers of people killed either here or abroad by another Desert Storm, and looking to the heartless U.S. government as to why they didn't do more to help stop this. Actions speak louder than words, and after many failed attempts, it's time to finally make Hussein listen, for the good of his nation and ours.

Lindsey Elder is a Collegian Columnist.

Letter to the Editor:

Among democracy and dictators

To the Editor:

Dan Barrett, I'm sorry, but your article "Misinformed protestors," started out as seeming to seek more intelligent ways to protest the inevitable war and just progressed more and more into what you felt is the reason for us going to war in the first place. Let me clarify what you seem to be "misinformed" about in terms of why the protesting American people feel the way they do.

Democracy isn't necessarily for everyone. While we're brainwashed into believing that it's the only system that an industrialized or developing nation can succeed on, it's not. What the U.S. is doing now is the same thing missionaries did centuries ago – not only preach their gospel, but shove it down people's throats, forcefully is necessary.

I'm not saying that the Iraqi people love living under a gun-toting dictator who uses women and children, including his own wives and kids, as shields. But what is democracy when you're living under a gun-toting dictator we call "President" who wasn't even elected by popular vote, doesn't reflect the sentiment of his citizens and makes us look even worse than we already are in the eyes of everyone else around the world?

Since when did we become the world's Big Brother? The U.S. is a like a drunk driver who kills a carload of people and then becomes the president of AA. We're still the only country to date to use "weapons of mass destruction" on a large scale, and yet somehow we've appointed ourselves the world's official "do as we say, not what we did" older brother. As far many nonchalant Americans are concerned, if the rest of the world wants to nuke itself out of the water, go right ahead – just leave us alone. Does the phrase "MYOB" conjure up any thoughts from childhood?

This isn't even about Sept. 11 any more. After almost nine months of the media making the U.S. Armed Forces search for bin Laden look like that game in the arcade where you keep trying to bop the furry animals that pop up, we basically got tired of that and started kicking the game to let the world know "we still mean business."

If it's not about oil or our general endless quest to put a McDonalds, Disney park and "Survivor" episode on every other street in the world, then what is it about? One gun-toting dictator's quest to shove democracy and conformity down the throat of another.

Joe Finley II
UMass Student

Quitting solves nothing

Dan Lamothe

Three weeks ago in Boyden gym, my intramural team and I suffered through one of the most embarrassing losses in our long-legged lives. Playing the defending Top Gun division champions with four players, we knew things wouldn't go well. What we didn't expect was to be pressured and lose by nearly 70 points.

I don't think it's physically possible for a game to get any sadder than ours was. Playing four on five – and three on five once one of our players fouled out – against players that were bigger, faster and much more ugly took its toll on us. Before the game was over, we had players jacking up shots from 40 feet away because it seemed like that was the only place we could get open with the other team's two extra defenders. It doesn't get much more pathetic than that. It wasn't even really the game of basketball anymore.

> "Class and dignity be damned, St. Bonaventure made a statement."

One thing should be mentioned, though. Even though our team, with its tired, sloppy players and stupid, corny team name (Deathstar) had no chance from the opening tip-off, we played until the clock ran out and we walked out at least knowing we tried.

It's too bad the same thing can't be said for St Bonaventure.

St. Bonaventure's men's basketball team decided last week to call it quits on the rest of their season after they were barred from the postseason for playing with an illegal player on their roster. With two games left in their season, the players on the team decided simply that the last two games weren't worth the effort without a postseason.

Nevermind that the team represents an entire university. Nevermind that the move came off looking like the temper tantrum of a four-year-old.

Class and dignity be damned, St. Bonaventure made a statement.

The Bonnies threw self-respect to the wind. Instead of playing for themselves, or playing for respect, or playing for the love of the game, the Bonnies chose not to play at all.

Some inspiration story there.

Looking at the situation from the players' point of view, rage is a reasonable reaction. The team was in the middle of a solid season with a new player, Jamil Terrell, on the squad who had been cleared to play by the university. They never saw it coming. They did nothing underhanded. Plain and simple, the university leaders failed them, making a poor decision and screwing the team over in the process for potentially years to come.

The team does deserve some sympathy. Three seniors had their careers cut unmercifully short through no fault or control of their own. The rest of the predominantly young team lost a shot to play in the Atlantic 10 tournament and gain some postseason experience. Dr. Robert J. Wickenheiser, president of St. Bonaventure University, even took the blame for clearing Terrell, saying that Terrell had been involved in no wrongdoing. He has since resigned his position under pressure from the University.

Regardless, the team walking away was senseless. By packing up their ball and going home, the Bonnies showed no heart. The team had absolutely nothing to be ashamed of in this whole mess – right up until they decided to quit.

Now the team faces a whole new complicated mess of problems. Is this it for sanctions? Possibly. The NCAA could whack the team with more sanctions if they feel that St. Bonaventure handled the situation poorly. Walking out on a season is unprecedented.

Is that really what the players on the team want? With two freshmen and six sophomores on the team, the players remaining will have to suffer through the length of any punishment that the NCAA hands down. Did they think that through before they waved the white flag, stamped their feet, and said "I don't wanna play anymore?"

St. Bonaventure's decision to not play the last two games of the season was one made while its emotions were running high and the team was looking for answers to how the rug could get pulled out from under them so easily. It was not thought through properly. It couldn't have been. It's the only possible explanation.

Why else would a team risk so much to show the world that someone hurt their feelings?

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed to "Letters to the Editor." Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as "Commentary." All submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submission to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Is entertainment responsible for violence?

Corner to corner

Emilie Duggan-Hicks

Every time I turn around, I hear stories of how this movie or that song is to blame for violence.

A nine-year-old boy accidentally kills his three-year-old brother imitating a body slam that he saw on television the night before. Who's to blame? The nine-year-old for performing the action, the parents for not paying better attention to their children, or World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) for allowing such acts to take place on television?

I blame the parents because what it comes down to is parental responsibility.

It is not the fault of the WWE if a nine-year-old boy is up at 10:00 p.m., watching a show that is designed for adults. That blame falls on the shoulders of the parents, who should be monitoring what their children are watching. Why is a nine-year-old up that late anyway? When I was nine, I was in bed at 8 p.m., give or take a few minutes.

Don't get me wrong, I love wrestling. But I'm also in my 20s and am fully capable of distinguishing right from wrong, real from fake. When I see the camera pan the audience and children are shooting the finger or telling the television audience to "suck it," I cringe. It's not appropriate for children under a certain age to be watching this kind of programming. Yes, it's entertainment and it's fake. But that doesn't make it less violent.

According to Shannon Croft, a child psychologist at Emory University, there are a lot of parents – or babysitters – who put their kids in front of wrestling shows or other violent programming without thinking about what their kids are seeing and how what they're seeing might affect what they do. For young children, Croft says, watching wrestling is a lot like watching violent cartoons like "Power Rangers" or watching horror movies because it promotes the notion that we live in a violent and dangerous world.

"These kids learn that the only way they can survive is by being violent and dangerous," Croft said in an interview in a 2000 with atlanta.creativeloafing.com. "They don't understand the difference between 'pretend' and real. They learn, from wrestling, that if someone does something you don't like, the best way to deal with it is to kick them or hit them."

Alan Sharp, former spokesman for the now defunct World Championship Wrestling (WCW) doesn't completely disagree.

"Kids have always imitated their favorite television shows," Sharp acknowledges in the same article. "Our challenge is to produce entertaining programs for our adult audience, while being mindful of our younger viewers. However, it is the parent's responsibility to decide with their children what they watch."

No. Parents should not decide with their children what they watch on television. When you're nine years old, life is not a democracy. It's not about being fair. Distinguishing between what is and isn't appropriate is the responsibility of the parent. Children may know the difference of right from wrong, fiction versus reality, but they don't always know the meaning of the word "consequence." They might not understand that every action has an equal and opposite reaction, and if you do harm to another, you will pay the price. That's not shown on television – on any kind of prime time programming – because week after week characters return to their same roles. That's why the thought of children – and I literally mean children, not teens – watching television late at night is so irksome.

Critics often ask, "What kind of message are we sending to the children who see such programs on television?" I ask this: What kind of parent would let his nine-year-old watch wrestling in the first place? Especially when it's on later at night specifically because it is meant for adult viewing?

Don't condemn the entertainers who are making their living by giving the audience what they want to see.

It never ceases to amaze me how easily blame is placed everywhere but on ourselves. If I do something wrong, I own up to it and pay the consequences. That's the bottom line – you do the crime, you do the time.

'Bringing Down the House' formulaic but enjoyable

COURTESY SAM EMERSON

Charlene (Queen Latifah, center) is an ex-convict who turns Peter Sanderson's (Steve Martin, left) life upside down in the comedy "Bringing Down the House." Eugene Levy also stars.

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The trailers have played endlessly. Steve Martin stars as a yuppie who discovers that his blind Internet date turns out to be an ex-con played by rapper-turned-actress Queen Latifah. She invades his life, camps out in his home, charms his kids and does everything an "unconventional" comedy heroine can do to loosen up her tighter-than-a-coil bumbling hero. In no time, the lawyer without a working knowledge of street slang is wearing hip-hop clothes and visiting inner city clubs. We get it – Martin's in desperate need of letting go and getting in touch with his inner "gangsta."

This all makes the find-your-true-self sitcom "Bringing Down the House" sound much, much worse than it actually is. At first glance, the movie seems to be one of those middle-of-the-road, cookie-cutter cut-and-paste jobs in which an uptight WASP is forced to let go of his old self in order to learn the real value of tapping into that hippie/party-boy/sensitive schmuck that lies within. I can almost hear audiences from across the globe groaning as I speak.

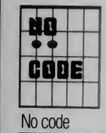
Yet "Bringing Down the House," directed without flair by Adam Shankman but acted with precision by a whip-smart cast, doesn't elicit the expected groans. Instead this comedy, however routine it is, manages the now all-too-rare feet of generating genuine laughs.

The state of mainstream cinematic comedy is now officially in dire straights. Look at this year's movies. From "Just Married" to "Old School," they all fall into the same category of greasy corporate junk food. These are movies that have all the heft and substance of a Twinkie, yet there's a crucial wrong here other than their collective weightlessness. These movies that are designed to make us laugh have lost one essential element: the giddy specters of joy and fun.

Today's comedies are mirthless assembly line products that seem to be designed from some weathered blueprint hanging on the wall. There's a sort of scientific formula to these movies wherein the variables of the plot can be altered and shifted, yet the results are always the same damn thing. Occasionally, a moment or two will entice laughter from the audience; usually, the audiences are forced to sit there, looking glum, as amusement begins to dwindle and dry up.

In other words, "Bringing Down the House" looks like yet another pre-packaged concept comedy in which humor plays second fiddle to flavorless artifice. Watching a movie like this is like building a Lincoln Log cabin – you get all the tools needed for construction, yet there's only so many things you can build with your given supplies. Message mongering about individuality and finding your true identity? Check. A ridiculous, only-in-a-comedy-movie climax, often involving guns and criminals, that drastically shifts the tone of the movie? Check. Divorced, overworked, absentee parents who learn to spend more time with their children? Check, check and once again check. But there's a major difference between "Bringing Down the House" and, oh say, "A Guy Thing." "Bringing Down the House" is actually funny.

There are things "Bringing Down the House" is not. It's not creative. It was not built on a foundation of storytelling ingenuity. It does not break free from its time-tested mathematical formula. However, the sum of the whole is greater than its parts.



'Bringing Down the House'
Directed by Adam Shankman
Starring Steve Martin Queen Latifah
Touchstone
Rated PG-13
105 mins.

Martin employs his trademark dry-humored slapstick for the role of Peter Sanderson, a WASPy tax attorney who lives in an uptight neighborhood, and works for a conservative law firm, planning a business deal for a very stuffy matron. Peter's divorced and too into his job to take his kids on a planned Hawaiian getaway. He meets a fellow lawyer over Instant Messenger, but his blind date turns out to be Charlene (rapper/actress Queen Latifah), an ex-con who blackmails her way into Peter's life so she can get the lawyer to expunge her record, pleading that she's innocent. In the process of invading his life, Charlene teaches Peter how to open up, win back his wife and live life the way he wants rather than fitting into the roles that society expects him to fit into.

The message that "Bringing Down the House" has to offer – something about being true to yourself – is used to bang the audience over the head. Yet the movie has the same satirical assurance that Martin movies such as "Bowfinger" have. It's certainly shocking to hear sweet old Betty White, as Martin's bridge-loving neighbor, spewing out offensive racial epithets and to hear Queen Latifah mockingly talk like a slave girl in one as people call her "Lmima." This stuff is offensive and provocative to be sure, and it's surprising to see and hear it used in a whitebread comedy such as "Bringing Down The House." When White said Latinos only belonged in the neighborhood as gardeners, my jaw dropped to the ground. As the movie progressed, however, the laughs began to build up in intensity and volume. For a movie that seems too timid to break free from storytelling convention it has a strange, and welcome, level of guts when it comes to prodding our society's racial stereotypes. Some will be offended; they will be the ones who don't get the joke.

Martin gives his loosest performance in a while, while the expressive and even touching Latifah demonstrates just why she's up for an Oscar this year. Bonus casting points: Eugene Levy, the great comic foil from "American Pie," "SCTV" and Christopher Guest movies ("Waiting For Guffman," "Best in Show") appears as Martin's best friend, a middle-aged man with a fondness for big, black women and an unexpected knowledge of street slang ("You got me straight trippin' boo.") The way Levy, he of the caterpillar eyebrows, deadpans in Ebonics may be the funniest thing about the movie.

Let the songs protest?

Bono

"Play C3/ let the song protest."

Eddie Vedder shouts straight from the hip with this jukebox proclamation on "Insignificance," declaring music as the means – and musicians as the collective voice – through which our undefined anxiety can be stated.

No code

Matthew Despres

It's a compassionate appeal to a natural instinct, but the lyric also stirs consciousness around a decidedly compound issue: in a heaving world climate, what role can – and should – musicians play on the national and global political stages?

The integration of music and politics is certainly nothing new; the two have been compatible, if spiteful, bedfellows since those with a conscious found the means to string their ideas along a verse and a chorus. It's the evolution of the protest song – the musician turned political activist – that has drawn boundaries, spinning popular opinion to opposite ends in the argument of what really works and what's simply too much. Lines of good taste are often breached for brief flashes of press – the fame, of course, often trumping the good fortune of those who truly need the light. In the same vein, upstart organizations with good intentions are championed and ultimately sustained because of that same, remarkable pull that celebrity status affords. It's a rock purgatory, and it's broadly defined in the mainstream by one set of features above all others – those of its criticized, lauded and unofficial (though willing) spokesman: U2's Bono.

Bono's edge in world affairs has sharpened considerably in recent years; his actions are often the standard by which other musicians are measured against, his occasional lapse into inaction a rallying point for those who snub their nose at artistic involvement. He's formed alarming bonds with conservative United States politicians, held court with the Pope, attended G8 conferences, and attended to domestic affairs both stateside and in his native Ireland.

It's done, quite genuinely, some good – he has shifted attention to the causes with no "with no melody lines." His causes – and there are many – are indeed far from "sexy," far from being solved, and far from the world of rock 'n' roll that chewed up the former Paul Hewson and spit back the star with one name.

Still, heavy questioning has dealt his intent a fair amount of criticism, and the larger question remains: Should he stay far away as well?

Bono has joked in interviews that it's Catholic guilt driving him around the globe, but admitted in the same breath that celebrities are indebted to return some of what they've had the fortune to take from society. The choice to create and prosper on an unimaginable, public stage also brings a responsibility to act as the instrument to a project the larger voice. To broadcast the hum of the people that seldom gets heard.

The means by which they do so, however, should perhaps be more inclusive in the art. Bono touring Africa and then the American midwest to share the lessons he's learned can be a good thing. Bono touring everywhere, however, thins the causes he attends to and similarly dilutes our patience. He may passionately believe in every inequality being dealt around the world, but trying to right each of them under the washed-out light of the press sends the wrong signal, regardless of his intent. The fact remains – he, and other likeminded artists, should spend less time on the warpath and more time attending to the talent and crafting the message that made them relevant in the first place. That made us raise our collective voice when they did the same, because it was with unrivaled passion that the discussion first began.

As we're drawn closer each day to a war in Iraq, musicians are beginning to stir, and a large percentage of the movement has been appropriate – perhaps they too have had their eyes on the (by now) exhausted U2 frontman. Songwriter Tim O'Brien has organized a series of peace concerts in Nashville, inviting Bela Fleck and other friends to share in his expression. "Good artists are the conscience of their community," says O'Brien on his website.

"They allow people to take time, under the guise of entertainment, to think about the real issues in our lives. As a responsible artist it's my duty to face these issues, and share them with my audience . . . So many people feel they have no voice in the matters of the world. With these concerts, I hope to counter that feeling, to give the disaffected an outlet for their voices."

Others are following suit. Yusef Islam (the former Cat Stevens) has reemerged, his own "Peace Train" and shipped it worldwide, banking on the voice in the song to ease the uncertain discussion in our own minds. R.E.M. – whose members have long been at the fore of most cultural shifts in a tastefully understated manner – have voiced public support of the Musicians United to Win Without War campaign, a loose coalition of artists that has also attracted the attention of, among others, Fugazi, David Byrne, Sonic Youth and George Clinton. In part, the movement advocates the disarmament of Iraq with tougher inspections rather than violent – and perhaps unconstitutional – military action.

Vedder, Bono and O'Brien are all correct in their missions, and are accomplishing something despite radically different approaches. Successful artists are in debt. They should not repay with excess and flash – almost without exception, an overextension of the self ultimately takes away rather than gives back. Let the song protest. Let the song speak. Perhaps someday, the song will save too.

"War is not the answer," sang Marvin Gaye years ago, in what seems another world now. Music isn't a solution in itself either. As a common ground for likeminded – and opposing – opinions to meet, however, there's seldom a better place for the beginning of free and positive dialogue.

Imagine.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

'Biker Boyz' soundtrack contains gold beneath trash

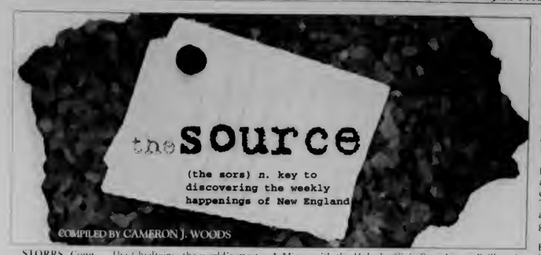
By Nathan Rothsein
Collegian Correspondent

"Biker Boyz" may not fail at the box office, but it surely will not contend for any film accolades. The one thing it will do is make people yearn for Laurence Fishburne to trade in his motorcycle helmet for the cape he wears in the upcoming "Matrix" sequel. Critics may not like the movie but it may make up for its debits by its original soundtrack.

Various Artists
'Biker Boyz'
Breakwork

Even though some songs can be mistaken for the trash that is piling up in your dorm room, there are a couple hidden gems. Redman begins the show doing his grunting and formal introduction as "docta" letting us know that "kids love me / like Old Navy dungarees."

After a minute of rhyming party one-liners that do not take any intellectual capabilities to decipher, newcomer E3 begins to sing elegantly, "I'm going to ride, ride, ride, until I can't go no more." Once E3's and Redman's "Ride" is over, the second track features rockers P.O.D. Their song "Boom" (the Crystal Method remix) is not very good at all, but I was not on crystal meth, which I've heard adds to the song.



If you are in your car, or listening to the CD on your stereo, this is when you press the skip track button. Metallica, Ja Rule and Swizz Beatz on one song is a recipe for atrocity. They managed to ruin two genres of music, but luckily the songs' attempt to cross cultures is redeemed by N.E.R.D. and Papa Roach. In this song they do everything that Metallica, Beatz, and Ja Rule were nowhere close to accomplishing. The song contains a dominating drumbeat, grand electrical guitar riffs, and a unique balance of Pharell and Jacobey singing.

All the songs leading up to the seventh track have been very loud, and obnoxious; some effective, some awful. The song "Kalifornia" is beautifully hummed and sung by Mos Def. He leaves a lasting impression on any of those who choose to listen. It softly emulates lyrics from Dr. Dre and 2pac's hit "California Love," and ingeniously soothes the soul. Fresh off his verse supporting L. Lo's modesty, ladakiss collaborates with living legend Ron Isley to create the two genres. Rounding off the album are two songs that will give these artists some well-deserved recognition. The first is Non Phixon's "Say Goodbye to Yesterday," followed by David Ryan Harris' melodic "Don't Look Down."

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

Laurence Fishburne (right) stars in "Biker Boyz." The movie's soundtrack is hit or miss throughout, but the success of the film remains to be seen.

STORRS, Conn. – The Chieftains, the world's most famous exponents of traditional Irish music, will perform on Thursday at 8 p.m. at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Center for the Performing Arts. Guest artists, including Irish step dancers and country music singer Allison Mourer, will join The Chieftains for their Jorgensen performance.

With 40 albums and a career that spans four decades, the Chieftains are not only Ireland's official musical ambassadors, they have also become arguably the world's most enduring and influential force in establishing the international appeal of Celtic music.

Paddy Moloney, the Chieftains' founder and frontman, established the Chieftains' authentic Irish instrumental sound in 1962 when he first brought together a group of talented local Dublin musicians. The group's first four albums, recorded between 1963 and 1974, quickly established its worldwide reputation.

To learn more, visit the Chieftains' web site at www.irish.com. Tickets are $20 to $35, with discounts available for students and seniors. For tickets and information, call the Jorgensen Box Office at 860-486-4226.

EASTHAMPTON, Mass. – Local musicians Mya Elaine Becca Lucia & Andrea Coller will perform Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Pioneer Arts Center of Easthampton (PACE), 41 Union St., Easthampton.

Elaine just released her first album, "Getting Deep In Roots." With a variety of styles, her music keeps attention and earns respect. Her focus is on strong vibes backed by hard rhythms, guitar.

Weaned on classical opera and saved by the blues, singer-songwriter Lucia has been luring fans with her smoky voice and treating listeners to her whirlwind of storytelling and vocal improvisations for over two years. After being welcomed back from an extended stay in Italy, where much of her music has been inspired, this sultry female star has taken the Pioneer Valley performance scene by storm, dazzling music lovers of all tastes with what can be described as "acoustic blues-operatic-folk-rock." Andrea Coller's throw evokes a melancholy passion for life. Her lyrics sometimes speak to the lonely and longing to the full-blooded. – Josh Shear, The Journal Bravo.

Tickets are on sale at the PACE box office for $5, $3 for members.

HOLYOKE, Mass. – It could be said that Will Brillhart's organ concert is a concert of a lifetime. On Sunday, he will perform Grieg's Piano Concerto in A Minor with the Holyoke Civic Symphony. Brillhart is a psychologist who specializes in musicians' issues such as performance anxiety. Last year, he had a life-threatening medical condition, from which he has since recovered. When he was fighting for his life in the hospital, he lamented the fact that he had never performed a concerto with an orchestra. He resolved that if he got out of the hospital, he would do just that. His incentive during his recovery was preparing the Grieg concerto so he could perform it with HCS. In addition, he will also perform Robert Wendel's April Fool Concerto, a hilarious pastiche in the style of P.D.Q. Bach.

The program, which will include several People's Choice selections and an Irish sing-along, will be held at 3 p.m. at Holyoke High School. It is free and open to the public.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. – NYC-based performer Anne Heaton will be performing Friday, March 21 at the Pace Theater. She just released her first studio album in the fall "Black Notebook" came out on Spill Records on Sept. 17. It features catchy, soaring melodies with great emotional pull and smart lyrics. The album boasts backing band members such as Shawn Pelton (drummer, Saturday Night Live band) and Michael Visceglia (Suzanne Vega).

STORRS, Conn. – Piotr Anderszewski will perform Beethoven's Diabelli's Variations on March 25 at 7:30 p.m. at the University of Connecticut's von der Mehden Recital Hall, Coventry Road. This performance is part of the Jorgensen Center for the Performing Arts Chamber Series.

Anderszewski's program will include Beethoven's "33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli," Op. 120, Bach's Preludes and Fugues from "The Well-Tempered Clavier Book II" Nos. 13, 14, 15, & 16). Patrons may learn more about Anderszewski's program during a 6:45 p.m. pre-concert talk with the University's Bruce Bellingham.

Regular tickets are $21 and $25, with discounts available for students and seniors. Special $5 tickets are available for youth, ages 5 to 18. For tickets and information, contact the Jorgensen Box Office Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., at 860-486-4226.

STORRS, Conn. – Flutist Sir James Galway will perform on March 27, at 8 p.m. at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Center for the Performing Arts. Pianist Phillip Moll will accompany Galway during his recital, which will include works by Schubert, Doppler, Morlachi, Briccialdi, Taffanel, and Borne.

Tickets are $22 to $37 with discounts available for students and seniors. Special $5 tickets for youth up to age 18 are available. For tickets and information, call the Jorgensen Box Office Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at 860-486-4226.

Minutewomen cruise past Harvard

By Ari Jankelowitz
Collegian Staff

Looking to finally score some goals after tallying only seven goals on 27 shots against Connecticut, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team accomplished that feat in beating Harvard on Saturday, 12-7.

Midfielder Jada Emery, who last year led the team in points with 35 and managed to contribute a point in every game except for one, had a memorable day. The senior paced the Minutewomen attack by netting a career high five goals.

Earlier last week, UMass coach Carrie Bolduc, visibly upset about the loss to UConn, vowed to be more aggressive in the game against Harvard.

"Weak goalies," Bolduc said of the Crimson. "But I won't tell the team that. I want them to play as if the goalies were excellent."

Her strategy worked, as the Minutewomen unloaded on Harvard with a total of 30 shots.

Emery wasn't the only player having fun in Cambridge. The 236 spectators on hand saw Hope Zellinger and Lydia Robinson tally two-goal and one-assist days, while Tracy Drown helped herself to two goals as well.

Zellinger has now scored two goals in each of her last three games.

The Minutewomen were up by two at halftime after Emery had scored twice in the first half, but what seemed to be a close game turned into Emery's personal showcase as she scored three unanswered goals in the second half.

Laura Mancini, junior goaltender for Harvard, got the start but was pulled during the game after giving up five goals and making only three saves. Her freshman replacement, Kristin Desmorest, managed to make five saves while giving up seven goals.

Standing at 5-foot-2, the freshman goalie could not weather the UMass storm, as the Minutewomen never looked back after Emery helped them to the lead in the first half.

Cyndi Doyle had another superb day in goal, as she made 12 saves as the defensive stopgap for the Minutewomen.

"She really deserves to be credited," Bolduc said about Doyle.

Doyle stifled the Harvard attack as she allowed only three goals in the first half and four in the second. On the other side her counterparts struggled, combining for just eight saves against a grand total of 30 shots.

UMass is on pace to equal its offensive output from last season, but it remains to be seen whether it can sustain that rate.

The Minutewomen play two games this week – at New Hampshire on Friday and Dartmouth on Sunday.

JAMES SMITH/COLLEGIAN

Kevin Glenz and No.7 UMass avoided overtime as Navy's last second scoring chance hit the crossbar, preserving a one-goal win.

Minutemen pull out last-second triumph

Continued from page 8

Zywicki scrapped for a rebound and deposited his second of the game for a 10-9 lead that held.

"Those count as good as the ones that you stick in the corner," Cannella said.

Sophomore goalie Bill Schell was the story on the defensive end. He made 10 saves on the day, but what was most impressive was his comeback from a near fatal gaffe.

After making a remarkable save on an Ian Dingman quick stick, Schell cleared the ball off of Greg Conklin's stick and into the net to bring Navy within one. The Mids scored again to tie the game but Schell made two crucial saves in the last two minutes to preserve the victory.

"I thought Billy played great in the second half," Cannella said. "We expected that from him."

UMass Boston

Looking for Summer Learning? We've Got It Right Here.

There's more to summer at UMass Boston than you might realize. You can study anything from James Joyce to Java, go abroad for programs in political science or archaeology, or take one of more than 40 online courses. The instruction is outstanding, the fees are affordable, and the campus is a great place to be in the summertime. Why go anywhere else?

Quality
• A distinguished faculty
• Up-to-date facilities

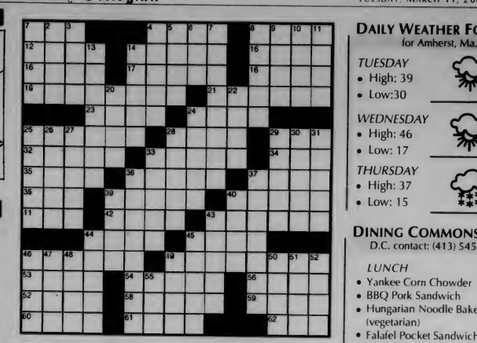
Variety
• 500+ courses
• International programs
• Field study on Nantucket

Convenience
• Morning, afternoon, evening, and online courses
• Easily accessible campus
• Off-campus courses in Plymouth

Value
• Fee for a 3-credit course is just $495 (undergraduate) or $540 (graduate), plus service fees

UMASS BOSTON
Registration Opens April 7
Classes Start May 27, June 30, July 14
To learn more, visit www.umb.edu or call 617.287.6000

STUDENT TRAVEL
start packing!
LONDON For $258
EURAIL PASSES From $249
HIP HOTELS From $18
(domestic and international)
explore north america
USA ■ CANADA ■ HAWAII
backpacking, cruises, tours and more
Fares round trip from Boston. Subject to change and availability. Tax not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply.
don't miss your big BREAK
44 Main St. (413) 256.1261
pick up your complimentary, premiere issue of BREAK magazine at your local sta travel branch.
www.statravel.com STA TRAVEL
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET



CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/7/03 - Thursday 3/13/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
TEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:20*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:05 7:30 10:00*
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:15 4:20 7:15 9:35*
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:25
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 3:10 5:00 7:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 9:45
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 9:40
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:15
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 9:30
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:05
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 7:45
Senior Show 3/13/03 - BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE 10:00AM DOORS OPEN AT 9:15
* no passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 ► Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 ► A great place to get contact lenses
3 ► FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 ► Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 ► Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 ► FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Jack Daniels presents...
Blackjack Night
at McMurphy's
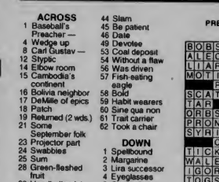
Uptown Tavern
Tuesday, March 11th
"Beat the Dealer"
37 North Pleasant St.

WHEN SOMEONE ASKS YOU WHAT YOU DID IN COLLEGE, WHAT WILL YOU TELL THEM?
THE AMHERST FIRE STUDENT FORCE WILL BE RECRUITING NEW MEMBERS MARCH 7,10,11 AT THE CAMPUS CENTER.
CALL AT 549-5419



ACROSS
1 Baseball's Preacher —
4 Wedge up
8 Carl Gustav —
12 Slypic
14 EBow room
15 Cambodia's continent
16 Bolivia neighbor
17 DeMille of epics
18 Patch
19 Returned (2 wds.)
21 Some September folk
23 Projector part
24 Swabbies
25 Sum
28 Green-fleshed fruit
29 Handball point
32 Doesn't have
33 Judge's duds
34 Cut off, as branches
35 Diner sandwiches
36 More certain
37 Baylor University site
38 Salt Lake City player
39 Messy places
40 Ricoh rival
41 Picture border
42 Ocean fish
43 Intimidate
44 Slam
45 Be patient
46 Date
48 Devotee
53 Coal deposit
54 Without a flaw
56 Was driven
57 Fish-eating alligator
58 Bold
59 Habit wearers
60 Sine qua non
61 Trait carrier
62 Took a chair

DOWN
1 Spellbound
2 Margarine
3 Lira successor
4 Eyeglasses
5 Cope with
6 Here, in Paris
7 More laid-back
8 Door posts
9 Exploiter
10 Columbus' ship
11 Flits about
12 Eskimo boots
14 Meager
20 Uncle — (rice brand)
22 Heron kin
24 Taunts
25 Scrapbook
26 Mediterranean island
27 Eight voices
28 Divided country
29 Type of clock
30 Hot drink
31 Glue ingredient
33 Wishing undone
36 Dwarfing
37 Zane Grey novel
39 Marshal's badge
40 Baker's dozen, in Rome
43 Flirt
44 Filleted
45 Work with a loom
46 Roulette bet
47 Bone-dry
48 Movie
49 Swiss capital
50 Part of RSVP
51 — St. Vincent Millay
52 Sit down
55 "Gidget" actress

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

2-19-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
• High: 39
• Low:30

WEDNESDAY
• High: 46
• Low: 17

THURSDAY
• High: 37
• Low: 15

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Yankee Corn Chowder
• BBQ Pork Sandwich
• Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)
• Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
• Yankee Corn Chowder
• Chicken Pot Pie
• Boston Scrod
• Native American Stew (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamalynas
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Jennifer DiMeglio
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd / Gerry Auger

QUOTE OF THE DAY
"And you don't want to be here in the future, so you say the present's just a pleasant interruption to the past."
- Something Corporate

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB.19-MAR. 20
There's nothing like being sober two days before your 21st birthday. Hang in there, kiddo.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You will be disgruntled early today, but that feeling will be replaced by a vague sense of grumpiness.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You may be standing on the brink of an unbelievable discovery today.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your roommate will begin to wonder why all the milk is disappearing so quickly.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your calm, positive approach will be well received and appreciated by those around you today.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You may not be the one with all the ideas today, let others help you out.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Seek out an old friend and tell them why you stopped talking to him or her.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You will be accosted by a talking moose. Keep an eye on the squirrels, they are after you too.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
This is a good day to be thinking of love and romance. That special someone will appreciate it.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You know that voice you are hearing, it's coming from the sink. Better watch out.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
What happens today is likely to have a resounding impact on the future.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
What begins with excitement is likely to develop quickly today into something that you're likely to remember.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879 Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota Camry wagon automatic 175k regularly maintained $2,250. 549-5448

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

Camp Caniadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours from New York and Philadelphia), A Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, motor bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20- 8/16. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Acts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-399-CAMP or check out our website at www.independentlake.com and apply online.

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + work-study available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

Cruise line entry level on board positions or year round. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

ENTERTAINMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

INSTRUCTIONS

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

Boxing Lessons for self-development in Amherst Area with retired pro Djata Bumpus 413-584-1966

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Mexico/Caribbean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

TRAVEL

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

End of the road

GW ends UMass' season with 85-74 playoff victory

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

And so it ended, at high speed.

The second year of the Steve Lappas era is over, with last night's 85-74 loss to George Washington (12-16, 6-11 Atlantic 10) in the first round of the A-10 Tournament.

GW senior Chris Monroe led all scorers with 23 points, exactly the number he needed to set a new school record for points in a career, with 2,227.

Monroe, who missed Sunday's film session and Monday's early shoot-around due to sickness, shot 10-for-14 from the free throw line while adding nine rebounds and four assists to his record-setting evening.

"Monroe is not allowed to shoot around ever again," said George Washington coach Karl Hobbs, whose team now heads to Dayton, Ohio for the rest of the tournament. GW will take on No. 11 Xavier on Thursday at noon.

The Colonials wore the Minutemen out with a break-neck tempo, as the undermanned UMass squad couldn't keep up with GW down the stretch.

"For the first time this season, I thought we were really worn out," UMass coach Steve Lappas said.

GW jumped out to a quick lead after halftime and never trailed again. Sophomore guard T.J. Thompson hit the clincher, a 3-pointer from the top of the key with 3:28 remaining, to give his team an insurmountable 10-point advantage.

Thompson finished the game with 16 points and five assists in 40 minutes of play.

The Minutemen kept up with the Colonials through the first half, as a buzzer-beating 3-pointer from freshman Mike Lasme evened the score at 45-45 at the break.

But despite the tied game, Lappas wasn't pleased with the way things were going.

"The pace in the first half wasn't good for us," said the former Villanova coach, whose team came into the game averaging 61 points. "The game continued to get played at that pace."

And the Minutemen ran out of gas in the second half, as the Colonials were able to increase their lead little by little while UMass players were short-arming jumphooks on offense and forced to foul when they were beat on defense.

GW freshman Mike Hall set a career-high with 19 points in the contest, while Jamal Forchion chipped in with 14.

Maroon and White senior Jackie Rogers scored 11 points in the first 3:58 as UMass jumped out to an early 14-7 lead. Rogers finished his UMass career with 19 points and seven rebounds. Classmate Micah Brand scored eight points and grabbed six rebounds in his final game in the maroon and white. Both received standing ovations from the crowd upon leaving the court.

Second-year point guard Anthony Anderson led all Minutemen with 20 points.

George Washington's new all-time leading scorer Chris Monroe led the way with 23 points for the Colonials in their 85-74 playoff win over the Minutemen.

Underclassmen steal the show in win for GW

By MATTHEW F. SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was supposed to be Chris Monroe night at the Mullins Center. The senior guard from George Washington began the game just 23 points away from the school's all time record.

But in between the layup that got him on the board and the two second half free throws that broke Joe Hodap's scoring mark, Monroe was almost dead silent.

He was overshadowed by the performance of three underclassmen that led the Colonials to a rapid victory in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Monroe should be recognized as the hero. Because he didn't just score 23 points; he did it less than 24 hours after offering his lunch to a hotel toilet.

He did it after skipping the morning film session and the afternoon shoot around. But once game time rolled around, Monroe found himself out of the spotlight.

Instead it was sophomore T.J. Thompson's NBA range threes that garnered some of the attention, along with Jamal Forchion's explosive ramrods to the basket.

The fans in the Mullins Center's student section took special interest in the exploits of freshman Mike Hall. He was booed every time he stepped to the free throw line and heckled when he scored each one of his 19 points.

Hall did little to quell the jeering with 40 minutes of trash talk and a two-handed salute after his game clinching free throws in the second half. But his arrogance seemed to fit the game plan.

"They just pushed it down our throat," UMass guard Anthony Anderson said. "They beat us down the court every time."

With 20 points, Anderson had another solid game, but it might have been even better if Thompson hadn't run him all over the court on the offensive end.

The shifty diminutive sophomore used a mix of jumpers, drives and deep threes to keep Anderson busy and drop 16 points.

"I thought T.J. played a major role," GW coach Karl Hobbs said. "But Mike Hall really did a great job. We wanted to put a tall defender on [Anderson]."

The 6-foot-8 Hall had no business guarding Anderson and his formidable first step. But Hall was arrogant enough to show no fear and he, along with Thompson and 6-foot-9 Omar Williams, rotated to keep Anderson off-balance.

This was while Forchion was doing the dirty work inside. The 240-pound sophomore finished with 14 points, three boards, a block, three steals and two offensive fouls that will leave a mark.

Together, the young trio combined for 49 of the Colonials 85 points on the evening. And Hall was the only one of the three that didn't have more points in the second half.

"Our young guys are really starting to come around," Hobbs said. "At the end we really showed some maturity."

Meanwhile, Monroe went about his business with 10 points in the first and 13 in the second. He was heckled a bit during the pre game introductions, but once tip-off came around he was almost forgotten.

Then he broke a 50-year old record, with a pill in his stomach. After the game he said he just needed to get some sleep. He'll leave the spotlight for the young guys.

Minutewomen find the road bumpier at Speedline

By TODD FOSTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a dominating performance in last weekend's Leadoff Classic, the No. 16 Massachusetts softball team entered the Speedline Invitational in an unfamiliar position – favored. The pressure was there, but UMass coach Elaine Sortino felt they handled it well.

"I thought the [players] did a really good job handling the pressure, especially at a nationally recognized tournament such as Speedline," Sortino said. "We've been there before, but we've never been the hunted. No UMass teams under me have ever been in that position."

Unfortunately, the Minutewomen had a disappointing performance in Plant City, Fla., finishing with a 2-4 record on the weekend including a heartbreaking loss to No. 4 Washington. The victories included two shutout performances – an 8-0 win over North Carolina and a 2-0 win over Ball State.

Day one featured impressive pitching from UMass aces Kaala Holtz and Kelli Arnold. Arnold shut out North Carolina while giving up one hit in the first game. Against the Huskies, Holtz battled with UW's Tia Bollinger through seven scoreless frames in a classic duel between two great hurlers.

The Maroon and White had an opportunity to take the lead in the top of the seventh. Brandi Cross singled to break up Bollinger's no-no, before being replaced by pinch runner Kristi Stefanoni.

After freshman K.L. Kelley advanced Stefanoni to second on a sacrifice bunt, Arnold singled up the middle, sending Stefanoni home. But Washington centerfielder Rita Roach threw a strike to the plate, nabbing Stefanoni and preserving the 0-0 tie.

Washington went on to win the game in the bottom of the eighth inning, sending home the runner it received by way of the international tiebreaker. Holtz finished the game with a career-high seven Ks, while Bollinger finished with an impressive 12 strikeouts.

"It's a nice feeling to put two quality pitchers on the mound," Sortino said. "I think [Arnold] learns a lot from [Holtz], in terms of bringing her along and mentoring her. It's great pitching staff that works together. There is no substitute in our game for quality pitching."

The Minutewomen were caught off-guard and unprepared in a 5-1 loss to Hofstra, but Holtz dominated in the second game for another stellar performance over Ball State. In their final two games at Speedline, Northwestern and Illinois defeated the Maroon and White, 9-6 and 6-4, respectively.

Aside from the two aces, two more players shined on the national stage. Hilary Puglia (four hits, four runs, eight RBIs) and Emily Rubinetti (.333 BA, three runs, three RBIs, two leadoff homers) have been solid throughout the young season. With some stellar individual performances, Sortino remains positive about where the season is headed for her team and individually.

"The team was very disappointed, frustrated, and knew they were much better team than what they had shown," Sortino said.

"Our heads are high and we're moving forward. We cant let this hold us back in terms of what we need to keep doing to get better.

"We got a big game on Friday against Texas A&M. We just have to keep going and take the lessons that you learned."

Minutemen win thriller over Navy

By MATTHEW F. SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Man, Sean Morris has got some gall. He's standing in a shadowy hallway in Boyden Gymnasium, hair soaked with sweat, talking to a small group of reporters about being patient.

"I just tried to be patient with the ball," Morris says with a grin.

Seriously?

The kid hasn't played in a competitive lacrosse game for almost two years, then he goes out and drops a hat trick in a 10-9 win over No. 9 Navy in his first collegiate match.

But wait, he's patient.

Not anxious, not antsy, not restless, uneasy or edgy.

Nope, Sean Morris was patient. He didn't force anything. He waited for his hopeless defender to relax for the time it takes to blink, then he blew by him like the Roadrunner.

If he didn't have an opening, he'd just patiently work the ball around to his teammates. But on three occasions he spied a gap, and all three times the ball crossed the goal line. And by the way, he did it with a sore hamstring.

That's why his coach smiles when he talks about him and fans wonder where this kid came from and writers wonder how such a talent could come from Marshfield, Mass. Because in just one game, Morris made an impression that screamed "special."

But like his teammates, Morris is just one part of the puzzle. And coach Greg Cannella needed every piece functioning well to take the conference opener from the Midshipmen.

"It's always a war when we play these guys," Morris said.

It's especially tough when the nation's leading scorer, Kevin Leveille, is held to zero points for only the third time in the last three years. But like Morris, Leveille didn't force anything.

"That's Kevin Leveille," Cannella said. "He just knows what it means to play offense."

Apparently it means only taking five shots because you're being double teamed by two long poles almost every time you touch the ball. Instead of pressing, Leveille moved the ball around and helped his teammates get chances.

He didn't have any assists, but his speed and decision-making in transition helped six different players score goals.

After Morris, midfielders Jeff Zywicki and Chris Fiore led the Minutemen with two goals apiece.

Fiore's right wing laser off the post gave UMass an all-important 6-5 lead at the break. It served as the cap on a 4-0 run.

"It was huge," Cannella said of the goal.

Zywicki was Johnny-on-the-spot for the game winner. With under three minutes to go and the score tied at nine,

Continued on page 6

Kevin Leveille and the Minutemen edged Navy 10-9 at Garber Field on Saturday.

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2003 • NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 • VOLUME CIX ISSUE 99

Air Force tests non-nuclear bomb in Florida

By ROBERT BURNS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) – In a flashy debut for its biggest non-nuclear bomb, the Air Force on Tuesday dropped a 21,000-pound behemoth onto a test range in Florida, hoping the test would rattle nerves in Iraq as well.

The bomb test was declared a success, but movement on other fronts in the U.S.-led push toward war was murkier.

At the United Nations, the United States and Britain faced the prospect of defeat for their resolution giving Iraq until Monday to disarm or be invaded, and it appeared they might agree to a short extension of the deadline.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld suggested that even the participation of America's closest ally, Britain, in the combat phase of disarming Iraq was in doubt.

"Until we know what the resolution is (going to say), we won't know the answer as to what their role will be," Rumsfeld said of the British military, which is deploying 45,000 troops to the Gulf.

"And to the extent they are able to participate – in the event that the president decides to use force – that would obviously be welcomed," he added. "To the extent they're not, there are work-arounds and they would not be involved, at least in that phase of it."

Asked whether that meant the United States was considering going to war without Britain, he said, "That is an issue that the president will be addressing in the days ahead, one would assume."

British Prime Minister Tony Blair faces enormous public opposition to his stance in support of Bush.

In London, government officials were reportedly surprised at Rumsfeld's comments. Blair's office told The Associated Press: "This does not change anything. We are still working for a second resolution. We are not at a state of military combat but there has been complete cooperation between the United Kingdom and the United States throughout on the military planning side."

Over Iraq, two American U-2 surveillance planes flying on behalf of U.N. weapons inspectors aborted their missions after Iraq raised objections. There were conflicting reports on the circumstances. An Iraqi official described the incident as a "technical mistake" by the U.N inspectors; Pentagon officials said it was too early to know who was to blame.

At a joint news conference with Rumsfeld, Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the number of American forces now arrayed against Iraq exceeded 225,000 and more were en route.

Neither Myers nor Rumsfeld would say whether the 21,000-pound Air Force bomb that was tested for the first time Tuesday would be used in a war against Iraq. It is officially designated the Massive Ordnance Air Blast, or MOAB, although it has come to be called unofficially the Mother of All Bombs, a rough allusion to Saddam Hussein's claim before the 1991 Gulf War that that conflict would be the "mother of all battles."

"Anything we have in the arsenal, anything that's in almost any stage of development, could be used," Myers said.

Cheryl Irwin, a Pentagon spokeswoman, said the test was considered a success.

"It did what they expected it to do. Nothing malfunctioned," she said.

Rumsfeld indicated that the big bomb, which was dropped out the back of a C-130 transport plane over a test range at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., was as much a psychological tool as any weapon.

"The goal is to not have a war," he said. "The goal is to have the pressure be so great that Saddam Hussein cooperates. Short of that ... the goal is to have the capabilities of the coalition so clear and so obvious that there is an enormous disincentive for the Iraqi military to fight against the coalition and there's an enormous incentive for Saddam Hussein to leave and spare the world a conflict."

A Pentagon official who reviewed a videotape of the test said the bomb created a tall cloud of debris that billowed into the sky but did not resemble the mushroom-shaped cloud of a nuclear blast. The Air Force videotape was to be released later.

Some area residents felt the bomb's detonation but said the explosion was not as big as they had expected.

"It was kind of weak," said Patricia Sariego, a receptionist at the Best Western hotel in Navarre, on the southern edge of Eglin. She said the blast shook doors.

New police dog meets the students

Officer Mark Shlosser poses with Max, the new canine officer on the UMass campus. Max and Shlosser were invited to meet students at residence halls around campus.

By KELLY FARRELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Officer Mark Shlosser and his new canine partner, Max, met with University of Massachusetts students for the first time last night in Southwest's Washington Tower.

Shlosser and Max were invited by resident assistants to meet students at several residence halls around campus, beginning with Washington. Shlosser and Max have agreed to visit with other dorms that requested an opportunity to get acquainted with Max and ask questions about how the canine officer will affect students who live on campus.

Jessica Appold, an R.A. on the 22nd floor of Washington Tower said she begged for Officer Schlosser and Canine Officer Max to visit with residents of her dorm.

"Some people are mad at me because they don't want the dog in the building, but it's a chance for people who are worried about it [having a canine officer on campus] to ask questions and to learn more about Max," Appold said.

Students' curiosity and concerns began last December when the University announced a crack-down on crime that includes 10 new police cadets, a satellite police station, and Max – a drug-sniffing dog.

The decision to expand the police department was made by a committee on campus safety, which was appointed by UMass Chancellor John Lombardi last November. The total cost of the expansion is approximately $150,000, but Max is just a very small part of that cost, Police Chief O'Connor said.

Chair of Administrative Affairs Chris Eckel told The Collegian in December that the Student Government Association was concerned for students' civil rights.

"The police have never had the ability to just walk in the dorms and go by your rooms, and this gives them the option to do this," Eckel said.

In response to the addition of the dog, a member of the SGA said that regardless of how the dog is used, the SGA is confident that police have the students' best interest in mind.

O'Connor said that Max would not be used for random searches in residence halls. She said she would supply the SGA with a written document confirming that Max would not be used for this purpose.

"We can't do random searches at all," O'Connor said. "It's not even legal. I have that in writing for the SGA, and I better get that to them soon. Our job is to protect the students, and Max is a tool to aid in that mission."

On the job, Max will often be patrolling campus in a police car from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. with Shlosser. The two will not likely be on duty until the snow clears because dogs can't track scents well in the snow. The two will continue training at the New England Canine Academy in East Hartford, Conn., until spring, he said.

In response to a question regarding whether Max was a response to the large marijuana bust in Kennedy Hall last fall, O'Connor said that "Max is a direct response to the armed robberies and assault

Continued on page 3

Struttin' his stuff

Senior mathematics and philosophy major James Moore entices the audience at the Mr. UMass pageant. See story on page 3.

Science libraries may be integrated by Fall 2003

By NIKKI KEENAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Biological Sciences Library and the Physical Sciences and Engineering Library could be integrated into one library by Fall 2003 if the Faculty Senate approves the proposal.

On Feb. 21, the nine-member Research Library Council voted unanimously to accept the conditions of a report, created by the Science Libraries Work Group (SLWG), proposing a combining of the two libraries.

The group's report includes a summary, process, recommendations and comments for the future of the two libraries, along with statistics assembled by Larry Feldman of the group in January 2003. The report says that integration of the BSL and the PSEL would benefit students and faculty and provide a more efficient library that better meets the changing needs of the community.

These needs were discovered when the SLWG created the Science Libraries Survey, sent via email to all students and faculty members on Dec. 23.

The SLWG analyzed the 1,145 responses received and found "a strong preference for a single delivery site on campus for books and paper journal materials related to engineering and science." It found that access to electronic scientific information is important to faculty and students, though the science library users still value paper journals.

The surveys also concluded that "undergraduate students use and value library facilities more than graduate students and faculty" with the "majority of Science-related respondents viewing the availability of science materials in one location as important."

From these results five recommendations to the Faculty Senate for the future of BSL and PSEL were drafted. These recommendations included reorganization to serve the changing needs of users and rapidly changing technologies for information retrieval, which includes an improvement in electronic delivery of information."

The recommendations were sent to the RLC and will be debated this Thursday by the Faculty Senate.

The SLWG also recommended that one Integrated Sciences and Engineering Library "should be well staffed, provide pleasant, spacious, well-lighted work areas, and be open from at least 8 a.m. to 9 p.m."

Assuming the report will be met with no objections, the newly merged library that the SLWG has proposed would be located in the Lederle low-rise and available for students and faculty by Fall 2003.

If the Faculty Senate approves the merger, the chancellor and the vice chancellor have 20 days to defeat the integration before it becomes policy.

Ernest May, the secretary of the Faculty Senate, said there is a good chance the Faculty Senate will vote in favor of this proposal.

"This is our best approach," May said.

May said this type of integration would not have been possible decades ago but electronic resources available today make the integration of the libraries a possibility.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

A CLOSER LOOK
U.S. NEEDS TO REEXAMINE POLICIES
PAGE 4

WAR MOVIES
THE GOOD, THE BAD, AND THE LITELESS
PAGE 5

NATIONAL CHAMPS
WOMEN'S SKI TEAM PULLS OUT UNLIKELY VICTORY
PAGE 8

Election 2003 starts today: meet the candidates for SGA

Dave Carr and Hannah Fatemi

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Basing their platforms on executive cabinet experience, presidential candidate Dave Carr and Student Trustee candidate Hannah Fatemi are also addressing other issues such as Parking Services and privatization during their election run.

Both veterans to the Executive Cabinet, Carr will be concluding his first year as the current student body president and Fatemi has served under Jon Laubinger as assistant student trustee and is currently concluding her first term as the attorney general.

"Our campaign is based a lot on experience, especially now when we are facing the worst fiscal crisis in the history of student life here at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst," Carr said. "I think we benefit students especially today, having experience with issues we're facing such as privatization on campus through Follet and other areas."

Parking Services, a common issue for many of the candidates, continues to be a concern of

Continued on page 3

David Falvey and Brian Thompson

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As student elections draw near, presidential candidate David Falvey and trustee candidate Brian Thompson are representing themselves as candidates who will bring the SGA closer to the student body.

"I think the current executive cabinet is not getting out there," said Falvey, who is also the vice president of the University's Republican Club. "They are all from the same background, and represent the same people."

Falvey believes that he is able to reach out to diverse groups of people.

"I come from a different background than the rest of the candidates," he said.

The presidential candidate spoke about budget concerns, admitting that although it is early to be aware of all the details, Governor Mitt Romney's proposal does have both positive and negative aspects.

"UMass will be treated as a flagship university, which it needs to be treated as," Falvey said. "But with teachers being laid off, tuition going

Continued on page 3

Mark Morrison and Jay Bissonnette

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student Advocacy, an ATM in Southwest, and better executive cabinet management are the top priorities for presidential candidate Mark Morrison and Student Trustee candidate Jay Bissonnette.

Morrison, the governor of the Orchard Hill residential area, explained some of his top priorities if elected, many of which revolve around student life. Morrison expressed a need for change within Parking Services, and in multiple facets within the Southwest residential area.

"I'm going to look at each living area individually. Southwest has been asking for an ATM for years and they just need a push," Morrison said. "Parking in Southwest, especially in the yellow and purple lots are problem areas. Students pay for purple lot stickers and are forced to park in yellow spaces."

Morrison also talked of the lack of loading zones in Southwest. He explained how they only have one space for a tower that holds

Continued on page 3

Aiysha Cooper and Gladys Franco

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the date for student elections arrives, candidates have begun the race to be heard by the student body, expressing their opinions and plans concerning important issues.

Communication with the student body is one of the top issues for presidential candidate Aiysha Cooper.

"I plan on making sure students are heard," Cooper said. "We want to put students on the faculty advisor board, we really want to close the gap between the SGA and students."

Both Cooper and trustee candidate Gladys Franco expressed their desires to establish a stronger connection between the student government and the student body.

"We really want to get involved and represent student opinions," Franco said. "I want to open communication with graduate students and undergraduate students, really have an open door policy, so everyone can tell me their concerns. I'll get to know what people are thinking, and really be their voice."

Continued on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY MARCH 12

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – African Forms: Celebrates Cultural Masterworks. On display January 30 – March 14, 2003. African forms, the first American exhibition to examine handcrafted objects over a broad stylistic range throughout the continent, features more than 400 handcrafted utilitarian objects that help define different cultures and traditions. The exhibition is open from 1 to 5 p.m. on weekends and 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. – Tuesday through Friday in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. For more information visit the website at www.mtholyoke.edu/go/artmuseum or call 538-2245.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Garden in Winter: Gardening Books and Drawings from the Mortimer Rare Book Room. This event will be held through March 31 in Book Arts Gallery, Neilson Library.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – Photography exhibit, "Shop Windows of History: Digital Photomontages by Leslie Starobin," is on display in Hampshire College Photography Gallery, Film/Photo Building, Hampshire College. The gallery is open Monday through Thursday 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., Friday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday 1 to 5 p.m., Sunday 1 to 10 p.m. This event is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – The McCurdy Collection of Manuscripts by Robert Burns will be on display in the Mortimer Rare Book Room, Neilson Library.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Image of Language: Lexicographica from the Mortimer Rare Book Room, an exhibition curated by Laurel Damashek, class of 2004, is on display in Book Arts Gallery, Neilson Library.

AMHERST COLLEGE – An exhibition of books and objects relating to silk will be shown in conjunction with "Silk Unraveled," the Northampton Silk Project Symposium, March 28-30 in Mortimer Rare Book Room, Neilson Library.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The 31st Annual Spring Flower Show will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. until March 16. The popular flower show will feature hundreds of spring-blossoming bulbs and plants, all displayed in the main Show House. This event will be held in Talcott Greenhouse and is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – Annual Spring Bulb Show will be held in the newly renovated Lyman Conservatory from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – Contradictions of Economic Growth in Modern will be featured in an open class meeting of ECO 209, Comparative Economic Systems, with Professor Alexander Buzzalin from 2:40 p.m. to 4 p.m. Seelye 206.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – Disability Awareness Seminar Series: Traumatic Brain Injury will be held from 4 to 6 p.m. in the Design Lab at Lemelson Design Center. Idie Shapiro of the Carson Center for TBI Services will discuss living with Traumatic Brain Injury and prevention and safety. This event is free and open to the public.

UMASS – Poetry Reading with Emanuel Xavier, the author of the poetry collection, "Pier Queen" and the Lambda Literary Award-nominated debut novel, "Christ-Like." This event is cosponsored by The Stonewall Center and a grant from the UMass Arts Council. It will be held in the Campus Center and the room is to be announced. For more information call 545-4824.

UMASS – Purim party at the Monkey Bar at 10 p.m. sponsored by the Jewish Student Union.

THURSDAY MARCH 13

SMITH COLLEGE – Women and Financial Independence, a workshop to help understand investing basics, will be held at 12 p.m. in Neilson Library Browsing Room. This course provides an introduction to the theory of portfolio diversification and its relationship to risk and return. Topics include investing and the life cycle, stocks, bonds, and interpreting financial statements. Taught by professor Roger Kaufman. Lunch will be provided for the first 70 attendees.

SMITH COLLEGE – A lecture entitled "Woolf in the Valley," featuring Barbara Brannon, University of North Carolina-Wilmington. Brannon will speak of Northampton's Hampshire Bookshop. This is the second event in the series preceding the 15th Annual Conference on Virginia Woolf, Smith College, which will be held from June 5-8. This event will be held in Mortimer Rare Book Room, Neilson Library at 4 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – Sahaja Yoga will be held from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in Bodman Lounge, Helen Hills Hills Chapel. Practice meditation and learn techniques for accessing the divine feminine. This event is free and newcomers are welcome.

UMASS – World Premiere of the University Orchestra with University Chamber Choir, Chorale(Lanfranco Marcelletti, Jr. and F. Wayne Abercrombie directing. World Premiere of Charles Bestor's Kyrie eleison with Jon Humphrey, tenor; Beethoven: Mass in C; Mendelssohn: Hebrides Overture, conducted by Martin Kluch MM'03. For tickets call Fine Arts Center Box Office, 1-800-999-UMAS. This event will be held at 8 p.m. In the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

SMITH COLLEGE – Jittery's Live Presents slam poet Alix Olson. This event will be held at 9 p.m. on the first floor of the Davis Student Center and is free.

UMASS – The movie "The Chosen" will be shown at 7 p.m. in the Hillel House Rec. Room. Come see this film depicting the friendship of two American Jewish teenagers, one Hasidic, the other secular, both struggling with reality of WWII. For more information contact Mark at mgruman@student.umass.edu.

FRIDAY MARCH 14

UMASS – GAP Potluck Shabbat Dinner at Uri's in Amherst. All Jewish graduate students and young professionals working in the area are welcome. To RSVP and for directions, email: uri@linguist.umass.edu

SATURDAY MARCH 15

UMASS – STEM Education Institute Seminar: What's in Our Water will be held from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Professor Richard Yuretich, Geosciences will be speaking. Explore how the composition of water changes as it moves through the hydrologic cycle. Seminar designed for science teachers. Advanced registration required; capacity limited. $225 for three continuing Education credits plus a $30 registration fee. For more info visit the website at www.umassk12.net/stem. Any questions can be directed to Mort Sternheim, mort@umassk12net, 545-1908. To register, fill out form at www.umassk12.net/stem/register.html.

SUNDAY MARCH 16

UMASS – Boston Bruins Alumni Game at 1 p.m. in the Mullins Center. Tickets are $10 adults; $5 children 18 & under and students with an ID.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – 16th Annual South Hadley Chorale Concert with an 80-voice chorus and a 35 voice children's chorus. Tickets are $9 general; $7 for students and senior citizens; $5 for children. This event will be at 3 p.m. in the Abbey Memorial Chapel.

UMASS – GAP Cross Country Skiing at Northfield Recreation Center. For more info contact Rebecca at Mayim326@alumni.umass.edu.

MONDAY MARCH 17

UMASS – Kehilat Hillel Haazinu at 7:50 a.m. at the Hillel House.

SMITH COLLEGE – Book Reading "Queer Jews" with discussion at 7:30 a.m. in the Neilson Browsing Room. Join Caryn Aviv and other contributors for readings and discussion based on the new anthrology "Queer Jews."

TUESDAY MARCH 18

Senior's Trivia Team at 8:30 p.m. at The Harp in North Amherst. All are welcome (don't have to be 21). $5 to play and top three teams win cash.

UMASS – Jewish Student Union General Meeting for Officer Nominations at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. (Room to be announced.) For more info: contact Spencer at sstone@student.umass.edu.

– Compiled by Amy O'Neill

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues from its advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1900, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kutak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Lee Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaller Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Try Price Tanning Every Tuesday
OASIS
BODY WRAPS • TANNING • WEIGHT LOSS
•Open Monday - Friday until 10pm
•Check out our weekly specials
243 Russel St (Rt 9), Hadley
413-587-9742

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

www.dailycollegian.com

MAJOR JUNIOR WEAR LABEL
GOT CLOTHES?
Ladies and Men's 50-75% off
5 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
Monday 3/10
Tuesday 3/11
Wednesday 3/12
Thursday 3/13
Friday 3/14
UMass Student Union Ballroom
WAREHOUSE SALE

Burgers • Hot Dogs • Chicken
Seafood • Fries • Onion Rings
Shakes • Smoothies • Soft Serve
GREAT 8 ATE
Phantom Gourmet's 2003 Pick
Top 8 Burgers in New England
"Pete's Big Bopper Deluxe"
NOW SERVING BREAKFAST
287 RUSSELL ST
ROUTE 9 • HADLEY
585-0241
CREDIT CARDS OCMP

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June '20

WHEN SOMEONE ASKS YOU WHAT YOU DID IN COLLEGE, WHAT WILL YOU TELL THEM?
THE AMHERST FIRE STUDENT FORCE WILL BE RECRUTING NEW MEMBERS MARCH 7,10,11 AT THE CAMPUS CENTER.
CALL AT 549-5419

McMurphy's welcomes Live Music
THE GUITAR DUDES every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

'Mr. UMass' raises money for AIDS

By LIZZY NIELSEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The "Mr. UMass" pageant was held last night in the Campus Center auditorium in front of approximately 350 people.

Sponsored by UVC TV-19 and organized by University of Massachusetts senior Bill Boyce, the pageant was put on to raise money for the UMass Medical School Center for AIDS Research.

The winner of the pageant, Boyce, was also the principal organizer.

Several well-known UMass faculty served on the judges panel, including Steve Simurda and Ralph Whitehead from the Journalism Department, Kim Jones from the School of Management, and Richard Wikander, Dean of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

A member from the well-known band "Guitar Dudes" at McMurphy's opened the evening with rousing, but clean renditions of "Cecilia" and "Piano Man."

The contestants were then introduced by the host and hostess of the evening, Mario Pietromonaco and Missy Foster, and preceded to the stage for a brief introduction to the audience.

While contestants went backstage to change for the swimsuit portion of the competition, Foster and Pietromonaco invited five people to the stage to take part in a "TV song sing-along" where audience members sang along to the themes from "Scooby Doo," "Sesame Street," "Barney" and "Saved by the Bell." After the sing along, Pietromonaco announced that it was time for the swimsuits.

"And now the moment I've been dreading for weeks," Pietromonaco said.

Most contestants went with a normal bathing suit getup. However, a few went a little more non-traditional with floaties and flippers, and one contestant even emulated a wet T-shirt contest.

After the bathing suit competition came the talent portion of the night. There was quite a bit of karaoke, a contestant sporting a gorilla suit, a rousing rendition of Barry White's "Can't Get Enough of Your Love" as well as a contestant who did pushups with five people sitting on his back. No large scale UMass gathering would be complete without a "Yankees suck" chant, and one contestant included that in his talent. One contestant, Jay Fielding, came out and did a standup comedy routine, which included a proposal for UMass Chancellor John Lombardi.

"I always wondered if the chancellor would like to join me at my apartment. He can bring his favorite kind of beer, and we can watch the Red Sox on NESN," Fielding said.

Contestants then came out in their formal wear, most in shirts and ties (although a few lacked pants or walked barefoot), and the judges announced the final four contestants who would compete for the title.

Boyce, Shawn Pleickhardt, James Moore and Eric Poje were the final four chosen and then narrowed down to two by the audience. Based on audience applause, Moore and Boyce were selected to take part in the "question and answer" portion of the competition to ultimately decide who would become Mr. UMass.

Boyce's question involved his idea of a perfect date, while Moore was asked why he should become Mr. UMass.

"I just did pushups with five people on my back and I'm sexy," Moore responded.

Despite Moore's self-proclaimed sexiness, Boyce went home with the "Mr. UMass" crown.

Contestant Marc Pollone (left) gets some help from host Mario Petromonaco during the talent portion of the Mr. UMass pageant.

Student Government Association candidates talk of campus issues

Continued from page 1

Carr's. Carr explained that due to the SGA's involvement with PTAB (Parking Transit Advisory Board) very small increases in parking fees will occur, instead of monumental increases.

Carr further explained that advocating on the behalf of students has been his main priority and will continue to be his focus if reelected as President.

"A bar is going into the Blue Wall and all the finalizations are occurring right now, which is going to be huge for bringing back student life to this campus," Carr said. "I've also helped to instate meal deals this year so that student's get the most for their money on campus."

Fatemi, a strong advocate for Public Safety and student rights, explained that if elected she would be a strong voice for the student body. She further explained that in order for the SGA to be successful as a governing body the senators must work as a team.

"We need to be vocal and confident and in order to be effective we all need to be able to work as a team," Fatemi said. "Together Dave and I have two years experience within the SGA, and we've been friends for three years and together we can advocate and use the connections we've made to better student life."

Continued from page 1

up would be another discouraging thing."

Falvey is also a strong supporter of the Greek life at UMass, and plans to represent the Greek system with a stronger voice.

"We are the best candidates for the Greeks," Falvey said. "The Greek system does a lot for UMass, they do a lot of community service. We will definitely be fighting for them, making sure that freshmen get to move in."

Falvey also hopes to improve security on campus. "We want to explore the escort service again," Falvey said. "Considering the economic situation right now, that's hard but we don't want people walking home alone, it's too risky. We are certainly looking into our options."

In response to the idea of having a police dog on campus, Falvey is interested in finding more about its purpose.

"In some respects I see a need for it," he replied. "But it has to be clear what the dog is doing, and I don't think it has been made clear so I'd like to find out."

Continued from page 1

500 students and that is not accommodating to student's living conditions.

Morrison continued by explaining that, if elected, he would manage the executive cabinet more efficiently by making communication more effective in both the legislative and executive cabinets.

"Communication within the SGA is not working in my eyes," Morrison said. "The position of President is a two-pronged position; it's advocating and managing."

Bissonnette, a veteran of the SGA Executive Branch, is currently the secretary of administrative affairs and has continued to work closely with all the area governments and house councils. Like Morrison, he is looking to advocate on the behalf of student life as well as increase student advocacy on campus.

"Jay's been in the executive cabinet for so long that he is really looking to get more into advocacy," Morrison said. "Jay's done more change within the executive cabinet of the SGA as an individual than anyone. He's worked with all the area governments and removed much of the red-tape, and increased their overall participation. He has a really good sense of what is going on within student life."

Continued from page 1

Budget concerns and Governor Mitt Romney's higher education proposal are also important issues for Cooper and Franco.

"I feel that the proposal pushes out the working class and diversity," Cooper said. The team expressed concern, pointing out that the new proposal would raise tuition and strip many students of opportunities.

"The tuition has been continually raised for the past couple of years, but we haven't really seen a change in the quality of education," Franco said. "A lot of students have trouble paying for school, the proposal will take a lot of opportunities away from people. The mission of the University is so positive, I don't think we should do anything to go against that."

The two candidates also offered criticism of the idea of having a police dog on campus.

"We need to start thinking of ways to prevent crime, not dealing with it after," Cooper said. "Even if the dog is here, we should be thinking of new methods to prevent crime."

Both candidates argued that in such a difficult time for programs on campus, spending funds on a police dog is not necessary. "Not only does a police dog intrude on student's privacy, but it's ridiculous to pay that much money for it, when important programs are getting cut," Franco said.

Franco also spoke on goals to improve the admission process at UMass, advocating for the admissions office to target more low-income students, as well as all students from different social and cultural backgrounds.

Students meet Max, new campus canine

Continued from page 1

we had last September."

"I thought the dog was just for drugs, but he can help with crimes like people breaking into our room," said Courtney Cormier, a sophomore resident of Washington Tower.

"Max is here to help solve crimes as well as help in prevention," O'Connor said. "The appearance of a dog on campus has a tendency to lower crime rates."

Shlosser said that Max's main roles on campus would be to "protect him [Schlosser], track scents, and search areas and articles of suspects." Max will not search anyone or anywhere without probable cause and/or a search warrant, he said.

After Shlosser and O'Connor explained what Max's role would be on the job, several students began asking more light-hearted questions about Max, such as whether Shlosser would keep him as a pet when he was done working. Shlosser said without hesitation that he would definitely keep Max after he retired.

But Max, a Belgian malinois and Dutch shepherd mix, is far from retirement. He is 23 months old with another couple weeks of training left before he begins patrolling the campus.

"If I take out this tennis ball," Shlosser said as he grabbed the bright green ball from his pocket. "You'll see a lot of puppy in him."

One of approximately 35 of the students who were present asked if Max could do any tricks. Shlosser held out his hand for Max's paw and gave it a shake. "That's the extent of his parlor tricks," he said. "And I didn't even teach him that." Several students admitted Max was "cute," but had mixed feelings about his presence.

For anyone interested in meeting Max, he is also tentatively scheduled to be at a table in the Campus Center after Spring Break. The table will include information about Max as well as the other increased security and law enforcement measures that have been implemented this semester.

"Once people meet Max, they'll get to know him, and like him, and realize he's an asset more than a detriment," O'Connor said.

Editor's Note:

In a story that ran this past Friday – "Dissection Choice Bill discussed throughout Massachusetts" – miscommunication with the New England Anti-Vivisection Society resulted in factual errors in the story.

The bill, which would offer Massachusetts students alternatives to animal dissection in classrooms, was sponsored by state representative Louise Kafka with nearly 40 cosponsors and would support students who choose to object. The Ethical Science Education Coalition supports the bill, but is not considered a sponsor.

Endangered species are not used in student dissections, contrary to what was reported. The NEAVS argues that wild species caught for dissection have depleting populations, but this is not the sole cause of the shrinking numbers. The NEAVS is against the use of new disinfectants that contain formaldehyde and argue that these solutions may one day be deemed toxic.

News meeting today at 5 in the newsroom

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/7/03 - Thursday 3/13/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
TAXI (PG13) 1:20 4:20 7:15 9:35
1:35 4:45 7:35 10:20
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:05 7:30 10:00
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:15 4:20 7:15 9:35
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:25
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 3:10 5:00 7:00
COYOTE UGLY (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 9:45
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 7:05 9:40
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:00 7:05 10:15
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 9:30
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:05
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 7:45
Senior Show 3/13/03 - BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE 10:00AM DOORS OPEN AT 9:15
*-no passes/supersavers
• NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Styles by Deborah
Featuring Foil Highlights & Designer Haircuts for Students
Complementary consultation with every visit
$10 off Foils with a Style Haircut with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
$5 off Clipper Cuts with student ID EXPIRES 05/15/03
65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?
If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!
Applicants should have some layout experience
Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.
Hiring process begins April 14th!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cheney gone from spotlight: war with Iraq not

Dick Cheney, the vocal war hawk, has slipped into the shadows

Has one time secretary of defense has been the prodigy behind the U.S. military in the past but has taken a hushed stance on Iraq as of late.

As defense secretary under the first President Bush, Cheney led the Pentagon through Operation Just Cause in Panama. The eventual capture of Manuel Noriega, a former CIA operative and Panamanian dictator, marked a first major offensive for Cheney. Soon after Just Cause, he found himself leading the role as defense leader of an operation into Iraq: Operation Desert Storm.

Now, as one of the most experienced members of the administration, Cheney has disappeared from the same spotlight that has successfully nabbed president George W. Bush Secretaries of State and Defense Colin Powell and Donald Rumsfeld and National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice.

Cheney's most recent spotlight appearance came at a National Cathedral memorial service in Washington D.C. after the Columbia tragedy. Unlike the talk he conducted a meeting with Iraqi opposition and expatriates this past week at the White House. This meeting was reported by news industries, gay but few other news services made a big deal of it save a photo posted on Yahoo.

Why? Is it that Cheney is working either behind the scenes or not at all with the Iraq situation – a point of contention for the rest of the administration?

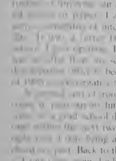
Coming into the vice presidency and following Sept. 11, 2001, Dick Cheney was labeled a warmonger. As the nation moves closer to another war in Iraq, Cheney has been this least of all. Besides mentioning that the second in command will be rallying for support among United Nations member countries, CNN has not found the vice-president in its Iraqi coverage. Similarly, Google News, a news website that searches internet news coffers using the popular Google engine, found Cheney only subtly mentioned in war stories.

Has the administration made a conscious effort to silence the former secretary of defense or have his interests changed?

Likely the latter.

According to Gallup polls, Bush's approval ratings have waxed and waned as military action gains public attention. Flaunting an acknowledged pro-war leader and former secretary of defense may hurt the administration as it looks to improve its numbers.

This may also indicate why it is that Bush has taken the more public position as of late, leaving the behind the scenes work to Cheney, Rumsfeld and Rice. Whether this aids the public opinion of the president is yet to be seen.



Still, it is Cheney who has disappeared recently, not the situation in Iraq and not the administration's push for action.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Being a good high school alumnus

Regan McKendry

If you tuned into WMUA 91.1 FM, Amherst's student-run radio station, at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, you probably heard me. I was the one who was supposed to be broadcasting live from the Amherst Regional High School radio station as part of my internship with WMUA. Instead, you heard dead air

Local band plays The Harp

By JOEL SILVERSTEIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It smelled right: Guinness, pool chalk, French fries, dry heat and a local band setting up. Doug Matson, guitarist of Amherst band 3rd Rail, uncovered his two-tone Stratocaster and began to tune.

As Matson and fellow guitarist Randy Palluta warmed up, Mike Jerdan, singer of Amherst band Hello Leonard (formerly Madcap, and Shortbus) carried an armful of hardware behind the two.

"It's a good thing," Hello Leonard guitarist Chris Pellegrino said of the relations between the two bands. "Our band has helped 3rd Rail a lot. I feel like their band is my sister. I even played in a band with Shaun Gilligan, singer, 3rd Rail's sophomore year."

On previous Thursdays, it was Jerdan and Pellegrino playing at The Harp. But Pellegrino, affectionately known as "Captain Trips," doesn't see that as competition.

"I think it's great that they're playing here," he said.

Thus is the nature of music at The Harp, a virtual West Virginia of bands, a place where friends can come to see friends, where students can see people they know from class become full-out rockers.

As a six-piece band, including a sax player, 3rd Rail played a diverse array of rock and blues covers, as well as five original tunes. After I finished talking to Trips, the band busted out with Pearl Jam's "State of Love and Trust." For kids our age, 20, 21, 22, Pearl Jam covers are like Mom's baked ziti; even in Tupperware, it tastes exactly how you remembered.

To end its first set, 3rd Rail brought us to the lounge, with an original jazz-driven song called "Jazz-e-act." It sounded like an old standard, with rock undertones, and Maceo-like sax solos.

About 140 people danced and imbibed both music and Michelob, underneath The Harp's soccer jersey ceiling trim. The pool table remained functional opposite the band for a game of eight ball.

Despite some equipment difficulty, including a busted guitar amp, the 3rd Rail retained voltage, and continued to play songs like "Don't Make It Bad," an original hardcore type riff with blues undertone, and the Allman Brothers' song "One Way Out." The band went out with a solid rendition of another Allmans classic, "Down By the Whipping Post," not perfect, but with plenty of energy. And not bad for a band that's existed for a little over a month.

I caught up with Gilligan after the show, as he carried one of the still functional amplifiers to his car. He wore a too-tight leather jacket.

"I had a blast," he said, and turned toward the road.

War epics storm box office

Courtesy of Focus Features

[illegible] war in Iraq. Curious to see a movie in which America is positioned as a possible bad guy shown in a time when the country is split into a frenzy between those for and against the President.

This adaptation of Graham Greene's novel sneaks in political commentary in the form of a love story, and the story of friendships and relationships betrayed. Michael Caine in a startling performance of sadness and wary vulnerability, stars as Thomas Fowler, a British ex-pat living in the luxurious splendor of Vietnam. He spends less time doing actual reporting than he does laying in his home, smoking opium and wallowing in the arms of his willowy young Vietnamese lover Phuong (Do Thi Hi Yen). He's content to spend his life in apathy and indifference, until the arrival of a young American man named Alden Pyle (Brendan Fraser, in a deft turn of callowness mixed with sleek intelligence) spurs him to reaction. Pyle's open-faced naivete and idealism at first irks the older man, and so does Pyle's growing attraction to Phuong. Fowler has realized he is in love with the young woman; if he gives her up, it's his last concession to the end of his life.

Pyle says he is an American medic working on a cure for a common Vietnamese disease, yet a massacre leads Fowler into an investigation involving American CIA involvement with an egotistical general looking to start a third party opposite the French and Communists.

The love story is a metaphor for the relationship between Vietnam, France and America. Pyle didn't necessarily have to make a speech explicitly bringing this theme to the surface – but the movie still has a gripping power. "The Quiet American's" texture – the way the dialogue seeps over you, the way the silky cinematography of Christopher Doyle highlights the Vietnamese scenery – wraps itself around you. "The Quiet American," in all aspects, pulls you into its seductive spell.

Bruce Willis, with his bulldog growl, is one of our more underrated actors around; no doubt because of the movies he stars in. Unlike his fellow aging action heroes – the Sylvester Stallones and Arnold Schwarzeneggers – Willis has a way of underplaying his glorified heroics on screen. In the Sassy SEAL adventure "Tears of the Sun" he puts on his best stolid face for the role of A.K. Waters, a lieutenant sent in the enveloping jungles of Nigeria to extract Lena Kendricks (Monica Bellucci, a stunning beauty, who only seems to be acting in two modes here), an American-by-marriage physician working as part of the Doctors Without Borders cause.

The country has been split apart by civil war, and Muslim rebels are sweeping through the country, assassinating anyone who isn't Muslim. Waters' orders are for his team to sank Kendricks out of the war torn land, yet she won't leave without her patients. Waters at first forces Kendricks into the arms chopper and then, in a moment of conscience, he orders the helicopters to turn around and land them. Disobeying orders, Waters strands his team in the dewy recesses of the African jungle, in order to lead a group of refugees to safety in Cameroon.

"Tears of the Sun" is from Antoine Fuqua, the director of the gritty and superb corrupt cop melodrama "Training Day." Fuqua, as a director, knows how to shoot the jungle for maximum ominous dread. Waters and his team slink through the emerald leaves and underbrush, and Fuqua makes good use of shadow and silence to craft an atmosphere of anticipatory dread. Willis' face is shot much like Marlon Brando's in "Apocalypse Now" and it has the eerie effect of making him look like a heroic demon.

However, no one is going to confuse "Tears of the Sun" with "Apocalypse Now." Fuqua copies the feel of classic war movies – their brutal fatalism – but not their depth. The filmmakers pay lip service to the country's history of genocide, and attempts to dissect America's role in global peacekeeping. But that's all it is, lip service. "Tears of the Sun" for all its political theorizing is still a popcorn metaphor; Willis is nothing less than a stand in for America, saving the grateful Africans from themselves.

"Tears of the Sun" is really just an evade-the-ethnic-cleanses thriller, a movie in which the bad guys come off like generic video games nemeses – pop-up villains to be shot down. They have no real identity and neither do most of the characters in the movie – especially the Africans – who are nothing more than symbols for the movie's no-swing propaganda. This is a safely apolitical war pic, a movie that celebrates the heroism of America in the form of a kick-butt hero blowing up the jungle. "Tears of the Sun" has a topicality it wouldn't have had two years ago, and it is a gripping and sometimes devastating drama. But by the time the movie is reduced to a firefight in the jungle, it turns into jingoistic rhetoric. Now may not exactly be the time to release a movie that reduces the ambiguous moral quagmire of war into pop-political righteousness.

Alabama sweeps UMass in trio of weekend games himself on third base, but a fielder's choice claimed freshman Frank Curreri and ended the inning for the Maroon and White.

Continued from page 8

Pitching for UMass was a communal affair, as six hurlers took the mound. Starter Keith Doherty was the only one to last more than an inning, going three-and-1/3. But eight hits and seven earned runs knocked the sophomore out, leading to the bullpen parade.

Saturday's game was kinder to the Minutemen, as they were able to send three runners home, but six runs by the Crimson Tide was too much to overcome, and a strong eight innings from Alabama starter Brent Carter (four hits, no earned runs, three strikeouts) was good for Bama's 11th victory of the season.

A first-inning double from Hearod started off the scoring for the Crimson Tide, as it sent shortstop Adam Pavkovich home. Hearod scored on the very next at bat, when designated hitter Zac Welch singled up the middle to plate the Tide's second run.

The Minutemen looked poised to rally in the ninth inning, but fell short. Senior Chris Morgan got things started with a leadoff home run, his 17th career round-tripper. Maunus later reached on a fielder's choice that also scored pinch runner Kristian Molloy. That was it for UMass though, as Maunus was nailed at second to end the rally, and the game.

UMass had one hit through the first three innings, a first-inning double from Morgan. Alabama scored all six of its runs before the Minutemen struck back in the seventh inning. After senior Jeff Altieri reached on an error, and was moved along with a base hit from sophomore Jason Twomley and a sacrifice bunt by Maumus, before sophomore Curt Szado grounded out to second, sending Altieri home.

Pavkovich led the Crimson Tide in the opening game of the weekend, hitting two home runs and bringing in five RBI on the way to a 16-2 drubbing. It was a happy birthday for Alabama starter Taylor Tankersley, as the sophomore southpaw went seven innings, scattering five hits and striking out 10. Tankersley did earn both of UMass' runs, but the Tide offense was more than enough to overcome them.

The Minutemen took an early lead, their only lead of the whole weekend, when senior Matt Boulanger scored Twomley on a single through the right side of the infield. The Maroon and White added another when junior Mike Athas hit a leadoff homer in the third.

Alabama struck back in a big way, though, when it scored nine runs in the sixth inning. Pavkovich started things off with a two-run shot, and before all was said and done the Tide had six hits, and more than enough runs to take the game. UMass starter Eric Chown was credited with eight of the runs, before another Maroon and White pitching committee stepped in.

The seventh was all Alabama as well, as it plated five more runs on four hits. Pavkovich added a two-RBI double down the left field line, and Charlie Lyons and Brad Van Winkle each had RBI base hits in the second Alabama explosion.

The Minutemen will travel to Sarasota, Fla. this week for a Saturday matchup with Northern Iowa, before going on to Bradenton to play Columbia and Indiana.

Villanova shocks UConn in Big East championship

Villanova stunned the women's college basketball universe yesterday, defeating Connecticut 52-48 to win the Big East Championship. The loss ended UConn's historic 70-game win streak, which spanned nearly two full seasons.

The Wildcats, led by Trish Juhline (18 points), led by three at halftime, and held on to win their first Big East Championship since 1987. The upset was one of the biggest surprises in recent memory, and put a chink in the previously untouched Husky armor.

Senators 4, Bruins 3, OT

OTTAWA (AP) – The Ottawa Senators reached down a little further to stay atop the NHL standings. Radek Bonk scored 28 seconds into overtime as Ottawa held onto first place in the league with a 4-3 victory over the Boston Bruins on Tuesday night.

Zdeno Chara scored with 7:47 left in the third period to tie it before Bonk scored on a backhander through goalie Jeff Hackett's legs as the Senators recovered from blowing a two-goal lead.

"Getting down 3-2 in the third, we tried to get the bench going and push ourselves a little bit more," Ottawa captain Daniel Alfredsson said. "We were able to get the tying goal and then in overtime you never know. They had a great chance early in overtime, they missed the net and we went down and scored. It was a great move by Bonky."

The Senators, who have 96 points, won their fourth straight to remain one point ahead of Dallas.

New England signs prize free agent LB Colvin

For once, the Washington Redskins didn't make the biggest news in free agency.

Of course, the Redskins did make a move Tuesday, acquiring safety Matt Bowen after Green Bay refused to match an offer sheet from Washington.

This time, it was New England that grabbed the spotlight – and perhaps the best player available in free agency – when outside linebacker Rosevelt Colvin left Chicago for the Patriots.

"This process has been very extensive and tiresome. My thoughts the last couple of days have circled so many different ways," Colvin said. "It just felt like a better situation here than in Chicago."

One of the NFL's best pass rushers at linebacker, Colvin had 10 1/2 sacks last season to lead the Bears. New England managed only 34 sacks last season; just 11 teams were worse.

Thomas hits two more homers

The Big Hurt is swinging a big bat again.

Frank Thomas homered twice and drove in four runs as the Chicago White Sox beat the Seattle Mariners 9-4 Tuesday. The two-time AL MVP went 3-for-3 and has three homers in two days since coming back from wisdom tooth surgery.

"I'm not real excited about (the home runs)," Thomas said. "It's still spring training. I was more impressed with the line drive base hit."

The 34-year-old Thomas is hoping to regain the swing that made him one of the most feared hitters in baseball throughout the 1990s. He won MVP awards in 1993 and '94.

-Compiled from AP and staff reports

Bluegrass ready to take area by storm

Courtesy of Tony Trischka Band

be making a stop Thursday night at Club Helsinki in Great Barrington, Mass. in celebration of its latest Rounder Records release "New Deal." Trischka is a banjo legend, who along with Bela Fleck has forged new territory into the realm of jazz bluegrass-fusion. With this new album, the Tony Trischka Band presents a stunning blend of traditional bluegrass, rugged "working man" blues and smooth funk-jazz stylings. Encapsulating what Trischka and his band is all about is "Northern Falling," with its hypnotic banjo lick soaring energetic bridge and beautiful vocals by Jennifer Kimball. If you need to get out of Amherst and are not heading to a warmer climate, head west to tranquil Great Barrington where Trischka and his band will be performing at Club Helsinki at 8 p.m., Thursday evening. Tickets are $15 at the door, $12 in advance.

Friday night brings two native bands to the Pioneer Valley. In Northampton, Northern Lights bring their classical style bluegrass to the Iron Horse Music Hall. Composed of four players with very diverse backgrounds, Northern Lights have an avid following of local fans. They have shared the stage with a proverbial who's who in the bluegrass world including Alison Krauss, Peter Rowan and Vassar Clements, who performs on Northern Lights' 2000 release "Three August Nights Live." Check them out at the Iron Horse March 14 at 7 p.m. Tickets are $15 at the door.

Also on March 14, the Perfect Strangers will be holding a release party for their new self titled album at a much more secular venue; the Unitarian Universalist Society of Amherst (that funky wood building downtown in front of Rao's). Led by Amherst native Chris Broshear on vocals and fiddle, the Perfect Strangers perform a very traditional, rather stereotypical form of "grass." Telling tales of life on the rails and in the backwoods country, this quintet plays with a style and grace that is not found in newer bluegrass bands like Yonder Mountain String Band and Railroad Earth. Perfect Strangers is comprised of two former members of Bill Monroe's Bluegrass Boys (Bob Black on banjo and Forrest Rose on bass), as well as mandolinist Jody Stecher and National Flatpicking Champion Peter McLaughlin on guitar. Their performance begins at 7 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door.

Simple Plan lacking in substance

COURTESY OF ATLANTIC RECORDS

Simple Plan are another poor band that beg the question: Why would anyone want to sign this lackluster group that has little to nothing to offer musically?

Continued from page 7

just have this simple plan to go on the road and meet people and make new friends and just see who likes our band."

The band's inexperience and ignorance is reflected in Comeau's quote. I'm sure that they want to play every day, but guess what guys? You do have a life outside your precious band, or at least I hope you do. You do need days off, sweethearts. Once you realize how long and tiring your schedule can be, you will realize that you are not superhuman just because you play really bad and annoying music. What about their "simple plan"? Guys, that's not a plan. That's what happens when you're a rock band on the road. It's like me getting up in the morning and saying, "My simple plan for the day is to eat and breathe." My point is that it's going to happen anyway. It's not a plan, it's what happens, you dumb boys.

So that's that. Simple Plan is the most annoying, clueless, immature, and ignorant band out there. Hey, I have a simple plan for them; just stop what you're doing and do something productive, like finishing high school.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian Columnist.

UMass tennis takes one of three matches

Continued from page 8

five, defeating freshman Camilla Knight fell 6-4, 6-2.

In the doubles, Price and Deponites won at the number one pairing, defeating Kokubo and Chui, 9-7. At No. 2, Iwanowicz and Edelstein defeated Cornell's pairing of Edinson and Wang. Cornell did take the third, however with its twosome of Takeuchi and Tu winning a close match 8-6 against UMass' Hyams and Knight.

Twenty-four hours earlier, the Maroon and White had suffered a similar fate against UMBC.

The six singles points were split evenly, and UMBC prevailed thanks to wins in two of the three doubles matchups.

Posting singles victories for the Minutewomen against UMBC were Price, Edelstein and Hyams. Hyams also partnered Knight to post the single doubles victory for the Maroon and White.

Price, again playing at No. 1, continued her good form of late by beating UMBC's Iana Karaskova 6- 3, 6-2. Edelstein defeated Anita Pushpanathan 7-5, 6-3 at number two singles.

Hyams, playing at the No. 5 position, defeated Lana Khvalina 6-4, 6-3. Singles wins for UMBC came at No. 3, where Iwanowicz lost to Tia Kaasalainen 6-1, 6-2. No. 4, where Knight was defeated in three sets 6-7, 6-3, 6-3 and No. 6, a 6-3, 6-2 victory by the Retrievers' Aimee Lim over Iana Bartolomi.

In the doubles, the Maroon and White's pairings of Price and Deponites at No. 1, and Edelstein and Iwanowicz at No. 2 fell by an 8-6 margin, defeated by Kaasalainen/Khvalina and Jana Karaskova/Ale Pedergnana respectively.

Earlier in the day the Minutewomen had posted a comfortable 6-1 victory over Binghamton.

The closest game was that of Knight against Amy Linda at No. 5 singles, Knight won two tiebreaks to take the match in straight sets 7-6, 7-6. Most impressive for the Maroon and White were Sasha Edelstein and Susan Hyams.

Hyams won 6-2, 6-2 at No. 6 singles over Jenilee Brohm and partnered Knight at number three doubles, where they won eight successive games against Linda and Brohm.

Edelstein, meanwhile, won 6-1, 6-2 at No. 2 singles over Janine Sadaka.

The Minutewomen are next in action on March 17 when they travel to Florida to play three games against Lynn, Barry and Florida Atlantic.

Trade deadline brings flurry of moves in NHL

By IRA PODELL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

In the final 24 hours before the NHL trade deadline, all 30 teams got into the act, making it one of the busiest dealing days in league history.

All but three clubs made deals Tuesday, when 46 players and at least 16 draft picks were swapped in a flurry of 24 trades before the 3 p.m. EST deadline.

The NHL said it was the most number of deals and players moved since at least 1980.

On Monday, eight trades were made, including deals involving New Jersey, Buffalo and Columbus – the only teams to keep their rosters intact Tuesday.

The Toronto Maple Leafs were very busy as they try to build a team capable of winning their first Stanley Cup since 1967. On the heels of deals that brought Owen Nolan and Glen Wesley to Toronto leading up to the deadline, the Maple Leafs added veterans Doug Gilmour and Phil Housley in the final hours trading was allowed.

Gilmour, a forward, was a popular captain of the Maple Leafs from 1992-97. He was reacquired from Montreal for future considerations. Housley was brought in from Chicago for Toronto's fourth- and ninth-round draft picks.

The veteran pair has combined for 2,967 games of NHL experience.

Detroit was also hard at work in an attempt to keep the Cup right where it is. The Red Wings shored up their defense by trading for Los Angeles' Mathieu Schneider, a former champion with Montreal in 1993 who is joining his sixth NHL team.

"I'm very excited to get the chance to win the Stanley Cup. And if there was one team I wanted to go to, it was the Detroit Red Wings," Schneider said.

The Red Wings sent forward Sean Avery, defenseman Maxim Kuznetsov, a first-round pick in this year's draft and a second-round pick in 2004 to the Kings to land Schneider, who will certainly help Detroit's power play.

Los Angeles also sent forward Bryan Smolinski to Ottawa for the rights to defenseman Tim Gleason.

The New York Rangers, still hoping they can make the playoffs for the first time since 1997, had general manager turned coach Glen Sather go back to his Edmonton roots and acquire Anson Carter, the Oilers' leading scorer.

New York's other team, the Islanders, made two trades in hopes of holding off the Rangers and solidifying their second straight playoff berth.

The Islanders acquired defenseman Janne Niinimaa and a second-round pick in this year's draft from Edmonton for forwards Brad Isbister and Raffi Torres.

St. Louis found an answer for its goaltending woes by prying Chris Osgood away from the Islanders. Osgood missed nearly seven weeks due to an ankle injury, but returned Saturday night before New York embarked on a key six-game road trip that started Tuesday in Vancouver.

The Blues sent prospect Justin Papineau and a second-round pick in this year's draft to the Islanders. St. Louis also received a third-round pick in this year's draft from New York in exchange for the 30-year-old Osgood, who is earning $4 million and can be a restricted free agent at season's end.

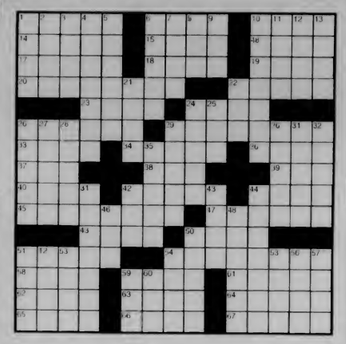
The Blues also acquired forward Valeri Bure from the Florida Panthers for defense prospect Mike Van Ryn.

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

ELSIE HOOPER • BY ROBERT D. KRYZKOWSKI

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • BY MARK VITARD

THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE



THE TORQUES • BY KEN FREDETTE

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRREES • BY COMRAD X

ACROSS
1 Heroes of Sigfried
6 Pinkspill
10 Invitation abbr.
14 Light-bulb filler
15 Hawkeroo
16 Peace Nobelist Wiesel
17 Very funny people
18 Malevolent
19 Festival
20 Some hens
22 Running up
23 Some mixmasters
24 Keen enjoyment
26 Hammers
29 Hot tresome (2 wds.)
33 Pull up curtains
34 Steakhouse order (hyph.)
36 Volkswagen fun
37 Wood residue
38 Use a charge card
39 Nth degree, slangily
40 Follow the recipe
42 Hr. words
43 London district
45 Promoted
47 Married lady
49 IRS employees
50 Greek "Z"
51 Ultra-liberal frame
54 Use
58 Whoa! Ali slang like (2 wds.)
59 Eurasian range
61 Excel
62 Narrow fissure
63 Meditation guide
64 Knight's horse
65 Fast jets
66 Garment edges
67 Pithy

DOWN
1 Maiden of films
2 Toledo's lake
3 Beside oneself
4 Zilch
5 In stock
6 Dismaneors
7 Wheels for the belds
8 Here, in Cannes
9 Edmonton Oilers org.
10 Yacht race
11 Modal drives
12 Nasty
13 Bartlett or Bosc
21 Stop working
22 Capt.'s heading
24 Regions
25 Before
26 Temporary state
27 Expels
28 Geisky
29 Impressed
30 Mood
31 Utah neighbor
32 Lord predecessor
35 Portends
41 Sci-fi crafts
42 "Has lead"
43 Nancy (Pryor)
44 Law
46 — crack
48 Wholesale (2 wds.)
50 Banku tribespeople
51 Duffers' goals
52 Kyoto sashes
53 Rugged out
54 Pastime locale
55 Via Appia
56 Works by Keats
57 Bump or knot
59 Short of diligent
60 Usher hero Lash La —

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

12-2302 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

You have the whitest white-part-of-the-eyes I've ever seen. Do you floss?

- Topper Harley (Charlie Sheen) in "Hot Shots"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Ask the next person you see if he/she would like to grab some coffee tonight. Try Cumberland Farms.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Make sure that your roommate gets out of bed to go to work today. You might end up paying his bills.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You will feel better today. It will be a great day, and you will not fall asleep at a bad time.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
If you are reading this in class, make sure your professor notices you. Because no one else will today. Sorry.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If you are saying curse-words around young children today, do not forget to say "earmuffs."

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Do not leave your home at any point today. Doing so will result in gross, itchy hives.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If you go to the Bluewall today, order chicken fingers, and buy some for the person next to you.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your sign used to rhyme with the Italian currency. We thought that was pretty cool. Stupid Euro.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
It is your fault that it won't stop snowing. Please have a talk with Mother Nature about this.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If you're heading to Orlando for spring break, find a Collegian employee and win a prize.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You are not crazy. There are in fact midgets living in the dumpster outside your place of residence.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Never ever follow your heart, you might find yourself running into a lot of walls.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

WEDNESDAY
• High: 44
• Low: 20

THURSDAY
• High: 35
• Low: 19

FRIDAY
• High: 42
• Low: 21

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Vegetable Tortellini Soup
• Meat Lasagna
• Chicken Nuggets
• Ginger Black Beans (vegan)
• Vegan Nuggets

DINNER
• Vegetable Tortellini Soup
• Roast Turkey
• Fried Scallops
Thai Seitan

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Hood
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Izzy Nesbeth
PRODUCTION STAFF
Scott Pihl, Mike Kalik
Matthew F. Sacco

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6901 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlinecolurality.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlinecolurality.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1991 Toyota Camry wagon automatic 175k regularly maintained $2,250. 549-5448

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $19.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS! Help new students get off to a good start. Peer Advisors needed for Summer Orientation. ~Competitive Salary ~20hrs/week~ Mid-May to Mid-July Applications 615 Goodell Deadline April 11

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car. Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

EMPLOYMENT

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Rolle

EMPLOYMENT

Skating Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rockerty, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-399-CAMP or check out our website at www.independentlake.com and apply online.

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + work study available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Exciting new e-book, download free sample "the game come" thrilling e-book breaks the mold of traditional fiction www.lawyer-books.com

ENTERTAINMENT

MOVIE EXTRAS/ MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150/450/ DAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now 1 888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

Huge 17" computer monitor $50 Screen is slightly dark. Call Jess 6-7387

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX50 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-540-0701

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1 800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

ROOM FOR RENT

Available ASAP On Bus Route 350/ month Call Joe 493-4579

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Need a ride to/from Bradley for Spring Break? Valley Transporter is "The Easy Way to the Airport." See www.valleytransporter.com for rates and info. Call 253-1350 for reservations.

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.ctilerssummertours.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers. Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass shines on slopes

Senior captain Molly Lyon led the UMass women's ski team to a USCSA national championship this weekend.

National championship for Maroon and White skiers

By Ari Jankelowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team has a hard act to follow. Winning the national championship was never expected, but the Massachusetts women's ski team now has a new title, National Champs.

Assistant coach Bill MacConnell called this group of skiers "the best team at UMass in 42 years."

Coached by Igor Vanovac, a man who is no stranger to winning (he won an individual national championship in Europe when he was 14), the Minutewomen had all the expertise needed to train for a national championship.

The national championship of the United States Collegiate Skiing Association was staged in Tahoe, Calif. and was slated for another Sierra Nevada College win. The women of UMass, led by Nikki Smith, had other plans. Smith, who finished third behind two Sierra Nevada imports, finished the nationals as the highest American female finisher.

What must be frightening for the rest of the nation is that she is only a sophomore.

Carolyn Lewenberg finished sixth overall, while senior captain Molly Lyon had a tremendous weekend, finishing seventh. Freshman Caitlin Doughty showed a lot of promise by finishing 12th. This national championship marks the first title for the Minutewomen.

"The women...they won because they showed such a team spirit with everything they did," Vanovac said. "They never complained during the strenuous training, they worked so hard toward this goal. They had the best team spirit of all other teams."

The upset that the Minutewomen pulled off this past weekend is truly amazing considering all the odds they faced.

First and foremost was simply that Sierra Nevada was in the race. In the collegiate racing world, Sierra Nevada is synonymous with victory. The race also took place on the Eagles' home mountain. The odds seemed insurmountable for the Minutewomen to win a race, let alone win the national championship.

No one could have predicted what happened last Thursday, as the Minutewomen elevated their skiing to the national level, and won the giant slalom race. This victory put them in place to win the first national championship in UMass skiing history. And with the Sierra Nevada Eagles coming in eighth, the UMass women were put in even better position for the victory.

The cards fell into place as Sierra Nevada finished first in the slalom but could not overcome its eighth place finish in the giant slalom as the UMass women skied strong, finishing third in the slalom. The third place finish secured the Minutewomen's national title.

MacConnell Conference rival Boston College fared well as it had two strong days, finishing second in both races, and second overall as well. All five of the participating women's teams from the MacConnell Conference finished in the top six in a field of 15.

Beau Gibson had his usual strong weekend, finishing fourth overall in the USCSA nationals and finishing as the fastest male American racer. The men finished fifth in a strong field of 15.

"Winning regionals was great," Vanovac said, "but winning the nationals is everything."

COURTESY OF MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Carolyn Lewenberg placed sixth overall at the championships this weekend.

Minutewomen come up empty at ECACs

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's track team went through a learning experience this season, attacking a trying schedule with an undermanned squad. The test came to a close with two of the Minutewomen's premier athletes, Brandy Green and Christina Hull, falling short of expectations in the Eastern College Athletic Conference championships in Boston.

Neither athlete was able to get past the preliminary rounds of their events, showing efforts that didn't impress UMass coach Julie LaFreniere.

"We can't just get excited about qualifying... we have to try and compete," she said.

Atlantic 10 pole vault champion Brandy Green was unable to clear the bar on any of her preliminary attempts. The ECAC sets the bar at 11-feet-6-inches for initial jumps to quickly weed out the competition.

"The ECAC looks to cut down the field, she didn't have enough burst," LaFreniere said.

Green's personal best jump stands as the UMass school record, a 12-foot leap earlier in the season at Dartmouth.

Christina Hull was also out of sync, running her slowest 60-meter dash of the season at 7.98 seconds. The time placed Hull at 19th in the preliminary round, ousting her from further competition and ending the Maroon and White's indoor season.

LaFreniere was unhappy with the season's end, but was pleased with the overall effort the Minutewomen showed, as they were burdened with an undermanned squad.

"We don't have enough people competing, we have to ask our athletes to participate in several events," LaFreniere said.

One such multi-event athlete was senior Katherine Blais, who participated in four different races in the New England Championships.

On the first day of competition Blais raced in the 1000-meter preliminary and the 1200-meter leg of the distance medal relay (DMR). The following day she participated in the finals of the 1000-meter, placing fourth, and was a member of the 4x800 team.

LaFreniere is confident in the Maroon and White's multi-event athletes, showcasing a strong heptathlon squad. The team consisted of freshman Ashley Creel, junior Nastaran Shams, and senior Crystal Therrien.

The team will participate in seven different events varying from the high jump to the javelin throw. LaFreniere believes the squad has the ability to do well in the upcoming outdoor season.

"If they work hard they should score at the conference meet," LaFreniere said.

The Minutewomen looked to use the indoor season as a springboard into the outdoor competitions. LaFreniere is worried that spring break could hamper the indoor season's effect.

"We have potential if they have good attitudes. They need to be dedicated over spring break," LaFreniere said.

The Maroon and White ended its indoor season with a disappointing showing, but exhibited potential to improve in certain aspects. Until the Minutewomen can field a team that satisfies all the necessary positions, they will have to rely on the effort of a few strong athletes to carry the team's load.

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

A step ahead

Midfielder Chris Doyle (No. 7) and the Minuteman lacrosse team is undefeated, and riding high after a 10-9 win over Navy. Attackman Sean Morris also earned ECAC Rookie of the Week honors for his three goals in the win.

Continued on page 6

UMass swept by Crimson Tide

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team can take solace in the fact that the season is only three games old. And those three games were against a goliath.

Alabama (12-3) completed a three-game sweep of the Minutemen (0-3), capped by a 12-0 dismantling on Sunday, courtesy of a 4-for-4, seven-RBI performance by Crimson Tide senior Beau Hearod.

Hearod, a native of Jennings, La., came a triple short of hitting for the cycle, and bashed a grand slam in the fourth inning - a six-run affair for Bama. The senior added three more RBIs on two doubles and a single, good for a career-high seven RBIs on the day. Hearod was given the SEC Player of the Week nod for his efforts over the weekend.

The Crimson Tide scored at least one run in each of the first five innings, and eight strikeouts in seven innings by Jeffrey Norris ensured the Minutemen wouldn't make a game of it. Norris scattered seven hits, and Ryan Beagle closed the game with two strikeouts, a walk and a hit in two innings of relief.

For Massachusetts, a total of eight men left on base told the story on offense. The Minutemen had a chance in the second inning when junior Cullan Maumus found

Continued on page 6

Just one for UM

By Nick Wright
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team took one of three matches this weekend, with the sole win coming convincingly.

The two losses came against host Cornell on Sunday, and Maryland-Baltimore County on Saturday afternoon, each by scores of 4-3. Earlier on Saturday, the Minutewomen defeated Binghamton, 6-1.

The weekend's results leave the Maroon and White's record at 3-6 for the season.

Against Cornell, Dixon's squad won only two singles points after winning two out the three doubles contests.

The two victorious Minutewomen were sophomore Stephanie Price, who at number one singles had a terrific weekend, winning all three of her singles matches. She defeated Cornell's Akane Kokubo in three sets, 6-2, 3-6, 6-2. Junior captain Susan Hyams posted a 7-6, 6-1 straight sets victory over Melissa Tu at No. 6 singles.

Sophomore Sasha Edelstein, playing at No. 2 singles, was leading Laura Tallent by one set, but was defeated 2-6, 6-3, 5-2(default).

Cornell reeled off victories at number three, four and five singles to take the match. At number three, junior Jafra Depontes was defeated 6-4, 6-2 by Cornell's Erika Takeuchi, and at four, freshman Dorothy Iwanowicz lost 6-3, 6-2 to Nicolle Chui. Pipey Lucas completed the streak at

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 100

All for the cause:

A student sits behind bars for an act of civil disobedience

Jason Lydon

By Dan LaMothe
Collegian Staff

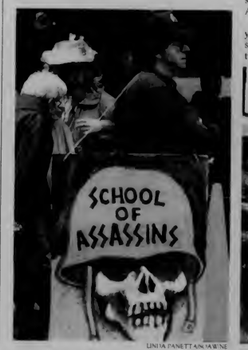
University of Massachusetts sophomore Jason Lydon sits in a cold Georgia jail cell, washing the only pair of socks he has every night by hand after challenging the United States government with an act of civil disobedience. Yet he remains philosophical.

"It's prison, it's Georgia," Lydon, 20, said with a laugh from a cell at Harris County Jail in Hamilton, Ga. "There's a lot of positives I can get out of this. Everyone has a story, and that's what I'm here to listen to. I need to participate in our democracy in order to reform it."

Lydon was one of 10,000 people gathered outside of Fort Benning in Columbus, Ga., Nov. 17 to protest the activities of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation (WHISC), a school also widely known as the School of Americas. Eighty-five other people were arrested that day. His actions have led to a six-month sentence in prison for trespassing after he crossed onto the base during the protest.

LINDA PANETTIERI/COLLEGIAN

Protesters sit on the Fort Benning sign after hanging anti- School of the Americas signs on it.



The struggle

Protesters like Lydon involved with the School of Americas Watch (SOAW) say that many graduates of the school take what they learn back to their countries to seize power and terrorize their people. They point to graduates of the school such as Manuel Noriega and Omar Torrijos of Panama and Guillermo Rodriguez of Ecuador as examples of dictators who took what they learned at the School of Americas and then used it against civilians in Central and South America.

"These soldiers come from countries struggling for survival," Reverend Roy Bourgeois, a Roman Catholic Maryknoll priest in Columbus, Ga., and founder of the School of Americas Watch, said. "These countries don't need commandos. They need food, housing, clothes, hospitals. As it exists now, there's nothing positive about the school."

The United States government and military, which spends about $20 million per year on the school, according to Bourgeois, see the School of Americas Watch as misguided.

"When you track them back over the past 11 years as I have, you find out that there is no relationship to what [students] have studied and the allegations," Kenneth LaPlante, a civilian contractor at the Pentagon and former (1980-1983) instructor for the school, said. "They're looking to change U.S. foreign policy, but they need some sort of symbol. The U.S. School of Americas has been elected as that symbol."

LINDA PANETTIERI/COLLEGIAN

A protester stands at the Nov. 17 rally against the School of the Americas at Fort Benning.

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

Military police at Fort Benning lead away several protesters who crossed onto the base as a form of civil disobedience.

Crossing the line

Lydon joined the protest for the second straight year in November, riding down to Georgia with a contingent from the Unitarian

Continued on page 3

SGA grants money for Angelou; supports existing health plan

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Two motions were passed by the Student Government Association (SGA) last night, including an allotment of money for an upcoming free performance by poet Maya Angelou and a motion supporting the existing student health insurance plan as it comes under review by administration.

The Senate passed an $800 finance allocation to the Distinguished Visitors Program, as they are bringing Maya Angelou to UMass on March 27 at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

"It's a $29,550 event and they have raised $26,000 privately," Chair of Finance Patrick Higgins said. "All they are asking for is $800 from the SGA. It's a wonderful opportunity to give money to this event. Her show was sold out at $50 a ticket in Connecticut and the show will be free to students here."

The Senate passed the motion unanimously. UMass students will get in free with photo identification.

The SGA also passed a motion last night supporting the Supplemental Insurance Health Plan (SHIP) program as it comes under review by the administration. The motion states that the SGA supports the SHIP program and reasonable increases to the SHIP premium for students if that's what it takes to keep benefit levels where they are.

Matthew Saradjian, a Senator from the Graduate Student Senate (GSS), told the SGA that the GSS unanimously passed the motion and would appreciate the SGA's vote as well in an effort to maintain the quality of student life.

"Currently 6,000 graduate and undergraduate students rely on this supplemental health insurance plan," Student Trustee Bill Powers said.

The SGA also tabled a motion calling for the Senate to support MassPIRG after several senators questioned the timeliness of it. A referendum on the SGA election ballot this week was placed to keep an optional $7 fee on student bills.

Chair of Public Policy and Relations Adriane Girard, sponsor of the motion, said that the students have voted over 80 percent in favor of MassPIRG in the past years. She said that the motion is meant to be an acknowledgement for their work on the UMass campus, not an elections ploy.

"We just want to recognize them for 30 years of great work and continue our support of them," Girard said.

Girard said that students have voted on the past 15 ballots to keep MassPIRG here and funded.

Senators disagreed with a state-

Continued on page 2

JAMES SCHAFFER/COLLEGIAN

SGA Senate Speaker Dan Saunders makes opening remarks.

Database report to be presented to Fac Senate

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Computer and Electronic Communications Committee (UCECC) will present a special report to the Faculty Senate today concerning the Student Information Service (SIS) database implementation and the problems that have resulted.

In the report, the Computer and Electronic Communications Committee asks that the Senate approve the establishment of an academic liaison group under the direction of the Provost in order to express the goals of the UCECC and to better the current SIS situation.

The UCECC hopes that an academic liaison group would assist in coordinating academic, administrative, managerial and end-user experience and expertise on SIS problems. The purpose of the UCECC is to recommend policies designed to meet the educational and administrative automatic data processing needs of the campus.

"The use of SIS by UMass teaching and support staff is fraught with problems. The problems threaten to disrupt the academic process," the Committee's report states.

The UCECC states in its report that it recognizes that the need for efficient SIS is fundamental to the academic enterprise and that, "SIS computer access is unbearably slow at critical times." "SPIRE SIS user interface...are user unfriendly," "OIT, a non-academic unit, is currently in charge of triage of SIS problems...and are not currently benefiting from end-users perspective in academic departments."

The Senate Rules Committee had asked for a solution earlier this year when problems arose regarding a lack of communication between users' needs, both faculty and student, and the concerns of

Continued on page 3

Black Hawk crashes in New York

By The Associated Press

FORT DRUM, N.Y. (AP) – An Army Black Hawk helicopter with up to 15 people believed to be aboard crashed Tuesday in upstate New York, military officials said. A county official said a number of people were critically injured.

While there was no immediate word on casualties, officials confirmed the crash occurred on post at about 2 p.m. Rescue crews located the crash site at about 3:30 p.m.

The helicopter, a widely used transport aircraft, crashed just north of Wheeler-Sack Airfield, a heavily wooded area on the base, said Lt. Col. Bryan Hilferty of the 10th Mountain Division.

Hilferty said there was no indication of problems beforehand.

"The first call I got was that it was missing. It just disappeared," Hilferty said.

"The Black Hawk is a great helicopter with an incredible safety record, and our mechanics and our pilots here are among the best in the world, so it's very surprising," Hilferty said.

Hilferty said he believed it was flying with at least one other helicopter, perhaps two.

The training mission had no connection with ongoing war exercises at the base, Hilferty said.

Hilferty said at least one soldier was spotted walking away from the wrecked helicopter. Two soldiers were being evaluated at Samaritan Hospital and a third was en route to the hospital, spokeswoman Krista Kittle said.

Maj. Daniel Bohr said the last radio contact with the helicopter was made shortly before 2 p.m. He did not know how many people were aboard or where the craft went down.

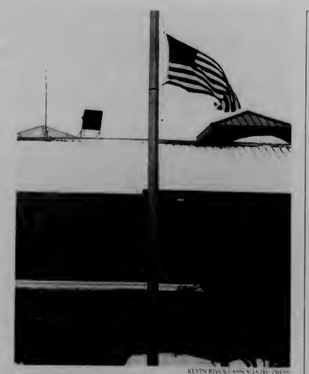
Samaritan Hospital in Watertown was putting a mass casualty plan in place in anticipation of victims, Kittle said. The hospital was canceling or putting on hold all elective surgeries, putting staff on standby and preparing its morgue.

Greg Brunelle, the Jefferson County emergency management official, said the helicopter crashed on base between Antwerp and Philadelphia. Brunelle said there were "critical injured people at this point."

Jefferson County Sheriff John Burns said shortly after 3 p.m. his dispatchers were in touch with Fort Drum.

Burns said he'd seen military jets overhead.

Steve Burton, a pilot with the air taxi service Adirondack Helicopters Inc. in Remsen, about 60 miles south of the post, flew Tuesday morning and said there was nothing troubling about the weather.



"The flying actually is fine," Burton said. "Visibility is good. Weather is good. There's some wind but nothing we're not used to coping with this time of year."

Blackhawk UH-60 helicopters are used in missions such as air cavalry, electronic warfare and evacuations, according to the Department of Defense. They are equipped with advanced avionics and electronics, such as the global positioning system.

In March 2002, two soldiers died and 13 were injured on post when two high-explosive shells fired from a howitzer landed short of their target and burst near a tent where members of the 110th Military Intelligence Battalion were eating.

Fort Drum, the sprawling Army post in northern New York, is home to the 10th Mountain Division, the military's most deployed unit over the past decade. The post is about 70 northeast of Syracuse.

As the United States presses closer to war with Iraq, Fort Drum has been a deployment staging area for reserve units from throughout the Northeast. Close to 1,000 division soldiers and reservists have departed from Fort Drum in recent weeks, a post spokesman said.

KEVIN RIVOLI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

The U.S. flag flies at half-mast at Fort Drum headquarters yesterday after a Black Hawk crashed Tuesday with 15 soldiers on board.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

LET US IN
BOARD OF TRUSTEES NEEDS TO INCLUDE STUDENTS
PAGE 4

AROUND THEY GO
FILM CRITICS DISCUSS OSCAR CHOICES
PAGE 6

ONE DAY AWAY
MINUTEMEN LOOK AHEAD TO FLEETCENTER
PAGE 12

SGA passes two motions

Graduate student Jeff Rosenberg, a volunteer with supporting Mass PIRG, doesn't tell students how to vote in the upcoming SGA election but supports Mass PIRG's bid. Staff photo by Mass PIRG has 3 mo...

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew J. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Lee Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photographic Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stanton Finance Manager
Jack Toolis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Elizabeth Smart found after nine months missing

By PATTI HENETZ

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Elizabeth Smart, the 14-year-old girl who had been missing from her bedroom in the middle of the night, was found alive in Utah on the day of a [illegible] and was taken home by police [illegible].

Mayor [illegible] said the girl is Elizabeth Smart.

The girl was answering a description police in suburban Sandy passed over the police radio a couple of hours ago, authorities said. She was taken to the Salt Lake City police department, where her father was to meet her.

The Arthur's 2-year-nanny, Brian Mitchell, pleaded not guilty [illegible] Mitchell was also in the courtroom when [illegible] Marlene Fullmer said.

The car was parked [illegible] separate corners during the day [illegible] through the day, and looked like a [illegible] and [illegible] anything unusual [illegible].

He said the license [illegible] the longer [illegible] on, blue almost like a police [illegible] the face almost like a [illegible]. They were of [illegible] white in color. Ferguson told KSL [illegible].

Last month, Elizabeth's parents announced a new reward and asked for help in their search for the former handyman. They released a sketch of the man and said Elizabeth's sister Mary Katherine had [illegible] them recently to see if anyone bore some resemblance to the man who took Elizabeth from [illegible] apartment.

Elizabeth was at home when she vanished early the morning of June 5. Her 9-year-old sister said Elizabeth was taken by a man who may have gotten into the house by cutting a window screen near the back door. The sister pretended to be asleep and she said the gunman threatened to hurt Elizabeth if she didn't keep quiet.

The case was part of a frightening string of child disappearances that included the slayings of 7-year-old Danielle van Dam of San Diego and 5-year-old Samantha Runnion of Orange County, Calif.

The top potential suspect in Elizabeth's disappearance, Richard Ricci, a handyman who once worked in the Smart household, died Aug. 30 after suffering a cerebral hemorrhage while in prison on a parole violation. He said he had nothing to do with the kidnapping.

Investigators have said they believe he was involved but may not have acted alone.

On Tuesday, the family openly criticized the police department for not devoting enough attention to Mitchell. "They should have caught this guy by now," Ed Smart said.

Elizabeth's father, Ed, was less harsh but expressed his "frustration" at public statements made by the police dismissing Mitchell as a potential suspect.

Over the summer, the Smarts held twice-daily news briefings and helped coordinate huge volunteer searches. Ed Smart, a real estate broker, vowed to keep the case in the spotlight.

The family often got calls from the police, but it was never the information they wanted to hear. Often, police were calling to alert them to grisly discoveries that might be linked to their missing daughter; they wanted the Smarts to know before the story hit the news.

Database report to be made today

SIS system. The [illegible] academic [illegible] group would work to bridge that gap.

"If academic issues [illegible] must be [illegible] and take charge of dealing with SIS implementation problems, providing a forum for users and experts to [illegible] to communicate [illegible] formats for the solution of problems," states the UCFCC report.

Membership of the proposed group would include academic advisors from several departments across the University, and at least one representative from the UCFCC. The group it recommends would be responsible to the UCFCC and [illegible] committee, the Senate.

The group's responsibilities are to identify the most important current and future SIS problems and to bring together the appropriate people to create appropriate solutions," the Committee's report states.

The push to create such a group has come to the Committee from several levels. The Provost has offered to represent her office with representative Professor Richard Rogers, while Associate Chancellor for Information Technologies and Planning, Rosa Alvarez, has voiced enthusiasm for more cooperation with an academic liaison group within her work.

The Faculty Senate will meet at 3:30 p.m. today in Herter 227. Other things on the Faculty Senate agenda include an address by Stephen P. Tocco, chairman of the Board of Higher Education, a report on the nomination of Ernest May's reappointment as Senate Secretary by the Nominating Committee for Secretary of the Senate and a report by the Research Library Council concerning the future of the science and engineering libraries.

"The Big Bang
Stephen Hawking and God."

Special Guest Speaker
3rd most cited chemist in the world
Fritz Schaeffer
5 time Nobel Prize nominee

Thursday March 13th 8pm
Rm 163C in the Campus Center
Sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!

Applicants should have some layout experience.

Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.

Hiring process begins April 14th!

Student sits in jail for civil disobedience

Continued from page 1

Universalist Association, a liberal religious group from Boston.

Once there, Lydon says that he stayed at a Unitarian church in Georgia and met with other members involved with the School of Americas Watch. On Nov. 17, 10,000 protesters met outside the gates of Fort Benning.

With veils, crosses and other religious icons in hand, they marched to the gates of Fort Benning. Lydon said that many American veterans in the procession placed purple hearts on the fence.

Lydon was one of 86 protesters who made a conscious choice to cross onto the base as a form of civil disobedience once they reached the fence. The group included nuns, priests and professionals from a variety of fields.

"I knew I would get arrested when I crossed the line," he said. "What was on my mind was knowing that there was [the] school on this base... I decided that I can risk prison time because I wouldn't be tortured. That's not the case for people in Latin America."

Lydon says that he and the other conscientious objectors went to an area where there was a break in the fence and squeezed through.

Once on the base, they were arrested for trespassing by military police and transported by bus further in.

"There's a lot of solidarity among the people involved," Lydon said. "Sitting on a bus with a 70-year-old nun singing amazing grace at the top of our lungs shows the military police they can't break our spirits."

Lydon says that once they were on the base, the processing for their arrests was a painfully slow protest.

"It was a lot of lining up; a lot of being silent," he said. "They took away any propaganda we had for closing down the school, including [T] shirts."

After the base processed the group, they were shipped to Muscogee County Jail for a night in Columbus. While Lydon made no mention of the conditions in the jail being poor, the environment horrified at least one other prisoner in the group of 86.

"The jail was just overwhelming," said Michael Ugarte, a professor of Spanish literature at the University of Missouri in Columbia. "It was scary, a nineteenth century building. We were just shivering those two days. I don't think I've ever been so cold in my life. [We had] no socks. We didn't have to be as cold as we were. They could have given us our socks or something."

Ugarte, who described himself as upper middle class and in his 50s, says it was unbearable.

"We had nothing to keep warm," he said. "I felt a kind of physical oppression that I've never felt before."

Ugarte says that he remembered Lydon well, because upon arrival at Muscogee, he offered Ugarte his lower bunk.

"He thought that was nothing, but I'll never forget it," Ugarte said. "That's the kind of kindness that I saw enacted with my co-defendants. I remember him as being the most optimistic of everyone. Nothing seemed to faze him, he always seemed to have a joke for everything."

Lydon says that after a night in Muscogee, the group was transported to a Columbus gymnasium in the morning for processing. He doesn't understand why United States marshals processing them treated them the way that they did.

"We were asked invasive questions," Lydon said. "Bank account... best friends... People who didn't cooperate were treated much more harshly. A number who didn't cooperate were put into solitary confinement in Muscogee County Jail."

Lydon was also confounded by the need for them to wear shackles during processing.

"We're all non-violent people, but they did it anyway," he said. "It's humorous to watch a 70-year-old lady walking around with shackles, knowing where she came from [a non-violent background]."

Lydon says that once processed, he paid a $500 bond and arrived back in Massachusetts around Nov. 19.

THE TRIAL

Jason Lydon arrived back in Georgia for his trial in mid-January, arriving a few weeks before his Feb. 12 trial date in support of other protesters on trial.

Unlike nuns others on trial, Lydon and his co-defendant, Rachel Montgomery, 26, of Oakland Calif., pled not guilty for their actions at Fort Benning to force the prosecution to build a case against them.

Lydon's stepdad, Scott Osondu of Annapolis, Md., described the courtroom as a "tense place."

"The defending attorney [Edward Osowski of Chicago] did a great job, but it was pretty evident that the judge's mind was made up before the case began," Osondu said.

Osondu says that Osowski looked exasperated.

"Pretty much all of his objections were overruled by the judge," he said. "I don't remember any of the objections raised by the prosecuting attorneys being overruled."

Osondu and Ugarte both acknowledged that statements made by Lydon and Montgomery as they were sentenced were moving.

"Jason's statement was very eloquent. I thought because he openly admitted he was gay," Ugarte said. "It was heartfelt, he added a personal touch to it. He added his own personal feelings about going to prison."

Judge H. Mallon Faircloth handed down maximum sentence to both Lydon and Montgomery, bringing up the fact that Nelson Mandela's non-violent actions led him to jail time, as well.

"There was a gasp [when the sentence was announced]," Osondu said. "To get six months for a misdemeanor trespassing when he was cooperative the entire way is pretty heinous. Nelson Mandela was a political prisoner. Is that what we're characterizing defendants as?"

Father Roy Bourgeois participates in a mock funeral procession that was a part of the Nov. 17 protest at Fort Benning in Columbus, Ga., the home of the School of the Americas.

HARD TIME

Jason Lydon opted to report immediately to prison so that he can be out and back in Amherst in time for the fall semester. With a release date of Aug. 12, 2003, he has been transferred three times during his first two weeks of prison – first to Harris County Jail in Hamilton, then to another part of Harris County, then back to Muscogee – the very same jail that scared Ugarte.

While at Harris County, Lydon was allowed to speak with reporters over the phone – a privilege he has lost with the transfer to Muscogee. While he said he is doing the best he can to make the best of it, there is some bitterness.

"Six months as a first time offender is ridiculous," Lydon said. "It was obvious we were penalized [for pleading not guilty]."

Lydon went into prison with three pairs of boxer shorts around his waist, following a tip that he had been given so that he would have something to change into. According to his mother, Scott Osondu's wife Margaret, it's one of the few comforts he has.

Margaret Osondu said that while Lydon is doing the best he can to complete an independent study on prison, he has had trouble concentrating with "all of the noise."

"There's a real sense of helplessness here and a lot of anger at the judicial system," she said, "as well as a military system that doesn't seem to have an kind of accountability to anybody, especially the public."

While at Harris, even Lydon had reservations about his surroundings. He elected not to discuss previous arenas of activism he has been involved in over the phone for fear of being overheard. Those areas include gay/lesbian/bisexual/trans-gender issues and the formation of a gay-straight alliance in high school that his mother says led to threats on his life and him being spit at.

"It's a safety situation," he said.

Jason's father, Mark Lydon of Middleboro, Mass., also was hesitant to share information on his son.

"There's a lot of people who would find what Jason's doing distressing," he said. "I'm hesitant to share a lot because of the well-being of my son."

COUNTING THE DAYS

As days pass by behind bars, Lydon says that he will continue to learn from this experience.

"It gives me time to reflect on my own life and what I can do to work for justice around the world," he said. "People in jail often disappear in the United States. This is a chance for me to look at what our country does to 'disappear' people. They don't need me to save them. It's nice to work with people and learn with people."

In the meantime, he will continue to work on his independent study program. He's looking forward to getting back and working on his majors again, social and political economy and gay and lesbian studies through the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program.

"I love it there," he said of UMass.

Mark Lydon, meanwhile, questions the lack of support that Jason has from the School of Americas Watch now that he is behind bars.

"They get those people down there, they get them all fired up, and when it's all done, they all go away," he said. "Now there's a kid in a prison cell for six months and there isn't reasonable support. Now that it's over, the organization packs up and goes home. I found that a little disturbing."

Both of Jason Lydon's parents are also actively looking for ways to get him out of Georgia. Mark Lydon said that he's hoping to see Jason relocated to a prison in Fayr, Mass.

"It seems better to be incarcerated there than in some hole in Georgia," Mark Lydon said.

Bourgeois sees hope in people like Jason Lydon.

"I can only say that what Jason and the others did will help us close this school," he said. "We are grateful for their action on behalf of their sisters and brothers in Latin America. He's a courageous guy, an inspiration."

All protest pictures are courtesy of Linda Panetta from the School of Americas Watch. On the Net: http://soaw.org/SOAProtest.html.

Protesters hold up numerous signs at the Nov. 17 rally against the School of Americas. Eighty-six people were arrested during the protest, including UMass sophomore Jason Lydon.

UMass sophomore Jason Lydon plans on returning to campus in the fall once he has served his six-month prison sentence.

Group planning Honda campaign

By Ikaika C. Arnado
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Wicked Good Marketing agency, created by 29 University of Massachusetts Amherst business students, will compete with 29 other universities from across the country to create a marketing campaign for the Honda Element.

Students in the project feel that the experience they gain from this program will enhance their business knowledge and give them an advantage in a highly competitive job market after they graduate.

"I feel this program is giving me some great work experience," said student Eric Rogers, department head of the media group for the project. "It's offering a unique experience, and I am getting to fine tune my leadership skills."

Honda will fly five students and one faculty member from the top two universities to Torrance, Calif., to present their campaigns. The university with the best campaign will be awarded the Honda Element College Program Scholastic Achievement Award and $5,000 for the school. The main objective of the campaign is to advertise the Element, a new hybrid vehicle, to young adults between the ages of 18 and 24.

"We're not sales agents, we're not trying to get anybody to buy anything, we're trying to increase awareness," said Michael Mannetta, a student coordinator of the project.

The class is divided up into different groups, including research, public relations, media, creativity and event. Each group is responsible for undertaking a specific job. Each morning, various ideas and perspectives are presented and debated in class to develop an optimally effective promotion. The groups meet to discuss different strategies to reach their objective.

"We don't have tests. We don't have lectures. It's just us coming up with ideas, figuring out how to run this ourselves," said Maggie Moran, a student coordinator on the project. "It's a really self-directed academic experience."

Moran said that the program is very time consuming. It is a six-credit course, with three of them awarded as independent study credits.

"This is like a full time job," Moran said.

The students have put long hours of work into the project, but feel their hard work will pay off.

"The time I spend on the project is a lot, but I have a feeling in the end it will be worth it once I get to see the final project," Rogers said.

Teamwork will be crucial in developing a successful campaign, according to students involved.

"As a team we have been able to coordinate unbelievable things," said Nolan Formularie, department head of the event group. "Through interacting with other team members, our final event will be an unbelievable experience."

The students have a $2,500 budget from Edventure Partners, a Berkeley, Calif.-based consulting group, to be used for research, design, presentation and execution of custom-made promotion.

Wicked Good Marketing is planning to showcase four Elements and hold a number of festivities on April 24 by the campus pond.

"The aim is to have 900 people attend," Moran said.

There will be many different innovative activities to participate in during the events.

"We are going to have different activities going on at each station. The concept is to think about the four elements 'braving the elements in your Element,'" Rogers said. "There will be tons of prizes, food, activities and music all to get people involved. The more the merrier."

UMass business students in 1996 won the competition with a similar event.

"They won in '96," Moran said. "That is why it's such a big thing."

Wicked Good Marketing is confident that their marketing approach will appeal to Honda.

"I can't picture 29 other teams being as professional as us," Moran said.

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
POTTERS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass Amherst

All comments, concerns and questions can be directed to news@dailycollegian.com.

THURSDAY MARCH 13TH
HIPPODROME
SKOOL
SO MUCH FUN IT HURTS!!
THE HIPPODROME'S 18 PLUS "COLLEGE NIGHT" IS SKOOL BOUND www.nafrome.com
1700 Main Street
Springfield, MA
(413) 787-0600
18+ get $2.00 off
Free for 21+ with this ad

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass leaders need to give us more notice

In the midst of a continuing budget crisis that has decimated funds across the state, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted on Wednesday to increase annual student fees by at least $1,000 for in-state students and upwards of $2,000 for out-of-state students.

The vote was approved 21-1, the lone opposing vote voiced by the board's only student representative.

Intended for the fall of 2003, UMass President William Bulger said the hikes will bring in $40 million annually for the UMass campuses, a number spurred against the projected $30 million Governor Mitt Romney expects to draw in, and a cushion for the $46 million cut by the state at UMass alone last year.

"There is a need for these revenues," Bulger said. "We're reducing, we're belt-tightening and we're also calling for this increase in fees."

So they are. We've all seen the results of reduction on campus, and felt the constraint of the so-called "belt-tightening" – there are few of us left trying to lead productive lives in the student communities who haven't had to fight for classroom space, ample time to meet with advisors and resources as seemingly simple as textbooks and access to library materials. Both has tightened and now the wallet will be lighter, the natural progression of a large and unfortunate downsizing process.

Unappealing as the hike in fees may be, the monies brought in as a part of the new plan will at least remain in the immediate environment and go to benefit our community. Unlike tuition, which goes in part to the state budget, fees remain on campus and in theory serve as a positive influx for the student body as a whole.

Long-term benefits or not, however, the plan still means that students and their families will be forced to dig for what they may not have, a process with the potential to sway students – particularly those out of state and already paying more to attend the University – away from the valley and towards other options. With little or nothing in the way of state funding, and a school system on the cusp of a possible breakup if Romney's recent proposals carry through, uncertainty remains the dominant variable and is likely to chase away more than it will entice.

If the Board of Trustees is without options in the case of raised fees, there's little for us to do. It could only stand to benefit the larger community, however, if students were made aware of these choices beforehand – even clued in that yes, in fact, the discussions are taking place. That opens the door for feedback, for response, for real time reaction that, if it can't change the end, will at least put our collective stamp on the means.

Students are largely left without the means or even the option to react to sudden and substantial financial increases. If we can become a part of the dialogue earlier, we can better prepare for the changes that come down – and better respect those in a position to make them.

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

www.dailycollegian.com

The smell of freedom

Mark Ostroff

When I read the news yesterday, I realized that I had just found unquestionable proof that there really is something in America's water supply. I hope you're sitting down.

As of this week, the U. S. House of Representatives cafeteria has stopped serving French fries and French toast. Per order of some of our most patriotic and loyal representatives, you can now proudly enjoy the taste of liberty with the newly named "Freedom Toast" and "Freedom Fries."

This, as you can already guess, is to show up those pesky peace-mongers on the other side of the Atlantic – the French. The clever and witty and dramatically superficial invasion of culture will provide the proud citizens of this great republic with the ability to differentiate between America's culture of liberty and the culture of a repressive authoritarian, French regime. (It's OK if your brain hurts.)

This is the best idea since the "Liberty Burger." It just goes to show that full-blown wartime doesn't stop our nation from trivializing politics as that of a Yankees/Red Sox standoff (even though Yankees clearly suck).

As a matter of fact, I think that it is such a good idea that I decided to finally comply with the pro-war minorities and show all of you how patriotic I can really be. I think that the idea of random floating hostility for the French, for no reason whatsoever, is a bold step in a mature relationship with the European Union.

Let's experiment, shall we?

First of all, as Tom Tomorrow's comic, "This Modern World," portrays, young Americans are now engaging in the act of "Freedom Kissing." I recommend that everyone try this. In high school, it was OK, but now I never felt so patriotic when I was making out with anyone in my life. I can now get hot and heavy with a sense of civic duty and pride. Thanks, America.

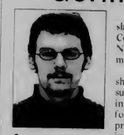
Feeling a little kinky? Let Uncle Sam take charge in the bedroom, as long as France doesn't comply with the will of a trans-Atlantic hyper-power, you can ring your partner's liberty bell with the new "Freedom Tickler." Patriotism never felt so good.

Now appearing in dog shows across America, we can all watch the new "Freedom Poodle." You can dress your little pooch in a red, white and blue top hat and let him strut his stuff in front of impartial judges. Impress your neighbors. Let them know that liberty is alive and well, even if it does require discipline and a pooper-scooper.

After that, how about we go and get some "Freedom Onion Soup" at the local Au Bon Pain... oh wait, bad idea.

As you enjoy your newfound liberty in the consumption of newly labeled goods, remember that there are a lot of things to still worry about, mainly the Russians, Germans and the Chinese. Is the world turning against us? We can't stand for this. This is why I propose that we now stand up to these civilizations as well.

From now on, when you get drunk with your buddies and someone happens to be wielding a pistol (and it probably has happened), remember that it is now called "Freedom Roulette." This way, you can show your national pride, even if it does mean blowing your brains out.



Ever have the MSG-driven urge to consume some Chinese food? It may not be a good idea, but if you decide to order from Chinese restaurants remember to insist that you will only eat "freedom food," as opposed to the food of a culture deeply entrenched in Communism. You'll feel better for it, I swear.

Your leaders are counting on you in this time of crisis. We must show national solidarity in every walk of American life. Hey, it worked for Germany, didn't it?

In the meantime, go buy some duct tape and be sure to line every neighborhood with as many American flags as we can amass. That'll show them terrorists a thing or two. Whatever you do, try not to exert yourself with too much thinking. Thinking is for traitors and Communists.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

Gorillas unwelcome in SGA bid

Scott Eldridge II

I just body slammed Cornelius Nugent in my mind.

The T-shirt wearing, sunglass-sporting candidate for student president was inciting internal anger Sunday night.

Let me preface that by saying I was a participant in this past weekend's Student Government debates as a member of the journalist panel.

That being said, let me follow by saying the debates themselves said a lot for the interests of this campus. Per usual, each candidate pair for president and trustee can be grouped and classified. This is in no way an attempt to pare down the issues each candidate represents or simplify their importance. Whether by design or default candidates holed themselves up in descriptive categories – experienced and returning, experienced for change, anti-politics, ALANA caucus...and then the screw-off.

Groups one through four represented themselves rather well. Number five, however, made a mockery of the whole thing.

Cornelius Nugent disgraced the entire evening and doesn't deserve the least bit of ink devoted to his "campaign." However, this being a newspaper striving for objectivity, I will represent him wholly and accurately in this column.

Not that there isn't a place for humor in our lives, but not like this. The debates are meant to be an opportunity – one of the only opportunities – for candidates to get their platforms out to the students. Beyond that they rely solely on campaign posters and word of mouth.

So the other four duos made an impression.

Now, in the midst of elections, it's the issues that Carr/Ataemi, Falvey/Thompson, Morrison/Bissonnette and Cooper/Franco are fighting for that should be considered.

All of the above candidates took a stance and put their necks out for what ever it was they wanted, pushed those issues forward and did so seriously, whether it was Dave Carr explaining the process of reviewing Romney's proposal, or Cooper and Franco placing the importance on the University's land grant status. No one took the stance Nugent took – which was no stance at all in reference to the student government.

> "Cornelius Nugent disgraced the entire evening and doesn't deserve the least bit of ink devoted to his campaign."

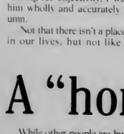
And there is an importance to this governmental body.

It may not be the final authority or even the first authority when it comes to policy, or finances or the way students are portrayed here on campus, but it is a representative body. As a symbol the SGA holds a lot of weight. It stands out to politicians who don't step onto this campus as a voice of the students. At times it may seem misrepresentative, but it is playing this role to the "outside world" and this gamers it some respect.

So why is it that a student like Nugent feels it is OK to make a mockery of the process? Is it ignorance as to the importance of the role of president? Is it for his friends and their personal humor or to make a joke of the debates?

I silently hoped for the latter, that Nugent would bastardize the debates and then fade out of governmental existence. Sadly, this was not the case, and Monday saw campaign flyers and Wednesday saw a gorilla-masked campaign on the Campus Center Concourse.



Several years ago there was the Big Tony campaign, in which Anthony Whitman ran a joking campaign. The difference with Tony is that his mindless approach was humorous without being crass. Nugent's ability to fellate himself as his reason for you to vote for him or his making fun of the disabled – Stephen Hawking or his rendition of Cornelius Superstar (a spoof of Jesus Christ Superstar) or imaginary flashbacks or quoting rappers from a clipboard were unnecessary, unrefined and most of all rude.

When Tony ran, and lost, he still took issues seriously. He may have had fun doing it, but upon his defeat Tony served for a year as a Senator from Northeast. In fact, the better part of his campaign staff replaced their titles – Mathok the "Campaign Sheriff" as one example – for the role of senator.

To even compare Nugent to Tony is tough for me to do, as their ways of poking fun are as divergent as roads in a yellow wood. Nugent made a joke of his time at the debate, a joke of the campaign thereafter and a joke of himself most of all, and we are all a little dumber for having heard him.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian Columnist.

A "home novelties" party

Paige Cram

While other people are busy focusing on all the problems in the world right now, I'm doing my best to maintain a positive outlook. Lately it seems that every piece of news talks of the looming threat of one potential disaster or another, and while the war with Iraq and the academic and financial future of UMass are certainly important topics, we will drive ourselves crazy if that is all we think and talk about. We're young and we should be having fun. Our biggest worry is supposed to be figuring out where we will be in five years, not that our tuition will skyrocket or that someone we love will be sent abroad. And I for one will not be cheated of my youth just because we are living in a time of turmoil. Yes, it's scary. Yes, I'm worried. And yes, we should all be aware and educated about what's going on in the world outside our little UMass bubble. But we can't forget to still have fun and enjoy this time while we can. So, while everyone else talks about Saddam, Osama and Romney, I'm going to talk about something a little more trivial: my weekend.

This past weekend, my friends and I took a day trip to Boston. We did a little shopping and we ate dinner out, but the main point of our trip to the city was to visit my friend (everyone's name has been changed to protect their innocence), Molly's sister, who was having a gathering at her house. Now, this wasn't exactly your typical Saturday afternoon gathering. I'm sure you've all heard of Tupperware parties where a woman comes to the house, does her sales pitch, shows her merchandise and offers all those in attendance a chance to make purchases. Pampered Chef, which sells all kinds of cooking utensils, offers a similar service. And, apparently there are companies that do this for all sorts of things. The party that my friends and I attended this past Saturday was for "home novelties," which we discovered was another name for sex toys. Yes, that's right, sex toys.

> "The party that my friends and I attended this past Saturday was for 'home novelties,' which we discovered was another name for sex toys."

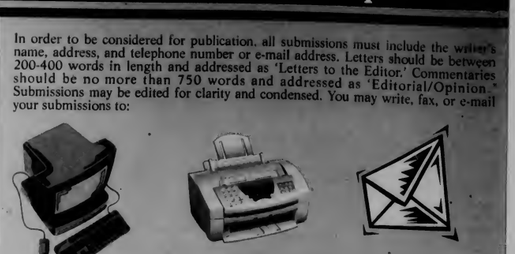
I have to admit we were all intrigued when Molly first told us about the idea. None of us knew what to expect, but we imagined that at the very least it would be a hilarious way to spend an afternoon, so we got up early and took a little road trip to the eastern part of the state.

Missy, who was the salesperson for Athena's Home Novelties, began her presentation by reading a series of double meaning riddles: "A four letter word that means woman and ends in –unt." Think you know the answer?

Next, she proceeded to explain a new version of hot potato, played by passing a rubber dildo from person to person, not with our hands but with our knees. We were quite an interesting sight: ten women in a circle turning red with laughter as we passed the bright blue toy around to see who would be left standing with it between her legs. For each of these games and others, Missy provided tickets to the winner that were later used in a raffle to win prizes such as penis-shaped ice trays and nude decks of cards.



The final part of Missy's sales pitch was to have show-and-tell. She brought out her most popular selling items (and some of her personal favorites) and, one by one, gave a detailed explanation as she passed the items around the room. And let me tell you, the threats of terrorism, war, budget cuts and tuition hikes all go out the window when you're sitting in a room full of women who are passing around items like "Good Head," a lotion that came flavored in cinnamon, chocolate or mint, or the "Clitopatra," an eight inch replica vibrator with the face of an Egyptian pharaoh.

After two hours or so, Missy's presentation was concluded. And as we all walked out to the car carrying our discreet brown paper bags full of goodies, we realized that we had, for a few hours at least, managed not to think about any of the things that worried us. For that afternoon, we were just your typical college kids doing some typical (okay maybe not-so-typical) crazy thing. Now, maybe not all of you will have the opportunity to attend a sex toys party, and maybe not all of you would want to, but the point is that you have to be able to kick back sometimes. Even with all the chaos going on in the world right now, you still have to be able to step back from the seriousness of life once and a while, and just laugh. Oh, and by the way, the answer to that riddle is aunt, so get your mind out of the gutter.

Paige Cram is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center Way, Amherst, MA 01003

Raised on a firm foundation of television

Stephanie O'Shea

Two weeks ago, Mr. Rogers died at the age of 74 from stomach cancer. Before this, none of us knew that he was sick, or even where he lived. Still, the unsure news was spread by word of mouth, and the sad gossip was finally confirmed on the Internet. This event is not only sad because a good man is gone, but because we are getting older and the definitive icons of our childhood are starting to leave us. It is a reminder that we are getting closer to the age of going to work to pay the Broadband bill than we are to spending mindless hours on the couch with a Handy Snack in one hand and a clicker in the other.

I was raised on a firm foundation of television. Between the basic networks, Nickelodeon, MTV and the Disney Channel, I was in front of the screen constantly, for hours per day, before and after school, and when I could get away with it, during meals. Do not think of me as a slob; I always maintained a healthy amount of bike riding, basketball, back flips into the pool and dancing to hip-hop cassette tapes. When other kids were reading books, though, I was getting down with cable. Sure, there were trips to the library, but I really only read books when I was required to for school. Sorry, Judy Blume, but you could not compete with T.G.I.F.

This overexposure to television has shaped who I am as a person and how I perform as a student. It has not hindered me, and if anything, has given me an edge. The deprivation of literary culture has been offset by a silly knowledge of the media and a sharp eye for what is legitimate and what is shameful filler. I am currently in a marketing class that is creating a promotion for the Honda Element, and the hardest part of the job is not the brainstorming, but deciding upon which ideas are the most worthy and cannot be so easily contrived by another marketing agency.

> "When other kids were reading books, though, I was getting down with cable."

I have never liked sitting in class and analyzing the voice and hidden themes behind what the author was saying, because if the book or teacher is especially horrid, the experience of verbal proficiency is tainted. I credit television for my vocabulary and the ability to string words together, because a lot goes by and a viewer has to be sharp to get it all. No television-loving article would be complete without the mention of my deep devotion for "The Simpsons," an animated sitcom that has been on since elementary school with incredible commentaries on family, society, religion, politics, sexuality and life in general.

Within the next decade I may have children, and it will be my job to manipulate exactly what goes into their ears and eyeballs. Only an ogre would consciously plan not to push the written word, and of course there are going to be bookshelves in my household. I expect my children to crave the instant gratification of television, however, because I believe it raises standards. I just hope that they do not make fun of my favorite reruns, like I do with my mom's "TV Land" choices.

The degree to which television has affected my life was only exemplified by my mom's tone when she called to say she was sorry about Mr. Rogers' death. The sneakers, the sweater, the train, the puppets and the stellar footage of the crayon factory can still be watched on PBS, but the true essence of "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood" lives on within the memories of those who did not change the channel right after "Sesame Street." His songs and soft voice taught us to use our imaginations, and that fun could be had without rowdiness or sensory overload. He taught us to respect each other, and to respect the mailman. Goodbye, Mr. Rogers. Your precedent will be honored, and you will be missed by the legions of fans who realize what you did for them.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian Columnist.

Dorm room food conspirators

Sanam Hakim

So, I was reading the paper the other day, and I noticed that a majority of the articles were about politics. Originally, I wrote an article about my thoughts on war. Then I remembered that Bush doesn't read this paper on Thursday's, so I deleted it and started over. The real issue at hand here is not the war with Iraq – it's dorm room food conspirators. These conspirators can be found in any dorm, but fall in pretty much the same two categories.

Category one: the chefs. There is at least one person on each floor that chooses a random, foul smelling food to obsess over...namely, tuna. There are acceptable dorm room foods and, likewise, there are unacceptable dorm room foods. Tuna is one of them. Granted, dining common tuna is not something I trust, but dorm room tuna is just plain inconsiderate. Equally inconsiderate are the people who go away for a weekend and come back with strange substances with long unpronounceable names, more commonly referred to as "home cooking." Since I fall into this category, I'm going to offer advice rather than criticism. Wait until your roommate leaves, eat the food, then vacuum and spray the carpet. When your roommate gets back, they'll thank you for being such an awesome roommate instead of wanting to throw you into an open sewer every time you open your refrigerator. A subcategory of category one includes the ruthless people who bring their foul smelling foods into your room. If someone on your floor expresses a strong dislike for citrus smells, it is by no means an invitation to peel an orange in their room.

> "He'll take the whole carton, grab a couple packs of Easy Mac, a sandwich, and a few extra cookies, then he'll come back fifteen minutes later and ask for a drink to wash it all down with."

Moving right along to category two: food thieves. To those of you thinking, "Yeah, I totally know what you're talking about, my roommate steals my food all the time," I am not referring to your roommate. I would actually like to remind you that the word "roommate" implies that you live with them. Unless your roommate is here for the housing and not the education, they have to leave sometime. This time block gives you the opportunity to refill your drawer with your roommate's food. That way, when they get back from class and open your drawer for a nice snack, they'll be eating their own food and not even know it. Regardless, the food thieves I am referring to are not your roommates or your close friends. These food thieves show up at your door non-chalantly, but are easily identifiable if you watch for one of two clues. Clue number one: intoxication. Chances are, if they are stoned or drunk, they are hungry. Luckily, however, these people are easily avoided. If you get a knock at your door with a soft, "Hey, are you in there," yelps with a bold, "NO I AM NOT." Afterward you might hear an, "Aww man that sucks," and the sound of stumbling feet, but remember this – at least they're not stumbling away with your food.

The second clue is not really a clue, but rather a characteristic. If someone boldly walks into your room and casually puts together and eats an entire meal, they are bold enough to do it again. These people should be acknowledged as dangerous and avoided at all costs. If one is spotted on your floor, doors should be locked and music turned down. If you give a mouse a cookie, he'll ask you for a glass of milk. If you give a bold food thief a cookie, he won't ask for a glass of milk. He'll take the whole carton, grab a couple packs of Easy Mac, a sandwich and a few extra cookies, then he'll come back 15 minutes later and ask for a drink to wash it all down with.

I guess people like that will be everywhere, all the time. Maybe we should just accept all our differences and come together in unity and frolic into the sunset while the theme to the "Wonder Years" plays...after we Febreze the halls, eliminate all canned fish and lock up our good food in trunks...maybe.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian Columnist.

Supporting our troops

Dan Cote

Can you hear that? It is very faint, but if you listen hard you'll hear it. I know what it is. It's the sound of our ancestors rolling over in their graves. Why? Well, because I don't think they paid the ultimate price so that people could walk out of school in protest of a war they should be supporting. Problem is that our opinions are skewed by so many outside forces that we shouldn't listen to so much, mainly the liberal media.

> "While you're trying to stay awake in your liberal arts class they're eating MREs and doing live fire drills."

I wonder why we put so much stock into what Hollywood celebrities think about social issues. What experience do any of these people have that qualifies them to render their opinion so often? None. They use their celebrity status to get themselves airtime to spew their rhetoric and then run away and hide behind their publicists and spokespeople. Should the opinion of people who make millions of dollars pretending to be someone else count? They're professional phonies and their entire world is a fantasy, like most liberals. They drink imported water and have personal assistants to fetch them cafe lattes. George Clooney, Martin Sheen, Susan Sarandon and the rest have used their status to make anti-war commercials. Some of these commercials are about how the inspections work and how half a million Iraqi civilians will be killed. How do the stars know any of this? They don't; they're just making it up. So we have a bunch of pretentious phonies advocating peace. But, with the exception of Janeane Garofalo, have any of these celebrities gone on a talk show where their unfounded opinions will get challenged? Nope. That shows a lot of credibility.

Also, do you think for a second that any of these stars won't do a 180 when the military invades and finds the weapons that Saddam had built or the atrocities he was committing. What have any of these socialist sympathizing stars done for their country? Nothing but enjoy the freedoms it has provided them and the capitalistic system that has made them rich. If they don't like it then they and anyone that agrees with them can move to France, because when this war starts our troops will need our support and not our criticism.

Then there are those who think we can't do this without the support of the U.N. France is useless as a whole, and along with Germany, is making billions of their oil deals with Saddam. Russia is selling them weapons that will be used against our troops in exchange for oil well under market prices. So how much water does their case hold? Also, how many of those U.N. nations would exist if it weren't for the U.S.? I say anyone that puts the lives of their families in the hands of the United Nations doesn't care about them. The United Nations doesn't care about your life. Hans Blix and the rest of his chocolate chomping inspectors are just prolonging the inspection to keep themselves in the spotlight.

Then there are those who say that there will be terrorist attacks in retaliation of the war. Well, can you really call it freedom if you let someone like Saddam or Osama hold an axe over your head while you go about your daily business? The first responsibility of the government is to protect its citizens and if this means pissing off the Islamic community then so be it. When it comes to protecting your family you can't care what people think.

I want everyone to put themselves in the combat boots of our soldiers for a minute. While you're trying to stay awake in your liberal arts class, they're eating MREs and doing live fire drills. They'll be picking the sand out of their toes in their free time instead of partying. They only work on days that end in the letter Y. So, while the bombs, bullets and missiles are flying over their heads, they can think about how most of the people their age back home don't support them. Would you want that if you were over there?

Dan Cote is a Collegian Columnist.

Misconceptions of poster women

Ben Feder

On the wall in my room are a bunch of cutouts from various men's magazines. Just pictures of models in bikinis and other provocative clothing. Well, whenever a girl is over, she always looks at them in disgust and says how unethical and demeaning it is to have pictures of half-naked women on a wall. Ironically, when I go into their rooms, I find pictures of a shirtless Josh Hartnett, Justin Timberlake and various other pictures of half-naked men. Well, besides being completely hypocritical, what is wrong with having pictures of beautiful women on a wall? I'm going to contend this issue to try and defend my, including all other guys' right, to have these pictures. So men, this one's for you.

We males love women. We love everything about them. Their bodies, their minds, the way they move, the way they speak and all the little things they do to captivate our attention. Ask a man what he loves about his girlfriend and besides the usual, 'what she looks like naked,' you'll get a surprising amount of responses which show that guys love the small details just as much as women do. From the sexy way her lips move while speaking to the way her soft hair falls around her shoulders, guys like it all.

Men also love to celebrate women. That is why we display scantily clad girls upon our walls. It shows a lot of what we like to see and covers the parts we would really want to see, but it's even better leaving it up to the imagination. Plus, there are a lot of pretty colors on women's swimwear.

> "Men also love to celebrate women. That is why we display scantily clad girls upon our walls."

Men put women on pedestals. They buy women clothing, jewelry and write bad love letters containing dirty sexual innuendoes with barely legible handwriting to boot. Men want to make women as happy and comfortable as possible. This is because guys are extremely caught up in sex, and hope that women share their same fascination with the human body. Sure, sometimes a guy is tired and doesn't want to see Shakespeare in Love for the 16th time and ends up angering his girlfriend. Trust me, women do the same things, but guys normally don't voice their opinions in fear that it'll mean naked time will be cut off later.

Women seem to think that these poster girls are what guys expect in the women they interact with on a daily basis. Well, this is a wrong assumption. It is impossible to consider that anyone can be like the movie stars and models that portray glamour and perfection in those pictures upon our room walls – just like men shouldn't be expected to be like Brad Pitt, Josh Hartnett or whoever else. These things just aren't going to happen. Men like putting poster girls up because we know they are unattainable. Their beauty goes as deep as the pages their pictures are printed on. We will never have these girls. We won't ever meet any of them. We won't grasp a sense of their personality, their qualities, their flaws, their fears or anything else that makes them who they are. For those distinctions are what make outer beauty have more depth and significance. All we do know are their names and how much their swimwear costs.

Some ladies out there have a hard time grasping this concept. I know there are a lot of social pressures on women to be strong, beautiful and able 24/7. But ladies, you can relax. In reality, seeing these girls gives us a deeper longing for the actual woman in our lives. In those poster girls, we can see the beauty in our girlfriends too. This is done simply by saying, hey look, my girlfriend has the same legs as Molly Sims. Or, mine has the same face as Heather Graham. And even, I've got you all beat, mine has the same chest as Heidi Klum.

So you see, men put up pictures of models because something about them reminds guys of the physical women who are in their everyday lives. We aren't comparing you to them; just the opposite, we are actually comparing them to you, since you are the ones who let us do all those great things we like to brag about while sitting around playing Nintendo. So ladies, next time you catch your man staring at Veronica Verekova lying on a beach in a skimpy two piece, take it as a compliment, considering it's you we'd really like to see wearing that. Maybe you could even take some pictures while you're at it.

Ben Feder is a Collegian Columnist.

Fighting an illegal war

Amid all the rhetoric spawned by the Bush Administration and its legions of followers in recent times, perhaps none stands out for its transparency more than the concern for the poor citizens of Iraq. Teary-eyed Republicans and Democrats alike have issued the noble call to arms in the name of promoting democracy in the region. Contrary to the party line, however, history has shown that the United States has supported repressive regimes in the name of protecting our "allies," whose existence is crucial to our control of the Middle East. We have also opposed the control of oil reserves by the people of the Middle East, so as to protect the interests of American oil companies.

Michael McMahon

In 1948 the state of Israel was created, settling displaced Jews while creating millions of Palestinian refugees. The Palestinian uprising has its roots in the refusal of the United States to support a viable state for the Palestinians, as early as the post-World War II era and as recent as this year, nearly 60 years later. While the entire world has endorsed the logic apparent in establishing two viable states in Israel independent of each other, the United States has consistently dragged its feet while occasionally endorsing a peace dividend favorable to the Israelis, as occurred under Presidents Carter and Clinton.

In 1952 an Iranian faction nationalized the oil industry. The former Shah of Iran was then "re-installed" as ruler in a 1953 CIA operation. He proceeded to enter into an international agreement which awarded American oil companies a 40 percent share in the profits. The Shah went on to have a disgraceful human rights record, and he defied international laws regarding the self-determination of citizens and the principles of democracy, all with the blessing of the United States.

In 1967 Israel destroyed the forces of Egypt, Syria and Jordan, occupying the West Bank and East Jerusalem, among other territory. The United States sent military supplies to Israel, while placing an embargo on arms to the rest of the region. This has been a source of instability in the Middle East for decades, as Jewish settlements in the illegally occupied territories have continued since 1967. The U.S. has refused to back U.N. resolutions ordering Israel to retreat from its illegal occupation, and has allowed democracy in Israel to be subverted by a reactionary Likud government intent on repressing entire segments of its own population.

In the early 1980s, Iran encouraged the Sunni Kurds of Iraq to revolt against the tyrannical Hussein. In response, Hussein engaged in an eight-year war with Iran and his own people, using chemical weapons against both. As a reward for his brutal efforts to reject Arab nationalism, the United States removed Saddam Hussein from the international "list" of terrorists and gave him $500 million to fight the upstart Iranians. The U.S did not condemn the chemical weapons that Saddam used against his Kurdish population during this war, and in fact, they refused to acknowledge the atrocities until after Saddam overstepped his bounds and invaded Kuwait.

Proponents of the war scoff at the notion of economics and industry playing a significant role in the diplomacy of war, despite the lessons of history and the harsh realities of a war economy to rebut their scorn. In all of this, however, the question must be posed: if it isn't oil and power that we are after by maintaining forces in the Middle East, exactly what are we after? Iraq controls the second richest oil fields in the world, and this fact becomes all the more relevant when considering the bogus alternatives to attacking it.

Do we really want democracy for the region? Hardly. If it were the will of the people we were truly concerned about, we would oppose regimes such as Saudi Arabia's, where a minority of royalists control the nation's wealth. In Iraq itself, the U.S. has refused to support opposition to Saddam, simply because it is not sure who we want in charge when the winds of war have been swept from the desert. Our "peaceful" offerings of exile for Saddam and demands for disarmament lest war be fought fly in the face of international law and the will of the United Nations, whose resolutions are the same ones we regard as our right to wage unending war.

As for the millions of Iraqis suffering under Saddam that war proponents have put forth as evidence of his evil, they were not economically crippled until we destroyed Iraq's infrastructure during the Gulf War and maintained harsh sanctions, which according to UNICEF statistics have been responsible for killing over 500,000 children. These cruel measures have weakened the opposition to Hussein, as he has been able to blackmail his people into supporting him, lest they starve in their efforts. Such a weapon did not exist for Saddam prior to our involvement in the Gulf War, and in fact, his citizens enjoyed the best health care in the region. Of course, the Bush administration and his parrots in the media won't stoop so low so as to acknowledge something so trivial as facts.

The war against Iraq will be a violation of the U.S. Constitution regarding the use of military force and U.N. resolutions enforced by international law. Americans should support the safe return of our soldiers, but should roundly reject the false assertions of democracy and freedom imposed by a war fought purely for greed. Such illegal actions should be opposed by any means necessary, in any context and at any time.

Michael McMahon is a UMass student.

The 75th Academy Awards

Four arrogant movie critics, a round table, a tape recorder and a discussion about the Oscars. Collegian staffers Andrew Merritt, Jim Pignatiello, Johnny Donaldson and Lizzy Nielsen all sat down yesterday afternoon to state their choices about who's going to take home those little gold statues this year...and to take a few pot shots at each other.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS
Kathy Bates
Julianne Moore
Meryl Streep
Catherine Zeta-Jones
Queen Latifah

Andrew Merritt: Kathy Bates is disqualified for nudity. My pick is Julianne Moore, she's one of the most underrated actresses out there, and I didn't see "The Hours," but she deserves it for her other work. However, I think Meryl Streep will take it.
Jim Pignatiello: I think "Chicago" looks like it's going to run away with everything. However, I think the exception will be this category. Latifah and Zeta-Jones will cancel each other out. I do agree that Streep is going to win it. I also disqualify Bates for boobage.
Lizzy Nielsen: I agree that Zeta-Jones and Latifah will cancel each other out, which makes me sad as I think Catherine Zeta-Jones is unbelievable. "The Hours" was a poor movie; it was one of those "pseudo-feminazi" movies. I hated it, just as much as I hated "Erin Brockovich." I agree that Streep will probably take it.
Johnny Donaldson: The history of the supporting actress award has typically gone to a young actress, like Angelina Jolie or Geena Davis. I'm going to go with the closest to that this year, Catherine Zeta-Jones.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR
Chris Cooper
Ed Harris
Paul Newman
John C. Reilly
Christopher Walken

LN: John C. Reilly. Because he was loveably stupid in "Chicago."
JP: I agree. He's one of those "that guy" guys. It'd be a good time for him to get this award, however I don't think he will. I think Chris Cooper will get it for "Adaptation."
JD: This is the category you can never predict. I haven't seen "Road to Perdition."
LN: And you call yourself a film critic.
JD: I think Ed Harris will get it for "The Hours."
AM: I think Paul Newman is the man to go with here. It was an amazing movie, and he's a big part of the reason why it's so amazing. I think he's the one to go with.

BEST ADAPTED SCREENPLAY
"About a Boy"
"Adaptation"
"Chicago"
"The Hours"
"The Pianist"

JP: Personally, I'm going with "Adaptation." If it doesn't win, it's an absolute travesty. It's just such a different way of looking at things. This movie, for this award, matches up perfectly.
AM: I agree with that. I think "Adaptation" will get a lot of popularity because it is about Hollywood, and getting a script together. I'd like to see "About a Boy." I think it did a great job of capturing the voice in Nick Hornby's text. It was a kind of laugh at your own stupidity kind of funny.
JD: I'm eliminating "The Hours" and "The Pianist." I don't think "Chicago" will win. "Adaptation" isn't quite an adapted screenplay, it's in the wrong category. That leaves "About a Boy," which I would like to see win. "Adaptation" will probably win, but I'd like to see "About a Boy" win.
LN: I'd like to see "About a Boy" win, however my prediction is "Adaptation." "Chicago" won't win because there wasn't much dialogue in it – it was just straight up musical. "The Hours" was a poor movie and probably a worse book, and it'd be likely that I'd shoot myself if I had to read it. "Adaptation" is going to take it.

BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY
"My Big Fat Greek Wedding"
"Y Tu Mama Tambien"
"Far From Heaven"
"Gangs of New York"
"Talk to Her"

AM: "Y Tu Mama Tambien" is foreign, so it's probably going to hurt. I'd like to see "Gangs of New York" win. It was a great screenplay. I honestly have no clue who will take the Oscar on this one.
JP: "Gangs of New York" doesn't jump out to me as a great screenplay. Honestly, I wouldn't be shocked if "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" won, because its kind of like the "Almost Famous" of this year, as it was the only award it was up for. People seem to like it; I don't know why. I personally think "Far From Heaven" will win. But that's my very bad prediction.
LN: I've only seen two movies on this list. And I liked "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" better than "Gangs of New York."
JD: "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" was nothing but a lame sitcom.
JP: It actually is a lame sitcom now.
JD: It'll probably win though, because the Academy will want to reward it. I'm going with "Far From Heaven."

BEST ACTRESS
Salma Hayek
Nicole Kidman
Diane Lane
Julianne Moore
Renee Zellweger

JD: I'd like to see Diane Lane or Salma Hayek win it. I think it's going to be Renee Zellweger.
JP: I agree. I think Zellweger is going to take this one. I'm not really thrilled about that. I think Salma Hayek deserves it but Zellweger will be one of the many winners from "Chicago."
AM: This is another tough one. I'd like to see Julianne Moore, obviously. She's amazing and underrated. My pick is Nicole Kidman.
JP: That fake nose was great.
AM: From the sounds of everything, this

Continued on page 9

Best Supporting Actor

By Sean Holmes
Collegian Staff

It seems fitting that Chris Cooper and John C. Reilly should share a place on the ballot for Best Supporting Actor at this year's Academy Awards. For over a decade and a half, they have been lurking in the shadows of Hollywood's glossy façade. This year, however, the Oscars could no longer ignore them. Chalk it up as a triumph for two of the screen's best and most unheralded actors.

Combined, they have appeared in more than 40 films and numerous television shows over the last 16 years. When you see one of them appear in a movie, you are likely to say to yourself, "Hey, I know that guy. I've seen him in a bunch of movies." Like the starting pitcher who eats up 250 innings a year or the running back who carries the ball 30 times a game, they are true workhorses. Despite so many films, Cooper and Reilly's consistently high-quality performances are startling, and they can help boost a film from mediocrity into greatness through their rich characterizations of minor supporting parts – the epitome of character acting at its finest.

But it is this willingness to accept the small roles and stay away from the spotlight that has kept them from really being embraced by Hollywood and the movie-going audience at large. Indeed, this sort of pseudo-recognition of their talents and abilities has really undermined their work. This year, however, they delivered powerful performances that could not be overlooked.

Cooper's nominated performance in "Adaptation," as the toothless, diligent, flower hunter was flawless. Knowing exactly when to pull back on the flamboyant side of the character, Cooper made him hilarious without being over the top. He also added that perfect touch of melancholy underneath the surface. The performance was pure poetry, giving us a loveable and memorable character. Cooper has already won many accolades and seems to be the front-runner for the Oscar.

Though his film debut was in 1980, Cooper didn't really get started in regular acting jobs until 1987. He bounced between television and films over the next nine years, most commonly playing the hard-working everyman. Two of his more notable appearances over this time include an episode of "Law and Order: Blood Libel" and the film, "This Boy's Life."

Cooper won critical acclaim in 1996 for his subtle performance in the terrific film "Lone Star." In one of his few lead parts, he played a Texas town's sheriff who must come to grips with his relationship with his late father, who also was the town's sheriff years before. For evidence of his impressive range, watch "Lone Star" and then watch him in "American Beauty," where he plays a completely different part with the same skill. He delivered a scorching, haunting performance as Cornel Frank Fitts that helped give "American Beauty" its brilliance and should have earned him an Oscar nomination in 1999. Somehow, though, he was overlooked (the rumor on the grapevine at the time was he split the vote with costar Wes Bentley).

Continued on page 9

Designed by Scott Pitt

Forget your Pill? Now you can.

Check out Depo-Provera, the Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera* is 99.7% effective.

Not only is Depo-Provera 99.7% effective, but you need just one shot on time every 3 months to stay pregnancy-protected. So, unlike the Pill, Depo-Provera isn't your every day birth control.

Remember, Depo-Provera doesn't protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Some women using Depo-Provera experience side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight weight gain. You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant, if you have had any unexplained periods, or if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a possible decrease in bone density. Ask your health care professional about prescription Depo-Provera.

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit Depo-Provera.com.

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

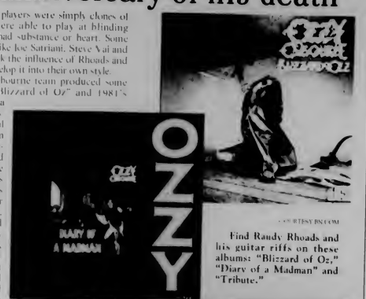
Please see important product information on adjacent page.
© 2002 Pharmacia Corporation UX002161701 9/02

Still remembering Osbourne's guitarist, Randy Rhoads, on the 21st anniversary of his death

By Sean Hobbs
Collegian Staff

Rock and roll history has been painted with too many shooting star lives that tease us with their brilliant light for the briefest of moments and then disappear into the heavens. We are left with only a small hint of what could have been accomplished.

Randy Rhoads, the incredibly talented guitarist of Ozzy Osbourne's band, was one such shooting star. Wednesday, March 19 will mark the 21st anniversary of the tragic passing at the age of 25.



To those unfamiliar with his work, the name Randy Rhoads may not mean much. Within a broad circle of metal fans and guitar aficionados, however, the name is legendary. Over a handful of Osbourne-backing group from 1979-1982, Rhoads revolutionized the way rock guitar could be played. His classically inspired approach was highly influential among aspiring guitarists both then and now.

Born Dec. 6, 1956 in Santa Monica, California, Rhoads was considerably drawn to the guitar and learned it energetically. By the time he was in his teens, he was already giving guitar lessons. After graduating through the ranks of L.A. music scenes with bands like Violet Red Room, Quiet Riot and Wrong Side That Shines, Rhoads found Osbourne in 1979. Rhoads became good friends and solid writing collaborators with the former Black Sabbath frontman. When Osbourne, first solo album, "Blizzard of Oz" was released in 1980, the guitarist had already helped fill the song-writing shoes of Osbourne's departed Sabbath mates. Rhoads' deft with the classical side of things, as well as his knack for hard and heavy riffing, helped Ozzy's solo career get off to a flying start.

The playing was accomplished to almost an art form, taking the dizzying flourishes that Eddie Van Halen had introduced to a new level. He blended the artificial, over-used bravado of rock guitar soloing rock antics to create solos that were inspiring, intricate and picked apart note-by-painstakingly fluid and intricate classical influences. He moved away from the use of delta blues-based pentatonic scales which was the standard on most rock guitarists and instead fleshed out many classical scales and modes which Dave Purple guitarist Ritchie Blackmore had also largely introduced to heavy guitar. Rhoads integrated such guitar-shredding techniques into the sphere of the Ozzy sound, and gave speed/skill to almost an equal extent as virtuosity. The result was a perfect balance between technique and pre-composed harmony, something any guitarist can appreciate. Perhaps to his playing had not been found below to the sound of rock guitar at that time.

Randy's style of playing showed that he was a big sport fan, as the use of symmetrical guitar structures (e.g. 3rds, 4ths, Majors and Minors, Major and Minor scales moving across the eight frets. Most of these players were simply clones of each other. All were able to play at blinding speeds, but none had substance or heart. Some players, however, like Joe Satriani, Steve Vai and Kirk Hammett, took the influence of Rhoads and found a way to develop it into their own style.

The Rhoads-Osbourne team produced some great music on "Blizzard of Oz" and 1981's "Diary of a Madman." Rhoads' interest in classical guitar playing began to completely overtake him around 1981 as well. He was dedicated to his craft and was always looking for ways to get better. Each time he would arrive in a new town, he would look through the yellow pages to find out where he could receive a classical guitar lesson. He was aspiring to leave Osbourne's band and pursue a degree in classical music at UCLA.

Find Randy Rhoads and his guitar riffs on these albums: "Blizzard of Oz," "Diary of a Madman" and "Tribute."

As a person, Rhoads was a quiet soul who did his best not to succumb to the pressures or temptations of the road. Music and his girlfriend always came first. The excesses of rock and roll did not interest him. Everyone who knew him described him as a very polite and kind-hearted man who had a constant smile planted on his face.

On the morning of March 19, 1982, Randy was enticed to take a ride in a Beechcraft Bonanza while the group's tour bus was on an early morning pit stop. The bus driver (who piloted the plane) and one of Randy's good friends, Rachel Youngblood, were also aboard as it circled a private airport in Leesburg, Florida three times. On the third time the plane dropped to close to the ground, clipped its wing on the bus, splintered a tree and crashed into a house, exploding and killing all on board. Very little is known about the cause of the accident.

Like the loss before of Jimi Hendrix and the later loss of Stevie Ray Vaughn, the loss of Randy Rhoads was devastating for guitar players and the music world in general. Some consider him the greatest guitarist who ever lived. And at 35 he was only going to get better. There were no limits to how far he could have taken his guitar and dinary gifts, especially if he did go into classical studies at UCLA. Like the other shooting star of the music world, we have to let our imaginations tell us what he could have done and appreciate what he did give to us. March 19 should be a day of remembrance for music lovers everywhere. Anyone who is into rock or metal (or even classical guitar) and has never heard Randy's playing should definitely check out his music. Go out and pick up any of the mentioned albums or the live showcase, "Tribute."

Information from Allmusic and the official Randy Rhoads website were used for this article.

Authentic Irish cuisine:
Trimming fat off misconceptions

Sweet St. Patrick on a shamrock, it's four days from the grandest Irish holiday this side o' the pond, and you still don't know your boxy from your brisket? Mask your shame for once, dear readers, because we're going for a lesson in Irish cuisine that'll set you straight once and for all. And maybe you'll even put down that hunk of corned beef in favor of some more traditional (and certainly healthier) dinner dishes.

Corned Beef was never and will never be a traditional Irish meal.

There, I've said it, and I don't care how many people refuse to accept it. The truth is that cattle in Ireland are used for their dairy products and not for their beef. Irish cultural analyst Bridget Haggerty says that the first recorded mention of the food occurs in a 12th century poem titled, "The Vision of MacConglinne." Corned beef was ordered to be given to the king to drive away gluttony. In reality, though, this particular type of meat was too expensive for regular consumption. When it could be eaten, it was fresh.

The next mention of corned beef was in the 1600s, when the value of the product escalated due to the large amounts of salt rubbed into the beef as a preservative. Corning itself refers to the process of curing by using "corns" of salt, which can be as large as corn kernels.

During the Irish immigrations of the 19th century, the meat was used as a substitution for boiled bacon and served in a broth of cabbage water with little other seasonings. On a more ironic note, Irish pubs have sensed the American need to have preconceived notions fulfilled, and many of them serve a meal of corned beef and cabbage on St. Patrick's Day. Funny isn't it? The idea of boiling one's food in an enormous pot was used by these immigrants to feed their families, and it harkens back to ancient traditions of the Irish peasantry.

Hasia Diner, professor of American Studies at the University of Maryland, reasons that food was a reminder of poverty and the past, and thus the population of Irish immigrants did not cling strongly to their culinary roots. And this was with good reason. In the mid-1800s, Ireland was subject to one of the largest famines in European history. Over one million people died of starvation when a wind-borne spore known as phytophthora infestous decimated potato crops. Exportation and taxation of the nation at the time didn't help matters either.

In contemporary society, a poll of 25 Irish individuals revealed there was no clear winner to determine what an entire nation of people eats on a given day. But one dish that is eaten by some patriotic folks consists of boiled cabbage, potatoes and turnips to represent the green, white and orange of the Irish flag. Other people laughingly proclaim they'll have a "shamrock sandwich," which is basically a pint of Guinness.

But if it's tradition you're after, then order yourself a dinner of poached salmon and roasted potatoes. Noel Cullen, author of "Elegant Irish Cooking," cites the salmon as the "king of fish." It can be either grilled with butter or poached and served with a simple stuffing. Other indigenous meals include roasted lamb or pork, root vegetables, as well as meat and blood puddings.

What's a party without boxty, I ask? Beyond that I like the word, boxty is a meal slightly similar to a crepe or potato pancake that is stuffed with meat, vegetables and occasionally a savory sauce. There is even a rhyme associated with the meal that goes something like, "boxty on the griddle, boxty on the pan. If you can't make boxty, you'll never get a man." Terrible, I'm sure, for those wretches who couldn't turn out a good boxty if their lives depended on it.

So there you have it: hundreds of years of Irish cuisine summed up in less time than it takes to boil water. And if you're one of those people who insists on claiming "everyone's a little Irish on St. Patty's Day," just remember that summing up the history of an entire nation of people based on one dish is dangerous. Also, drinking green beer and eating boiled food does not make you Irish – even if it is only one day.

Have a great spring break everyone, and for those Irish who stay true to our roots, no matter where they are:

May the road rise to meet you,
May the wind be always at your back,
May the sun shine warm upon your face,
And rains fall soft upon your fields.
And until we meet again,
May God hold you in the hollow of his hand.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

Zion I's sophomore album not up to par with original, but still classic

By Justin Cheliman
Collegian Staff

After a yearlong delay, Zion I's much-hyped "Deep Water Slang..." finally saw the release of its debut in February. Not coincidentally, it was also released by the duo on its own label, Live Up 2 Records. Both are sponsored by "Deep Water Slang" is the highly anticipated follow-up to 2000's "Mind Over Matter," arguably the most underground hip-hop album released that year. Its anti-sponsorship

Trip to heaven and back

Mike Marzelli

You know.

It took me ever noted for a team so hard it hurt. It you were ever so crushed by a loss you thought you would throw up. If you ever took so much pleasure in victory that you lolled like a five year-old child, you know.

You know why we went

You know why we drove to Ohio.

You know why two of my closest college buddies and I borrowed a car and drove 12 hours roundtrip away from civilization to a place where no God-loving man should ever have to set foot unless necessary.

We drove in complete silence for most of the ride. There were cheers as exits passed and mixed with a few tons of mixed feelings about the identity of the Rocky East. You know why we didn't mention the [illegible] to our team's entrance music, three [illegible] the conclusion of the first leg of our journey.

We all wore the same T-shirts. You know the ones [illegible] as many local fans as we could within a few seconds about how awful their arena was.

Maine's goalie even when we were in first place standing. Why we bowed to Mr. Winer and why we got "all fired up" prior to the bye.

We avoided hearing people tell us to "sit down" or speak of our possible origins or questionable [illegible]. You know why we started "Let's Go" [illegible] section if friends and family when [illegible] school, section of rabid "Minutemaniacs."

We made public asses of ourselves every [illegible] getting a maroon jerseys with sticks [illegible] we sank down in our seats when [illegible] filled up white sleeves. You know why we [illegible] periods starving for the next one to [illegible] we were shaking every time our boys [illegible] their heels and why our collective [illegible] Canada when they fought off charges after charge.

You know why our optimism was cautious and why we took nothing for granted. You know why our eyes went ice... clock... ice... clock in the final period, and why "that sinking feeling" took on a new meaning for us with every late goal from the opposition. You know why we wanted to hear that place rock...but not really. You know why the butterflies in our stomachs felt like full-fledged pterodactyls.

You know why we prayed with the few complete strangers who shared our cause. You know why we couldn't watch and why we couldn't turn away. You know why we didn't have voices left.

You know why we couldn't believe our eyes and why we couldn't conceive of what was happening. You know why it all seemed so surreal. Why it was so unrealistic yet so perfect at the same time, and why some of us cried and some of us just stared in amazement.

You know why we pounded on the glass until our hands hurt and why we loved watching people leave in disappointment around us. You know why we held our UMass apparel high. You know why we thought we were in heaven. You know why we screamed our voiceless heads off even though we know our guys couldn't hear us. You know why we hugged and shook hands with fellow supporters just like us that we had never met before. You know why we waited for every last player to come out of the locker room to congratulate them.

You know why we felt like we were on top of the world. You know why we felt satisfied. You know why it was one of the most amazing feelings we've ever felt. You know why we were able to drive home six hours as happy as can be, and you know why we could talk this time. You know why we told every fellhoth collector on the way home who won tonight, and you know why we listened to sportsflashes just to hear the score, because you know why we thought we might have been dreaming.

You know why it was the greatest trip we've ever been on.

You know why it was one of the most amazing things we've ever done.

You know why we know we're fans in the absolute most pure sense of the word.

And you know why, more than anyone else, that we can't wait for the Hockey Enter and the chance to cheer Minuteman hookey on again.

You know, because you wish you went too.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian Columnist.

Minutewomen ready for Blue and Gold tourney

By Jeff Foster
Collegian Staff

[illegible] Aggies, followed by a game against Florida Atlantic.

The concluding day features California first followed by a contest with host team Florida International.

Texas A&M features a great power hitter and a solid pitching staff.

Supplying the power is Selena Collins, who has been consistent with a .335 batting average, eight home runs, 38 runs batted in and an impressive .911 slugging percentage.

As for the mound, Lindsey Wilkinson, a 2002 All Big 12 selection has struggled this season, but has the ability to dominate. Along with Wilhelmson, relievers Lindsey Rippee (4-0, 0.47 earned run average) and fellow starter Leslie Starapley (5-3, 3.36 ERA, .150 batting average against) provide a threat on the hill no matter who is throwing.

"We're going to have to get a great game from our pitching staff, our defense has to be solid, and have to put [Texas A&M's] good pitching [illegible] plays," Sottino said. "I think they are going to be a good [illegible] team, so we're going to have to force them to handle the ball a lot and come up with the hits when we need them."

Besides Stanford, UMass faces its highest-ranked opponent of the season in the Golden Bears. California covers all areas on the diamond, with five players batting over .300, three pitchers with ERAs between 0.90 and 1.09 and solid fielding.

As for individuals, All-American Veronica Nelson looks to become the Golden Bears' all-time leading RBI producer in the three-day event.

Nelson is one of the best contact hitters in the nation, with a .405 batting average, and has shown power with five dingers while driving in 19 runs.

In her sophomore season, hurler Kelly Anderson has broken out, posting a 9-3 record, 0.90 ERA and 90 Ks. Anderson mixes up her pitches and could present either of UMass' aces—Kaila Holtz and Kelli Arnold—with another classic pitching duel.

"When you play a team like Cal, the defending national champs, you need to bring your 'A' game," Holtz said.

"No matter who the pitcher is on the other side, my job is to take their batters down one at a time and focus to get them to swing at my pitches," she added.

With A-10 play starting on March 28 against LaSalle, the Blue & Gold Classic is the Minutewomen's final chance to make some noise on a national stage.

Atlantic 10, media hand out similar postseason honors

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Both the Atlantic 10 conference and the media released their conference awards for the 2002-03 season this week.

Xavier senior David West earned Player of the Year honors from both versions. It was the third straight season West earned the award from the conference.

All single-person awards were identical, with Rhode Island's Jim Baron as Coach of the Year, St. Bonaventure's Marques Green as Defensive Player of the year, La Salle's Gary Neal as Rookie of the Year and Saint Joseph's Delonte West as Most Improved Player.

Minor differences came up in the All-Conference teams, as the A-10 named six players to its first team. Here are the conference's first, second and third team selections. The media's placement is in parenthesis:

First Team All Conference:
David West-Xavier-F (1st)
Jameer Nelson-Saint Joseph's-G (1st)
Marques Green-St. Bonaventure-G (1st)
Romain Sato-Xavier-G/F (1st)
Chris Monroe-George Washington-G/F (1st)
Delonte West-Saint Joseph's-G (2nd)

Second Team All Conference:
Keith Waleskowski-Dayton-C (2nd)
David Hawkins-Temple-G (2nd)
Brooks Hall-Dayton-F (2nd)
Brian Woodward-Rhode Island-G (2nd)
Gary Neal-La Salle-G (3rd)

Third Team All Conference:
Ramod Marshall-Dayton-G (3rd)
Pat Carroll-Saint Joseph's-G/F (None)
Kevin Forney-Duquesne-G (None)
Anthony Myles-Xavier-F (None)
Alex Wesby-Temple-F (None)

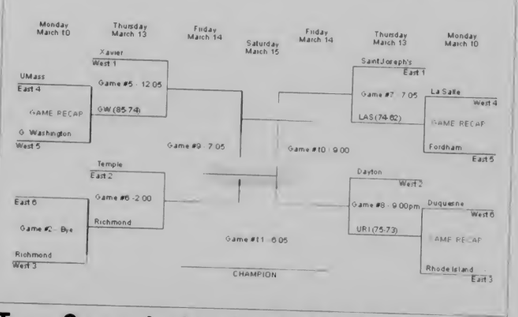
Only receiving media votes:
Steven Smith-La Salle-F (3rd)
Mike Skroski-Richmond-F (3rd)
Tony Dobbins-Richmond-G (3rd)

The defensive and rookie teams were similar; in fact the All-Rookie Team was exactly the same. Here are the A-10s picks, with any media differences in parentheses:

All Defensive Team:
Marques Green-St. Bonaventure-G
Tony Dobbins-Richmond-G
Jameer Nelson-Saint Joseph's-G
Romain Sato-Xavier-G/F
(media pick-Tyrone Barley-Saint Joseph's-G)
David West-Xavier-F

All Rookie Team:
Gary Neal-La Salle-G
Steven Smith-La Salle-F
Mike Hall-George Washington-F
Maurice Collins-Temple-G
Dedrick Finn-Xavier-G

Never seen before



The A-10 will boast three teams in the Associated Press Top 25 during conference tournament week for the first time in its 27-year history. Xavier is at the top of the list, ranked No. 10 in the nation, while Dayton (No. 22) and Saint Joseph's (No. 25) also made this week's poll.

This feat marks the first time since Nov. 16, 1998 that at least three A-10 teams were in the top 25. In that poll, four squads – Temple (No. 7), Xavier (No. 16), UMass (No. 25) and URI (No. 25) were all ranked.

Tough place to play

The second round of the A-10 Tournament kicks off today at UD Arena in Dayton, Ohio, where the Dayton Flyers are 14-1 this season.

Dayton will cap off a full day of tourney play, taking on URI at 9 p.m. tonight. Xavier and George Washington will kick things off at noon, while Richmond and Temple square off at 2 p.m. and Saint Joseph's and La Salle square off at 7 p.m.

Two Georgia basketball players sue for right to play in SEC postseason

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Two Georgia basketball players sued Wednesday for the right to play in the conference and NCAA tournaments, but a judge quickly denied their request for a temporary restraining order.

The university pulled out of the tournaments Monday after an investigation showed evidence of academic fraud by players.

Starters Ezra Williams and Steven Thomas — who were not accused of wrongdoing — asked that the school be compelled to try to play in the tournaments. The suit names the school, the board of regents and the university athletics association.

Judge David Sweat denied the temporary restraining order, but scheduled a hearing for Monday, according to his clerk, Sophia Tooten. That would be too late for Georgia, since the Southeastern Conference tournament will be over Sunday and the NCAA tournament field will be announced later that day.

When asked whether there was any possibility of having an alternate team selected based on how the lawsuit turns out, selection committee chairman Jim Livengood said it would be "impossible to speculate."

"The bracket we put out Sunday night is the bracket we intend to play Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday of the next week," he said.

The NIT also selects its field Sunday night, so it's unlikely the Bulldogs would have that option.

"If we reserved a spot for them depending on how the hearing goes, that's not fair to the other teams who brought their players back to practice," NIT executive director Jack Powers said. "I do feel bad for the Georgia kids. It's ridiculous."

Williams, a senior, and Thomas, a junior, claim that their ability to get NBA contracts will be hurt if they are denied the chance to play in the postseason. They also say the team was not given proper notice before the school withdrew from the tournaments, and by taking such action Georgia breached the terms of the players' scholarships.

More than 300 Georgia basketball fans dressed in red and black rallied outside the university's administration building Wednesday afternoon to support the basketball players.

"When I first came in and saw all the people, it almost brought tears to my eyes," junior guard Jarvis Hayes said after the rally.

Hayes, along with his brother Jonas and guard Damien Wilkins, showed up about 30 minutes after the rally began. Fans have proposed for the team to play in an exhibition game after spring break.

The Bulldogs were supposed to meet Arkansas on Thursday in the SEC tournament at New Orleans. Instead, the conference rearranged its brackets, giving Tennessee a first-round bye and scheduling only three games instead of four on the opening day.

On Monday, school president Michael Adams and athletic director Vince Dooley announced that the No. 21 Bulldogs' season was over because two players committed academic fraud in a class taught by coach Jim Harrick's son.

-Associated Press

MAJOR JUNIOR WEAR LABEL
GOT CLOTHES?
30-75% off
WAREHOUSE SALE
UMass Student Union Ballroom
WAREHOUSE SALE
REHOUSE SALE

sports@dailycollegian.com

UMass CAMPUS RECREATION
START TIME TO ENTER
Softball (M/W/C) ..... A.S.A.P.
Co-rec Soccer ..... A.S.A.P.
Volleyball Special (C) ..... A.S.A.P.
OFFICIALS NEEDED
Softball Clinics 3/24, 3/26, 3/27
Co-rec Soccer Clinics 3/25, 3/26, 3/27
Volleyball Special 3/25
Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations.
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

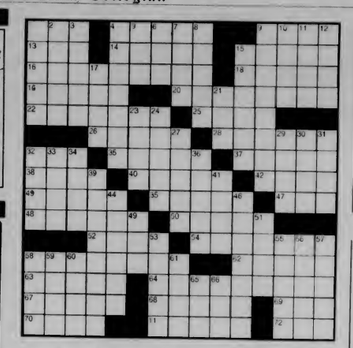
Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Have a safe and memorable spring break
Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm
333 Russell St., Rt. 9 584 8174

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredeth

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vitard

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley



VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • By Comrad X

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

ACROSS
1 Unequally bright
5 Stroll
10 Part of MHz
14 Teenage heifer
15 Tiny bit
16 Raw rubbish
17 Hot number (2 wds.)
18 Date on
19 Actress Tatum
20 Maid
22 Artnive
25 What Borzoi's
26 — Frome"
28 Gull links
30 Andy Capp's wife
32 Gunship
37 Verb heroine
40 — point
41 French I verb
43 Violent weather
45 Actric
47 Build/limit practice
48 Called
50 Pearl T.S. —
52 Ballwin of "The Shadow"
54 Swim gear
58 Mariposa
63 Mangrove
64 Spoken
66 Tolls
67 Cobbled up
69 Daub: wallis
70 Wind catcher
71 Drift
72 Paulo, Brazil

DOWN
1 Dieter nemesis
2 Mock a call
3 Utilize
4 Gridiron or caper
5 Bube's new title
6 Prolific, briefly
7 Let rest
8 Wheatear award
9 Double-barrelled (2 wds.)
10 Jacket style
11 "Pretty Woman" host
12 Give the pink slip
13 Congregator
21 Gardening implement
24 Lamb's pinbs
25 Pitchers get
24 Lombardo's cart
27 Granny
29 Hell-bound
30 Bono shy
31 Untold spot
32 Go without (pub)
33 Stroll
36 Pieces of the

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
• High: 34
• Low:13

FRIDAY
• High: 38
• Low: 25

SATURDAY
• High: 50
• Low: 42

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Tomato Soup
• Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
• Shepherds Pie
• Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
• Tomato Soup
• Roast Beef
• General Tso's Chicken
• Penne with Spinach & Tomato (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schatter
COPY EDITOR
Jesse Greenspan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lloyd · Dan Simmons

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Rock journalism is people who can't write interviewing people who can't talk for people who can't read.
- Frank Zappa

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You should not be walking and reading the paper at the same time or you could slip on some ice.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Sit and stare out a window today for 6 consecutive hours. You'll really freak people out.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Broccoli is a great vegetable and it makes your hair grow. Try to eat some today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Taurus spelled backwards is surtaut. Which means absolutely nothing.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Yeah, we're all aware of your two personalities. Pick one, because we're sick of you both.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
A healthy diet of chicken fingers and onion rings combined with no teeth brushing will kill that pesky cold.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Today you will do really well on your wicked scary journalism exam.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Today will be filled with blueberry muffins and many trips to the bathroom.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Get out and purchase a Frosty today. Bring it for your favorite Collegian employee.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will find a really great pair of snakeskin boots today. Don't buy them, they're ugly.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You have been sitting on a ketchup packet for quite some time. Have someone examine your butt.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Wow, its a really long time until your next birthday. Hahah, sucka.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Looking for CONCERTS EVENTS SHOWS? Check out www.THA ZOO.com for local up-to-date info.

Get Greek Stuff F.A.S.T! Group orders get great discounts. Lettering, embroidery, novelties. Visit on-line at Connectsports.com. 1-800-929-1897

alamtran@starpower.net.

Buy/Sell Textbooks Locally @ the textbookhub.com No Shipping Hassles No warning period textbookhub.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstliving4rent.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstliving4rent.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Childcare. Experienced. Tues-Thurs afternoons walk UMASS call before 8 pm 549-9351

CAMPUS REPS needed to promote new energy drink and Feb.-end of semester Easy fun flexible hours. Please respond ONLY if outgoing, confident, energetic Letter of intro + resume to manager1@hyc.rr.com

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS-SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE! Camp Wayne, NE PA Counselor-Specialists all Land/Water Sports inc. Tennis, Golf, Soccer,

EMPLOYMENT

Outdoor Adventure Camping, Mountain Biking, Climbing/Ropes, Roller Hockey, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Theatre, Radio, Video and more. Graduating RNs, RNs, Nurse Practitioners for Health Center, OT, Drivers, Wait Staff. CAMPUS INTERVIEWS—TUES & WED, FEB 12 & 13. Let's get the ball rolling now! Online application www.campwaynenc.com; email info@campwaynenc.com; 1-888-549-2963 (516-883-3063).

Economics / Business Development Assistant for economic software firm. Includes telephone sales. Part time or full time. Please send cover letter and resume to: Regional Economic Models, Inc. 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Computer Spreadsheet / Programming Assistant for economic modeling firm. Delphi, FORTRAN, MS office a plus. FT or PT. Please send cover letter and resume to: Frederick Trey, REMI, 433 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. info@remi.com.

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help videotape practices & games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship Aid & work-study available. Beginning late spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319

Bartenders Needed! No experience necessary!!! Earn up to $300/Day! 1-866-291-1888xt1047

EMPLOYMENT

Public Relations Positions Applications are now available at the Admissions Center, 37 Mather Dr. (behind Orchard Hill) for Tour Guides, Student Admissions Reps, and Summer Orientation Counselors. Call 545-9081 for more information. Deadline is Feb. 7.

Drivers & Kitchen help needed Flexible hours. Apply DP Dough Downtown Amherst.

Attention: Get a head start on your New Years Resolution. Lose weight. Make money. DFast 1-888-232-3615 www.dfastathletics.com

LOST

Lost: U.S. Passport of Michael Leuchtenburg (found, please call 546-7296 or email Michael@dishhome.org

LOST

Last semester I lost two necklaces of high sentimental value. Both silver with a pendant. One is squire, the other is a heart. If you have any info please contact me at 586-5189 or mmichel@student.umass.edu. Reward if found

ROOM FOR RENT

Two furnished rooms available. Utilities included. No lease required. $375.00 per month 253-4670

413-549-8113 Feb-June Grads Preferred Near UMASS Ask for Jay

ROOMMATE WANTED

LRG Room in furnished Home on Amherst / Belchertown Line $400+ month 253-7235

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-6002

Clean Needles Save Lives. Anonymous needle exchange. Safer, non-judgmental. Resources and support. Tapestry Health, 164 Center Street, Northampton. 586-2016 x 164.

Confidential Pregnancy Testing and Counseling. Sliding fee scale. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-6002 (14 weeks)

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Bahamas Party Cruise $279 5 Days. Includes 10 Free Meals, Free Parties & Drink Specials. Incl. Port Departure, Hotel Tax www.springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$. Last Chance to Book! Special Rates For Groups of 6+. www.ststravel.com / 800-838-8203

Montreal Madness Weekends $89+$15 Security Fee Complete (based on quad occupancy) Includes Round Trip Motor-coach, 2 Nights at Hotel Downtown, Breakfast-Dinner, Nightclubs (The best in town!) Departs every weekend March, April, May! 10 or more Group Discounts available montrealexpressnet 781-979-0076

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

Absolute Best Deals for Spring Break! Acapulco, Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida; Space still available. Call us today 1-866-273-2500 www.vagabondtours.com

WANTED

Wanted Immediately For on campus student in Chemistry II & Biology IV. Graduate Student or experienced TA. Will Pay Reasonable Rate 617-866-7515 Joshwjeffe@aol.com or Jamesjosh@hotmail.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Uncharted territory

Deep bond on sidelines

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon is sitting in his office in early October. A call on his cell phone from a close friend interrupts the meeting he is having with a young reporter.

"Dick Umile's busting my chops and the season hasn't even started yet," he confides.

Of course, this is nothing out of the ordinary. The two Hockey East coaches, who will face off Friday night in the semifinals of the conference tournament, have been busting each other's chops for quite some time now.

"He's been beating the hell out of me since I was nine-years-old," Cahoon jests. "I really resent the son of a gun."

"[I've known him] a long time," Umile says. "I've known him longer than my wife. He's a good friend, we go way back. He's been someone that I respect very much and I'm not surprised at what he's done so quickly at UMass."

The two grew up in the same area and have been matching up against each other for nearly 30 years.

"He's a great guy and a great competitor," Cahoon says. "We played against each other from the time we were in youth hockey and all through high school – we graduated from high school in the same class. We played high school football together in the Agganis game in Eastern Mass. We lined up against each other in college. We played on the national team together – the U.S. junior team."

The two talk on a regular basis, and according to Cahoon, "We talk all the time. I've got him on speed dial." In fact, the two met Tuesday night while seeking out recruits. But despite the increased importance of this weekend's contest, things seem to be going as usual.

"I happened to be with him last night, we were at a game – a lot of coaches were there," Cahoon said. "We sat down and talked a little bit about the upcoming weekend and a little bit about the old days, it's just things as normal."

While Cahoon was busy as an instrumental part of a pair of Boston University squads that won the national championship, Umile was just north, captaining New Hampshire to a third-place ECAC finish in 1972. Both were, and likely always will be, two of the fiercest competitors that could be found in a hockey rink.

"I know his team's going to be ready and I know he has a competitive instinct that transcends to his team and I know they're going to compete like hell," Cahoon said of Umile. "Hopefully that's going to help keep us on the alert. I certainly respect playing him. Whether I enjoy it or not, that's another question. I'll tell you after the game."

Like his counterpart, Umile did not seem too enthused about squaring off with his longtime rival. But still, he found nothing but good wishes for his close friend.

"I'm excited for him that he's there," Umile said. "He's worked real hard to get the program going like it is right now. I just think it's exciting to see UMass at the FleetCenter."

Freshman Stephen Werner and the UMass hockey team will take on New Hampshire in the semifinals of the Hockey East Tournament Friday at the FleetCenter.

UMass faces UNH in Hockey East semifinal

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

The ecstasy lasted over the weekend, but come Monday, the Massachusetts hockey team was right back to its normal, grinding routine.

The Minutemen (19-16-1, 10-14-0 HE) had reason to smile, sure. They had just beaten Maine in their Hockey East quarterfinal series, and earned their first trip to the conference semifinals in school history. But this UMass team still wasn't completely satisfied, despite its newfound postseason success.

So, with Friday's game against No. 3 New Hampshire approaching, the Minutemen were clearly back to business this week.

"It's tough to come down from something like that, but we're not done yet," said captain Tim Turner, who will make the trip to Boston in his last season in the maroon and white. "And how much more exciting would it be to win in the FleetCenter?"

The Wildcats, last year's Hockey East champions and this season's regular season co-champions, certainly present a daunting task for the Maroon and White. UNH is currently the only Hockey East squad that UMass has failed to defeat this year.

But from here on out, it's single-elimination playoff hockey. No longer do the Minutemen have to go into hostile enemy territory for a playoff series. No longer does UMass have to eke out two hard-fought victories to advance. Only 60 minutes of hockey stands between the Minutemen and the conference championship game.

"In a one-game series, anything can happen. It's a matter of breaks, it's a matter of bounces and it's a matter of working hard," Turner said. "I think it's going to come down to who wants it more."

The Minutemen will have to contend with the Wildcats' deep offensive firepower, which ranked second in Hockey East this season in goals per game (3.83). UNH exploded this past weekend by racking up an octet of goals in both of its playoff wins over UMass-Lowell. The River Hawks couldn't hang with the up-tempo style of hockey that New Hampshire employs on its wide-open surface, as the host Wildcats prevailed 8-4 in each game.

"They're really good offensively, they've got an array of guys that can cause problems," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

The Wildcats have 14 players on their roster with at least 10 points, led by the tandem of Lanny Gare (22 g, 27 a) and Colin Hemingway (20 g, 24 a).

But the real task in facing the Wildcats lies in cracking their sensational goalie Michael Ayers. The junior is in the midst of another jaw-dropping season, ranking third in the nation in goals against average (2.23) and save percentage (.925) while seeing action in all but one of his team's outings. Ayers was able to tame the UMass attack in the season series, allowing only four goals in the three-game set, including a 4-0 whitewash on Nov. 24. The Hingham, Mass. native accumulated five shutouts on the season.

"Ayers has been a real good goaltender, and they defend well in front of him, so [the question is] how do we get to him?" Cahoon said.

UMass, however, learned quickly this past weekend that it had an equally dependable netminder between the pipes. Freshman Gabe Winer, fighting a battle with tonsillitis, showed no signs of illness or jitters as he picked up two consecutive victories in his first postseason experience. Winer said that he had to stay in a clinic for most of Friday prior to Game 2, but the illness helped his emotions from becoming too out-of-control.

Winer made 51 of 56 stops on the weekend in being named Dinn Bros./UMass co-Athlete of the Week.

UMass will be entering the game brimming with confidence, despite being the clear underdog in the matchup. Two of the three contests between the teams were decided by one goal, including the Jan. 17 affair (a 2-1 OT win) in which a controversial penalty shot call gave the Wildcats the equalizer they needed to force the extra session.

"If we play a good 60 minutes against UNH and make sure that they don't score eight times again," junior Thomas Pock said with a laugh, "I think we'll have a fair shot. Anything's possible."

The Final Four

UNH WILDCATS™

National rank: 3
15-3-4 HE (1st place)
21-7-6 overall
Leading scorers:
Lanny Gare 21-25-46
Colin Hemingway 17-23-40
Steve Saviano 5-24-29

Head to Head: UNH 3-0-0

HOCKEY EAST™

UMass

National rank: NR
10-14-0 HE (6th place)
17-16-1 overall
Leading scorers:
Greg Mauldin 19-19-38
Stephen Werner 13-21-34
Thomas Pock 16-16-32

Hockey East Finals/Semifinals
Friday 3/14
Saturday 3/15
Fleet Center
Boston

BC™

National rank: 6
16-6-2 HE (2nd place)
21-9-4 overall
Leading scorers:
Ben Eaves 17-36-53
Tony Voce 20-21-41
Dave Spina 17-17-34

Head to Head: BC 3-1-0

BOSTON UNIVERSITY TERRIERS

National rank: 10
13-10-1 (5th place HE)
21-12-3 overall
Leading scorers:
Frantisek Skladany 11-20-31
Mark Mullen 11-13-24
John Sabo 10-13-25

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 70

SGA election countdown

Students in the Campus Center vote in the SGA elections. Voting was also held in the Dining Commons and the Newman Center. According to Yousef Munayyer Thursday night, the SGA elections were looking to be the closest in several years.

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association President and Student Trustee 2003 elections were the smoothest in years, according to SGA members. Voting closed yesterday afternoon. Ballot question results and complete president and trustee results will be posted today on the SGA website.

"I thought that they went really well," Speaker Dan Saunders said. "We had a really high student turnout, and I can't describe how good of a job Yousef Munayyer and his commissioners did. They pulled them off better than I've ever seen them done before."

Referendum questions addressed the Greek area and organized advocacy on behalf of the University of Massachusetts in Boston.

One question asked if freshmen should be allowed to live in pre-approved Greek community housing. The issue, previously addressed by the SGA, has been supported by many of the candidates who expressed a need to preserve the Greek area at UMass.

"I like the fact that the Greeks are a part of the commuter district, because it allows them more seats, making it more inclusive, and this has been a problem that has been coming up consistently," Presidential candidate Mark Morrison said. "As well as freshmen in their [Greek] houses, I feel that freshmen have a right to decide where they want live and if it's available. It's a great opportunity."

Another referendum question asked students whether they felt the need to have a paid position for someone to advocate for the UMass community at a statewide level.

Further questions have risen since the controversy surrounded over Governor Mitt Romney's proposal to change the UMass system. Discussions continued after Wednesday's UMass Board of Trustees meeting when student tuition fees were increased $1,000 for in-state students and $2,000 for those out of state.

"I don't feel that just one person should be advocating for us," Sophomore Caitlin Moses said. "We're already in a really poor state as it is, and though I think we do need more advocacy at a state level, I think our money should really be going to the University right now. I think students need to advocate more themselves and voice their opinions louder."

Last night, members of the Elections Commission counted votes to see where students' opinions lie with this year's referendum questions and their choice for student President and Trustee. However, information regarding the final outcome of the 2003 Presidential and Student Trustee elections was unavailable by print time.

"Everyone knew there were referendum questions on the ballot, but whether students voted on them, I'm not aware of yet," Munayyer said. "The elections ran very well, and I was very pleased with the voter turnout."

On the Net: http://www.UMass.edu/rso/sga/index.html.

SGA attends faculty senate

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association sent a representative to the Faculty Senate meeting last night for the first time in over two years.

During regular announcements, Ernest May, acting for absent presiding officer Jerome Mileur, asked for announcements from groups within the Senate, including the SGA President.

Unexpectedly, Brian Long, Secretary of University Policy, introduced himself to the Senate as a representative for Dave Carr, who was unable to attend because of the SGA's ongoing elections. Long announced he would "attempt to be here for every Faculty Senate meeting for the rest of the year, assuming I still have my job after elections."

Long said the SGA wanted more student involvement in Faculty Senate councils and committees. He added he was working hard to let students know what committees there are.

"In the last couple weeks, I've been pulling together lists of what council and committee spaces there are for students, hanging them on the wall in the SGA office and trying to get people to take notice," Long said.

When in attendance at the Senate, Long said he plans to use the announcement period (10 minutes is guaranteed at each meeting) to improve communications between the SGA and Senate.

"I'm here so we can have a first-person perspective, instead of just going on what the paper says," Long said.

Specifically, Long said he plans to announce what the SGA is working on and how they respond to or feel about motions the Senate is proposing, like that of the anti-smoking motion carried by the Senate in February.

Long told the Senate that the SGA had been unhappy with their approval of a smoking ban on campus, but said, "We'll take the blame, since we didn't have representation present at the time."

Long also announced what the SGA has recently accomplished. The SGA has been able to extend the curfew placed on outside dances and events, he said. Dances this spring can continue until 1 a.m. (as compared to last year's midnight). At the spring event in Southwest, entertainers Naughty by Nature will be allowed to play until midnight.

Additionally, the SGA hopes the Blue Wall bar will be brought back by the time students return from spring break.

"The purpose of the Blue Wall bar, as we see it, is to bring life back to the center of campus as well as to generate money, which we all know the University needs. The Campus Center is extremely underused," Long said.

Following Long's address, Ernest May commented on the SGA representative's message. "We always welcome student involvement," he said.

The Senate addressed the rest of their agenda following announcements, beginning with the nomination of May for reappointment to the office of Faculty Senate.

The position of Secretary is up for evaluation and renewal every three years. The Nominating Committee decided to continue May in the position because of his willingness and his "truly excellent performance during his tenure," said senator Richard Bogartz for the Committee.

The Senate will vote at their next meeting on March 27 to re-elect May. He is the only candidate.

The Senate moved to endorse the recommendations by the Research Library Council that the science and engineering libraries should become an integrated space, held in Lederle.

Senators stressed that this integration was not simply a matter of "moving books around." It would have to include an upgrade of the space and the technological reference systems used, they said.

"There are financial implications to this motion that suggest financing upgrades," said Joesph Donahue, an English professor and member of the Library Research Council.

Director of Libraries Margo Crist added to the motion that the upgrades would hopefully provide students with more and better study spaces than are currently available in either library separately.

"It's an investment in study space and longer hours at one facility," Crist said. "We're hoping to develop one very attractive useful facility for students, which is not currently available in the campus area."

The Senate concluded the meeting after approving the creation of an Academic Liaison group to create "appropriate solutions" to problems that have arisen with the Student Information Systems (SIS).

The next meeting of the Faculty Senate will be held in Herter 227 on March 27 at 3:30 p.m.

Chancellor Lombardi speaks at the Faculty Senate meeting.

UMass faculty sign Anti-War resolution

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts faculty is standing wholly behind an Anti-War resolution. The resolution is a formal opposition to the U.S. government's proposed war against Iraq on the basis that such a war is "unnecessary and unjustified." Faculty members approved the resolution at an all faculty meeting this past Tuesday.

The UMass resolution states that faculty members found a preemptive strike against Iraq would violate international law if it is not supported by the United Nations.

"We believe a strategy based on containment, deterrence and continued pressure via the United Nations is more effective, less costly and less likely to lead to massive civilian and military casualties," reads the statement.

Faculty also said they were concerned about "environmental degradation, large-scale human suffering and a costly, indefinite military occupation," that would likely result.

The UMass resolution states several reasons against the war, including a clause stating, "no clear connection has been shown between Al Qaeda and Hussein, nor any immediate threat of biological, chemical or nuclear warfare to the U.S. or our allies."

Instead, the faculty said they agreed with a Central Intelligence Agency report published in October 2002 that said a pre-emptive strike against Iraq would likely put the American people at risk of being victims of further terrorist attacks.

The resolution also states the war "threatens our civil liberties and academic freedom at home through the surveillance and legal penalties for anti-war activities imposed by the U.S. Patriot Act."

Relating the issue to members of the University community, the draft includes a push for "federal dollars [that] are desperately needed to support public education."

The billions of dollars that would be spent on the war would be better spent on social services, including education, particularly here at UMass, the resolution states.

Ronald Story, President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, was one member in attendance who supported the resolution. He stood alongside 40 other faculty members in attendance. Ann Ferguson, who edited the final draft of the resolution, organized the all faculty meeting. Though many faculty members could not attend the meeting because of conflicting lecture schedules, many contacted Story afterward to sign the resolution.

"I'd say as of 3 p.m. Wednesday, there were well over 100 supporters, with others coming in more or less as we speak," Story said.

Ernie May, secretary of the Faculty Senate, will be sending the resolution to President Bush and members of Congress. Further plans by faculty to oppose the war include an organizational meeting for a faculty antiwar group.

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7

STRONG POLITICANS
POLITICIANS NEED TO DEFINE THEIR STANCES
PAGE 4

POP-PUNK
NEW BANDS COMBINE GENRES
PAGE 5

BROWN AND UMASS
NEW ENGLAND RIVALS SET TO MEET
PAGE 8

Bush may drop resolution

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Forced into a diplomatic retreat, U.S. officials said Thursday that President Bush may withdraw his troubled U.N. resolution and fight Iraq without the international body's backing. France dismissed a compromise plan as an "automatic recourse to war."

Amid a swirl of recrimination and 11th-hour posturing, the administration reversed course and said a Security Council vote could be delayed until next week or not be held at all.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan raised the possibility of a summit of world leaders "to get us out of this crisis."

Iraq braced for war, lining the streets of Baghdad with fighting positions and foxholes, while the Pentagon moved B-2 Stealth bombers from Whiteman Air Force Base in Missouri to bases close to Iraq.

Saddam Hussein's government exulted in the diplomatic tumult over a U.S.-British backed resolution that would demand that Iraq disarm by Monday. "I don't think the United States will succeed," said Iraq Foreign Minister Naji Sabri.

Bush spent a fourth straight day on the telephone, consulting leaders of Britain, Bulgaria, South Korea and other nations about potential compromise.

But trouble loomed at every diplomatic turn.

Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern, visiting Bush at the White House, said, "If there is not a resolution, Ireland cannot engage in support of military action, because we work under the U.N. resolution."

Vice President Dick Cheney spoke by telephone with incoming Turkish Premier Recep Tayyip Erdogan, even as Turkey signaled that it wanted a U.N. resolution before allowing U.S. troops to invade Iraq from its borders.

The chief U.N. nuclear inspector urged the Security Council to compromise on proposed disarmament conditions for Iraq, with staggered deadlines and no ultimatum for war.

"I think there's a keen desire globally to do everything before resorting to war," Mohamed ElBaradei told The Associated Press.

In Baghdad, Sabri rejected a British compromise plan that would list six disarmament requirements Baghdad would have to meet or else face "serious consequences." Bush had signaled he would be willing to push back the March 17 deadline seven or 10 days if the gesture would help Blair.

Russia said it would consider the plan. China's U.N. ambassador Wang Yingfan said he doubted the plan could lead to consensus.

The French dismissed the effort outright, sparking a trans-Atlantic shouting match.

"We cannot accept the British proposals insofar as they are part of a logic of war, a logic of automatic recourse to war," said French Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said of France: "They rejected it before Iraq rejected it. If that isn't an unreasonable veto, what is?"

Bush, meanwhile, backpedaled on his pledge to have a U.N. vote by Friday. Fleischer told reporters a tally could slip beyond the weekend.

Aides said the president has pushed for a U.N. vote thus far out of respect for Blair, whose support of Bush has drawn severe criticism in Britain.

Continued on page 3

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What are you doing over Spring Break?"

By Emilie Duggan-Hicks

Kris Daly
Senior
Physics

"Hanging out on a warm beach with my girlfriend and a beer."

Chris Roberts
Freshman
Physics

"Going home to substitute teach."

J.P. Fowler
Senior
Psychology

"Going home to see my family."

Michael Troisi
Junior
Economics

"Going to Puffton Village! Because UMass is kicking me out!"

Amanda Angie
Senior
Psychology

"Well, I'm going to be here...but I'll be in Jersey for a while...not very exciting."

Nate Crawford
Freshman
Theater

"Going to Chicago to drink beer, see shows and do improv with Mission Improvable."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew J. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

www.dailycollegian.com

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!

Applicants should have some layout experience.

Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.

Hiring process begins April 14th!

Sprinkler law backed

By KEN MAGUIRE
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – A panel of lawmakers bolstered by the emotional testimony of family members who lost loved ones in last month's Rhode Island nightclub fire voted Thursday to require sprinklers and ban pyrotechnics in nightclubs.

"These kids would have been alive if there were sprinklers," said Al Gray, who lost his 22-year-old son, Derek, in the Feb. 20 fire that killed 99 people. "Please mandate sprinklers in these clubs. We need this."

The joint Public Safety Committee sent the legislation to the full House. If approved, all nightclubs and dance halls in Massachusetts would have until July 2004 to install sprinkler systems. Only arena-sized venues and traditional theaters would be allowed to use pyrotechnics.

Investigators say the fire at The Station was sparked by pyrotechnics ignited by the 1980s heavy metal band Great White. The nightclub didn't have to install sprinklers because of a grandfather clause excluding buildings constructed before 1976. Rhode Island officials are exploring similar legislation.

Exceptions to the ban would be venues such as the FleetCenter in Boston and the Worcester Centrum. State Fire Marshal Stephen Coan said pyrotechnics can be administered safely by licensed people.

"They're done all the time. They're done well. The big distinction is a professional conducting pyrotechnics in a professional venue, a large entertainment venue, versus a small wood-frame, unsprinklered nightclub," Coan said. "There clearly is a line of distinction and we've got to draw that."

A bill failed during the last legislative session that would have required sprinklers in commercial buildings. It was prompted by a Newton office fire in 2000 that killed five people. The fire marshal said lawmakers are showing renewed vigor.

"The victims that appeared before the committees sent a powerful message that this has to remain on the burner," said Coan, who testified that barring explosions, there are no known multiple-fatality fires in buildings with working sprinkler systems.

Installing sprinklers could cost club owners, landlords and commercial real estate companies millions of dollars, industry experts say.

Edwin J. Shanahan, chief executive of the Greater Boston Real Estate Board, pledged to work with lawmakers "in ways that consider realistically the physical constraints of existing buildings."

Under existing law, sprinklers are required when a newly constructed building is over 7,500 square feet. When a building is expanded, sprinklers are required in the addition if the new construction exceeds 7,500 square feet.

Other family members of victims of the Rhode Island fire, however, said cost should not be a factor.

'In the meadow we can build a snowman.'

A physical plant employee clears the sidewalk outside of Bartlett as snow blankets UMass again. The snow came as students departed for a weeklong Spring Break.

Questions surround a joyful reunion

DAVID J. PHILLIP/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ed Smart, father of Elizabeth Smart, is embraced by an unidentified woman before the start of his news conference Thursday in Salt Lake City.

By PATTY HENETZ
Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – For three months after Elizabeth Smart vanished from her bedroom in the middle of the night, she was camped in a canyon behind her home, achingly close to her anguished family, and at one point even heard her uncle calling out her name.

On Thursday, family and friends of the 15-year-old girl focused not on what could have been, but on the astounding event many of them are calling a miracle: Elizabeth, taken from her bed at knifepoint as she slept nine months ago, was home again, playing the harp and watching her favorite movie, "The Trouble with Angels," with her family.

"Elizabeth is happy, she is well, and we are so happy to have her back in our arms," said her beaming father, Ed Smart.

Amid the joyful reunion was a growing list of questions: What about the shaggy-haired drifter accused of kidnapping the girl? Why didn't police find him sooner? Above all, what happened to Elizabeth during the long span since she vanished last June?

Dressed in a wig, veil and sunglasses, Elizabeth Smart told the police officers who discovered her Wednesday in the Salt Lake City suburb of Sandy that her name was "Augustine." She said that the couple accompanying her – Brian Mitchell and his wife, Wanda Barzee – were her parents.

"We took her aside ... she kind of just blurted out, 'I know who you think I am. You guys think I'm that Elizabeth Smart girl who ran away.'" Officer Bill O'Neal said.

"Her heart was beating so hard you could see it through her chest," he added.

The group was taken to the Sandy police station in handcuffs.

Ed Smart said he had not pressed his daughter for details of her captivity.

"What is going to come out is going to come out," he said. "I don't have it in me to try and make this harder for her than it is."

Asked how she had changed, he said she had returned home "really a young woman."

Elizabeth was found when two couples called police after spotting Mitchell walking down the street. He and Barzee remained jailed Thursday on suspicion of aggravated kidnapping.

For much of the time she was gone, it now appears Elizabeth was hiding in plain sight, sometimes swathed in robes and veils.

The daughter of a faithful and affluent Mormon family apparently camped behind her home in Dry Creek Canyon, a popular hiking area searched many times last summer. Hours after she vanished, she heard an uncle, David Francom, calling her.

Another uncle, Tom Smart, said Elizabeth wasn't able to respond. "I don't know why," he said.

Elizabeth may also have spent time in an apartment a block from a Salt Lake City police station, and attended a party in the company of her apparent abductors. Authorities also say people recently spotted Mitchell walking the aisles of a San Diego-area grocery store in the company of two females.

Daniel Trotta, who says he unknowingly sheltered Elizabeth and the drifter couple in a Salt Lake City apartment for several days last fall, claims the girl never expressed fear and had opportunities to escape or at least call police.

Police have refused to confirm Trotta's account. A Smart family spokesman said Elizabeth never had a chance to slip away because she was always with Mitchell and Barzee.

Mitchell, a 49-year-old panhandler and self-proclaimed prophet for the homeless, was often seen in downtown Salt Lake City and sometimes lived in a tepee in the foothills above the city.

Police were besieged with thousands of tips and calls in the days after Elizabeth's disappearance. They focused much of their investigation on handyman Richard Ricci, 48, hired by the Smarts to help remodel their home.

Authorities said Ricci was a promising lead – he had an extensive criminal record and ultimately admitted stealing jewelry and other items from the Smarts. But Ricci steadfastly denied any involvement in Elizabeth's disappearance. He was in jail for a parole violation when he died last August after suffering a brain hemorrhage.

As the case grew cold, the Smart family grew frustrated at the lack of progress.

Their 10-year-old daughter, Mary Katherine, had offered a promising lead in mid-October. She told her parents another handyman who had worked at the house may have been the man she saw in the bedroom that night – Mitchell, the man now held in Elizabeth's disappearance.

On Thursday, Smart sounded forgiving of police. He had previously accused them of acting slowly in pursuing Mitchell and concentrating too much on Ricci. Now, he said, all that matters is Elizabeth's safe return.

"I believe that some mistakes have been made," he said. "But we learn by our mistakes and we move forward. I believe that they tried to do their best."

Smart acknowledged making one mistake himself – hiring Mitchell to work on his house in November 2001.

"When I was up there on the roof with him, I never could have guessed," Smart said. "He was so soft-spoken; he was so quiet. I never would have guessed that such an animal would have existed behind such a person."

Smart corrected an assumption authorities had made since the early days of the investigation: Elizabeth was taken at knifepoint, not gunpoint, he said. He added that the window screen of her room had been cut from the outside.

Bush may drop U.N. resolution

Continued from page 1

Bush and his advisers debated Thursday whether to press forward with the vote or withdraw the measure and pivot quickly to war footing. Bush has long planned to address the nation shortly after the U.N. debate is resolved and give Saddam a final ultimatum, probably including a deadline, for war.

"We are still talking to members of the council to see what is possible," Secretary of State Colin Powell said. The options under consideration include "to go for a vote and not to go for a vote," he added.

Bush said last week he wanted U.N. members to "show their cards" even if that meant the measure failed.

Interviews with several top administration officials suggested a growing number of advisers believe the resolution is doomed and they tend to want the president to cut his losses and withdraw it. Others still hold out hope for the measure.

The officials, all of whom spoke on condition of anonymity, agreed that a key is whether Blair wants Bush to give diplomacy another weekend.

In London, Iain Duncan Smith, leader of the opposition Conservative Party, emerged from a meeting with Blair to say the prime minister believed war was more likely because "the French have become completely intransigent."

Powell, testifying on Capitol Hill, said the "day of reckoning is fast approaching" for Iraq.

"The United States is committed to the disarmament of the Iraqi regime," Powell said. "We hope it'll be done peacefully. But if it's not done peacefully, the United States is prepared to lead a coalition of the willing that will do it."

He cited several allies that stand ready to back the United States if the U.N. won't, including Britain, Australia, Bulgaria, Italy, Spain, Japan and eight eastern European countries.

Bush had long been scheduled to attend a St. Patrick's Day celebration at Capitol Hill, but the trip was canceled at the last minute so he could work the phones. The White House also scuttled early planning for a potential European summit between Bush and Blair.

Correction:

The article covering the Student Government Association (SGA) should have read that the motion to request an amendment change to the MassPirg motion passed, and the resolution stayed in the main motion that was tabled for further debate.

QUESTIONS, COMMENTS, CONCERNS? EMAIL US AT NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Collegian is always looking for new writers. If you are interested in writing for News come down and ask for Dan, Amy, or Courtney.

CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-527-4223
Schedule for Friday 3/14/03 Thursday 3/20/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:15 7:05 9:45
AGENT CODY BANKS (PG) 1:50 4:25 7:05 9:40
WILLARD (PG13) 1:10 4:20 7:30 10:30*
YEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:05 4:45 7:35 10:20*
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:05 7:00 10:00*
CRADLE 2 THE GRAVE (R) 1:15 9:00
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 9:55
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:50 10:25
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:20 3:30 5:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 9:45
SHAOLIN KNIGHTS (PG13) 8:00
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:55 7:45 10:15
LOTR: THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 5:00
Senior Show 3/20/03 - YEARS OF THE SUN Begins at 10:00 Doors open at 9:15
- no passes/supersavers
*NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

FACULTY RESOLUTION

as well as a meeting today entitled, "Teaching Hope in a Time of Despair," led by Anthropology Professor Art Keene.

The UMass faculty resolution is similar to other recent anti-war resolutions approved by colleges around the country. Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire College and Williams College each signed resolutions. The University of Texas and the University of Michigan are two other state universities that have passed student government and faculty resolutions.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Politicians must stop pulling punches: The public has a clue

Bravo John Kerry. At a fund-raising event in Boston, the presidential contender faced up and swung at the incumbent. "Even the United States of America has to make some friends on this planet, and we'd better get about the business of doing so," Kerry said.

"We have gone from having the support and friendship of the world after Sept. 11 ... to seeing our power and our foreign policy become an object of protests and of scorn on every continent," the candidate said.

The Democrat continued his advance on President George W. Bush saying that war is still avoidable and that the administration has not exhausted diplomacy yet. He also criticized fellow Democrats for abandoning the party's typically liberal agenda.

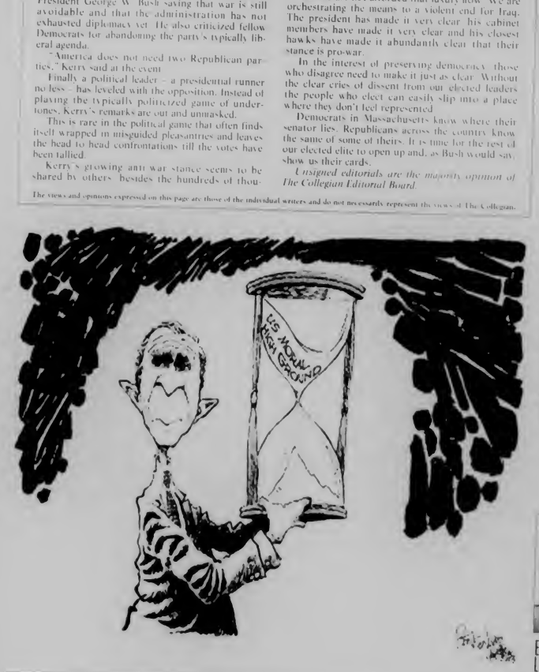
"America does not need two Republican parties," Kerry said at the event.

Finally a political leader – a presidential runner no less – has leveled with the opposition. Instead of playing the typically politicized game of undertones, Kerry's remarks are out and unmasked.

This is rare in the political game that often finds itself wrapped in misguided pleasantries and leaves the head to head confrontations till the votes have been tallied.

Kerry's growing anti-war stance seems to be shared by others besides the hundreds of thousands filling American streets against an Iraqi attack. politicians have coyly positioned themselves slightly left or right of center, rarely standing level across from their opposition.

In such a volatile scenario as the world finds itself in, it is important to let people know where the line can be drawn. At times of relative calm, times we do not find ourselves in now, a middle of the road position can help. If nothing else, it helps to assuage the bickering between candidates over pet legislation.



But we are not afforded that luxury now. We are orchestrating the means to a violent end for Iraq. The president has made it very clear his cabinet members have made it very clear and his closest hawks have made it abundantly clear that their stance is pro-war.

In the interest of preserving democracy, those who disagree need to make it just as clear. Without the clear cries of dissent from our elected leaders the people who elect can easily slip into a place where they don't feel represented.

Democrats in Massachusetts know where their senator lies. Republicans across the country know the same of some of theirs. It is time for the rest of our elected elite to open up and, as Bush would say, show us their cards.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Debauchery over decency on TV

Jonny Donaldson

Are you hot? Do you have a tight butt, a dazzling smile and mile deep dimples? If so, then you could very well be a contestant on the newest reality series ABC has coughed up for viewing enjoyment.

It's called "Are You Hot?: The Search for America's Sexiest People." It purports to be some sort of talent contest without the actual talent involved – unless the ability to have perfectly pert breasts is now considered a talent. The whole concept of the show has a pitiful parade of young, half-naked idiots strutting their stuff in front of a panel of "celebrity" judges who rate them on their sex appeal. That's it. No substance necessary.

Doesn't anyone else think this is wrong?

Thankfully, the answer may be a resounding "yes." See, the ratings for ABC's skankfest (the latest attempt to be FOX: The Next Generation) have been steadily slipping in the ratings. Major advertisers have been dropping out faster than a skydiver without a parachute. Audiences have been giving ABC a major sense they don't need this trash polluting the airwaves. Yet the question remains: Why was this concept even delivered in the first place?

To make a fair analysis of this flaming ball of garbage, I decided I had to actually sit down and watch it. Ten minutes into the first episode, I felt my brain dribbling out of my ears. My good God. I haven't seen so much ego and vanity on display since ...well, ever. The sheer shallowness of these people left me shocked and astounded and a little bit scared too. It isn't often I'm left curled into a fetal position in the corner, naked and crying.

So it's a nice surprise to hear I'm not the only person rejecting this concept, yet it should never have reared its ugly head to begin with. ABC, the former family network, has joined its cronies at NBC and FOX by shredding and decimating our national moral fabric. Shows like "Are You Hot?" and magazines such as FHM and Maxim further perpetuate the belief that image is to be valued over anything else, while NBC's reality dreck (i.e. "Fear Factor") juices so-called entertainment from cruelty. All I have to ask is: what happened to common decency?

The world as we know it has turned into a place where image and self-absorption rule. We are bombarded with these sights of girls turned into living blow-up dolls, of men who don't yearn to be anything other then a muscular system. Don't the ABC suits realize that airing a show in which people are valued only on their looks is a dangerous thing to air in a time when bulimia, anorexia and cosmetic surgery are lurking in the shadows, waiting to strike at some poor insecure teenager? The women are perfect. The men are hunky. The neurotics are questioning their validity in the world.

"We are bombarded with these sights of girls turned into living blow-up dolls, of men who don't yearn to be anything other than a muscular system."

Men drool over Pamela Anderson's volleyball-like endowments, and women melt over Vin Diesel's ripped torso. But what happens to those who aren't hot enough for "Are You Hot?" Apparently, we are worthless and should not be respected and/or validated.

The winners will no doubt be a shaved chest himbo that manages to be even more personality-deficient than Joe Millionaire and a blond girl with big silicone breasts. The two of them together will have the IQ of a peanut, and not one bit of substance. Sadly, this is what is presented as the ideal. And, you know what, I'm personally sick of the "Girls Gone Wild" girls swinging their breasts around for the public to see. I'd rather be with a girl who has confidence in herself rather than a girl who courts STDs the same way Michael Jackson courts controversy.

It's unfair to shred men's magazines for the loss of things that were once known as values. No, some of the blame can go to "Fear Factor" and its ilk. See, it's not just sex and image that our lovely media peddle to us on a nightly basis. We get cruelty, humility and ignorance too. We get a crusty Brit squashing young peoples' dreams in the most degrading manner on "American Idol." We get people being physical torturted for fun and entertainment on "Fear Factor." (Don't try to give me any BS about the fact that they are doing it themselves. They are asked to do it in the first place. That is offensive to begin with.) The institutes of marriage and love are mocked with "The Bachelor" and "Temptation Island."

I'm not looking for a return to puritanical values, just in case any of you were thinking of me as some sort of conservative Republican jerk. (Don't even go there: I'm a liberal Independent.) I just want a return to a time when values and decency actually had a place in the world. A time when people wore clothing, avoided crashing each other's dreams and didn't prey on the lack of confidence in others. But we lap this stuff up and ask for more. Is it too much to ask for some of the tatters of humanity to have some sort of ethical guidance? Apparently it is.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian Columnist.

It's gettin' hot in here

Erika Lovley

It's the most academically insane week of the spring semester. I have had four tests, three papers and two lab reports due this week alone. I'm getting heated.

I'm not ready to do anything drastic, such as set fire to the all the Scan-Tron sheets within my reach. I'm just hot.

This past weekend was so perfect. On Friday, I went to Boston and hung out with some of my favorite friends. Naturally, we all got no sleep and stayed up until four in the morning. To top it all off, I had an 8 a.m. bus to catch back to Amherst. Oops. Saturday was ideal for snowboarding conditions, so I hit the slopes, powered by Diet Coke and a Dunkaccino. I was exhausted by Sunday. However, the weather was so nice, I just had to go on an eight-mile run.

Best of all, my usually frigid room was as balmy as the campus greenhouse. I was finally able to don my Paul Frank pajama shorts and matching tank top for bedtime, rather than the usual fur lined parka. I didn't take into account my roommate was still going to bed with her mittens on, but she usually does run cold. Little did I know what was really in store.

Becoming sick on your own for the first time is a daunting event. First of all, my mother is always the illness expert. Her diagnosis overrules that of the school nurse and even the family doctor. She knows how to treat every bodily ailment from a stuffy nose to green hair (a chronic summertime ailment of blondes who like chlorine pools). Alone in my room, there was no one to fetch me water, make me food or remind me to take my medicine.

"'Daddy!' I yelled, charging toward him. I was soon face to face with the 40-year-old janitor..."

Now in college, I was aware I was suffering from a simple fever, but I had no idea what to do about it. My skin felt hot, but my body was making me believe I was in a -50 degree wind chill. What does a girl do? Does she cave into her bed and hibernate under the blankets? Or does she shiver under a cold shower and force cold fluids down her throat? Due to my lack of medical knowledge, a fear of going to the Health Center for the first time and my refusal to mar my perfect class attendance record, I experienced the most interesting period of illness in my life.

It wasn't until morning that I realized my rising internal thermometer was going to make daily life much more embarrassing than usual.

Stumbling out of bed in an overheated haze, I proceeded to head to the showers. To my horror, there was my father, standing in my dorm hall. I had no idea why he had come to visit me or how he had gained entrance to my dorm at such an hour, but I was furious. "Daddy!" I yelled, charging toward him.

I was soon face to face with the 40-year-old janitor, who gave me a huge smile and winked at me. Talk about your rude awakening. While getting dressed, I managed to put on my underwear upside down and backwards. My true fashion tastes were shining through. Later, my fever forced me to spend my class time daydreaming.

During my biology lecture, I busily scribbled the most amazing scientific theories in my notebook. Reviewing my notes a few hours later, I realized my most brilliant idea had been, "People get fat because they eat too much."

I decided that pain reliever might alleviate the steady increase of my brain temperature. Soon afterward, a horrid taste filled my mouth. I realized I was busily chewing on my Tylenol dosage ... the non-chewable type. I tried to take a nap, but I was roused several times by the sound of barking dogs. I became excited, convinced that the barking was my Labrador retrievers Sam and Hershey. However, I was dismayed to discover the racket was my dorm neighbor, suffering from a nasty case of smokers' cough, busily spewing his lungs onto the floor.

I knew I was pretty sick, so I promised everyone I wouldn't go to any more classes. I vowed to my roommate, my friend Melissa, the MassPIRG representative who called and even my alarm clock. Nevertheless, I later found myself slouching at a desk in journalism class, dutifully taking notes on Citizen Kane and attempting to prevent the spontaneous combustion of my clothes with my incinerating body heat.

It's been almost five days, and I'm still burning up. Maybe this misery could've been prevented. Perhaps I shouldn't have eaten my Powerbar breakfast with my fingers on the bus ride home. Perhaps if I was not a pre-med/journalism major who retains more knowledge about biology and grammar than common sense, I wouldn't feel so under the weather.

For all of you out there who are feeling the heat before the Spring Break beaches are anywhere in sight, do yourselves a favor. It's going to break your heart, but skip the classes, stay in bed and get better. You'd rather be in Cancun than in Huenza next week. Trust me.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian Columnist.

Letter to the Editor:

Mediating from the middle

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Michael McMahon's article entitled "Fighting an Illegal War" published Thursday, March 12. In his opinion piece, Mr. McMahon addresses America's foreign policy toward the Middle East in light of its oil interests in the process of his argument. Mr. McMahon makes certain misstatements and professes certain half-truths, which I hope to clarify.

Mr. McMahon claims that the Palestinian uprising, also known as the Intifada, was instigated by the refusal of the United States to support a sizable state for the Palestinians. First, the United States has specifically set out to help create a lasting peace between Israelis and Palestinians and has in fact hosted such peace talks as the Camp David Accords. No one can deny that the United States and Israel have a mutually beneficial relationship, but that relationship in no way precludes U.S. opposition to a Palestinian state.

President Bush has recognized, however, that the realization of a Palestinian state cannot and will not occur under the so-called leadership of Yasser Arafat. This man who himself is not even a Palestinian (born and raised in Egypt), has hoarded the tremendous amounts of monies sent to the PLO and Palestinian Authority by the rest of the world and kept it from his people. Yes, there are Palestinian people suffering from poverty and destitution, but it must be acknowledged that much of this is caused by Yasser Arafat himself.

Why then, is it in Arafat's interest to suppress his own people? He believes, as do terrorist organizations, such as the infamous Hamas and others, that any Palestinian state must include the entirety of what is currently the state of Israel. He believes wholeheartedly in the Hamas' motto of driving the Jews into the sea. Therefore, he must keep his people impoverished so that he can manipulate them and thrust all the blame onto Israel. He needs pawns for his cause.

Mr. McMahon goes on to state, "... in 1967 Israel destroyed the forces of Egypt, Syria and Jordan in the process of its argument."

He conveniently forgets to mention the context of the 1967 war. First Israel had been enduring numerous attacks from its Arab neighbors in the years leading up to the war – 35 in 1965, 41 in 1966 and another 37 in the first four months of 1967. On May 15, 1967 Egyptian troops moved into the Sinai, collecting around Israel's border. Three days later, Syrian troops readied themselves for battle along Israel's northern border.

Egypt's leader, Nasser, ordered the U.N. Emergency force to leave the Sinai Peninsula, and they complied without the consent of the General Assembly. Nasser continually threatened Israel, saying, "Our basic objective will be the destruction of Israel. The Arab people want to fight," on May 27. A day later he added, "We will not accept any ... coexistence with Israel ... Today the issue is not the establishment of peace between the Arab states and Israel ... The war with Israel is in effect since 1948."

By June 4, 1967 about 250,000 troops, 2,000 tanks and 700 aircraft surrounded Israel. In addition, the U.S. State Department proclaimed, "Our position [in an ensuing conflict in Israel] is neutral in thought, word and deed." More than that, President Johnson imposed an arms embargo on the region, as did France on Israel (a major arms supplier for Israel). It is clear that the 1967 war was provoked by the other Arab states and that Israel's so-called pre-emptive strike was no more than a defensive measure.

Finally, Mr. McMahon mentioned U.N. resolutions, calling for Israel's withdrawal from territories captured during the 1967 war. Just to clarify, the U.N. resolution to which he is referring is U.N. Security Council Resolution 242, which states that peace in the Middle East must include "Withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict." This statement deliberately says "territories" and not "all territories," as the United Nations recognized that in order for Israel to keep itself safe and secure, further occupation of certain territories may be necessary. As a result of Resolution 242, Israel withdrew from 91 percent of the territories it captured during the 1967 was and ceded them back to Egypt.

I recently attended a meeting of the Palestine Action Coalition here on campus at which the final audience comment was along these lines: Extremists on both sides of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict fuel each other to a certain extent, and if only the moderate majorities could come together and work for peace, it would come much sooner and with much less death.

Rational people on both sides of the conflict want peace. Let's understand the past and move forward with that understanding to an empowerment of the moderates who want a true and lasting peace.

Ben Nathan
UMass Student

Submit a letter or opinion

editorial@dailycollegian.com

(413) 545-1592

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Punk goes pop: new genre is flavor of the week

Teen pop fans are all grown up

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
Collegian Staff

It's official: we are in the midst of another new musical trend. Yesterday's teen-pop loving fans have finally grown up, shedding away the urge to listen to sugary, tooth rotting bubblegum and its evil, bloated alter ego, nü-metal. Today's teens have now discovered (or, rather rediscovered) the comparatively lean genre of pop-punk: post Green Day.

It seems that not a week goes by when at least five new poppy, punky, blink-182 worshipping rock bands churn out a new CD. IRL now houses the likes of Simple Plan and The All-American Rejects rather then the blond, bland likes of Jessica Simpson and Willa Ford. Not that these bands necessarily try to distinguish themselves from each other, or even the boy bands who were once stables of young girls' dreams.

Punk music has now been polished and scrubbed clean. Simple Plan may not be anything more than N'sync with tattoos and guitars. The raucous, freewheeling energy of even a band like the Ramones, who were among the first to add pop to punk, is turned into nice, cute little product that won't offend anyone – least of all the 14-year-old girls who hang Good Charlotte posters on their wall.

This isn't necessarily a bad thing. Even N'Sync, when they hit, produced a few notable gems (i.e. the two-stepping bounce of "Pop.") And compared with the ugly, ungainly likes of Limp Bizkit and Godsmack, today's current pop-punk boom sounds like musical genius. The music is fast and catchy, the bands barreling through songs in the time it takes to blink. If it seems a little too polished, and Pro-Tooled at times, then that's something I could live with.

Except there's one slight problem. The overwhelming flood of similar minded artists turns the genre into a swamp of mindless fad-hopping. It's actually gotten to the point where modern pop-punk is developing a backlash of its own. It's hard not to see why. The familiarity of it has gotten wearying, even to a long stated fan as myself. The melodies sound the same, the lyrics cover the same "she broke my heart" territory, the singers even whine in the same way. I just listened to the debut album of a band named Lucky 7, released last year, and on the first listen it was as familiar as my New Found Glory CD on the 30th listen. It may be some sort of warning sign when music has gotten so common that you can sing the songs before you even hear them.

Count the Stars is a good way to sum everything that's right and wrong about current punk-pop music. "Never Be Taken Alive," the quartet's debut for Victory Records, sounds much like a dozen other bands that can be named off the top of my head. From the opening strains of "Brand New Skin" to the closing moments of "All Good Things," Count the Stars recall the work of Jimmy Eat World, Good Charlotte, et al. Everything about "Never Be Taken Alive" seems handed down – even the guys themselves look like they should be in a punk band, their hair gelled in the right way. Still, this young group at least knows how to use the parts they borrow and reassemble for their own gain. Hooks seep in from every conceivable direction possible; multiple listens may be required to have a full appreciation. Still, Count the Stars may be more suited for non-discriminating fans, rather than dabblers or purists.

American Hi-Fi borrows liberally, too, but with one catch – they steal from older and more respected sources. On sophomore effort "The Art of Losing" they glean nuggets from bands ranging from the Pixies to Adam and the Ants. The "hey ho, let's go" line from the title track is pure Ramones, while beloved songs like "Crimson and Clover" and "Kids in America" get name checked.

"The Art of Losing" is light years ahead of the Boston-based groups' self-titled debut. That rather weak soup of Foo Fighters, Lit and Everclear produced a hit single – the ironically, and dangerously, titled "Flavor of the Week" – that put AHF on the train to one-hit wonderland. But constant touring sharpened the bands precision, and the decision to record "The Art of Losing" live in the studio, without editing, gives AHF a rawer, more naturalistic feel then they once had. Singer Stacy Jones wraps his snot-nosed vocals around the traditional rebellion and heart break songs, yet the band burrows along with pummeling speed. Garage rock, hardcore, pop-punk and straight up rock are thrown into a blender, along with a good helping of humor, Jones' ordering of an ex to stay away from the Standard Bar (she can keep the dog) is both funny and rings with more truth then usual.

The Movielife's profile has been quickly rising in the punk world. "Forty Hours Back to Penn" has a harsher, more oppressive sound the relatively sunny dispositions of New Found Glory, etc. This is punk-pop with a rain cloud hanging over it, music just steps away from falling into hardcore territory. "Penn" is a hard, rocky environment to walk through full of jagged edges and steep precipices. Its not as sweet tasting as AHF, nor as head-bobbingly catchy as Count the Stars. It is a serious attempt to make punk-pop that doesn't sound as utterly generic as the rest. It succeeds at that task, but musically its hit and miss. The Movielife lack much to make them memorable, even if they are different. At least Count the Stars, as familiar as they sound, throw in some hooks to remember them by.

Count the Stars are reminicent of Jimmy Eat World on their freshman release.

Punk is making a comeback in mainstream music through groups like The Movielife, American Hi Fi and Count the Stars.

Daytime Emmy nominations announced on `The View' - which earns nod

By FRAZIER MOORE
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – It's "all my nominations" for "All My Children," whose crop of 17 exceeds every other show on daytime TV.

Although it missed out in the major categories of best drama, actress and actor, the ABC soap led the pack when the Daytime Emmy Awards nominations were announced Wednesday.

Right behind, with 14 nominations, was CBS' "Guiding Light," and PBS' long-running kids' show, "Sesame Street," with 13.

Among the networks, ABC snagged 59 nominations, with CBS notching 52 and PBS 47.

Major categories were announced live on "The View," which stirred up tension for the ABC chat show, which itself was bucking to be among the series acknowledged.

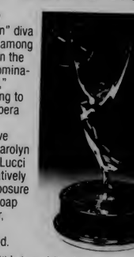
"If we are not nominated, this could be one of the most embarrassing moments on The View'," Barbara Walters told her co-hosts. "And, on this show, that is saying a lot."

"The View" collected nominations in the categories of talk show and talk show host (for Walters, Meredith Vieira, Star Jones, Joy Behar and the now departed Lisa Ling). It has never captured an Emmy.

Last year's winner for best drama, "One Life to Live," was shut out as nominations were claimed by "The Young and the Restless," "As the World Turns," "The Bold and the Beautiful" and "Port Charles."

Newcomers Dr. Phil McGraw and Wayne Brady were among those in the talk show host category, with their respective talk shows also getting nominations.

Last year's winner in the game or audience participation category – "Jeopardy!" – was joined by "The Price is Right," "Hollywood Squares," "Wheel of Fortune" and "Win Ben Stein's Money."



Last year's winner for best actress in a drama series, Susan Flannery of "The Bold and the Beautiful," was nominated along with Nancy Lee Grahn ("General Hospital"), Kim Zimmer ("Guiding Light"), Eileen Davidson ("The Young and the Restless") and Michelle Stafford ("The Young and the Restless").

For lead actor in a drama series, the nominees were Maurice Benard ("General Hospital"), Anthony Geary ("General Hospital"), Ricky Paull Goldin ("Guiding Light"), Grant Aleksander ("Guiding Light"), Thorsten Kaye ("Port Charles") and Doug Davidson ("The Young and the Restless").

And why was the oft-nominated Susan Lucci missing from that roster? The "All My Children" diva wasn't among those on the "pre-nomination list," according to Soap Opera Weekly Executive Editor Carolyn Hinsey. Lucci had relatively little exposure on the soap last year, Hinsey explained.

"The 30th Annual Daytime Emmy Awards" will be given out by the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences on May 16 in a prime-time ceremony at Radio City Music Hall televised by ABC.

Entertainment briefs: Chris Rock, Eminem, and Amelia Earhart

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Chris Rock, whose edgy humor propelled him from standup comic to movie star, now has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

"I think I'm as qualified to walk over as anybody else," Rock joked Wednesday before a crowd of about 300 people that included actor David Spade, his former "Saturday Night Live" colleague.

The 37-year-old star of "The Chris Rock Show," which aired for four seasons on HBO, combined humble thanks with some of his trademark humor in remarks at the ceremony along Hollywood Boulevard.

Rock has been featured in several films, including "Dogma," "Down to Earth" and "Bad Company." He's directing for the first time with "Head of State," a movie in which he stars as a presidential candidate. The movie opens March 28.

DETROIT (AP) – A party in honor of the DVD release of "8 Mile" wouldn't be complete without an appearance from Eminem and rap battling.

On Thursday, Slim Shady himself is hosting the "8 Mile DVD Launch Party" at St. Andrews Hall in Detroit. Hip-hop artists D12 and Xzibit are slated to perform.

The DVD of the 2002 hip-hop drama starring Eminem, Kim Basinger, Mekhi Phifer and Brittany Murphy will be released Tuesday.

Leading up to the event, radio stations around the nation have been holding freestyle rap battle contests.

Eminem , star of "8 Mile" is hosting a DVD launch party.

The winners from each market are being flown to Detroit to attend the party and will face off in a national rap battle hosted by Phifer and Proof from D12.

The winner will be awarded the opportunity to record a demo tape at the Record Plant Recording Studios in Hollywood, Calif.

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) – Purdue University has opened to the public a collection of love letters, flight logs and other personal memorabilia of vanished aviator Amelia Earhart.

The items that went on display Monday are among about 500 donated by Earhart's family last spring, bringing the university's total collection to more than 5,000 items.

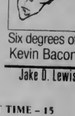
Sally Putnam Chapman, an Earhart biographer and granddaughter of Earhart's husband, George Palmer Putnam, kicked off the Flight Trails exhibit with a lecture that drew about 500 listeners.

Chapman used much of the collection during research for a 1997 biography of Earhart.

Earhart was a women's career counselor and visiting instructor at Purdue from 1935-37. The plane she flew on her doomed around-the-world flight in 1937 was funded, in part, by the Purdue Research Foundation.

Radio contact with that plane was lost over the South Pacific. Neither Earhart, her navigator nor their plane was ever found.

Correction:
In yesterday's 75th Annual Academy Awards coverage, The Collegian reported the Oscar awards ceremony will air on Sunday, March 23 on CBS. This is inaccurate information. The ceremony will air on ABC on March 23 at 8:30 p.m.



Game three; round one

CHAIN REACTIONS

Last week's puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & LAURA DERN

A slight technical error on my part led to a less-than accurate solutions page on Monday. Here is the correct winner of the "KEVIN BACON & LAURA DERN" puzzle round:

This week, I tried to pull a trick over on the players, but many caught on and figured out Kevin Bacon played an UNCREDITED role in a lesser-known movie with last week's puzzle person. Check out the Gold Solution for the answer, and bravo to those who were able to see through the foolery.

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

Jake D. Lewis

GOLD ANSWER: FASTEST ROUTE, SHORTEST TIME – 15 POINTS
Laura Dern was in "Novocaine" (2000) with Kevin Bacon.
Submitted by Marty Norden
UMass Communications Faculty
Total Accumulated Points: 18

Game two will conclude on April 25. Get ready for more Kevin Bacon action following Spring Break.

No break for Lax

Continued from page 8

The Bears are a talented squad, led by All-American Jon Thompson on attack. They defeated Vermont 7-6 in overtime in the season opener in a game where Brown had to play the game on Warner Roof.

"They have some really strong players," Canella said. "Their attack is outstanding – Jon Thompson, Brian Miller, Chris Mucciolo – they have one of the best young middies that's out there – Chazz Woodson. I think they have one of the better goalies [Mike Levin], not only in New England, but in the country. We're going to have to play well. We're going to have to play excited."

The Minutemen will be bolstered by the emergence of ECAC Rookie of the Week Sean Morris, who notched a hat trick in his first career game – last Saturday's 10-9 victory over Navy.

"I was impressed with him, but we've known since he stepped on campus last year that he could do it," Canella said. "He was just waiting for his opportunity to play, and he took advantage of it."

The one element of spring break that the Minutemen will not take advantage of will be time to relax. Some interesting scheduling means that the Minutemen will play four games – against Brown, Hartford, Albany and Hofstra – over the course of eight days.

"It's hard physically. It's hard mentally. It's hard to prepare mentally as coaches," Canella said. "It's spring break, so we're just giving the kids a chance to play games rather than practice during the week."

Injuries no excuse for Damon likes Damon the baseball player, and Damon the person.

"He's a great kid and he loves to play," Pesky said. "Damon's an exceptional kid who works on everything he needs to and he plays center field as well as anyone we've ever had here."

Damon is generally considered one of the team's most affable players, and open to constructive criticism.

"I feel I can talk one-on-one with him," Pesky said. "I'll make suggestions and he'll listen. He's that kind of kid."

His teammates hold him in the highest respect.

"Johnny's what we call a gamer," catcher Jason Varitek said. "He's not only a great player, he's a gamer and not too many guys have both those attached to their name. He does so many different things. He can beat you with speed, and then again he can beat you with the pop in his bat.

"He's got a lot of dimensions to his game."

Damon's value to the team was apparent during a recent spring training game against the Toronto Blue Jays. He made two running catches in the outfield, stole two bases, and scored after each stolen base.

"He's not bothered by knee problems he had last season and he showed what he can do when he's healthy," manager Gray Little said after the game.

The Red Sox won 93 games last year, a number that would be good enough to get in the playoffs in most years, but failed off after a 40-17 start. Damon thinks this year's team is stronger.

"This is a good team, with a lot of experience in the ballpen, a lot of depth in the field and depth in the pitching staff," he said. "The ballpen is a factor in stopping all those one-run games we were losing last year."

Uecker moves to front row

By KEN WALKER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bob Uecker finally made it to the front row – in Cooperstown.

The longtime Milwaukee Brewers' announcer was picked Thursday for induction into the broadcasters' wing at the Hall of Fame. He parlayed humor about his career as a backup catcher into popularity far beyond baseball.

"When I got the call this morning, the first thing I thought was, 'Am I going to be in the regular ceremony or are they going to do something in December?'" Uecker said.

He'll be at the big one, all right, to get the Ford C. Frick Award. He'll join former players Eddie Murray and Gary Carter and Dayton Daily News writer Hal McCoy for the festivities in Cooperstown, N.Y., on July 27.

The 68-year-old Uecker will get a prime seat, too, right up there on the podium with the likes of Willie Mays, Hank Aaron, Stan Musial.

"Some of those guys were in games I played in – or sat in," Uecker kidded on a conference call. "This has got to be a first, letting a guy like me in there."

Not bad for someone who hit .200 with 14 home runs and 74 RBIs in six seasons, and was on the 1964 St. Louis team that won the World Series. But it was his humor that zoomed him to national prominence, and he turned his jokes into starring roles on television and the movies.

His line – "Must be in the front row!" – in a beer commercial where he gets shunted from the box seats to the bleachers became a national catchphrase.

At Miller Park where the Brewers play, the team sells "Uecker Seats" – high in the upper deck and obstructed, they go for $1.

His wry description on a wayward pitch – "luuuust a bit outside!" – in the movie "Major League" is still often-repeated by announcers and fans at ballparks all over.

Uecker joined the Brewers' broadcast team in 1971, back when current commissioner Bud Selig owned the team. They had been friends for a long time and Selig wanted him to work for the Brewers, but didn't have an immediate opening for an announcer.

"So I hired him as a scout," Selig recalled Thursday. "We sent him up to the Northern League and the next thing I know (general manager) Frank Lane comes raging into my office, asking what kind of scout I'd hired. I wasn't sure what he meant, and then he threw down Bob's scouting report. It was covered with mashed potatoes and gravy."

Earlier this month during an exhibition broadcast, Uecker spotted Selig in the press box and pulled him into the booth with a hearty, "Hey, Buddy!"

"He's got a great voice, a great delivery," Selig said. "Bob Uecker is the Brewers."

Despite his reputation as funnyman, enhanced by a top role in the TV show "Mr. Belvedere" and about 100 appearance on Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show," Uecker is much different on the radio.

His broadcasts rarely include the standup humor that has made his a favorite on the banquet circuit, and he's known for being self-effacing.

"When I sit down to work, I'm doing a straight broadcast. Fans don't want to hear some guy telling jokes and getting in the way of a game," he said.

Not that he doesn't punctuate his calls with anecdotes.

"A couple of times, I've come out of the game early and heard him on the speaker in the clubhouse," Brewers' slugger Richie Sexson said before Thursday's exhibition game against Texas. "He's awesome, he's Mr. Baseball. He's the nicest person you'll ever meet."

Cahoon is Coach of the Year

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team now has some serious hardware for the Mullins Center mantel.

Just one day after freshman netminder Gabe Winer was awarded Hockey East Rookie of the Week, Coach Don Cahoon was given the Coach of the Year award at last night's Hockey East Commissioner's Banquet.

In what was undisputably the best season in the program's history, Cahoon led his troops to a 17-16-1 record in the regular season, which included stunning wins over Boston University and Maine.

Cahoon, in just his third year at the helm of the Maroon and White, became the first UMass coach to win the award. New Hampshire's Dick Umile, who won the award in 1999, was the runner-up. Umile's Wildcats will square off with the Minutemen tonight at the Fleet.

Including the playoffs, Cahoon has coached the Minutemen to 19 wins, the second-best total in the history of the program, and the most since it joined Hockey East in 1994.

Cahoon has amassed a record of 35-62-7 in his three years at Amherst. But this season was by far the most successful for the program. After winning just eight games in each of the previous two seasons, the Minutemen established themselves as a playoff contender, and earned the sixth seed heading into the Hockey East tournament.

UMass showed early signs of brilliance. It defeated Boston University on Dec. 6 in an exciting overtime finish. Two-and-a-half months later, the team responded to "white out Maine" night at the Mullins Center, defeating the Black Bears 4-2 in front of a raucous crowd of 5,084 – the eighth-largest crowd in the history of the arena. As it turned out, the victory was a prelude to the quarterfinal round matchup in Orono.

The Minutemen then traveled to Alfond Arena, home of the Black Bears, and swept the series, 2-0. It was the first time Maine had ever lost a playoff game at Alfond, and it gave the Minutemen their first-ever trip to the Fleetcenter for the semifinal round of the Hockey East Playoffs.

Junior Thomas Pock, sophomore Greg Mauldin, and freshman Stephen Werner were also recognized at the banquet. Pock was named to the All-Conference second team. Mauldin was given an honorable mention nod, and Werner was a unanimous selection for the All-Rookie team.

The end of perfection

Villanova's Trish Jolhine (11) drives against the defense of Connecticut's Ashley Battle in the second half of the Big East Women's Basketball Championship game, Tuesday, March 11 in Piscataway, N.J. Villanova upset No. 1 ranked UConn, 52-48. Jolhine scored 18 points in the win.

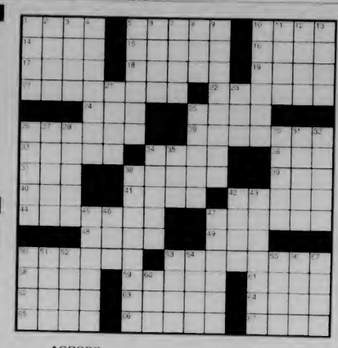
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN WISHES EVERYONE A GREAT SPRING BREAK!

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

ELSIE HOOPER • BY ROBERT D. KRYZKOWSKI



JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • BY MARK VELARD

VALLEY OF THE SQUIRRELS • BY COMRAD X

ACROSS

1 Cyberspace fan
5 Spiral
10 Cabbage Patch
11 Coolidge feature
14 Yard-lumber
15 Medical care
16 Blended whiskey
17 Fails to keep up
18 Backside decoration
19 Golf clubs
20 Barnyard
21 Tee sign
23 Email to oneself
26 Magician of film
28 Wiping marbles
29 Fixed part
31 Dining preference
34 Cabernet producer
36 Gladiator's helper
37 Joust
38 Cow vocalizer
39 Bungalow
40 Gumbo
41 Head honcho
42 Knife cream
44 Gumshoes
46 Sandstone
47 Tom Cruise's mate
49 Mimic
50 Adjective form
51 Help pay
53 Dig up
58 Bath wrapper
59 Oblique
61 Beauty or Wrinkles
62 Chimney
64 Wynonna's mom
65 Tach measure
66 Wishy-this
67 Inconsequential
68 Columbus port
69 Attached

DOWN

1 West Coast sch.
2 Musical chairs goal
3 Uptight
4 Lull
5 Cowboys' boss
6 Zhivago's beloved
7 Twofold
8 Home exhibition
9 Tea snack
10 Fondue
11 Thin strands
12 Goal-deprived
13 Is, in Madrid
21 Like summer
22 Santa ___ Cal.
25 Dizzy bunches
26 Stupidity
27 Years of 2,000
28 Fight locale
30 Sound's opposite
31 Happening
32 Ball-strike
33 Lady
34 Unfastened
35 Decoder dial
36 Dental unit
37 Ump
41 Found out
42 Bedframe
43 Last letter
45 Awhile
47 Turban
48 Preventive
50 Wheelhand name
52 Sally
54 Tube
55 Babydoll
56 Beyond
57 Dictation
58 Excursion
60 Cabinetful
62 Cauldron
63 Mr. West

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

QUOTE OF THE DAY

James Leer: That's a big trunk. It fits a tuba, a suitcase, a dead dog, and a garment bag almost perfectly. Grady Tripp: That's just what they used to say in the ads. - Wonder Boys

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
- High: 32
- Low: 20

SATURDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 29

SUNDAY
- High: 52
- Low: 43

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Fish Nuggets
- Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

DINNER
- Vegetarian Vegetable Soup
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Chef's Choice
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan-Hicks

COPY EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak

PRODUCTION STAFF
Julene Rousseau / Adam Shane

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Put yourself into the running for something spectacular today, and hope for the best.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
A little excitement goes a long way, today. In fact, you may be more in the mood for risks today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Keep plugging away at that stubborn problem, and you'll work it out by day's end.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Organization may not be the key to success today. Perhaps it is best to "wing it."

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't depend on others today. Do something for yourself.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You have what it takes – but you must resist the temptation to take what others have.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You may be unusually sensitive today, and yet, toward the afternoon, you still have to face and obstacle.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your energy is likely to wax and wane all day, but when the time comes, you should be up to snuff.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You do not want to be wasting time now; once you get started today, you must be efficient in all you do.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Duties and responsibilities may take you far from home today. You may want to have some company.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You will find yourself going off-course a few times today, but you can quickly get yourself back on track.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You can delight your family and friends with your antics today, provided you keep things light and lively.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Get Greek Stuff F.A.S.T! Group orders get great discounts. Lettering, embroidery, novelties. Visit on-line at Connectsports.com 1-800-928-1897 alantram@starpower.net.

Interested in a loan? We can help even those in all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6901 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases Begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywinecapts.com Stop by or call 549-4900

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NOTEEFS. www.amherstlimo.dhtcal.tracom 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER NOTEEFS www.amherstlimo.dhtcal.tracom 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota Camry wagon automatic 175k regularly maintained $2,250 540-5448

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $49.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8887

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

UNIQUE INTERNSHIP OPPORTUNITY
Ogilvy Public Relations Worldwide seeks interns for Fall semester 2003 to implement an award winning public relations campaign. Internship work is conducted on campus, primarily between September and December 2003. Open to undergraduates entering their junior or senior year of study. Students with majors in public relations, communications, marketing, advertising and journalism are urged to apply. E-mail resume to: internprogram@ogilvypr.com. Deadline: March 31, 2003.

Summer Jobs on Martha's Vineyard: Store Managers, Assistants, Associates. Work for Soft As A Cloud in one of our retail stores in Edgartown. Positions, housing available May 15th Richard White @ 413-328-8520 email @ rjbwhite27@charter.net

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Canadensis, Pocono Mountains, PA (2 hours from New York and Philadelphia). A Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, softball, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, motor bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 610-828-8816. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online www.canadensis.com

Cruise line entry level on board positions or year round. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children; enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Music, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Baiting, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-990-CAMP or check out our website at www.campcedarlake.com and apply online

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship and + work study available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come by a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sieker at 577-3919.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3065 ext 516

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treviz, Regional Comm. Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002 Fax 413-549-1018. Email an@frmca.com

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $8000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the

EMPLOYMENT

UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory
GREAT RESALE!
BOOSTER Call Paul at Aronsh Campus Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288 www.aronsh-mpus.com

ENTERTAINMENT

MOMS-EXTRAS!
MODELS-NEEDED! Earn up to $150/45 MIN PAY! No Experience Necessary. Call Now! 1-888-862-0164 xh047

FOR SALE

Huge 17" computer mon for $50 Screen is slightly dark. Call Jess 6-7387

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TTMP Turntables 1 Gemini PMX50 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts EASY! CAN MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

ROOM FOR RENT

Available ASAP Cty Bus Route 35/0 month Call Joe 493-4529

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst, 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Group Discounts, Group organizers travel free! Space is limited! Hurry up & Book Now! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A re-lax-ing spring break

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Spring break, for most people, means some time to relax, going on a quick vacation and catching up with some old friends. The Massachusetts lacrosse team is going on your typical spring break – sort of.

The Minutemen (3-0, 1-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) head to the road for the first time this season to take on longtime rival Brown (1-4, 0-0 Ivy League) on Saturday. The Maroon and White have squared off 41 times with the Bears all-time, posting a 18-22-1 record in those contests.

"They've been playing forever," UMass coach Greg Canella said. "It's always been a great game. The intensity's always there regardless of what the outcome is. It's a New England game between, many times, the two teams [that will go] head to head for the New England Championship. There's a tremendous rivalry."

Last season was no exception to that rule, as Brown held a 14-10 advantage in the fourth quarter at Garber Field, but the Minutemen stormed back with five unanswered goals to propel them to a 15-14 win.

"That was a game that Brown dominated," Canella said. "At the time, there was a sense of urgency in the fourth quarter, and we were fortunate enough to have some great leaders that carried us. It's always great to win like that, but on the other end of the stick, I'm sure Brown's pretty pissed off about that."

The game used to be scheduled for the end of the season, as both teams would go head to head for the New England Championships. But the two squads were forced to move the game because of league schedules. The earlier start in the year could affect the field conditions in Providence, R.I., evidenced by the Bears' cancellation at last weekend's contest with Fairfield. Both of Brown's fields – Stevenson Field and Brown Stadium – were deemed unplayable.

"We're going to quite possibly have to play in mud," Canella said. "We can't simulate grass anywhere around here, so we're playing on grass for the first time since the playoffs last year."

Freshman Dane Collins and the UMass lacrosse team will play the Brown Bears in Providence, R.I. tomorrow.

Baseball seeks some southern comfort

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Coming off of a three-game sweep at the hands of No. 24 Alabama, the Massachusetts baseball team will remain in the south looking to rebound with a weekend series in Florida. The Minutemen (0-5) travel to Sarasota and Bradenton for tilts with Northern Iowa, Columbia and Indiana.

"We didn't play good baseball last weekend," coach Mike Stone said. "Maybe it had something to do with the fact that it was our first time [on the diamond], but we still have a ways to go to improve."

Stone hopes this weekend will jumpstart an offense that was outscored 34-5 and managed only five extra-base hits over the three-game set in Tuscaloosa.

According to Stone, some of the lack of strength from the bats was a result of rust, as it was the first time for the Maroon and White outside a cage all year. He also said more of it was due to a lack of patience exuded against a tough Crimson Tide pitching staff.

"We were undisciplined at the plate all weekend," Stone said. "We can't expect to hack away against a team with as good a staff as Alabama has and still get good pitches to hit."

"We need to start being more selective if we want to win ball games," he added.

Northern Iowa, which began the season on a six-game losing skid, will enter Saturday's contest with UMass on a high note after taking two of three from Western Kentucky last weekend.

The Panthers (3-7) also handed No. 22 Texas Tech a 10-9 loss in Lubbock, Texas the weekend before.

"They come from a pretty competitive conference," Stone said of the Missouri Valley Conference. "They should provide us with the quality of competition we need to get better early in the season."

On Sunday, Columbia will face the Minutemen after its own battle with Northern Iowa in Bradenton. The Lions (1-3) lost three of four to William and Mary in a pair of doubleheaders last weekend in Harrisonburg, Va. by a combined total of 43-24.

According to Stone, the goals for UMass remain the same no matter the competition.

"We know what we need to do no matter who we're playing," he said. "We need to fine tune our game and shake off the winter rust, and all of these games [in Florida] will give us the chance to do that."

The Minutemen will complete the long weekend series with a Monday battle against Indiana, also in Bradenton. After having their first six games washed out, the Hoosiers have put together an impressive 6-1 start as of press time.

"[Indiana] is a good team out of the Big Ten and they will certainly provide a formidable challenge for us," Stone said. "But again, it comes down to focusing and playing good baseball, being patient at the plate and getting good work out of our pitchers. It's still early, but we know what we need, and we're looking for it on this trip."

Coroner cites Ephedra in death of pitcher

By Steven Wine
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) – The diet supplement ephedra was partly to blame for the heat-stroke death of Baltimore Orioles pitcher Steve Bechler, a medical examiner said Thursday.

Toxicology tests confirmed that "significant amounts" of an over-the-counter supplement containing the herb led to the heat-stroke, along with other factors, Broward County medical examiner Dr. Joshua Perper said.

The 23-year-old pitcher was taking the supplement to lose weight during spring training when he collapsed Feb. 16. He died the next day after his temperature rose to 108.

Ephedra is banned by many sports leagues but not major league baseball.

Perper said in a news release that the toxicology analysis showed ephedrine in Bechler's blood along with smaller amounts of two other stimulants: pseudoephedrine and caffeine.

That's consistent with taking three tablets of the weight-loss supplement Xenadrine Perper said.

Xenadrine and other rich factors contributed to Bechler's death, Perper said. But he said the analysis showed no alcohol or other drugs in Bechler's system, other than those used to treat him at a hospital.

After Bechler died, commissioner Bud Selig banned players with minor-league contracts from taking ephedra. The players' union has urged players not to take the amphetamine-like stimulant.

Neither the union nor Selig have taken a position on whether it should be banned for major leagues.

We remain prepared to discuss the issues raised by Mr. Bechler's tragic death with the Players Association," major league baseball said in a statement.

Cytodyne Technologies, which makes Xenadrine, said the container rushed to judgment.

"The fact that the medical examiner found traces of ephedra in Mr. Bechler's system does not mean that Mr. Bechler died from ephedra. He died from heat stroke," said Shane Freedman, legal officer for the manufacturer.

The Ephedra Education Council, an industry group, said Perper's conclusions weren't based on science.

"The current science supports the safety and significant weight loss benefits of ephedra when it is used according to industry standards," the council said in a statement.

Ephedra, which has been linked to heat-stroke and heart trouble before, is already banned by the NCAA, NFL and International Olympic Committee.

The Bush administration began building the case toward a possible ban of ephedra last month by proposing strong new warning labels that the substance can cause heart attacks and strokes or even kill.

Such labels, blocked until now by the dietary supplement industry, could be on every bottle by year's end.

Critics called the proposal a timid step that will cost lives. The Food and Drug Administration says at least 100 deaths have been linked to ephedra, but it remains available without a prescription in diet supplements.

FleetCenter bound

Freshman goaltender Gabe Winer earned Hockey East Rookie of the Week honors in recognition of his efforts against Maine in the Hockey East quarterfinals. Winer and the Minutemen play tonight at the FleetCenter, in the first time the team has ever advanced to the Hockey East semifinals.

No excuses for Damon

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – The word "excuse" just isn't in Johnny Damon's vocabulary.

The Boston Red Sox speedy center fielder hurt his right knee and dislocated his right ring finger late last season and still started 151 games. His numbers fell off in the second half of the season – after hitting .308 with 22 stolen bases before the All-Star break, he hit .260 and stole only nine more bases in the second half – he would never blame an injury on the slowdown.

It just isn't in his nature.

"A little injury is not going to keep me out," said Damon, who counts Cal Ripken Jr. as one of his role models. "There is never an excuse for me. They pay me a lot of money to get out there on the field, to go out there and play hard and play good, and I felt like I did that even though I wasn't quite the same guy as in the first half."

Even when a left elbow injury suffered during batting practice this spring knocked him out for a couple of days, he insisted that if it were the regular season he would not have missed any time.

His goal this spring has been to work on being more consistent than last season when he hit .286, scored a team-high 118 runs and 31 stolen bases. He led the American League with 11 triples in his first season with the Red Sox, who signed him to a $31 million, four-year free agent deal from the Oakland Athletics in December 2001.

"Unfortunately, when I went through my little slump not many other guys did well either," said Damon, who is hitting .381 (8-for-21) with four stolen bases and six runs this spring. "We weren't getting too much production from anyone."

Damon, 28, and entering his eighth full year in the major leagues, is making sure the team gets production from him all season long. He is working on his bunting and trying to cut down on the fly balls he hits. Anything to get on base and give the guys batting behind him a chance to drive him in.

"I feel like at the plate I need to work on a few things to help me through the tough periods of the season," he said. "I am trying to perfect the bunt, trying to stay on top of the ball, because we all know a fly ball from me is pretty much an out."

While most of the team was on a recent spring training road trip, Damon stayed behind at City of Palms Park for some individualized instruction on bunting.

"I like to swing the bat, but I also have to be smart and I am still a leadoff hitter, and that bunt is a weapon," he said. "The more I can get on base the more chances I get to score."

Johnny Pesky, the longtime Red Sox hitting instructor attended the session. He

Continued on page 6

Rookie shines, Sox down Twins

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – Julio Zuleta is one of five Boston Red Sox vying for playing time at first base and designated hitter. In terms of name recognition, his is probably the least known among them.

But Zuleta has made a convincing case for himself, hitting .391 this spring. He went 3-for-4 with a home run and five RBIs Thursday, leading the Red Sox to an 8-4 exhibition victory over the Minnesota Twins. He hit a two-run single in the first inning, a two-run single in the fifth and a solo home run to the scoreboard in left-center in the seventh.

Zuleta spent the past three years shuttling back and forth between the Chicago Cubs and their Triple-A affiliate in Iowa. He was the DH on Thursday, but he can play first base and outfield.

Zuleta is competing for playing time with Jeremy Giambi, Kevin Millar, David Ortiz and Shea Hillenbrand, all of whom have more major league experience than he does.

"I'm just here to do my job whenever [manager] Grady [Little] gives me a chance to play and show him what I can do," he said.

Boston starter Derek Lowe continues to struggle this spring. He gave up three hits and two runs in three innings against Minnesota. He walked one and struck out three.

"He's struggling to get hitting on all cylinders," Little said.

Brandon Lyon gave up three hits and one run in three innings for the win.

Minnesota starter Johan Santana went three innings and gave up two runs on five hits.

With left-hander Eric Milton on the 60-day disabled list following arthroscopic surgery on his left knee, Santana figured to begin the season in the Twins' rotation. But Minnesota's signing of veteran lefty Kenny Rogers is likely to bump him from the starting rotation.

"They told me that I was the sixth starter on this team and that if any of these guys go down I was going replace them," Santana said. "Now everything has changed. It's not easy, but I have to play my game."

Minnesota's Jeromy Palki, who gave up three runs on four hits in two innings, took the loss.

Boston's Manny Ramirez continues to swing a hot bat. He went 2-for-2 to raise his average to .565 (13-for-23).

Nomar Garciaparra also had two hits for the Red Sox. Lou Collier had two hits, including an eighth-inning home run.

Minnesota's Michael Ryan had a home run and two RBIs.

NOTES: Despite the loss, the Twins hold a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 spring series between the teams, who both train in Fort Myers ... Boston RHP Bobby Howry pitched Thursday after missing a week with a sore throwing arm. He gave up the home run to Ryan, the first batter he faced, but Little said it was more important that Howry pitched pain-free ... Boston CF Johnny Damon is expected to be out until Saturday with a sore left elbow ... Twins 1B Todd Sears is hitting .394 this spring.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 102

Forum to offer students chance to share on war

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

With war on Iraq now a reality, the Religious Affairs Committee and the Dean of Students Office will offer an open forum tomorrow to give students the chance to voice their points of view on the conflict.

Organized by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, Rev. Michael Greene and Richard Pioli of the Dean of Students Office, the forum is stressed as an opportunity for discussion, not debate.

"We're hoping it will be a place for students to articulate their thoughts on the war in a safe place," Greene said.

Greene said that many people don't feel comfortable with expressing "divergent" ideas, and that the he wants anyone attending to be treated in a respectful manner.

"I'm going to lay out some ground rules on respecting each other and not debating," Greene said.

Although the forum is sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee, organizers stress that it is not a faith-based event.

"People don't have to express religious feelings," Greene said. "It's open to everybody and its designated as a safe place [to speak]."

The forum will be held in Campus Center room 917 at 12 p.m. tomorrow.

Greene and Perlmutter have no goals in terms of a number of people they are looking for with the forum.

"It's for people who feel they need it," Perlmutter said. "I feel very excited about it. It's a part of what a caring community is about."

"It's really there to help people express their feelings about the war," he said. "I think a lot of mixed feelings about the war. This is a chance for people to talk about their feelings instead of their thoughts."

Greene said that they don't know quite what the interest level in it will be.

"We don't know whether it will be 20 people or 100 people," he said. "We're kind of curious."

Each student will have the opportunity to speak on their own for between a minute and 90 seconds, according to Greene. No debate is allowed.

The event is the first on campus planned in response to the war. UMass spokesperson Patrick Calahan said that there was a meeting with administrators last week, but that he didn't think anything specific had been planned yet.

Allies take losses in ambush

Forces still advancing; within 100 miles of Baghdad

ALI HELO/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqi soldiers search through sugar cane growth along the banks of the Tigris River yesterday after reports that a U.S. jet was allegedly downed and that the pilot parachuted into the Tigris. The U.S. Central Command in Qatar and the Pentagon said there were no reports of any coalition aircraft being shot down or a pilot being missing.

By Ellen Knickmeyer
Associated Press

NASIRIYAH, Iraq (AP) – The fiercest fighting yet in the battle for Iraq flared yesterday near Nasiriyah on the Euphrates River. By ambush and faked surrender, Iraqi forces killed, wounded and captured Americans – and some of them, alive and dead, were exhibited on Iraqi television.

The firefights at Nasiriyah drew some attention from the relentless advance of the U.S.-led forces, now less than 100 miles from Baghdad after four days of the ground war. Scores of American military personnel landed in Kurdish territory, as the move to open a northern front gathered strength.

"I think we're advancing more rapidly than anyone could have expected," said U.S. Maj Gen. Daniel P. Leaf, who coordinates the coalition's air campaign.

But at Nasiriyah – 233 miles southeast of Baghdad, near the ancient town of Ur, birthplace of the patriarch Abraham – the allied juggernaut sustained its worst casualties so far.

And in the face of that resistance, Marines officials said they expected to move around Nasiriyah rather than through it on their march to Baghdad.

American authorities detailed two bloody battles, both near Nasiriyah:

Marines encountered Iraqi troops who appeared to be surrendering. Instead, they attacked – the start of a "very sharp engagement," said Lt. Col. John Abizaid, deputy commander of the Central Command.

These were, Abizaid said, a combination of regular and irregular forces – in fact, he said, it was one of the few times regular Iraqi soldiers have fought, instead of surrendering or deserting.

In the end, the Americans triumphed, knocking out eight tanks, some anti-aircraft batteries, some artillery and infantry, Abizaid said. But victory came at a cost: as many as nine dead, and an undisclosed number of wounded.

During the second battle, a six-vehicle Army supply convoy apparently took a wrong turn, ventured into dangerous territory and was ambushed. The vehicles were destroyed, and a dozen soldiers were missing; it was believed that it was they who were shown on Iraqi TV, some of them dead in a morgue and the others interviewed.

Four others were wounded, and were evacuated later by Marines passing by.

The battles underscored the risks of the mission in Iraq, but U.S. military leaders insisted that they would not slow the drive to Baghdad.

Officials would not say when they expected to arrive at the capital city.

Long columns of Marines and their equipment advanced along the main road from Kuwaiti border to Nasiriyah, where units were crossing the Euphrates.

Part of the 3rd Infantry Division had reached the area of the Shiite holy city of Najaf – further ahead from Nasiriyah in the approach to Baghdad – after a 230-mile, 40-hour sprint through the desert, killing 100 machine gun-toting militiamen along the way.

When more than 30 Iraqi armored vehicles were spotted heading toward the 2nd Brigade's positions, air support was called in. A-10s and B-52s hammered the Iraqis, and the Army didn't have to fire a shot.

Allied aircraft had flown more than 6,000 sorties, softening resistance in advance of the ground war and focusing on Saddam Hussein's elite Republican Guard.

Pilots who hit Baghdad on Sunday said ground fire was lighter than expected.

"It was less than the first night," said Lt. j.g. Scott Worthington, 25, an F/A-18 Hornet pilot from Seattle, Wash., assigned to Strike-Fighter Squadron 151. "I'd say tonight was less intense. Not nearly as much."

In the north, airstrikes were reported against strongholds of Ansar al-Islam, a militant Islamic group with alleged ties to al-Qaida and Baghdad. Bursts of anti-aircraft fire were heard from the direction of Mosul, and Iraqi television reported that Saddam's hometown, Tikrit, had been bombed several times.

Kurdish officials reported that scores of American military personnel had landed in the northern zone they control. Abizaid would only say forces were "reinforcing our presence and targeting elements of regime support units in the Republican Guard."

In western Iraq, he said, the forces went after Iraqi logistical targets, command and control facilities and commando units.

Authorities said the number of Iraqi prisoners in allied custody was about 2,000. About 200 were being held at the Tillil Air Base, a dilapidated complex near Nasiriyah that has been idle since 1991.

Sgt. 1st Class William Jordan of St. Mary's Court, Md., guarded three rectangular prisoner pens surrounded by concertina wire.

The prisoners sat impassively as identification tags were pinned on them. Most wore green Iraqi military uniforms, but some were also dressed in civilian clothing, including jogging suits and traditional Arab robes and headdress.

They were given MREs and water; ultimately, they were expected to be moved toward Kuwait for "processing," interrogation by military intelli-

Continued on page 4

Romney education chief says higher education 'out of control'

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Gov. Mitt Romney's education chief, pointing to a 453 percent increase in student fees over 15 years, said Thursday that the state's public college system is "out of control."

The public focus on Romney's attempt to restructure higher education should expand beyond the proposed elimination of University of Massachusetts president William Bulger's office, education czar Peter Nessen said.

"Unfortunately, the story is about a president's office when you're talking of a $1 billion system that is out of control," Nessen said in a news conference with Board of Higher Education chairman Steve Tocco and chancellor Judith Gill.

They cited low graduation rates and skyrocketing student fees as evidence of poor accountability to taxpayers. Affordability would be threatened unless the Legislature approves changes, they argued.

A report by Romney's administration, which has proposed creating and increasing dozens of state fees to close next year's expected $3 billion budget gap, revealed that student fees increased by 453 percent since 1989. Tuition increased by just 3 percent over the same span.

"You have to cap the fees," Tocco said. "At this point, there is no oversight."

Romney's restructuring would strip campuses of the ability to raise fees, which schools rely on because, unlike tuition, 100 percent of fee revenue stays on campus. Schools point to a $108 million drop in state funding over the past two years.

The governor's plan also would tie student performance to funding. Enrollment would determine two-thirds of funding; student performance a third. Performance thresholds have not been set.

Salem State College's graduation rate, for example, was just 30 percent from 1997 to 2001, officials said. UMass-Boston's graduation rate was 27 percent in the same period.

Romney hopes to cut higher education spending by $100 million. Bulger has launched his own campaign to preserve the system, and his $309,000-a-year job.

"UMass still is cheaper, more

Continued on page 3

STEVE HELBER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gen. Tommy Franks, commander of U.S. Central Command, leads the allied forces.

Team of Carr and Fatemi wins SGA elections

By Scott Eldridge II
Collegian Staff

Experience carried the most weight in this year's student elections, returning an incumbent to the head of the Student Government Association.

The reigning SGA President, David Carr, will continue in his leadership role as the calendar turns. Pulling in 946 of the 1793 votes cast for SGA president on March 12 and 13, Carr eked out runner-up David Falvey by 188 votes.

"This is the biggest contested election I've seen in three years here," Carr said. Carr ran alongside winning Student Trustee candidate Hannah Fatemi, though a vote for one did not guarantee a vote for the other. Fatemi held 1061 votes of 1786 cast for Trustee.

Chancellor of Elections Yousef Munayyer, coordinator of the contest between five presidential candidates and four for Trustee, said the elections ran smoothly.

"I'm very happy with the voter turnout," Munayyer said. He estimated 15.5 percent of the student population cast votes.

"I think the election went smoothly," Fatemi said. "Students seemed to be more informed and more inquisitive."

Falvey disagreed.

He claimed that a member of Carr and Fatemi's campaign, namely campaign manager, SGA Secretary of the Registry Justin Provencher, took down campaign posters from the Southwest Tunnel. Provencher could not be reached for comment.

"After we found out we were pretty disappointed and pretty ticked off," Falvey said. "Clearly it's against the rules and it's now allowed."

"He ran a pretty dirty campaign," Falvey said. "It's too bad the person who ran the dirty campaign won."

He said he felt the other groups of candidates all ran clean campaigns.

"It didn't seem that way with Carr and Fatemi," he said. "I'd say the best of luck to them, but it was a little shady."

Falvey also said that some commuter votes were thrown out and left uncounted.

"All valid ballots were counted," Munayyer refuted. "Each campaign had an equal and fair opportunity to win this race."

As Chancellor of Elections, Munayyer doesn't expect any problems with the results.

"I'm not a fortune teller so I don't foresee any of them, I allowed for the least possible grounds to have a judicial case," he said.

In the past, elections have been marred by low turnouts and unfilled seats on the elections

Continued on page 3

DAVID CARR/COLLEGIAN

David Carr

DAVID CARR/COLLEGIAN

Hannah Fatemi

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9
WAR COVERAGE MORE UPDATES FROM IRAQ PAGE 4
THE MEDIA ON WAR UNBIASED COVERAGE IS ESSENTIAL PAGE 5
OSCARS COVERAGE "CHICAGO" WINS BEST PICTURE PAGE 6
END OF THE ROAD UNITED WANS MINUTEMEN PAGE 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A re-lax-ing spring break

By MATT BRADY
Collegian Staff

Spring break, for most people, means some time to relax, going on a quick vacation and catching up with some old friends. The Massachusetts lacrosse team is going on your typical spring break – sort of.

The Minutemen (3-0, 1-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) head to the road for the first time this season to take on longtime rival Brown (1-0, 0-0 Ivy League) on Saturday. The Maroon and White have squared off 41 times with the Bears all-time, posting a 18-22-1 record in those contests.

"They've been playing forever," UMass coach Greg Canella said. "It's always been a great game. The intensity's always there regardless of what the outcome is. It's a New England game between, many times, the two teams [that will go] head to head for the New England Championship. There's a tremendous rivalry."

Last season was no exception to that rule, as Brown held a 14-10 advantage in the fourth quarter at Garber Field, but the Minutemen stormed back with five unanswered goals to propel them to a 15-14 win.

"That was a game that Brown dominated," Canella said. "At the time, there was a sense of urgency in the fourth quarter, and we were fortunate enough to have some great leaders that carried us. It's always great to win like that, but on the other end of the stick, I'm sure Brown's pretty pissed off about that."

The game used to be scheduled for the end of the season, as both teams would go head to head for the New England Championships. But the two squads were forced to move the game because of league schedules. The earlier start in the year could affect the field conditions in Providence, R.I., evidenced by the Bears' cancellation at last weekend's contest with Fairfield. Both of Brown's fields – Stevenson Field and Brown Stadium – were deemed unplayable.

"We're going to quite possibly have to play in mud," Canella said. "We can't simulate grass anywhere around here, so we're playing on grass for the first time since the playoffs last year."

Continued from page 6

Freshman Dane Collins and the UMass lacrosse team will play the Brown Bears in Providence, R.I. tomorrow.

Baseball seeks some southern comfort

By MIKE MARZELLI
Collegian Staff

Coming off of a three-game sweep at the hands of No. 24 Alabama, the Massachusetts baseball team will remain in the south looking to rebound with a weekend series in Florida. The Minutemen (0-3) travel to Sarasota and Bradenton for tilts with Northern Iowa, Columbia and Indiana.

"We didn't play good baseball last weekend," coach Mike Stone said. "Maybe it had something to do with the fact that it was our first time [on the diamond], but we still have a ways to go to improve."

Stone hopes this weekend will jumpstart an offense that was outscored 34-5 and managed only five extra-base hits over the three-game set in Tuscaloosa.

According to Stone, some of the lack of strength from the bats was a result of rust, as it was the first time for the Maroon and White outside a cage all year. He also said more of it was due to a lack of patience exuded against a tough Crimson Tide pitching staff.

"We were undisciplined at the plate all weekend," Stone said. "We can't expect to back away against a team with as good a staff as Alabama has and still get good pitches to hit."

"We need to start being more selective if we want to win ball games," he added.

Northern Iowa, which began the season on a six-game losing skid, will enter Saturday's contest with UMass on a high note after taking two of three from Western Kentucky last weekend.

The Panthers (3-7) also handed No. 22 Texas Tech a 10-9 loss in Lubbock, Texas the weekend before.

"They come from a pretty competitive conference," Stone said of the Missouri Valley Conference. "They should provide us with the quality of competition we need to get better early in the season."

On Sunday, Columbia will face the Minutemen after its own battle with Northern Iowa in Bradenton. The Lions (1-3) lost three of four to William and Mary in a pair of doubleheaders last weekend in Harrisonburg, Va. by a combined total of 43-24.

According to Stone, the goals for UMass remain the same no matter the competition.

"We know what we need to do no matter who we're playing," he said. "We need to fine tune our game and shake off the winter rust, and all of these games [in Florida] will give us the chance to do that."

The Minutemen will complete the long weekend series with a Monday battle against Indiana, also in Bradenton. After having their first six games washed out, the Hoosiers have put together an impressive 6-1 start as of press time.

"[Indiana] is a good team out of the Big Ten and they will certainly provide a formidable challenge for us," Stone said. "But again, it comes down to focusing and playing good baseball, being patient at the plate and getting good work out of our pitchers. It's still early, but we know what we need, and we're looking for it on this trip."

Coroner cites Ephedra in death of pitcher

By STEVEN WINE
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) – The diet supplement ephedra was partly to blame for the heatstroke death of Baltimore Orioles pitcher Steve Bechler, a medical examiner said Thursday.

Toxicology tests confirmed that "significant amounts" of an over-the-counter supplement containing the herb led to the heatstroke, along with other factors, Broward County medical examiner Dr. Joshua Perper said.

The 23-year-old pitcher was taking the supplement to lose weight during spring training when he collapsed Feb. 16. He died the next day after his temperature rose to 108.

Ephedra is banned by many sports leagues but not major league baseball.

Perper said in a news release that the toxicology analysis showed ephedrine in Bechler's blood along with smaller amounts of two other stimulants, pseudoephedrine and caffeine.

That's consistent with taking three tablets of the weight loss supplement Xenadrine Perper said.

Xenadrine and other 0[illegible] factors contributed to Bechler's death, Perper said. But he said the analysis showed no alcohol or other drugs in Bechler's system, other than those used to treat him at a hospital.

After Bechler died, commissioner Bud Selig banned players with minor league contracts from taking ephedra. The players' union has urged players not to take the amphetamine-like stimulant.

Neither the union nor Selig have taken a position on whether it should be banned for major leaguers.

"We remain prepared to discuss the issues raised by Mr. Bechler's tragic death with the Players Association," major league baseball said in a statement.

Cytodyne Technologies, which makes Xenadrine, said the coroner rushed to judgment.

The fact that the medical examiner found traces of ephedra in Mr. Bechler's system does not mean that Mr. Bechler died from ephedra. He died from heat stroke," said Shane Heedman, legal officer for the manufacturer.

The Ephedra Education Council, an industry group, said Perper's conclusions weren't based on science.

"The current science supports the safety and significant weight loss benefits of ephedra when it is used according to industry standards," the council said in a statement.

Ephedra, which has been linked to heatstroke and heart trouble before, is already banned by the NCAA, NFL and International Olympic Committee.

The Bush administration began building the case toward a possible ban of ephedra last month by proposing strong new warning labels that the substance can cause heart attacks and strokes or even kill.

Such labels, blocked until now by the dietary supplement industry, could be on every bottle by year's end.

Critics called the proposal a timid step that will cost lives. The Food and Drug Administration says at least 100 deaths have been linked to ephedra, but it remains available without a prescription in diet supplements.

FleetCenter bound

Freshman goaltender Gabe Winer earned Hockey East Rookie of the Week honors in recognition of his efforts against Maine in the Hockey East quarterfinals. Winer and the Minutemen play tonight at the FleetCenter, in the first time the team has ever advanced to the Hockey East semifinals.

No excuses for Damon

By MARK PRATT
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – The word "excuse" just isn't in Johnny Damon's vocabulary.

The Boston Red Sox speedy center fielder hurt his right knee and dislocated his right ring finger late last season and still started 151 games. His numbers fell off in the second half of the season – after hitting .308 with 22 stolen bases before the All-Star break, he hit .260 and stole only nine more bases in the second half – he would never blame an injury on the slowdown.

It just isn't in his nature.

"A little injury is not going to keep me out," said Damon, who counts Cal Ripken Jr. as one of his role models. "There is never an excuse for me. They pay me a lot of money to get out there on the field, to go out there and play hard and play good, and I felt like I did that even though I wasn't quite the same guy as in the first half."

Even when a left elbow injury suffered during batting practice this spring knocked him out for a couple of days, he insisted that if it were the regular season he would not have missed any time.

His goal this spring has been to work on being more consistent than last season when he hit .286, scored a team-high 118 runs and 31 stolen bases. He led the American League with 11 triples in his first season with the Red Sox, who signed him to a $31 million, four-year free agent deal from the Oakland Athletics in December 2001.

"Unfortunately, when I went through my little slump not many other guys did well either," said Damon, who is hitting .381 (8-for-21) with four stolen bases and six runs this spring. "We weren't getting too much production from anyone."

Damon, 28, and entering his eighth full year in the major leagues, is making sure the team gets production from him all season long. He is working on his bunting and trying to cut down on the fly balls he hits. Anything to get on base and give the guys batting behind him a chance to drive him in.

"I feel like at the plate I need to work on a few things to help me through the tough periods of the season," he said. "I am trying to perfect the bunt, trying to stay on top of the ball, because we all know a fly ball from me is pretty much an out."

While most of the team was on a recent spring training road trip, Damon stayed behind at City of Palms Park for some individualized instruction on bunting.

"I like to swing the bat, but I also have to be smart and I am still a leadoff hitter, and that bunt is a weapon," he said. "The more I can get on base the more chances I get to score."

Johnny Pesky, the longtime Red Sox hitting instructor attended the session. He

Continued on page 6

Rookie shines, Sox down Twins

By MARK PRATT
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) – Julio Zuleta is one of five Boston Red Sox vying for playing time at first base and designated hitter. In terms of name recognition, his is probably the least known among them.

But Zuleta has made a convincing case for himself, hitting .391 this spring. He went 3-for-4 with a home run and five RBIs Thursday, leading the Red Sox to an 8-4 exhibition victory over the Minnesota Twins. He hit a two-run single in the first inning, a two-run single in the fifth and a solo home run to the scoreboard in left-center in the seventh.

Zuleta spent the past three years shuttling back and forth between the Chicago Cubs and their Triple-A affiliate in Iowa. He was the DH on Thursday, but he can play first base and outfield.

Zuleta is competing for playing time with Jeremy Giambi, Kevin Millar, David Ortiz and Shea Hillenbrand, all of whom have more major league experience than he does.

"I'm just here to do my job whenever [manager] Grady [Little] gives me a chance to play and show him what I can do," he said.

Boston starter Derek Lowe continues to struggle this spring. He gave up three hits and two runs in three innings against Minnesota. He walked one and struck out three.

"He's struggling to get hitting on all cylinders," Little said.

Brandon Lyon gave up three hits and one run in three innings for the win.

Minnesota starter Johan Santana went three innings and gave up two runs on five hits.

With left-hander Eric Milton on the 60-day disabled list following arthroscopic surgery on his left knee, Santana figured to begin the season in the Twins' rotation. But Minnesota's signing of veteran lefty Kenny Rogers is likely to bump him from the starting rotation.

"They told me that I was the sixth starter on this team and that if any of these guys go down I was going replace them," Santana said. "Now everything has changed. It's not easy, but I have to play my game."

Minnesota's Jeromy Palki, who gave up three runs on four hits in two innings, took the loss.

Boston's Manny Ramirez continues to swing a hot bat. He went 2-for-2 to raise his average to .565 (13-for-23).

Nomar Garciaparra also had two hits for the Red Sox. Lou Collier had two hits, including an eighth-inning home run.

Minnesota's Michael Ryan had a home run and two RBIs.

NOTES: Despite the loss, the Twins hold a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 spring series between the teams, who both train in Fort Myers ... Boston RHP Bobby Howry pitched Thursday after missing a week with a sore throwing arm. He gave up the home run to Ryan, the first batter he faced, but Little said it was more important that Howry pitched pain-free ... Boston CF Johnny Damon is expected to be out until Saturday with a sore left elbow ... Twins 1B Todd Sears is hitting .394 this spring.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2003 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CIX ISSUE 102

Forum to offer students chance to share on war

By DAN LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

With war on Iraq now a reality, the Religious Affairs Committee and the Dean of Students Office will offer an open forum tomorrow to give students the chance to voice their points of view on the conflict.

Organized by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, Rev. Michael Greene and Richard Pioli of the Dean of Students Office, the forum is stressed as an opportunity for discussion, not debate.

"We're hoping it will be a place for students to articulate their thoughts on the war in a safe place," Greene said.

Greene said that many people don't feel comfortable with expressing "divergent" ideas, and that the he wants anyone attending to be treated in a respectful manner.

"I'm going to lay out some ground rules on respecting each other and not debating," Greene said.

Although the forum is sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee, organizers stress that it is not a faith-based event.

"People don't have to express religious feelings," Greene said. "It's open to everybody and its designated as a safe place [to speak]."

The forum will be held in Campus Center room 917 at 12 p.m. tomorrow.

Greene and Perlmutter have no goals in terms of a number of people they are looking for with the forum.

"It's for people who feel they need it," Perlmutter said. "I feel very excited about it. It's a part of what a caring community is about."

"It's really there to help people express their feelings about the war," he said. "I think a lot of mixed feelings about the war. This is a chance for people to talk about their feelings instead of their thoughts."

Greene said that they don't know quite what the interest level in it will be.

"We don't know whether it will be 20 people or 100 people," he said. "We're kind of curious."

Each student will have the opportunity to speak on their own for between a minute and 90 seconds, according to Greene. No debate is allowed.

The event is the first on campus planned in response to the war. UMass spokesperson Patrick Calahan said that there was a meeting with administrators last week, but that he didn't think anything specific had been planned yet.

Allies take losses in ambush

Forces still advancing; within 100 miles of Baghdad

ALI HELWI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqi soldiers search through sugar cane growth along the banks of the Tigris River yesterday after reports that a U.S. jet was allegedly downed and that the pilot parachuted into the Tigris. The U.S. Central Command in Qatar and the Pentagon said there were no reports of any coalition aircraft being shot down or a pilot being missing.

By ELLEN KNICKMEYER
Associated Press

NASIRIYAH, Iraq (AP) – The fiercest fighting yet in the battle for Iraq flared yesterday near Nasiriyah, and fresh sandstorms and rain slowed the U.S.-led forces' drive toward Baghdad. Allied commanders said they expected to move around Nasiriyah rather than through it on their march to Baghdad.

American authorities detailed two bloody battles, both near Nasiriyah:

Marines encountered Iraqi troops who appeared to be surrendering. Instead, they attacked – the start of a "very sharp engagement," said Lt. Col. John Abizaid, deputy commander of the Central Command.

These were, Abizaid said, a combination of regular and irregular forces – in fact, he said, it was one of the few times regular Iraqi soldiers have fought, instead of surrendering or deserting.

In the end, the Americans triumphed, knocking out eight tanks, some anti-aircraft batteries, some artillery and infantry, Abizaid said. But victory came at a cost: as many as nine dead, and an undisclosed number of wounded.

During the second battle, a six-vehicle Army supply convoy apparently took a wrong turn, ventured into dangerous territory and was ambushed. The vehicles were destroyed, and a dozen soldiers were missing; it was believed that it was they who were shown on Iraqi TV, some of them dead in a morgue and the others interviewed.

Four others were wounded, and were evacuated later by Marines passing by.

The battles underscored the risks of the mission in Iraq, but U.S. military leaders insisted that they would not slow the drive to Baghdad.

Officials would not say when they expected to arrive at the capital city.

Long columns of Marines and their equipment advanced along the main road from Kuwaiti border to Nasiriyah, where units were crossing the Euphrates.

Part of the 3rd Infantry Division had reached the area of the Shiite holy city of Najaf – further ahead from Nasiriyah in the approach to Baghdad – after a 230-mile, 40-hour sprint through the desert, killing 100 machine gun-toting militiamen along the way.

When more than 30 Iraqi armored vehicles were spotted heading toward the 2nd Brigade's positions, air support was called in: A-10s and B-52s hammered the Iraqis, and the Army didn't have to fire a shot.

Allied aircraft had flown more than 6,000 sorties, softening resistance in advance of the ground war and focusing on Saddam Hussein's elite Republican Guard.

Pilots who hit Baghdad on Sunday said ground fire was lighter than expected.

"It was less than the first night," said Lt. j.g. Scott Worthington, 25, an F/A-18 Hornet pilot from Seattle, Wash. assigned to Strike-Fighter Squadron 151. "I'd say tonight was less intense. Not nearly as much."

In the north, airstrikes were reported against strongholds of Ansar al-Islam, a militant Islamic group with alleged ties to al-Qaida and Baghdad. Bursts of anti-aircraft fire were heard from the direction of Mosul, and Iraqi television reported that Saddam's hometown, Tikrit, had been bombed several times.

Kurdish officials reported that scores of American military personnel had landed in the northern zone they control. Abizaid would only say forces were "reinforcing our presence and targeting elements of regime support units in the Republican Guard."

In western Iraq, he said, the forces went after Iraqi logistical targets, command and control facilities and commando units.

Authorities said the number of Iraqi prisoners in allied custody was about 2,000. About 200 were being held at the Tilill Air Base, a dilapidated complex near Nasiriyah that has been idle since 1991.

Sgt. 1st Class William Jordan of St. Mary's Court, Md., guarded three rectangular prisoner pens surrounded by concertina wire.

The prisoners sat impassively as identification tags were pinned on them. Most wore green Iraqi military uniforms, but some were also dressed in civilian clothing, including jogging suits and traditional Arab robes and headdress.

They were given MREs and water; ultimately, they were expected to be moved toward Kuwait for "processing," interrogation by military intelli-

Continued on page 4

Romney education chief says higher education 'out of control'

By KEN MAGUIRE
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Gov. Mitt Romney's education chief, pointing to a 453 percent increase in student fees over 15 years, said Thursday that the state's public college system is "out of control."

The public focus on Romney's attempt to restructure higher education should expand beyond the proposed elimination of University of Massachusetts president William Bulger's office, education czar Peter Nessen said.

"Unfortunately, the story is about a president's office when you're talking of a $1 billion system that is out of control," Nessen said in a news conference with Board of Higher Education chairman Steve Tocco and chancellor Judith Gill.

They cited low graduation rates and skyrocketing student fees as evidence of poor accountability to taxpayers. Affordability would be threatened unless the Legislature approves changes, they argued.

A report by Romney's administration, which has proposed creating and increasing dozens of state fees to close next year's expected $3 billion budget gap, revealed that student fees increased by 453 percent since 1989. Tuition increased by just 3 percent over the same span.

"You have to cap the fees," Tocco said. "At this point, there is no oversight."

Romney's restructuring would strip campuses of the ability to raise fees, which schools rely on because, unlike tuition, 100 percent of fee revenue stays on campus. Schools point to a $108 million drop in state funding over the past two years.

The governor's plan also would tie student performance to funding. Enrollment would determine two-thirds of funding; student performance a third. Performance thresholds have not been set.

Salem State College's graduation rate, for example, was just 30 percent from 1997 to 2001, officials said. UMass-Boston's graduation rate was 27 percent in the same period.

Romney hopes to cut higher education spending by $100 million. Bulger has launched his own campaign to preserve the system, and his $309,000-a-year job.

"UMass still is cheaper, more

Continued on page 3

STEVE SENNE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gen. Tommy Franks, commander of U.S. Central Command, leads the allied forces.

Team of Carr and Fatemi wins SGA elections

By SCOTT ELDRIDGE II
Collegian Staff

Experience carried the most weight in this year's student elections, returning an incumbent to the head of the Student Government Association.

The reigning SGA President, David Carr, will continue in his leadership role as the calendar turns. Pulling in 946 of the 1793 votes cast for SGA president on March 12 and 13, Carr eked out runner-up David Falvey by 188 votes.

"This is the biggest contested election I've seen in three years here," Carr said. Carr ran alongside winning Student Trustee candidate Hannah Fatemi, though a vote for one did not guarantee a vote for the other. Fatemi held 1061 votes of 1786 cast for Trustee.

Chancellor of Elections Yousef Munayyer, coordinator of the contest between five presidential candidates and four for Trustee, said the elections ran smoothly.

"I'm very happy with the voter turnout," Munayyer said. He estimated 15.5 percent of the student population cast votes.

"I think the election went smoothly," Fatemi said. "Students seemed to be more informed and more inquisitive."

Falvey disagreed.

He claimed that a member of Carr and Fatemi's campaign, namely campaign manager, SGA Secretary of the Registry Justin Provencher, took down campaign posters from the Southwest Tunnel. Provencher could not be reached for comment.

"After we found out we were pretty disappointed and pretty ticked off," Falvey said. "Clearly it's against the rules and it's now allowed."

"He ran a pretty dirty campaign," Falvey said. "It's too bad the person who ran the dirty campaign won."

He said he felt the other groups of candidates all ran clean campaigns.

"It didn't seem that way with Carr and Fatemi," he said. "I'd say the best of luck to them, but it was a little shady."

Falvey also said that some commuter votes were thrown out and left uncounted.

"All valid ballots were counted," Munayyer refuted. "Each campaign had an equal and fair opportunity to win this race."

As Chancellor of Elections, Munayyer doesn't expect any problems with the results.

"I'm not a fortune teller so I don't foresee any of them, I allowed for the least possible grounds to have a judicial case," he said.

In the past, elections have been marred by low turnouts and unfilled seats on the elections

Continued on page 3

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

David Carr

GERALD LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Hannah Fatemi

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9
WAR COVERAGE MORE UPDATES FROM IRAQ PAGE 4
THE MEDIA ON WAR UNBIASED COVERAGE IS ESSENTIAL PAGE 5
OSCARS COVERAGE CHICAGO WINS BEST PICTURE PAGE 6
END OF THE ROAD UNITED WINS MINUTEMEN PAGE 10

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

NATURALLY, WE PUT GREAT VALUE IN NUMBERS. ESPECIALLY THE NUMBER ONE.

VOTED NUMBER ONE IDEAL EMPLOYER.

PricewaterhouseCoopers was voted the number one ideal employer in the 2002 Universum Undergraduate Survey of more than 4,000 business students and the number one recruiter in our profession in the 2002 Emerson Company Campus Recruiting Survey.

www.pwcglobal.com/lookhere.

Look beyond the numbers.

Carr and Fatemi win SGA elections commission. This election, said Munayyer, did not have these problems. "Everything was done by the bylaws, to the best of the commission's ability," he said. The only departure from the bylaws, he said, would be if a commissioner had to use the bathroom.

Continued from page 1

"I guess if you really want to make a big deal out of that you can, but the bylaws were executed properly," he said.

Still, Munayyer expects that the Senate will approve the numbers at their next meeting.

"Election results have been ratified by the elections commission but still need to be ratified by the senate," Munayyer said.

Carr and Fatemi, who pushed their experience in the SGA throughout the campaign, plan on using their prior positions – President and Attorney General respectively – as assets in their new roles.

"Experience is going to treat them [the students] well," Carr said. He renewed his presidential goals from the last campaign. "First an opportunity to learn, second an opportunity to teach and third an opportunity to lead."

All eight referendum questions on the ballots passed as well, reaffirming MassPIRG, approving Greek Housing for freshmen and pushing forward a tobacco referendum by a margin of only 119 votes.

"That question was the most controversial. I would say that just looking at how close the numbers are," Munayyer said.

The Student Government will meet on Wednesday in Campus Center room 174 at 7 p.m., where they are expected to vote on the election's results.

Dan Lamothe contributed to this article.

Nessen says higher ed 'out of control'

Continued from page 1

affordable, than UConn, UNH, UVM and URI," university spokesman John Hoey said in reference to other state universities around New England.

The flagship Amherst campus would be spun off into a state-funded but independently run institution and UMass Medical School in Worcester would be privatized.

The governor says $68 million can be saved through cuts to 22 state colleges and community colleges. Proposed cuts to individual campuses were publicly released Thursday.

Six state college and community college campuses in central and western Massachusetts would be merged.

UMass campuses in Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell would lose a combined $17 million and operate in a regional system. The College of Art and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy would be spun off and independently run.

Bulger has vowed to lead an army of alumni and business leaders in lobbying lawmakers to reject Romney's proposal, which he said would "do great harm."

Bulger, who has tapped the university's endowment fund to hire a public relations specialist, is meeting one-on-one with legislators this week to lobby for his plan.

"What he's there to do is listen and answer questions, and tell the story of what the University of Massachusetts does," Hoey said.

Romney said he can save $14 million through the elimination of the president's office, a figure Bulger disputes, saying his office only costs $5.6 million per year.

At Bulger's request last week, UMass trustees raised student fees 17 percent. Annual fees on in-state students increase by $1,000 and on out-of-state students by $2,000 this fall.

The cost, with room and board, to attend UMass-Amherst and Dartmouth in 2003-04 will be $13,230, and $11,817 for Lowell.

Romney hopes to raise $50 million in tuition hikes. The fee increase approved by trustees will raise an estimated $40 million, and Bulger pledged to cut another $40 million from the budget.

Tocco and Nessen seemed resigned to the possibility that Bulger may weather the storm. Nessen, however, said elimination of Bulger's office remains in their plans.

"I would suggest not softening," he said when asked if they're pulling back on Bulger, "but there are issues that go well beyond a president's office."

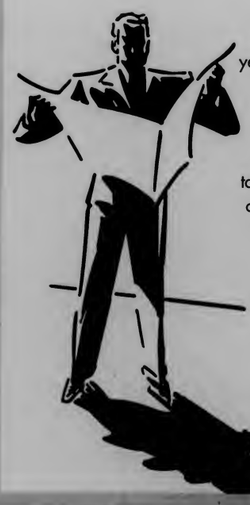
Spring has splashed

Deep puddles overflow outside of the Isenberg School of Management yesterday. Warmer temperatures will continue this week throughout the area.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • • Fax (413) 545-1502 • • http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?

If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!

Applicants should have some layout experience.

Full position for Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.

Hiring process begins April 14th!

BACK UP YOUR BIRTH CONTROL WITH EC

BE PREPARED
TO PROTECT YOURSELF IN CASE:
• THE CONDOM BREAKS • YOU FORGOT TO TAKE YOUR PILL
• OR, YOU HAD SEX WHEN YOU DIDN'T WANT OR PLAN TO
You have up to 5 Days to take emergency contraception (EC) But the sooner the better
Ask your health care provider about an advance supply of EC

1-800-230-PLAN
Planned Parenthood
plannedparenthood.org/ec

emergency ec contraception

Captive U.S. soldiers shown on TV

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said yesterday that captured soldiers shown on the Al-Jazeera TV footage could be a violation of the Geneva Conventions.

By Danica Kirka
Associated Press

DOHA, Qatar (AP) – Looking by turns frightened or stoical, five captured U.S. soldiers were thrust in front of an Iraqi TV microphone and peppered with questions yesterday. The footage also showed at least four bodies.

U.S. officials confirmed that 12 soldiers and at least one aircraft were missing in southern Iraq, and said the troops may have been lured into a trap by Iraqi soldiers pretending to surrender.

The scenes of interrogators questioning four men and a woman were broadcast by the Arab satellite station Al-Jazeera with footage from state-controlled Iraqi television. Each was interviewed individually. They spoke into a microphone labeled "Iraqi Television."

A senior defense official said the Pentagon did not know precisely how many captives there might be, and declined to identify the unit involved so as not to panic soldiers' families. Some Iraqi soldiers acted as though they wanted to surrender, then opened fire, the official said.

Al-Jazeera quoted unidentified Iraqi officials as saying the Iraqis are using a defensive tactic of falling back, allowing their enemy to overextend itself and become vulnerable to attack behind the lines.

Speaking on CBS, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld charged that if those seen on television were indeed coalition soldiers, "those pictures are a violation of the Geneva Conventions."

International Committee of the Red Cross spokeswoman Nada Doumani said the showing of the prisoners on TV violates Article 13 of the Geneva Conventions, which says prisoners should be protected from public curiosity. But she stressed that the priority at the moment is to get access to them.

"It does contradict the conventions because it's public curiosity," she said. "But our priority is not to put blame on any side but to check that the prisoners are safe. Let's put the focus on getting access and ensuring safety and then we can discuss in detail the provisions of the Geneva Conventions. The important thing is to have people treated in a humane way."

Each prisoner shown on television spoke American-accented English. One was a 30-year-old woman from Texas. Her eyes darted back and forth and she held her arms tightly in her lap as she was questioned.

At one point, the camera panned back, showing a big white bandage around her ankle. Her voice was very shaky. Another prisoner, who said he was from El Paso, Texas, stared directly at the camera and spoke in a clear direct voice, often shaking his head and cupping his ear slightly to indicate that he couldn't hear one of the questions being shot at him from around the room.

A 31-year-old sergeant from New Jersey sat bolt upright in a chair with brown armrests. His hands in his lap, he answered questions in a clipped fashion and said he was with the 507th Maintenance Company. The woman also said she was from the 507th Maintenance. Both the Air Force and Army have companies with that designation.

One of the men, sitting up, was interviewed by an unseen person holding a microphone labeled "Iraqi TV" in Arabic. The prisoner at one point said: "I'm sorry, I don't understand you."

The narrator provided an Arabic translation, but it was possible to hear some of the comments in English.

The prisoners looked terrified. One captive, who said he was from Kansas, answered all his questions in a shaky voice, his eyes darting back and forth between the interviewer and another person who couldn't be seen on camera.

Asked why he came to Iraq, he replied, "I come to fix broke stuff."

Prodded again by the interviewer, he was asked if he came to shoot Iraqis.

"No, I come to shoot only if I am shot at," he said. "They (Iraqis) don't bother me, I don't bother them."

Another prisoner, who said he was from Texas, said only: "I follow orders."

A voice off-camera asked how many officers were in his unit.

"I don't know, sir," the man replied.

Another prisoner, who also said he was from Texas, was lying on an elaborate maroon mat. The camera panned from his feet to his head, showing one of his arms to be wounded and folded across his chest.

Iraqi TV attempted to interview him, at one point trying to cradle his head to steady it for the camera. They eventually helped him sit up, but he seemed to sway slightly.

The camera showed four bodies on the floor of the room. The station said they and the prisoners were captured around An Nasiriyah, a major crossing point over the Euphrates northwest of Basra.

U.S. officials said Sunday that U.S. Marines defeated Iraqi forces near An Nasiriyah in the sharpest engagement of the war. But Iraqi forces also ambushed an army supply convoy and 12 soldiers were missing, they said.

Army Lt. Gen. John Abizaid said he believed some of the 12 missing soldiers "ended up on Baghdad TV."

In Cairo, Iraqi Foreign Minister Naji Sabri said the casualties "showed that we're not surrendering easily. It is proof we're strong and it is not an easy invasion."

Prior to the hostilities, the Iraqi government said it would give the International Committee of the Red Cross the freedom to move about the country to perform its traditional tasks, which include monitoring the care and treatment of POWs.

The U.S. military says it has more than 2,000 Iraqi prisoners of war.

Army: soldier may have thrown grenade in act of resentment

By Patrick McDowell

KUWAIT CITY (AP) – A U.S. [illegible] Brigade at Camp Pennsylvania at 9:30 a.m. (5:30 p.m. EST Saturday).

Initially, the military suspected the attack was the work of terrorists using two grenades and small-arms fire, Hearn said. Two Middle Eastern males hired as contractors were detained and released.

An Interior Ministry official speaking on condition of anonymity said Sunday that Americans still were investigating all locally contracted workers in the camp, such as cleaners, drivers and volunteer translators. Two Kuwaiti translators also were questioned and released.

"What this all happened we tried to get accountability for everybody," Col. Frederick B. Hodges, commander of the division's 1st Brigade, told Britain's Sky News television. We noticed four hand grenades were missing and that this sergeant was unaccounted for."

A Marine found hiding in a trailer said Hodges, who was slightly injured in the attack.

Eyewitnesses smelled smoke, saw commander Lt. Col. Nicholas "[illegible] heard a couple of explosions and then a popping sound, which I think was probably a rifle being fired. It looks like a rifle assailant threw a grenade and capable of two throws here."

One grenade went off in the command tent, Blumenfeld said. The tent, the tactical operations center, runs 24 hours a day and would always be staffed by officers and senior enlisted personnel.

A picture on the front page of The Tennessean newspaper in Nashville showed Hodges with blood on his eyebrow and his right arm in a sling.

He's an intense person and he's no-nonsense," Heath said of Hodges.

Two of the injured had superficial wounds, including punctures to their arms and legs from grenade fragments, Heath said. The Army did not release any more details about the wounded.

United States building northern front against Iraq with more airstrikes

By Borzou Daragahi
Associated Press

Bombs line the hangar bay on board the U.S.S. Constellation. Air strikes are expected to become more prevent from Iraq's nothern border as the week progresses.

SULAYMANIYAH, Iraq (AP) – The U.S. military's northern front against Iraq appears to be building, with American planes landing in the Kurdish north and more airstrikes pounding positions of a militant Islamic group with alleged al-Qaida and Baghdad ties.

Four U.S. planes carrying "scores" of American military personnel landed at the Bakrajo airstrip, 10 miles west of Sulaymaniyah, late Saturday night, a high-level Kurdish official said on condition of anonymity. They joined Special Operations troops already in the region.

Additional U.S. aerial attacks began Friday night and, a day later, targeted suspected positions of the militant Ansar al-Islam group, military officials said.

There were no details about casualties. The Friday night assault left scores dead, mostly members of another Islamist group accused of supporting Ansar, military officials said.

The Kurdish official said more U.S. planes and personnel were scheduled to arrive in coming days and already may have landed at other airstrips in the Kurdish autonomous area, which has been under American and British aerial protection since the 1991 Gulf War.

The American planes originally were scheduled to land two months ago, but were delayed as Americans attempted to sort out a military strategy, the official said.

Ansar, as well as the Baghdad-controlled strategic oil cities of Kirkuk and Mosul, are possible U.S. targets, the official said. On Sunday, numerous bursts of anti-aircraft artillery were heard from the direction of Mosul.

The United States wanted to use Turkey to attack Iraq from the north, but the Turkish parliament refused to grant access to Turkish bases after weeks of wrangling over financial compensation and arrangements for sending Turkish troops into northern Iraq.

Turkey fears the Kurds, as Saddam Hussein's regime is overthrown, will seize the northern oil fields or establish an independent state, thus complicating Turkey's conflict with its own Kurdish minority. American officials fear clashes between Turkish forces and Iraqi Kurds.

On Friday, Turkey said U.S. warplanes could fly through Turkish airspace on their way to Iraq.

Barham Salih, prime minister of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan government controlling the eastern half of the autonomous Kurdish enclave, declined to confirm the landing of U.S. forces. But he said such an incursion would be received warmly by the mostly pro-American Kurds.

"Americans are liberators," he said. "They are welcome in Iraq and they are welcome in Kurdistan. They are welcome to come here and help bring us freedom."

The Arabic-language television station Al-Jazeera, reporting from Sulaymaniyah, quoted witnesses as saying U.S. airborne troops landed by helicopter at a base near the city.

The Kurdish official said the planes landed in darkness, using no lights, and departed when the personnel left. Residents living near Bakrajo airstrip described loud, strange noises late Saturday night, and four buses leaving the area.

Small groups of American forces have scoured the countryside for months, and the Kurds long have awaited more.

Muhammad Haji Mahmoud, leader of the Kurdistan Social Democratic Party and a key member of the Iraqi opposition, said the Americans are welcome to use Kurdistan as a staging ground for a northern assault against Saddam's regime.

"We're not going to say no to anything the Americans want," he said. "America is the true liberator and the only one who could liberate us from this regime. We couldn't do it with our rusty Kalashnikovs in more than 40 years."

Asian Dance and Music Program, International Programs, and Asian [illegible]
Nai-Ni Chen DANCE COMPANY
Passage to the Silk River
Thursday, March 27
BY CONCERT
Concerts at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium
$28.50/$22.50/$16.50 with UB
Free College Students $10.50
For tickets call 413-545-2511 or 1-800-999-9882 or go online at ticketmaster.com
CHILDREN'S PERFORMANCES
A Dragon's Tale: Nai-Ni Chen Dance Company
Thursday, March 27
10:30 a.m.
Bowker Auditorium
INTERACTIVE TALK
Beauty in Jingju: Chinese Opera Elizabeth Wichmann-Walczak
Tuesday, March 25, 3:30pm
Room 225, Herter Hall
Monday, March 31, 7pm
Auditorium of Fine Arts
Springfield, Free
LECTURE AND WORKSHOP
Forms in Motion: Nai-Ni Chen and Zhongwei Shen
Wednesday, March 26
School of Science and Technology, Springfield
Wednesday, March 26, 3pm
Faculty Center Lobby
Free
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 413-577-2480
CHINA FESTIVAL

CASH FOR BOOKS
BRING 'EM IN OR CALL US
Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 S. Prospect St. Amherst 253-3870, 256-7816

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/21/03 - Thursday 3/27/03 (M-F)
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
[illegible] YEARS of the Sun
1:00 4:05 7:10 10:05*
(R) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:20
NEW FROM THE TOP (PG13) 1:55 4:50 7:10 10:00
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
BOAT TRIP (R) 1:15 4:40 7:45 10:25*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
PHILLY'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 3:30 4:55 7:00*
BASKETFUL (PG13) 9:00
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:15 7:15 9:45*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:20 10:05
AGENT CODY BANKS (PG) 1:50 4:25 7:05 9:40*
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:30 4:30 7:25 10:10
WILLARD (PG13) 1:10 4:00 7:30 9:50
I = No show. Wednesday 3/26
Senior Show 3/27/03 - THE HUNTED
* = no passes/superpasses
cinemark.com

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-APRIL 4TH - 6TH
-THE BALLROOM
-LORD JEFFERY INN
-DOWNTOWN AMHERST
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Email us at news@dailycollegian.com

Allied forces suffer losses in ambush

Continued from page 1

gence officials.

The war continued to be a strange mix. There was tough resistance in some spots, but there was none at all in others.

As soldiers from the 101st Airborne division moved through the Iraqi desert, villagers lined up along the highway to greet the troops with two pressing questions: Are you friendly? And is food coming?

Through an interpreter, Col. Michael Linnington assured village leaders that U.S. forces were indeed friendly and that U.N. relief workers would bring food.

"We are here to help return the country to the way it used to be. We are here to help the Iraqi people. That's it. And to take out Saddam's government," Linnington said.

Villagers peered with curiosity at the soldiers – many waved and smiled. One young boy saluted to the troops; another said "welcome" in English. Their leaders nodded enthusiastically when they heard that food would arrive soon.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2003 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

War on Iraq shouldn't stop us from living our lives at home

When we left campus over a week ago, there were many charged emotions about the then "possible" war with Iraq. We left on a cloud of controversy about protests, being for the war or anti-war, general confusion on information and most importantly whether or not we were actually going to war.

The speculation is over, we are now at war and have returned to a very different campus. Last week, while we were on break it was easy for many of us to block out the events of the world however, now it's time to face reality again and how we're going to cope with it on a personal and national level. Since the start of the war many organizations have been trying to figure out how to deal with the war.

There was some question about whether the 75th Annual Academy Awards were going to take place. Eventually, organizers decided that the usual red carpet gathering of celebrities wouldn't happen, because many stars felt uncomfortable with the media attention when there is a war taking place overseas. Most parties went ahead as planned, however the media was barred from covering them. The Oscars have never been cancelled but have been postponed; in 1938 because of massive flooding in Los Angeles, in 1968 after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and in 1981 because of the shooting of President Ronald Reagan.

The war has also made sporting leagues such as Major League Baseball and NASCAR reconsider their events. In a released statement NASCAR President Mike Helton said, "We will do whatever is necessary to continue supporting our country's efforts, including schedule adjustments if deemed appropriate." Major League Baseball cancelled its season opener in Tokyo, after Commissioner Bud Selig spoke to the State Department, FBI and other government agencies. "It would be unfair and totally unsettling for the players involved to be half a world away from their families – at this critical juncture," said Selig.

There was speculation over whether the NCAA tournament would take place. President Myles Brand considered postponing the tournament but changed his mind after speaking with Secretary of Homeland Security Tom Ridge who encouraged them to continue with events as planned.

"We know of no reason not to go forward with the games and championships," said last Tuesday. "Extraordinary things may happen in the future that are unknown to us, and we can't deal with that now. But from everything we know, we're convinced this is the best course of action."

This statement couldn't sum up our feelings more. We at The Collegian believe that we should proceed with our day-to-day routines as normally as possible, despite the situation overseas. We cannot let the uncertainty of things to come loom over us, stopping our activities completely. It's not constructive and doesn't solve anything.

Yes, it's important for us to be concerned citizens and to be as informed as possible about the war, but it is equally important to continue living our lives as we best can ... normally.

Information from Reuters, the Associated Press, USA Today was used in this opinion.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Images of war need to include both sides

Katy Noone

It may come as no surprise to most of us that the extensive media coverage of the past few days has consisted mostly of dramatic, emotional images, often lacking in-depth coverage of historical relevance and political importance. Turn on any cable, network, or local television station and you will be bombarded with video feeds of military equipment and American, British, and Iraqi soldiers. There are photos of burning oil wells, destroyed buildings, and large anti-war protests behind the well-known faces of Peter Jennings, Dan Rather, and Tom Brokaw. The faces of anxious American soldiers acting on orders to "make the world safe for democracy," give a human face to the complicated and controversial war against Saddam Hussein's Iraqi regime.

Most of the American public yearn to be updated on the breaking news developments throughout the day and are more interested in the present happenings than they are in historical background. Thus it is not entirely any network's fault that they show the same dramatic, exciting, emotional coverage practically around the clock during times of international turmoil. However, with most of us confused about what war will bring and passionate about peace and justice, the images do little to enlighten us about the roots of the problems in Iraq. Vague mentions of the Gulf War, Al-Qaeda, oil, and terrorism are heard and seen throughout the news coverage, but never in enough detail to paint a clear picture of the real issues behind the war.

George Bush and his administration is one of the most undiplomatic presidential groups in history. According to the March 24, 2003 Newsweek, "On an annual basis, George W. Bush has visited fewer foreign countries than any president in 40 years...He does better than Dick Cheney, who has been abroad only once since becoming Vice President." The Vice President of the United States has only been abroad once during his entire term? Most college students travel more than he does. How can a conservative, wealthy administration that doesn't even bother venturing beyond U.S. borders accurately access an intricate political, economic, and military situation thousands of miles away in the Middle East?

Obviously President Bush is surrounded by more intelligent minds than his own who have traveled around the world and who are highly schooled in diplomatic relations and international diplomacy. These people write Bush's speeches, including his State of the Union address (which was arranged in 30-second sound bites so as to make the highest possible impact to American viewers) and advise him not only on what tie to wear on public relations tours, but also how and when to wage war on Iraq. No doubt the Sept. 11 tragedy paved the way for Bush's present military action in Iraq. He, along with former New York City mayor Rudolph Giuliani, became American heroes after the terrible terrorist attacks, possessing the "patriotic" spirit that America so treasures. Some of that praise and admiration may be deserved, yet only un-inquiring minds so soon forget the history of Bush and his interest in Middle Eastern oil and former family connections to the wealthy Bin Laden family. The context of hostilities between the United States and many Muslim nations is often placed aside, replaced by powerful images of the present conflict. An example of this is the noticeably small amount of coverage by the media of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and the United States involvement in creating an atmosphere of resentment and violence in the Middle East.

"They were crouched on the ground, looking petrified and it was sort of disturbing how inhuman the broadcast made the foreign soldiers seem."

The media has done a good job providing somewhat balanced news coverage, highlighting politicians for and against the war, as well as demonstrations supporting the war and those supporting peace. It should also be noted that anti-war demonstrators are not unpatriotic citizens who refuse to acknowledge the bravery and expertise of the American military and all of the men and women who make up our defense system. As the saying goes, "We're not against the soldiers, we're against the war." It is upsetting to hear of young soldiers and several journalists who have been killed in Iraq who have families and friends waiting for them to return.

The media does have a tendency to show American soldiers in a heroic light and Iraqi soldiers in an animalistic one. On Saturday's NBC Nightly News with Tom Brokaw, a reporter was shown talking to buddied Iraqi soldiers who had surrendered to the United States. They were crouched on the ground, looking petrified and it was disturbing how inhuman the broadcast made the foreign soldiers seem. They showed pictures of injured Iraqi civilians "supposedly" injured by U.S. forces. Although it can be agreed that Saddam Hussein is a dangerous man with the ability to create propaganda to win support, the U.S. media's insistence on ignoring possible civilian casualties makes them seem unrealistic. With entire buildings being blown up by powerful bombs and other weaponry, it is likely that some civilians may be injured.

It can be challenging to dig through all of the in-your-face, breaking news coverage that has taken over all forms of media since Bush officially began war this week. What all concerned Americans and people around the world should do is look beyond the camouflage tanks, burning oil fields, and disruptive protests into the real issues that created an atmosphere of war. With greater understanding of these issues, the international community can come up with solutions to political and economic problems before lives have to be lost in places such as Iraq.

Katy Noone is a Collegian Columnist.

Through the eyes of a child

Sanam Hakim

I told myself I would never write about war. Then I realized that all the cool kids are writing about war, so, here I am, just one of the cool kids, writing about war. For the record, I have absolutely no opinion about the subject. You can't blindfold me and ask me if I like the shirt you're wearing.

I picked up my brother from elementary school last week. He likes to take his time getting out of class, so it gave me the opportunity to stand around with the other parents and stare blankly at the children. One of the girls was really loud and she kept giggling and introducing herself to two of the boys standing next to her. Sitting about five feet away from her was this little blonde boy with his two front teeth missing. He was going through an endless of cycle of picking his nose, looking at it, and either flicking it or putting it in his mouth. Next to him were two younger kids laughing hysterically and beating the crap out of each other.

"All he really knows about the situation is that Saddam Hussein is a bad man, George Bush is the president, a lot of people die in war, and that all of this has something to do with terrorism."

While I was looking at them, I started thinking about my school-organized walkouts in the middle of class, friendships falling apart between those who support the war on Iraq and those who resent it, "No blood for oil" signs, people spitting at the ROTC students, extreme passion (on both parts), animosity, disunity.

When my brother finally got out of class, we walked towards my car, and I asked him what his thoughts were about the war with Iraq. He gave me a funny look, shrugged, and said, "How am I supposed to know?" All he really knows about the situation is that Saddam Hussein is a bad man, George Bush is the president, a lot of people die in war, and that all of this has something to do with terrorism. I think his response was the most realistic response I have heard thus far.

I ask you now to sit back and think about this for a minute: Do you honestly know any more truth about the situation with Iraq than a 10-year-old? I don't think you do. I don't think anyone does. George Bush, with the help of the media, has blindfolded the public and left them wandering around aimlessly, trying to decide if they like his shirt or not.

I am not criticizing the people who have a strong opinion about the war with Iraq. As humans, we have opinions and beliefs about everything. As humans, all of our opinions and beliefs are different.

What I am saying is that we live in a world that is constantly dividing. We are divided by gender, we are divided by race, and we are divided by opinion. To me, it's sad to look around and see a group of veiled people divided into farther veiled groups. To me, it makes more sense to become unified as a confused whole than separated as angry, veiled individuals. The way I see it, the children are the smart ones – smiling, playing, and picking their noses. They don't care if the person sitting next to them is a Democrat or a Republican or if that person supports Bush or doesn't. All the children know is that they are sitting with other children who are equally as blind to the problems of the world as they are. As adults in the messed up society we live in, I suggest we start looking at the world through the eyes of children. If we don't, the divisions we force upon ourselves could be a greater war to face, than Iraq.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian Columnist.

Craving emotional doom on television

Robert Carey

For the Romans, nothing was more entertaining than the games. The bloodier the better. They were enthralled by the mayhem of the gladiatorial arena. The sweet carnage of watching one person embowel another quenched their violent psyches and slaked their lust for blood. Every important town in that expansive empire had an arena, an outlet for the people to witness and enjoy in the suffering of another human being.

Oh sure, the Romans were violent people, but eventually Christianity and barbarians overcame them. Soon after, their transcendental notion between mind, body, and soul shifted, and torturing the body was viewed as wrong. Slowly the Roman Empire dissolved in the sands of time resulting in the submergence of the primal desire for violence and mayhem. This is the desire that allegedly rests in the "id" of all human beings, that Freud once called "thanatos," meaning death.

Today, we have a new empire, a new people, and with it one old skeleton. Like the Hollywood reemergence of some Egyptian mummy that comes back to wreak havoc on the peaceful earth, this "id" desire has come back to haunt the American public. However physical violence is still no longer condoned in this society, and therefore Americans prefer to torture the mind and soul. Instead of arenas we have television sets, and instead of gladiators we have vain, self-obsessed people. We dangle a carrot of 15 minutes of fame in front of these poor stupid people's mouths, and lead them, like lambs to the slaughter, onto a talk show, or even worse to reality TV.

Meanwhile the sun goes down, people clear the streets, retreat to their homes, throw a heavily salted snack in their laps, and watch the idiot box. "Joe Millionaire" was one of my favorite reality TV shows to loath. I saw the final episode, literally only because I was hospitalized in a room with five television stations, and because I was with a friend who wanted to see it. If I was an "id" driven animal then, frankly, I would be quite disappointed with the ending to the show; there were no tears, or blubbering, a few feelings were hurt. But other than that it failed to rip anyone's life to shreds or cause the kind of grief-ridden outburst we've come to expect. In the end it was just a hunch of superficial women fighting over a man who had all the depth and integrity of a communion wafer passed out by Cardinal Law – pretty tame by American standards.

"But other than that it failed to rip anyone's life to shreds or cause the kind of grief-ridden outburst, we've come to expect."

But there is always Jerry Springer, the infamous master of mental suffering, and if it just happens to spill over to physical violence so be it. Beside the brief glimmer of fame it provides, I'm boggled how anyone could be stupid enough to go on a show with such a nefarious reputation. It should be obvious, even to the most callow of minds, that being asked on a talk show spells emotional doom. I'm aware that the majority of talk show participants are just acting, and that in reality most of the things we see on talk shows and reality TV are fake anyways. However, as viewers we should all be ashamed, because we know we're all craving to witness that moment when their soul is torn to shreds and the reaction that follows when the poor creature's heart begins to bleed.

Learn to control your primal urges.

Robert Carey is a Collegian Columnist.

Letter to the Editor:

Informed protesting is needed

To the Editor:

On all news channels, they have been showing footage of protestors all across the nation. Most of those people don't even understand the politics and causes of this war. If you are going to protest the war, protest it. It is your right to do so, protected by law. But don't protest what you don't understand. Get all the facts first and then make an informed decision.

It drives me crazy when I see protesters with signs like, "no blood for oil" and "give peace a chance." This war is not about oil. We are not invading Iraq to get control of the oil fields, our purpose is to eliminate the threat of Saddam Hussein and install a new government, beneficial to the citizens of Iraq. And we tried diplomacy for 12 years. It didn't work. We gave Saddam a chance to step down, and he refused.

Waiting another week or month isn't going to change anything besides letting him build up more weapons and resistance against us. I would rather take the stand now, and attack, and get this war over and done with. To me, this seems like a much better idea than waiting a few months, with Saddam still in power, only to find ourselves bombarded with anthrax and smallpox and chemical weapons, and other weapons of mass destruction in the days to come. It is about time something is done to stop him.

I don't like war. I hate the thought of our soldiers out there, far from home, and in danger. But I support our president and I support our troops and I support our cause. I have faith that all will turn out well in the end. Our country and our freedoms have come about as a result of past wars. I wish it didn't have to happen, but I don't see any other way. Hopefully this war can be finished victoriously, quickly, and with as few casualties as possible.

I don't care if people protest. It would be wrong for me to say people shouldn't do that. Freedom of speech, expression, and the right to assemble are all very valuable civil rights that I would never want to see trampled. All I mean is that one should know the facts, and understand what they are saying and speaking out against, before they protest. To protest something like this war when you don't understand it is like trying to cook without knowing the recipe. It doesn't make sense.

Joanna Douillette
UMass Student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Abortion rights now in jeopardy

Ladies, do you remember what you were doing last week? Vacationing? Tanning? Sleeping? The more pertinent question is do you know what Congress was doing?

We can't answer the first questions for you. As for the last, however, we know exactly what Congress was doing, and this week's "Sex-iversity" is dedicated to discussing its actions.

Last week Congress voted away a woman's right to choose. Yes. It really is that simple, and we're willing to wager next semester's tuition that most of you didn't even know this was a possibility.

Sex-iversity

Sara Brumfield& Winnie Chen

While the nation was focused on our "Countdown to War," Congress clandestinely passed through an abortion ban, which stated quite vaguely that any "partial birth" abortions are now illegal. This technically means that abortion procedures used in second and third trimester abortions are now illegal.

Coincidentally, this controversial piece of legislation contained some rather ambiguous language, which could come in quite handy in the future for the anti-choice movement. Just imagine if one day all of Congress decides that "partial birth" really means any abortion done after conception because it feels that life begins at conception.

Now, this legislation is coming from a Senate that maintains it upholds the Roe v. Wade decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. Sadly, we are quite in awe of this Senate that can sincerely claim to support a woman's right to choose, while simultaneously banning major components of that choice.

Not only do the senators ban a woman's right to choose, but the group also rejected a prevention package amendment that would have supported family planning initiatives to reduce unintended pregnancies – and, by association, abortions. This failed amendment would have also improved access to prenatal and post-partum care for women.

Perhaps this is independent thinking gone terribly out of control, but we fail to see how a Senate claiming to be working for a woman's right to reproductive freedom can willingly deny legislation that would take proactive measures to lower unintended pregnancies – and, consequently the need for abortions.

But there's more. Any legislation passed by Congress is subject to judgment by the U.S. Supreme Court in the U.S. system of check and balances. One of the jobs of the U.S. Supreme Court is to uphold the Constitution by determining whether laws passed by Congress are constitutional.

Congress claims its "fact finding" for this abortion ban superceded the evidence provided to the U.S. Supreme Court. Not surprisingly, the Congressional facts conflict with the evidence viewed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Stenberg v. Carhart in 2000. Are we the alone in wondering how valid and objective this "fact finding" mission was?

Of course if we were in Congress, we wouldn't want the Supreme Court's opinion either, because we'd know exactly what they would say.

In the Stenberg v. Carhart decision, the Supreme Court ruled that any abortion ban must have an exception made for a woman's health. It also ruled that the broad language used to dictate abortion procedures imposed an "undue burden" on a woman's right to choose.

That makes two strikes against Congress right there. The abortion ban they just passed has no exception clause protecting the health of the mother. It uses such aforementioned vague language and indeed imposes an "undue burden" on a woman's right to choose.

Now, what does it say when Congress decides to completely disregard the laws of the Constitution – the very same laws each senator and representative swore to uphold and defend?

Ironically enough, this year is the 30th anniversary of a woman's right to choose. The U.S. Constitution was ratified in 1788. That's 215 years of democratic government in this country. In that time, women have had 30 years of reproductive freedom.

Thirty years. Even the world's oldest cat made it to 31.

Sara Brumfield and Winnie Chen are Collegian Columnists.

And the winners are...

Best Actor

Best Actress

Best Supporting Actor

Best Supporting Actress

Best Director

Best Picture

By DAVID GERMAIN
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – "Chicago" led the Academy Awards with six trophies, including best picture, at a ceremony Sunday that allowed Hollywood to exult itself while muting the Oscar pageantry because of the U.S.-led war on Iraq.

The razzle-dazzle satire "Chicago" became the first musical since 1968's "Oliver!" to win the top Oscar. Its other awards were supporting actress for Catherine Zeta-Jones, and four technical honors including costume design and art direction.

Adrien Brody was a surprise best actor winner Sunday for his role as a Holocaust survivor in "The Pianist," and Nicole Kidman was named best actress for portraying novelist Virginia Woolf in the somber drama "The Hours," at an Oscar show overshadowed by the U.S.-led war on Iraq.

Chris Cooper won supporting actor for "Adaptation."

Pedro Almodovar won the original screenplay Oscar for "Talk to Her," and Ronald Harwood the adapted screenplay award for "The Pianist."

World events sparked several emotional highlights, including Brody's tearful speech and an attack on President Bush by filmmaker Michael Moore, winner of the best-documentary Oscar for "Bowling for Columbine."

Brody played the title character in "The Pianist," based on the real-life story of musician Wladyslaw Szpilman, a Polish Jew who lived through World War II by hiding from the Nazis in the Warsaw ghetto. "The Pianist" was directed by Roman Polanski, a Holocaust survivor himself.

The only best-actor nominee who did not already have at least one Oscar, Brody won with his first nomination. Over a 15-year career, Brody has focused on provocative films over commercial ones, among them "The Thin Red Line" and "Summer of Sam."

The 6-foot-1, 160-pound Brody lost 30 pounds in six weeks to capture Szpilman's gauntness after years of deprivation in the Warsaw ghetto.

"This film would not be possible without the blueprint provided by Wladyslaw Szpilman," Brody said. "This film is a tribute to his survival."

"My experience making this film made me very aware of the sadness and the dehumanization of people in times of war, and the repercussions of war. And whether you believe in God or Allah, may he watch over you, and let's pray for a peaceful and swift resolution," Brody said, fighting back tears and drawing a standing ovation.

Zeta-Jones was the first performer to win an acting Oscar for a musical since Liza Minnelli and Joel Grey for 1972's "Cabaret." In "Chicago," Zeta-Jones played a jailed vaudeville scamp scheming for celebrity after slaying her husband and sister.

Due to deliver her second child with husband and Oscar winner Michael Douglas in a few weeks, Zeta-Jones joined co-star and fellow supporting-actress nominee Queen Latifah in the Oscar performance of "I Move On," the best-song nominee from "Chicago."

"My hormones are too way out of control to be dealing with this," Zeta-Jones said.

Documentary winner "Bowling for Columbine" is Moore's alternately hilarious and horrifying examination of gun violence in America.

Moore, a harsh critic of the Bush administration, received a standing ovation. He invited his fellow documentary nominees on stage, saying they were there in "solidarity with me, because we like non-fiction, and we are living in fictitious times....We live in a time where we have a man who's sending us to war for fictitious reasons.

"We are against this war, Mr. Bush. Shame on you, Mr. Bush. Shame on you," Moore said, amid a mix of boos and applause from the crowd.

Her Oscar win was a Hollywood ending for Kidman after a turbulent couple of years. She had a miscarriage in 2001 and broke up with husband Tom Cruise, in whose shadow she had lingered throughout their 11-year relationship.

Kidman emerged as a big star in her own right later that year with "Moulin Rouge," which earned her a best-actress Oscar nomination, and the horror hit "The Others." In "The Hours," Kidman played suicidal author Virginia Woolf, wearing a fake nose to capture the writer's plain features.

"Why do you come to the Academy Awards when the world is in such turmoil," Kidman said. "Because art is important. And because you believe in what you do and you want to honor that, and it is a tradition that needs to be upheld."

Cooper, a veteran character actor whose credits include "American Beauty" and "Lone Star," played a scraggly haired, toothless horticultural poacher on a mission to preserve rare orchids in the film loosely based on author Susan Orlean's "The Orchid Thief."

"In light of all the troubles in this world, I wish us all peace," Cooper said as he received his award.

Cooper thanked his "Adaptation" collaborators, especially Meryl Streep.

"Working with this woman was like making great jazz," he said.

The Oscar for foreign-language film went to the German drama "Nowhere in Africa," about a family of Jews who leave Germany before World War II and settle on a farm in Kenya.

The Japanese fantasy "Spirited Away" won the award for animated feature film. The movie, which had a limited U.S. release last fall and grossed a modest $5.5 million, was a surprise winner against a field of nominees that included $100 million Hollywood hits "Ice Age" and "Lilo & Stitch."

In addition to best picture, "Chicago" won the film editing, sound, art-direction and costume-design prizes. "The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers" won the sound-editing and visual-effects awards, while "Frida" took the makeup and original score statuettes.

By the show's halfway mark, ABC News twice offered a brief war update, then switched back to the Oscars.

Earlier, demonstrators on both sides of the war issue gathered near the Kodak Theatre, site of the Oscars.

UMass students to collaborate with local youth

By JENNIFER EASTWOOD
Collegian Staff

Catch that beat of the drum? Feel that cool rhythm of the strings? Study that black and white sheet music well?

With little doubt, fifth and sixth graders from the Springfield Public Schools will this Friday, for these youngsters are teaming with University of Massachusetts musicians on March 28 in a celebration of jazz and percussion music.

The UMass Jazz Ensemble, Chapel Jazz Ensemble and Percussion Ensemble are all heading south to the Chestnut Accelerated Middle School to accompany over 100 elementary and middle students in a free concert for the community.

Conducted by UMass professors Jeffrey Holmes, David Sporny and Eduardo Leandro, the concert is part of a local collaborative effort called "Connection Through Music." The program has run since 1998 and coordinates the music departments of Springfield schools and UMass.

Expect to find young students represented from the elementary and middle schools from Beal, Bowles, Chestnut, Freedman, Gerena, Harris, Homer, Indian Orchard, Kiley and Van Sickle. These young musicians will work under the direction of Lawrence Fisher at Chestnut for a packed Friday schedule that will ready everyone for the night's performance.

Fisher, who earned a Master's degree in Choral Conducting and Performance from UMass last May, said he's ready for the challenge of time constraints.

"I find my work at Gerena Elementary School very rewarding and challenging," Fisher told the UMass news office. "This is what I prepared myself to do and I'm delighted to be working with young students and enriching their lives with music."

The concert is presented in collaboration with the schools and Mayor Michael J. Albano's office.

"We are delighted to be working with the UMass faculty and students," Vera Baker, Director of Fine Arts for the Springfield Public Schools, reported in a recent press release. "Our students and teachers benefit from attending classes and concerts at UMass, from teacher workshops, and from the many ensembles and soloists who come into our classrooms to share their knowledge and love of music."

The mayor's office and the University's Department of Music and Dance will also present awards for "Outstanding service and devotion to the art of music for the benefit of the people of the City of Springfield," during a ceremony accompanying the concert. Van Sickle principal Cheryl Despirt, Attorney Kenneth Shea and Montenia Shider, a singer and Springfield teacher will be receiving the awards.

The three previous concerts similar to this one were held at Central High School, each one billed as music offered in a fast-paced setting.

This year's concert begins at 7 p.m. Attendees are advised to arrive early, as seating is limited and a large turnout is expected.

Chestnut Accelerated Middle School is located at 355 Plainfield Street in Springfield.

Bringing you the dos and do nots of club scene behavior

Running with Scissors

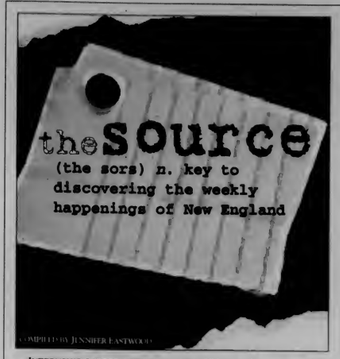
Melissa Hammel & Lizzy Nielsen

The ladies of "Running with Scissors" took our show on the road this week and spent our spring break perusing the clubs and bars of Orlando, Florida. Out of our trip, we bring you some simple dos and don'ts that anyone should keep in mind when deciding to spend some time in a club.

KEEP YOUR HANDS TO YOURSELF

One major thing to keep in mind at a club is that you do not know the people you are attempting to dance with. While this sounds simple, many people seem to forget they are not allowed to grope freely at members of the opposite sex. Having your butt grabbed while you are in a club is unfortunate. Spending the night with your hands behind your back because it has been grabbed about eight times is a shame.

Also in this category goes butt slapping. There is nothing sexy about winding up and giving someone's rear a loud slap – no matter how hot and heavy things might be getting. Clubs are about dancing and having a good time and not about getting bruises on one's posterior.



LEAVE SOME ROOM TO BREATHE

Take our word for it. Clubs are both cramped and hot. Often this is the best part about them, especially when you are attempting to get to know someone a little bit better. What is not so great is when someone comes up to you in a hot, cramped club and attempts to adhere him or herself to you like a human backpack. We are not in Germany; try to give the other person a normal amount of space to allow movement

SHOWER

It is important, as in all things, to both shower and dress appropriately when you are going out on the town. Inappropriate club attire includes sweaters, anything that looks like it may have once been a couch, open-toed shoes and 1970s-era clothing. And as always, keep in mind that no one wants to dance with a stinky person. So avoid ruining another person's club experience and use some deodorant.

Continued on page 7

COMPILED BY JENNIFER EASTWOOD

INTERNSHIP OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND

MasterCard presents its 2003 internship program. With this program, 100 students will be selected for music and sports business summer classes. Twelve of them will intern for Interscope/Geffen/A&M Records and another 12 will intern for a Major League Baseball team.

The program is called "Priceless Edge" and was expanded from an exclusively music business curriculum to include classes on the business of sports.

In 2002, students chosen for the program assisted in the production of a music documentary.

This year the "Priceless Edge" internship program will offer 100 students (two from outside the United States) the opportunity to gain real-world experience in the music and sports businesses.

The website mastercard.com directs onlookers to the essay questions: "If you could start your own music or entertainment company, what would it do, and how would it be different?" or "If you could start a new professional sports business, what would it be and why?"

Students 18 to 25 years old are eligible to enter this internship program, which includes a five-week summer study, running June 2 though July 3. Online entrance ability will end on April 11.

• • •

AFOOT AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT'S JORGENSEN CENTER

Sir James Galway, attributed as a legendary flutist, will perform Thursday at 8 p.m. at the University of Connecticut's Jorgensen Center for the Performing Arts.

Galway will be joined by pianist Phillip Moll. The recital, with works by Schubert, Doppler, Morlacchi, Briccialdi, Taffanel and Borne, marks the performance of one of the world's most recognized musicians, the Jorgensen Center reported.

Galway, the Center's press material continued, is regarded as a matchless interpreter of the classical flute repertoire and a consummate entertainer. His appeal crosses all musical boundaries, the Center press material concluded.

Galway, born in Belfast, Northern Ireland, specializes in traditional Irish folk melodies; his concerto and recital repertoire varies from the baroque music of Bach, Vivaldi and Mozart to contemporary jazz. He began his musical exercises at a young age, playing a penny whistle as a small child. Soon, he moved onto the flute and was winning top local prizes by the time he turned 12. Galway continued his studies at London's Royal College of Music, the Guildhall School, and at the Paris Conservatoire and with flutist Marcel Moyse.

COURTESY JORGENSEN CENTER

Flutist Sir James Galway will perform at UConn Thursday.

Galway's list of over 50 recordings for RCA accompanies his extensive touring schedule. With such publicity, Galway has become reputable figure worldwide. Known as "the man with the golden flute," Galway has sold more than 30 million records.

He has won a Grand Prix du Disque and Record of the Year awards from both Cash Box and Billboard magazines for his recordings. Videos and American television appearances date back to his frequent appearances on "The Tonight Show" in the early 1970s.

Regular tickets for the performance are $22 to $37. Discounts are available for students and seniors. Special $5 tickets for youth up to age 18 are available.

Call the Jorgensen Box Office Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at 860-486-4226 for tickets and information. The Box Office is also open one hour before show time and through intermission for walk-up ticket sales.

On the Net: http:// www.superflute.com and www.jorgensen.ct-arts.com.

• • •

The sounds of Beethoven's Diabelli's Variations will fill the air Tuesday when Piotr Anderszewski, considered one of the most exciting young classical pianists to emerge in recent years, takes the stage.

Anderszewski performs at 7:30 p.m. at the University of Connecticut's von der Mehden Recital Hall on Coventry Road in conjunction with the Jorgensen Center's Chamber Series.

Anderszewski's performance will include Beethoven's 33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli, Op. 120; Bach's Preludes and Fugues from The Well-Tempered Clavier Book II (Nos. 13, 14, 15, & 16); and Bach's Partita No 1 in B-flat Major, BWV 825, taken from his latest album, the Jorgensen Center reported.

Reported at a remarkable performance of Beethoven's Diabelli Variations, Anderszewski's performance in Britain's 1990 Leeds Piano Competition led to a stalemate, as he faced disappointment with his own playing and withdrew from the competition during its final stages.

But Anderszewski's reputation was only just budding and was established the next year during a recital at London's Wigmore Hall. One again, he performed the Diabelli Variations. But this time, the performance successfully launched his international career. A critic for The Guardian even once described Anderszewski as "a pianist of inspirational brilliance."

The musician received the 2002 Gilmore Artist Award last April, becoming the fourth pianist to obtain the honor. The $300,000 Gilmore, the Jorgensen Center reported, is awarded to an exceptional musician, who, regardless of age or nationality, possesses broad and profound musicianship, charisma, and the promise of a successful international career.

Anderszewski will also give a 6:45 p.m. pre-concert talk with the University's Dr. Bruce Bellingham at von der Mehden Recital Hall.

Regular tickets for the performance are $21 to $25. Discounts are available for students and seniors. Special $5 tickets for youth up to age 18 are available. Call the Jorgensen Box Office Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at 860-486-4226 for tickets and information. The Box Office at von der Mehden is also open one hour before show time and through intermission for walk-up ticket sales.

On the Net: http:// www.cramermarderartists.com/anderszewski.htm and www.jorgensen.ct-arts.com.

Examining necessary club etiquette

Continued from page 6

KEEP TRACK OF YOUR STUFF

This is an important rule of appropriate club etiquette. If you purchase a drink or if you are a smoker, try to keep track of these things on the dance floor. Everyone has had a situation in which they have been doused with an entire beer or smelled their hair burning due to a rogue cigarette. Besides being a waste of money on your part, burning someone's hair off will never make you any friends.

NEVER ASK TO KISS ANYONE

If you have to ask to kiss someone, it most likely means the answer is going to be no. Frankly, making out in clubs is pretty disgusting, but if you must do it, at least have it contain some sort of spontaneity. One of us was asked in an Orlando club this passed week if a boy could kiss us. After the intense round of earsplitting laughter, the answer was an obvious no.

DRESS FOR THE CLUBS

Depending on where you go, proper dress is necessary. For certain clubs in Springfield, there is a dress code, but for clubs in Orlando, jeans were acceptable. Ladies, don't wear anything that could easily be untied and expose your bosoms. Guys, at least make an attempt to look nice, bringing out some khakis with a black shirt or something of that sort. Dress to impress, because nobody goes to a club to see slobs. They're looking for eye candy.

DO NOT FLAIL YOUR LIMBS

It is quite difficult after a few drinks to keep your arms and legs under control, especially in a packed club. Flailing limbs will result in flying drinks and angry people. Attempt to not let your arms and legs get out of control because you could anger someone to the point of getting your butt kicked. Plain and simple, if you've had too much, go sit at the bar or a table, and don't go dance. You'll probably not only make a complete ass of yourself and knock someone over, but you'll also appear to be having a seizure.

IF YOU CAN'T DANCE, DO NOT TRY

If you know your dancing could use some work, hang around on the fringes and do the best you can. Have a few drinks, as everyone loosens up after they get some alcohol in their systems, but do not throw yourself into the middle of a packed club and try to show off your moves if you have two left feet.

This was another common occurrence in Orlando, as there are some (especially guys) who think they're Justin Timberlake but actually look like drunken chimpanzees on speed when they attempt to dance. If you're a guy and can't dance, find a lady who can, because those who can't dance typically look much better if they can find a woman who can bust a move. Just be aware of your dancing abilities or lack there of. This is all we ask.

• • •

Well, we hope we can assist in making clubs a happier and more enjoyable place for everyone by handing out our words of advice. So often people go into clubs and make complete jackasses of themselves in instances that can so easily be avoided. Just stay within your realm of capabilities, and don't drink too much. As usual, you can call us shallow and stupid, but there is no denying the fact that we are right.

Melissa Hummel and Lizzy Nielsen are Collegian Columnists.

BACK FROM BREAK NOTICE:

THERE WILL BE A MANDATORY ARTS AND LIVING MAGAZINE MEETING ON TUESDAY MARCH 25 AT 6 P.M. IN THE COLLEGIAN OFFICE. ALL WITH ASSIGNED STORIES FOR THE MAGAZINE NEED TO CHECK IN WITH JEN, NICK, OR LIZZY. IF THEY KNOW THEY WILL NOT BE ABLE TO ATTEND. HOPE YOU ENJOYED YOUR TIME OFF!

- THE EDITORS

Spring Break BLOWOUT

Take us with you

March 10–March 28

SAVE 25-50%*

• All Fleece • All Long Sleeve Tees • And more!

UMASS University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE

Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619

*Not valid with any other offer, expires 3/28/03, while supplies last.

Still rolling

Minutemen improve to 7-0 after undefeated spring break

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

In one of the most daunting weeks in program history, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team quickly bested four opposing squads – including one ranked in the top 20 – to improve to 7-0 (1-0 Eastern College Athletic Conference).

The victory-filled week may pay off in the ranks, as three teams ranked ahead of the No. 7 Minutemen – No. 1 Virginia, No. 3 Syracuse and No. 4 Maryland – lost games this weekend.

However, as Maryland was the only team that won over a non-top 5 squad – a 10-6 defeat at the hands of No. 12 North Carolina – the Terrapins may be the only team to drop below the Maroon and White.

Virginia and Syracuse each lost one-point games this weekend. The Cavaliers fell to No. 4 Johns Hopkins, while the Orangemen dropped to No. 5 Princeton.

The Minutemen outscored No. 14 Hofstra (14-3), Hartford (14-3), Albany (15-5) and No. 18 Brown (18-6) by a total of 61-21 in 240 minutes of play over an eight-day period.

"I'm not sure I would ever do that again," UMass coach Greg Cannella said after yesterday's seven-point win over Hofstra at Hempstead, N.Y. "I applaud [the unprecedented run.

"The Maroon and White jumped out to a 7-2 first-half lead and held off a third-period run by the Pride for its first road win of the season.

"That's a program that's been great [for a long time]," said Cannella, whose team has yet to allow more than 10 goals in a game this season. "Any time you can put a win in their place, it's great."

Junior Jeff Zywicki, who led the Minutemen in scoring every game over break, paced his squad with five goals against Hofstra. No. 9 added an assist to the score sheet as well.

A quiet four-game week, Zywicki netted 16 goals and added nine assists for 25 points, comparable to his statistics for the entire 2002 season, which saw him score 16 goals and chip in 11 assists for 27 points.

"The key to his game is finding all of the garbage goals," Cannella said of Zywicki's talent for putting home rebounds. "He's a great player."

Down 9-2 just two minutes into the second half, the Pride scored four of the five goals to cut the UMass lead to four nine minutes later.

But the Maroon and White defense held Holstra to just one more goal down the stretch as Zywicki netted a pair of goals and seniors Chris Fiore and Kevin Leveille while the Minutemen ran away.

The win came just two days after Friday's victory over Hartford, which capped off UMass' longest homestand in school history.

The Minutemen never left the contest in doubt, jumping out to a 6-0 lead en route to the lopsided, 11-goal victory. It was the sixth straight win for the Maroon and White.

Six Minutemen scored two goals in the contest and seven had two or more points.

Earlier in the week, UMass defeated Albany and Brown at Garber Field.

Zywicki was the story last Tuesday as well, scoring a career-high seven goals and chipping in two assists for a career-best nine points, as the Minutemen bested Albany by 10. UMass snapped an early 1-1 tie with a 3-0 run and led the rest of the way. Leveille dished out six assists on the afternoon.

UMass began its break with a 12-point win over Brown. Seven Minutemen notched two or more goals, with Gene Tundo, Ryan Connolly, Sean Morris and Leveille each scoring three. Zywicki led the Maroon and White in points with six.

The Maroon and White scored at least four goals in each quarter.

Tony Ventiquattro and the Minutemen improved their record to 7-0 by sweeping four games over spring break, including two over ranked opponents

Holtz, Arnold help Minutewomen bounce back with four straight wins

By Jeff Boyd
Collegian Staff

They probably didn't get a chance to relax on the beach or party every night until 4 a.m., but the No. 25 UMass softball team should have some good stories to tell following spring break.

While many spring breakers, the Minutewomen traveled to Myrtle Beach March 14-18. But rather than participating in typical spring break festivities, the Minutewomen found themselves in a struggle to stay above the .500 mark.

Back-to-back wins over Texas A&M and Florida Atlantic had UMass poised to contend for the Nike Blue Cross Gold Classic Championship. However, three consecutive losses on the final days of competition, including a loss to defending National Champion California, quickly ruined those hopes.

The Minutewomen managed to rebound this past weekend by beating up on both Seton Hall and host Villanova in the Big East/Atlantic 10 Challenge. UMass played each team twice, and outscored both teams by a combined margin of 15-2. The four wins to close out spring break brought UMass's record to 13-10, which should help maintain their status as a top 25 team.

In the first game of the Big East/Atlantic 10 Challenge, the Minutewomen cruised to a 4-0 victory over Villanova in the game of ace Kaila Holtz. In her fifth win of the season, Holtz allowed only four hits against the Wildcats while striking out four.

Senior Brandi Cross got the UMass offense rolling with a solo homerun in the bottom of the first inning. The Minutewomen added two more insurance runs in the third inning, one on a wild pitch and the other came when sophomore KJ Kelley drove in senior Emily Robustelli from second base. Holtz helped her own cause with an RBI in the fourth inning that scored pinch-runner KC Budrewicz.

The Minutewomen again were able to score early in the second game of the day against Seton Hall. Kelley drove in Budrewicz with two outs in the top of the first inning, giving UMass an early lead. The lead would not last beyond the bottom of the inning as the Pirates came back to score two in the bottom half of the frame. Sophomore pitcher Kelli Arnold proceeded to settle down and allowed only one other base runner for the rest of the game while striking out seven.

UMass tied the game in the fourth inning when pinch-runner Kristi Stefanoni scored on a Seton Hall error. The Minutewomen then tacked on three more runs in the fifth, en route to a 5-2 victory.

The second day of the Big East/Atlantic 10 Challenge had a similar schedule with similar results. Holtz kicked off the second day of competition by tossing her second straight shutout as the Minutewomen defeated Seton Hall 3-0. Just as she had against Villanova the previous day, Holtz provided her own run support with a single to centerfield that scored both senior Anna Peres and sophomore Denise Denis. On the mound, Holtz had one of her finest performances in the UMass uniform as she allowed only three hits while striking out a career-high 12 batters.

Cross added some insurance for UMass in the fifth inning by belting her second homerun of the weekend, her fifth of the season.

Cross got the UMass offense rolling again in the second game against Villanova when she blasted another homerun in the bottom of the first inning. The solo-shot was Cross's sixth of the season and gave UMass a 1-0 lead.

The one run turned out to be enough support for freshman pitcher Jenna Busa who was making only the second start of her career. Despite getting into jams in the first and fourth innings, Busa went on to shut out the Wildcats in a five-hit, seven-strikeout effort.

Robustelli added another run for UMass in the top of the sixth inning with a solo-homerun, her fifth of the season. Budrewicz added a third run in the seventh inning when she drove in pinch-runner Pam Sulick from third base.

The win made it a clean sweep for the Minutewomen who improved to 13-10 on the season.

UMass will be in action again tomorrow when they make the short trip down the Mass Pike to face Boston University. The Terriers are the defending America East Conference champions, but have struggled this season and come into the game with a record of 3-13.

Little, Sox prepare for final roster decisions

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

CLEARWATER, Fla. – Grady Little isn't the worrying type. He said the only sleep he's lost this spring training came Friday night when he stayed out late for a Toby Keith country music concert.

But Little acknowledged before Sunday's rainout against the Philadelphia Phillies that it's crunch time for his roster decisions.

"It's getting to be pretty tight," Little said. "It's getting to be about that time."

Thirty-six players are still officially in the mix for the 25-man opening day roster. Sixteen position players are fighting for either 12 or 13 slots.

Little says he'll announce his final roster before the team leaves for its two final exhibition games in Atlanta next weekend. He'll have to work through a small but challenging tangle of interrelated decisions.

The first is, with left-handed starter Casey Fossum struggling this spring, can Little afford to leave camp with 11 pitchers instead of 12? He'd certainly like to, given the big hats Boston assembled during the off-season.

Also, with David Ortiz at first base and Shea Hillenbrand at third base, Kevin Millar, Bill Mueller and Jeremy Giambi would be a formidable bench. But with 12 pitchers, they and backup catcher Doug Mirabelli would be it.

Carrying 11 pitchers would allow Little to add another position player, likely either Adrian Brown or Lou Merloni.

Brown, an outfielder, has good speed and has had a good spring, but Merloni is more versatile because he can play a variety of infield positions, as well as outfield in a pinch. Infielder Damian Jackson is also in the mix.

"If we go with 12 pitchers, then one of those guys that we keep as a position player has got to have some versatility," Little said. "If we go with 11 pitchers, we're banking on one guy who can give us some depth in the middle. He's got to have some stamina."

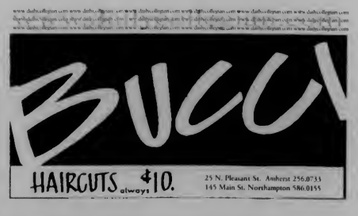
That would seem to favor Merloni.

Among the pitchers, that could favor right-hander and former starter Frank Castillo at the expense of left-handed prospect Matt White, who is still nursing a back injury.

"We know that Frankie can pitch a lot of innings one day and come back out and do it the next day again," Little said.

The other question is what to do with right-hander Robert Person, who does not quite have all this strength back after shoulder surgery last season. One option is an extended spring training or stretching him out at Triple-A Pawtucket.

Person is a former starter for the Phillies, who could be a long reliever or eventually a starter if someone struggles or gets hurt.



Person is scheduled to pitch again Tuesday. White remained day to day.

Little said he's experienced the same injury himself and knows it can linger. He'll likely wait a few days to pitch White even after he gets medical clearance to throw.

Questions, comments, concerns?
Email us at sports@dailycollegian.com

WANNA BE AN OPENING ACT FOR SPRING CONCERT??
Then sign up for UPC's
"BATTLE OF THE SPRING CONCERT BANDS"
Taking Place on Thursday, April 3rd
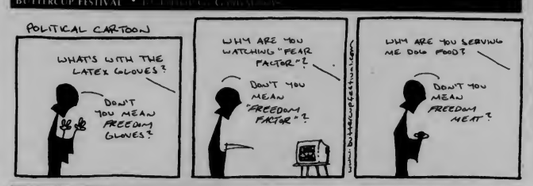
Drop off a demo at the UPC office, upstairs in the Student Union, or stop by the table in the Concourse on Wednesday, March 26th for more info.



NOW HIRING FOR FALL 2003!
THE RESOURCE REFERRAL PROGRAM
AT EVERYWOMAN'S CENTER
Volunteer, Intern and Work-Study Positions.
APPLY NOW!
Call 545-0883, Stop by at Wilder Hall ground floor or go online at www.umass.edu/ewc/rr for an application
Interviews start the week of April 7.

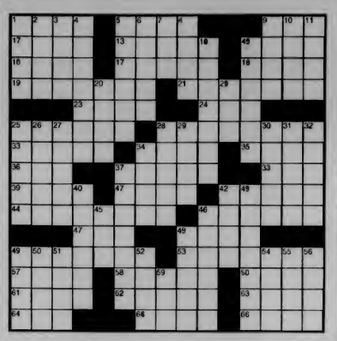
UMass CAMPUS RECREATION
PART-TIME JOB OFFER
Softball (M/W/C)..... A.S.A.P.
Co-rec Soccer ..... A.S.A.P.
Volleyball Special (C)..... A.S.A.P.
OFFICIALS NEEDED
Softball Clinics 3/24, 3/26, 3/27
Co-rec Soccer Clinics..... 3/25, 3/26, 3/27
Volleyball Special 3/25
Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations.
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Thad G. Gordon

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Thad G. Gordon

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

ELSIE HOOPER • By Rebecca O'Keefe-Kosinski



JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vetrano

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Gleason

ACROSS
1 Mountain pass info
5 Big pitcher
9 TD passers
12 Urban cruiser
15 Libel's — Lama
16 Tennis and jacket
17 Fairy tale brother
18 Polynesian image
19 Heartburn soother
21 Trooper's grey
23 For the guys
24 Ga. neighbor
25 Peeving
28 Highway warning (2 wds.)
33 Frighten
34 Expel
35 Sport for heavyweights
36 Out of the ordinary
37 Emery boards
38 Gun pellets
39 Judy Garland's daughter
41 Shakespeare play starter
42 Gets ivory
44 Grouch
46 Stick together
47 Involuntary movement
48 Say it's false
49 Antidote
52 Fever (hyph.)
57 Some real eggs
58 Name
60 Piltdown man, e.g.
61 B.E. travel system
62 Scoff at
63 Wagon-train puller
64 Guileful
65 Not hard
66 JFK arrivals

DOWN
1 Singer — James
2 Grass
3 Gate
4 A, B or C
5 Border
6 Precincts
7 Can inventor — Whitney
8 Hear ends
9 Tobacco wad
10 Kid's wheels
11 Agitate
14 Be an effect
15 Cheops' tomb
20 Small change
22 Large deer
25 Rock stars, maybe
26 Wireless set
27 Southern vins
28 Wall Street optimists
29 Functions
30 Jazzman — Blake
31 Palette color
32 Marshal's band
34 Lubricates
37 Taps
40 Monet or Gauguin
42 Ducks' haunt
43 Insults
45 Fasten temporarily
46 Tuna salad ingredient
48 Albino's beaks
50 Spoken
51 Cloche figure
52 One, in Munich
54 Cash substitutes
55 Ale ingredient
56 Former spouses
59 Herbal drink

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-27-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Inside a man and some women stand at a stainless steel counter, filleting small cod into scrod. The man wears a Red Sox baseball cap. Cod and the Red Sox – Massachusetts' beloved losers.

- Mark Kurlansky, "COD"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Put yourself into the running for something spectacular today, and hope for the best.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
A little excitement goes a long way today. In fact, you may be more in the mood for risks today.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Keep plugging away at that stubborn problem, and you'll work it out by day's end.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Organization may not be the key to success today. Perhaps it is best to "wing it."

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Don't depend on others today. Do something for yourself.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You have what it takes – but you must resist the temptation to take what others have.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You may be unusually sensitive today, and yet, toward the afternoon, you still have to face an obstacle.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your energy is likely to wax and wane all day, but when the time comes, you should be up to snuff.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You do not want to be wasting time now; once you get started today, you must be efficient in all you do.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Duties and responsibilities may take you far from home today. You may want to have some company

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will find yourself going off-course a few times today, but you can quickly get yourself back on track.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You can delight your family and friends with your antics today, provided you keep things light and lively.

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

MONDAY
• High: 61
• Low: 34

TUESDAY
• High: 67
• Low: 43

WEDNESDAY
• High: 65
• Low: 41

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Cavatelli Supreme
• N.E. Lite Scrod with Herb Topping
• Vegan Ravioli (vegan)
• Garden Vegetable Soup

DINNER
• Chicken Mamou
• Southern Fried Steak
• Vegan Cutlet (vegan)
• Garden Vegetable Soup

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald Ling
COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Lizzy Nielsen / Fedrich Torres

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Wanna buy/sell stuff locally . . . No Shipping, Payment, Delivery Hassles. Need Classreviews or Classnotes? Free! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

Fraternities, Sororities, Clubs, Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (Internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

Looking for commission-based sales associates to work in Amherst, Holyoke, Northampton. Email resumes to jobs@collegeshack.com

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Summer Jobs on Martha's Vineyard! Store Managers, Assistants, Associates. Work for Soft As A Group in one of our retail stores in Edgartown Positions, housing available May 15th Richard White @ 413-323-8520

EMPLOYMENT

email @ rdwhite27@charter.net

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Poconо Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Acts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper,

EMPLOYMENT

Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-399-CAMP or check out our website at www.independentlake.com and apply online.

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + workstudy available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

Spanish speaking for business development position. PT, must be available early morning. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Trevz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

Boxing Lessons for self-development in Amherst area with retired pro Djata Bumpus. 413-584-1966 All major credit cards accepted.

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

TRAVEL

ROOM FOR RENT

Available ASAP On Bus Route 350/ month Call Joe 493-4579

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

YOUR AD COULD GO HERE!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mass Attack falls just short

UMass runs out of time as Callander's goal lifts UNH

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – With the history books ripped up and thrown away in the previous week, the Massachusetts hockey team nearly shocked the college hockey world again last Friday against No. 5 New Hampshire.

But it all came to a grinding halt in the Mass Attack's Hockey East semifinal matchup with New Hampshire, as a late goal by the Wildcats' Preston Callander propelled them to a 5-4 victory. Yet the Minutemen were still able to leave the FleetCenter with heads held high, knowing they had taken one of the nation's top teams down to the wire.

"We have a tradition of getting on our feet and giving ourselves a hand if we win a game. We never do it when we lose a game, and tonight was the exception to the rule," Cahoon said.

Callander's game-winner came with 2:29 remaining, as linemate Justin Aikins threaded a feed through defenseman Nick Kuiper onto Callander's stick. The sophomore, who had already notched a penalty shot tally against UMass on Jan. 17, foiled the Minutemen again as he rifled a shot inside the far post to send UNH into the championship game.

UNH	5
UMass	4

But the Wildcats had to survive two stirring comebacks by the underdog Minutemen, as UMass twice came back from two-goal deficits to keep the game close. The second rally occurred midway through the final period after the Wildcats had put home two early to take a 4-2 lead.

On a Minuteman power play, Marvin Degon's shot from the point was stopped by UNH netminder Michael Ayers, who couldn't completely cover up the puck. UMass' Stephen Werner poked at the puck until it squirted past Ayers, though replays showed that UNH defenseman Mick Mounsey helped guide the puck across the goal line just as much as Werner. The goal was Werner's second of the game, and helped him earn All-Tournament honors.

Ten seconds later, the Minutemen caught the Wildcat defense snoozing off the faceoff, which sprung Mike Warner and Tim Turner free for a two-on-one break. Warner hit the streaking Turner with a cross-ice pass, and the senior lifted a shot over Ayers to knot the teams at four goals apiece.

"Our guys worked hard to get up by two, but then it disappeared really quickly," UNH coach Dick Umile said. "Bad coverage on our part off the face off, and now it's down to a nine-minute hockey game."

The two teams remained scoreless until late in the first period, when a quick pair of goals by UNH's Tim Horst and Joshua Prudden gave the Wildcats a 2-0 lead at the first intermission. But the Minutemen responded with two of their own in the second, as Werner put UMass on the scoreboard with a sensational end-to-end individual effort, and sophomore Greg Mauldin got the equalizer with a blast from the circle over Ayers' shoulder.

"I'm happy that after they scored those first two goals, we didn't melt. I'm not surprised by that, because we've lived by one credo all season long, let's not play the scoreboard, let's just play the game," Cahoon said. "We're obviously disappointed with the result, but at the same time we're very proud of this young and clearly ambitious group of people."

"I think with the first [comeback], none of us had played in the Hockey East championships, so after we got rid of the butterflies, we were able to come out in the second period and get a lot of chances," Werner added. "The second time was just hard work and perseverance."

Despite the loss, the Maroon and White know that the last few weeks can be a building block for next season with nearly its entire roster returning.

"We exceeded everybody's expectations this year," Warner said. "I think this whole experience we've had, coming to the Fleet[Center] for the first time, you can only look at this in a positive way."

JERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Lang and the Mass Attack saw their postseason ride come to an end on the Fleet Center ice at the hands of eventual Hockey East champion UNH.

Senior deserving of the spotlight

Matt Brady

BOSTON – He steps away from the microphone and off the stage quietly.

"Tim, mind if I talk to you for a second?"

As always, Tim Turner is more than glad to grant yet another interview, masking the pain he is doubtlessly feeling with a smile.

When the final horn sounded at the Fleet Center March 14 – ending UMass' season by way of a 5-4 UNH victory in the Hockey East Semifinals – Turner went limp. The weight of four years for the Minutemen, and the weight of his finest season ever, was too heavy for the senior to bear standing up. His slouched glide across the ice sent him into a group of celebrating Wildcats, which he simply bounced off of and continued his trip back to the locker room.

Turner completed his UMass career with 107 points, fourth-most in the school's history. And yet, he is one of the forgotten five, UMass' oft-overlooked upperclassmen from this season – lost every time someone mentions the Maroon and White as a team featuring 24 freshmen and sophomores. Still, always the leader, Turner is quick to point at his youthful teammates as a source of the success of the Minutemen this year.

"I can't say enough about our newcomers, it was a privilege for me to be on the same ice as those guys," he said. "To come back from two down twice against UNH is amazing to me, and it's happened all year, and we pay a lot of that to the young guys, and it was so fun to be out there with those guys. I'm just glad that my last year was with a group of guys such as that."

But Turner is just as responsible for the jump that UMass made this year as any other talent on the ice donning the maroon and white. Along with co-captain Kelly Sickavish, Turner took on the task of speeding along the maturation of such a youthful squad. Being the ever-motivating leader. Giving his all at every turn.

"One of the things we've been trying to do over the three years as a coaching staff is figure out who would buy into the whole process of what we're trying to do…we felt we really had to get these guys to understand what the commitment needs to be at this level in order to compete successfully," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "Kelly and Tim were as good as we had in that regard, they led by example, they led by being positive influences for their teammates, they led by their competitive spirits."

And in the second period, Turner put home goal number 45 of his career, one he called "probably the best goal I've ever scored," finishing off a two-on-one with Mike Warner.

"To watch it go in the net and see the crowd rise to their feet was one of the most amazing things I've ever been in."

He may have escaped the glance of many people watching the growth of the UMass program, but he is certainly a person through whom that growth has flourished. Hats off to a classy character and a great hockey player.

Matt Brady is a Collegian Columnist.

PHOTOS BY JERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Peter Alden, right, and the Minutemen will look to their large contingent of returnees to build off of their surprising run to the Hockey East semifinals, while senior co-captain Tim Turner has played his last game in the maroon and white, scoring the season's final goal.

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 103

U.S. advancing to Iraqi capital

Down payment of war-related costs at $75 billion

By David Espo
Associated Press

U.S.-led warplanes and helicopters attacked Republican Guard units defending Baghdad on Monday while ground troops advanced to within 50 miles of the Iraqi capital. White House aides said a down payment on war-related costs would come to $75 billion.

Five days into Operation Iraqi Freedom, fierce resistance prevented American and British forces from securing the southern cities of Basra and An Nasiriyah and thwarted efforts to extinguish burning oil wells.

Iraq claimed custody, as well, of two American pilots after a helicopter went down, in addition to a handful of POWs taken over the weekend.

"These things are never easy," British Prime Minister Tony Blair conceded Monday, the day his country suffered its first combat casualty of the war. "There will be some difficult times ahead but (the war) is going to plan despite the tragedies."

Saddam sought to rally his own country in a televised appearance. "Be patient, brothers, because God's victory will be ours soon," he said, appearing in full military garb and seeming more composed than in a taped appearance broadcast last week.

Despite Saddam's defiant pose, a military barracks in the northern part of the country was bombed, and Baghdad fell under renewed air attack by day and by night. Iraqis set up mortar positions south of the city and piled sandbags around government buildings and other strategic locations, in evident anticipation of a battle to come.

"Coalition forces are closing in on Baghdad," Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal told reporters at the Pentagon.

He said U.S. Apache helicopters attacked Saddam's Republican Guard forces arrayed around Baghdad, while another official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a "large portion" of the day's bombing runs were dedicated to hitting the same units.

Asked about ground forces, McChrystal said, "We have not gotten into direct firefights with Republican Guard forces."

That seemed a matter of not much time, though.

The Army's 3rd Infantry Division was within 50 miles of the capital, battling sandstorms more than Iraqi fire as it neared the approaches to Baghdad.

Some Iraqis waved or gave a thumbs-up as the convoy passed on its dash through southern Iraq, while others stood stoically.

The advance of long columns of thousands of vehicles was aided by heavy air protection that wiped out a column of Iraqi armor at one point and sent some of Saddam's outer defenses withdrawing toward the capital. The convoy passed bombed anti-aircraft guns, empty foxholes and berms dug for tanks that had been abandoned.

President Bush invited senior lawmakers to the White House, and aides said he would ask Congress for $75 billion. Of that, $62.6 billion would be in direct war costs, according to these aides, for 30 days of combat. The request was also expected to include up to $3 billion to guard against terrorist threats, as well as aid to Israel, Afghanistan and other U.S. allies, a down payment on humanitarian aid for Iraq and for rebuilding the country, and money to increase security for American diplomats.

Bush also talked with Russian President Vladimir Putin by phone. Spokesman Ari Fleischer said the president expressed concern about reports that Russia was selling anti-tank guided missiles, jamming devices and night-vision goggles to Baghdad.

In the world's first war to be covered live on television, the news and images of American and British setbacks competed with pictures of battlefield successes.

Iraqi television showed pictures of one American helicopter in a grassy field, men in Arab headdresses brandishing automatic rifles as they did a victory dance around the aircraft. Hours later, Iraqi television showed two men it said made up the crew.

"We have a two-man crew missing," confirmed Gen. Tommy Franks, the U.S. war commander. But he denied Iraqi reports that the craft had been shot down by farmers, and that two choppers had been lost.

Franks told reporters that 3,000 Iraqi prisoners had been taken. But he and other U.S. officials were more concerned with the fate of a handful of American POWs whose convoy was ambushed in the Iraqi desert over the weekend.

At the Pentagon, spokeswoman Torie Clark accused Iraqis of violating the rules of war by misusing white flags of surrender and other deceptions.

In London, the Ministry of Defense announced the first British combat death, a soldier who fell in fighting near Az Zubayr in southern Iraq, near the city of Basra.

Two other British troops were

AP PHOTO/CHRIS SEERS (USN)

A Royal Marine from 42 Commando stands in front of a Saddam Hussein mural at Umm Qsar, Iraq as the allied forces occupy a former U.N. base.

Continued on page 2

Teach-ins and rally for peace today at UMass

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

As the war with Iraq continues, University of Massachusetts students and faculty plan another rally for peace today. Today's UMass Peace Convocation will begin at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center and last throughout the afternoon, with a series of further anti-war events planned throughout the week.

There will be a Peace Rally and March from noon to 1 p.m. on the Student Union Steps with workshops and teach-ins preceding and following the rally.

There will also be events throughout the morning and into the afternoon, beginning with continuous screenings of the video "Greetings from Missile Street" in the Campus Center room 911-915 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The film covers what life is like in Iraq and will be presented by Anthropology Professor Art Keene.

There will also be two simultaneous faculty-led seminars from 10:00 a.m. to noon in the campus center. One panel, in room 168C, is entitled "Iraq War: Causes, Economics Costs and Constitutional Fall-Out." John Brigham, Political Science Professor, will speak on the "Constitution in Crisis," followed by Ann Ferguson, Professor of Philosophy & Women's Studies speaking on "The War and Masculinity," and David Katz, of the Economics Department, who will speak on, "Why Is the US Waging War in Iraq."

At the same time, in Campus Center room 804-08, there will be a seminar entitled "Iraq War: Social Consequences and Moving Beyond." Peter Pellet from the Economics Department will discuss the effects of sanctions on Iraq, followed by John Rieff, from Community Service Learning, who will give a talk entitled "In a Dark Time, Where is Hope?"

Jerry Epstein, Economics Professor, will also be speaking at the seminar about the economic costs of the war in Iraq.

There will be a workshop entitled "Artists and Writers Confront the War," led by Nancy Folbre which will discuss "creative ways to oppose" war with Iraq. This event will take place in the Campus Center room 811-15 from 11:00 a.m. to noon.

There will be a teach-in, "Where is the Path to Peace?" located in Machmer W-26 from 11:15 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. led by Enoch H. Page of the Anthropology Department.

There will be a rally, songs, and a march from noon to 1 p.m. on the Student Union Steps. The songs will be by Tom Juravich, and Lisa Gaugran, followed by poetry and featured speakers of the Anti-war Coalition, Sunaina Maira of the English & Asian American Studies Department, and Ferguson.

Following the March around campus, students are invited to The Hatch, located in the Student Union. From 2:15 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. there will be a discussion on "Confronting War, Making Peace."

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

OUT OF HAND
PROTESTORS DON'T NEED VIOLENCE
PAGE 4

'DREAMCATCHER'
KING'S FILM A NIGHTMARE
PAGE 5

BIG 'Z'
LAX PULLS IN ANOTHER (CAC AWARD)
PAGE 12

Financial officer criticizes Romney's new budget plan

$371 million bond package halted

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – The chief financial officer for the University of Massachusetts said Monday that the Romney administration never contacted his office before deciding to halt a $371 million bond package approved last year by acting Gov. Jane Swift.

"No one has ever spoken to us," Stephen Lenhardt, vice president and treasurer of the UMass system, told a legislative committee. "No one. We have had zero communication with anyone in the administration since (Romney) took office."

Lenhardt also contested the administration's claim that the university was borrowing a portion of the money for Boston dorms that would not be built for 10 years.

"That's simply not true," said Lenhardt, who predicted the dorms would have been completed within three years.

Gov. Mitt Romney's budget chief, Eric Kriss, blocked the bond package earlier this month, just days before it was set to be posted for sale. The decision is part of a brewing controversy between Romney and UMass President William Bulger, whose job the governor has proposed eliminating as part of his 2004 budget.

Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman said Kriss halted the sale because the administration had never been informed of its existence and because it included projects that did not appear on the university's five-year capital plan.

"Instead of rubber-stamping hundreds of millions of dollars in spending, we intend to apply sound business principles to the issuance of debt," Feddeman said. Last week, the administration announced it would be review all capital spending, including expenditures in higher education.

Lenhardt appeared before the House Long-Term Debt and Capital Expenditure Committee Monday to discuss the university's long-term construction needs. He said the $371 million bond package would have provided essential upgrades to the science laboratories and power plant at the Amherst campus.

It also would have built three dorms on the Boston campus, for $271 million, and a parking facility in Lowell, he said.

While the projects weren't all included in the university's five-year plan, they did all appear in the university's overall plan for future construction, Lenhardt said.

If the package doesn't go through, Lenhardt said, "we'll be croaked."

Committee Chairwoman Marie Parente, D-Milford, said the restoration of the bond package would become the panel's top priority.

"If there's some way we can be the mediator and base it on facts and numbers, we'd like to help you with the projects," she told Lenhardt.

Parente, who has been holding hearings about capital spending with all of the state agencies, also criticized the administration's lack of communication with people affected by its decisions.

"We've been hearing this at each and every hearing," Parente said.

Two men missing after helicopter forced down

AP PHOTO/AL-JAZEERA TV VIA AP

Iraqis raise their weapons near what Iraqi officials say is a U.S. Apache attack helicopter, shown in this image from video released on Iraqi TV. While showing images of only one helicopter, Iraq claimed Monday "a small number of peasants shot down two Apache" helicopters, and to be holding two pilots prisoner.

By Hamza Hendawi
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) – Iraqi state television on Monday showed two men said to have been the U.S. crew of an Apache helicopter forced down during heavy fighting in central Iraq.

Gen. Tommy Franks, the U.S. war commander, confirmed that one helicopter did not return from its mission Sunday and that its two-man crew was missing. The men were identified as Chief Warrant Officer Ronald D. Young Jr., 26, of Lithia Springs, Ga., and Chief Warrant Officer David S. Williams, 30, of Orlando, Fla.

If confirmed, the airmen would be the second set of POWs displayed by the Iraqis in as many days. On Sunday, the Arab satellite station Al-Jazeera carried Iraqi television footage of five U.S. soldiers who were captured near An Nasiriyah, a crossing point over the Euphrates River.

Unlike those soldiers, the men shown Monday did not appear to be injured.

The two wore cream-colored pilots' overalls and did not speak to the camera but appeared confused. They turned their heads and looked in different directions while being filmed. One of the men sipped from a glass of water, looking wary but not cowed.

The contents of one man's wallet were displayed across a table, including a Texas driver's license, a card from the Fort Hood National Bank, phone cards and credit cards.

A spokesman at the U.S. Army Post in Fort Hood, Texas, said that a helicopter from its 1st Battalion of the 227th Aviation Regiment was missing in action in Iraq.

"The unit was deployed in February," spokesman Dan Hassett said. "That's all I can really say right now."

Military officials said Williams has been in the service for 12 years, and has a wife and two children who live on Fort Hood. Young, an Army man for three years, is single.

"He felt good about what they were doing, that they were going to get out there and it was going to be a quick situation," his father, Ronald Young Sr., told CNN.

The footage was shown after Iraq claimed it shot down two Apache helicopters and was holding the pilots.

"A small number of peasants shot down two Apaches," Information Minister Mohammed Saeed al-Sahhaf said. "Perhaps we will show pictures of the pilots."

Franks denied that a second chopper had been lost, or that any craft had been shot down by farmers.

Continued on page 3

police log

Monday, March 10, 2003

1:09 p.m. A caller reported that while her vehicle was parked in Lot 21 on University Drive the previous Friday the front driver's side bumper was smashed in by another automobile.

2:52 p.m. A caller stated that his 19-inch TV was stolen from his room sometime since March 7. He said that he went home for the weekend and his roommate left the door unlocked.

3:16 p.m. The side mirror was broken off of a motor vehicle parked on Thatcher Way.

3:21 p.m. The driver's side window was found smashed on an automobile on University Drive.

7:33 p.m. A car was reported vandalized while parked in Lot 32.

8:37 p.m. A vehicle was reported broken into in Lot 44 on Sylvan Drive sometime Thursday morning.

Tuesday, March 11

3:20 a.m.: University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) forces recovered a vehicle stolen from Amherst. UMPD notified the Amherst Police Department (APD) and APD called the owner.

10:18 a.m.: A skater fell and cut her head near the Mullins Center. Her friend took her to University Health Services (UHS) for stitches.

1:50 p.m.: A report of hit-and-run damage to a car on Olympia Drive was made.

5:35 p.m.: Three cars were found covered in shaving cream and silly string in Lot 23 on Commonwealth Avenue. There was no damage to the vehicles.

6:52 p.m.: A caller reported a breaking and entering into his car while it was parked in Lot 33 on University Drive. The dashboard was damaged, the passenger side rear window was smashed and the stereo was taken some time during the previous night.

8:55 p.m.: Three people were ejected from a game at the Mullins Center.

10:20 p.m.: A traffic stop on Lot 22 on University Drive led to the arrest of Melissa E. Kay, 19, of 14 Overlook Dr. in Sandwich, Mass., and Andrew Divincenzo, 18, of 6 Highland Ave. in Haverhill, Mass. They were both charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and drinking alcohol from an open container in a motor vehicle.

Wednesday, March 12

3:17 p.m.: An assistance residence director requested an officer to assist a student who was assaulted by another student in the Southwest tunnel. Siyani K. Taylor, 19, of 4416 6th Pl. in Washington, D.C., was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

Thursday March 13

7:55 a.m.: A request was made for assistance with three males who have been sleeping in the Campus Center and possibly stealing food. The men were cooperative and left the building. They were directed to a homeless shelter and said that they were looking for work.

Saturday, March 15

9:02 a.m.: An ambulance was dispatched to the Fine Arts Center for a male with a cut on his hand.

6:09 p.m.: A medical emergency was reported in the North Village Apartments. The responding officer reported that the subject was en route to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Sunday, March 16

12:21 a.m.: A traffic stop by Mullins Way on Massachusetts Avenue led to the arrest of Marylis Correa, 18, of 10 Chestnut Park No. 2305 in Springfield, Mass., and Timothy Joseph Bougknight, 24, of 23 Dawes St. in Springfield, Mass. Correa was charged with a marked lanes violation and unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle. Bougknight was charged with disorderly conduct and possession of a class D substance.

Monday, March 17

11:24 a.m.: UMPD assistance was requested to help with traffic as a grounds crew escorted two swans across Commonwealth Avenue.

Tuesday, March 18

11:33 a.m.: A report of an unauthorized person trying to use his checks at the Student Union office of the UMass Five College Credit Union was made.

Wednesday, March 19

2:30 p.m.: A reported email threat in John Quincy Adams Tower on Fearing Street was under investigation.

7:17 p.m.: The Amherst Fire Department (AFD) responded to a medical emergency in Crampton Hall on Sunset Ave. The subject was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Thursday, March 20

7:57 p.m.: A caller reported her soprano saxophone was stolen from a locked locker in the Fine Arts Center.

Email threat reported at JQA

Several incidences of car vandalism found

compiled by Dan Lamothe

Wyclef Jean Headlines Spirit of Survival Event at UMass

HASA to sponsor Sixth Annual Student Conference

By SCOTT ENRIGHT

Wyclef Jean, a Haitian-American musician, will be one individual in a group of many celebrities, artists, musicians and speakers to come to the University of Massachusetts on April 4-5 and 6 for a national Haitian student conference entitled "Blood Sweat Tears the Spirit of Survival".

The main theme of the three day conference is struggle, says Jeff Belizaire a UMass Alumnus who has been a leader in the planning and fundraising for the event.

Wyclef Jean will headline the The Spirit of Survival Conference to be held next week at UMass.

"Blood, sweat and tears is a concept rooted in the history and struggle of Haitian people," Belizaire says. "The conference will discuss and depict what the struggle was and how blood, sweat and tears were shed."

At the conference, a number of panel discussions and workshops will address different issues that affect the Haitian community. Jean will lead a panel discussion entitled "How to Break Into the Music Industry."

"Wyclef contacted us. It was his people that made it happen," Belizaire says. "He is looking for an outlet to release what has happened in his life. He wants to show other people how to do that. He wants to feed people."

Philips Medna, a senior Biology major and member of the UMass Haitian American Student Association (HASA) is excited that Jean is coming to the conference but would like to make it clear that his coming is not the sole reason for having the conference.

"To me Wyclef is a Grammy award winner, a Haitian activist. He is coming to the conference as a part of the conference and I want to make that clear," Medna says. "What I expect from Wyclef is for him to be a catalyst, to boost the conference up. He is not the only one coming."

Medna says that Jean is coming to offer hope and inspiration for Haitians looking for a way to be successful in the music industry.

"He represents the music industry for us. It is hope that it is also possible for us," Medna says. "When Wyclef comes we expect him to talk to us about it – how to break into the music industry.

"Of course we are looking forward to his performance," he says. "He is making people happy with his music, but his role in this Sixth Annual Haitian Student Conference, is to inform us about the music industry."

Belizaire sees music and art as a source of motivation in the conference and believes that it will help educate people about the struggle that many Haitians go through in their lifetime.

"Art is used as a source of motivation and as a source of history. It tells a story, he said. "It is a source of hope and the strength of a people. It shows that we are still alive and kicking. We are still here surviving. That is the role of art and music."

Medna also views music as a very important part in the event.

"Music is a part of our culture," he says. "Being able to express ourselves in music is a way we have been able to survive in this world. I know in Haiti, music represents a lot. That's why we have annual events. Blood Sweat Tears shows what we have been through."

Aside from Jean, Sophia Pasquis, a black actress who starred on the hit MTV show "Road Rules," will also be in attendance.

Rene Godefroy, an inspiring motivational speaker recognized for his success after working through a childhood of sickness and poverty in Haiti will speak in addition to a performance by the widely acclaimed Haitian music group Carimi.

Belizaire believes that all of the guests at the conference represent strength within the Haitian community.

"What binds us all is that there is a constant struggle and these are strengths within the struggle," he says.

Frantzelvine Monestime, president of HASA and senior communications major, says that the meaning behind the conference is community and education.

"The real meaning of the conference is to bring the community together in order to educate them about the Haitian culture," Monestime says.

Francois Augustin, sophomore mathematics major and the Culture and Development Coordinator for HASA, agreed saying education is a major aspect to the event.

"Education is the main reason for this conference... educating the world about who Haitian people are," he says.

Augustin spoke about the content of one educational workshop called "Restavec."

"A Restavec in Haiti, is a child who has been given away by his parents to a more economically stable family for better care. But these children turn out not receiving the care that had been promised in the beginning and end up being slaves of these families."

Marvin Alcide, vice president of HASA and senior psychology and communications double major said this event provides Haitian Americans with an opportunity.

"This is a way for Haitian Americans to come together and understand their heritage, to raise issues, and raise pride."

He strongly encourages all to attend the event even though there is a Haitian theme.

"It's not just about us," he says. "We all live on the same campus. Although it's a Haitian theme, we are still trying promote community."

Anyone interested in purchasing tickets or finding out more information can call the HASA office at 545-3405 or by stopping by room 404 of the Student Union.

Fighting continues

Continued from page 1

missing after their convoy was hit by continuing resistance in southern Iraq.

It was a fresh reminder that even in areas where American and British forces thought they had control, resistance continued to pop up.

"This is not a video game where everything is clear and neat and tidy," said British spokesman Lt. Col. Ronnie McCourt. "Some enemy who feel that they want to carry on fighting will inevitably do so."

Basra, Iraq's second largest city, provided evidence of that, as Iraqis battled British forces on the outskirts of town. Commanders held off storming the city, hoping its Iraqi defenders would give up, but they have held firm.

The bombing in the north was carried out against a military barracks close to the line that separates Iraqi-held territory from the Kurdish-held region.

"People are evacuating, but not because of the bombing. They are afraid Saddam will respond with chemical weapons," said Ahmad Qafoor, a school teacher.

There was no evidence of that – as yet.

But military commanders said American forces were still evaluating a plant captured by U.S. troops, and pursuing leads from captured Iraqis and documents in their search for weapons of mass destruction.

At the United Nations, Secretary General Kofi Annan warned of a humanitarian crisis in Basra and said "urgent measures" were needed to restore electricity and water supplies.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' fall and spring semesters, is the University's daily newspaper. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Renamed the Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936, it became a daily publication in 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since 1988. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Haman Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Fountain Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 ► Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 ► A great place to get contact lenses
3 ► Convenient hours and location
4 ► FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 ► Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

A Course for Everyone
TUFTS SUMMER
Consider Summer Study at TUFTS University.
Three Sessions
May 21–June 27
July 1–August 8
May 21–August 8
http://ase.tufts.edu/summer

www.dailycollegian.com

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-APRIL 4TH - 6TH
-THE BALLROOM
-LORD JEFFERY INN
-DOWNTOWN AMHERST
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

UMass Alumni Association releases new website

By DAVE BERLINER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In the midst of the devastating budget cuts the University of Massachusetts is facing, the UMass-Amherst Alumni Association has released a new web site at umassalumni.com.

According to Elaine C. Barker, "The website is not meant to generate funds but to connect alumni to their alma mater. It is hoped that the site will generate some memberships."

All the alumni that were registered with the previous site will now have to register again as first time users. The cost of subscription is about $40 a year. However, users can purchase a lifetime subscription and pay by installments for slightly more than the annual fee.

All members receive an email address they can use to contact each other through the online alumni directory. There is a class notes section that enables anyone to view selected accomplishments that UMass graduates wish to share with their fellow classmates.

There is also a career services section that allows members to post and search for jobs. For students who will soon be graduating, the mentoring section may be of help in connecting them to former graduates that work in specific fields.

Those who are members of the UMass Alumni Association should look to the membership benefits section of the site to find out about the various discounts and promotions offered to them through the association. The association is currently trying to promote interest in UMass license plates.

There are various clubs that list events using the online calendar. To those former students who wish to take advantage of the networking capabilities of this site, the possibilities are almost unlimited. One of the services provided is a business card exchange. There are also bulletin boards that allow members to interact with each other 24 hours a day if necessary.

An election for the Alumni Association Board of Directors is currently being held and anyone who is a member can vote before 5:00 p.m. on April 4, 2003, using the online ballot.

The Internet Association Corporation designed and maintains umassalumni.com. According to the IAC, they serve nearly 175 alumni organizations, including Bloomsburg University and Bentley College.

Two soldiers missing from Apache

Continued from page 1

Iraqi state television showed pictures of one Apache helicopter in a grassy field. Men in Arab headdresses holding Kalashnikovs automatic rifles danced around the aircraft.

The station also aired pictures of two helmets apparently belonging to members of the helicopter's crew, as well as documents and other papers lying on the ground.

Al-Sahhaf said Iraq would consider displaying the other helicopter it claims to have shot down.

Sahhaf said the POWs would be treated according to the Geneva Conventions. He rejected accusations that Iraq had violated such accords by allowing Iraqi television to film them and ask questions.

Peace rally to be held today

Continued from page 1

Sut Jhally of the Communications Department will discuss "Manufacturing Consent In Foreign Policy," followed by Maira, "Immigrants & the War on Terror." Chris King, of the Nursing Department will discuss "Health Ramifications for Women and Children In Iraq," as well as a talk by Michael Klare "After Iraq: What's Next?"

Students will also be speaking at the seminar, including T'Leah McQuaid addressing the question: "Why is the World So Angry with the U.S.?" Dan Clawson of the Sociology Department will also discuss "Ten Lessons From the Vietnam Anti-War Movement."

The new Faculty Anti-War Group and the UMass Anti-War Coalition organized the Peace Convocation. Lisa Depiano of the Anti-War Coalition said that the professors were largely responsible for pulling these events together.

"I think the professor felt they had to do something now that the war broke out," Depiano said.

There will be announcements of further actions throughout the week including "Spring Break-Out for Peace" this Thursday, in which students from the Five Colleges will march against the war. Hampshire students are planning a strike followed by a march with Amherst College, Amherst High School, and UMass around the UMass campus and into Amherst center. The March is scheduled to begin at 4:30 p.m. on the Student Union Steps.

The Anti-War Coalition has planned a "Die-in and March" beginning at 4 p.m. Friday, March 28 in front of Kollmorgen Corporation, a local manufacturer of military weapons. The March is planned to begin in front of the Manufacturing Plant on 347 King St. in Northampton and continue into downtown.

The "die-in" will entail a group performance in which demonstrators will be dressed in white with fake blood splattered on them, Depiano said.

Oil well sabotage suspected

By BRUCE STANLEY AND PATRICK MCD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KUWAIT CITY (AP) – Firefighters attacking blazes at oil wells in southern Iraq say they've found telltale signs the valuable field was sabotaged. But it appears Iraqi troops may have disobeyed orders to blow up the wells or prepared explosives that were too weak to do serious damage.

It took Kuwaiti firefighters only 15 minutes and two water cannon Monday to snuff out the first fire quenched so far at a booby-trapped Iraqi oil well.

Even though fighting nearby forced some civilian firefighters to clear out of the region Monday, Kuwait's senior firefighter, Aisa Bouyabes, said he believes his team and others can douse the six remaining blazes in Iraq's Rumeila South oil field within two weeks.

Upon inspecting damaged well heads at several blast sites just across Kuwait's border with Iraq, the team discovered a telltale pair of black wires snaking away from each one.

"These are the same wires that were used in Kuwait to blow up our wells – the same method exactly. I've seen it before. I inspected the wells in Kuwait immediately after the liberation," Bouyabes said by telephone from northern Kuwait.

Saddam Hussein's troops sabotaged more than 700 well heads in Kuwait's oil fields as they retreated from the emirate in the closing days of the 1991 Gulf War. The damage took more than two years and $50 billion to repair.

U.S.-led forces have made a priority in the current war of trying to secure Iraq's oil fields to prevent a repeat of that scorched-earth tactic. One vexing question is why so few of Iraq's 1,685 oil wells are burning, despite ample evidence that Iraqis took time to rig them for detonation.

Although it is far too early to be certain, initial evidence suggests that in the vast majority of cases, Iraqi troops might have disobeyed orders to blow up the wells, or set explosives that were too weak to do serious damage.

Bouyabes said he believed the Iraqis had placed an explosive charge several feet underground at the blazing well he visited just over a mile across Kuwait's border with Iraq. The result was a mangled well head and flames 35 feet high.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair told the House of Commons on Monday that Iraq's oil wealth was "mined and deep-mined at that. Had we not struck quickly, Iraq's future wealth would even now be burning away."

However, the will needed to ignite a multitude of desert infernos has so far not measured up to Iraqis' apparently extensive effort to lay and wire up the charges.

"I don't think that the Iraqis ever really intended to blow these wells up and keep them burning forever," said Rob Laughlin, managing director of London brokerage GNI Man Financial.

Bouyabes said he inspected at least two other wells in Rumeila South that were damaged but not burning. They too had been rigged with black wire, and the direction of the blasts and the placement of sand bags around each well head were persuasive clues of sabotage, he said.

Yet, for some reason, the explosions at those sites weren't powerful enough to destroy the well heads and spark fires.

"Whoever put in the explosives did not want to repeat what happened in Kuwait," Bouyabes suggested. "This is just an assumption: I don't think Saddam had very good control over these guys."

Iraq has the world's second-largest proven crude reserves, and it will need revenues from oil exports to help pay for its postwar reconstruction.

U.S. Brig. Gen. Vincent Brooks, deputy director of operations at the Central Command in Doha, Qatar, said the absence of widespread damage in the oil fields was "a very important story for the future of Iraq."

Coalition forces had mounted operations to secure Rumeila South and the oil terminals on Iraq's Persian Gulf coast and on the al-Faw peninsula.

However, fighting around oil fields that U.S.-led forces had previously thought were secure drove away some civilian firefighters who were trying to tackle the blazing wells, an American firefighter said.

"It's not nearly as safe as they said it was," said Brian Krause of Texas-based Boots and Coots, an oil services company. "We're kind of sitting ducks out there."

U.S. Marines declared the Rumeila South oil fields unsafe for journalists to visit Monday, forcing the cancellation of a trip under Marine escort intended to give the media a first-hand view of the well fires.

"Coalition forces consider it to be secured. That doesn't meant that there's not still hostile fire going on in the region in small pockets of resistance," said Maj. Randi Steffi, a U.S. military spokeswoman.

Bouyabes, the Kuwaiti firefighter, said he planned to coordinate with Krause and other foreign specialists Tuesday. For now, his team is the only one with all its water cannons, tanker trucks and other equipment in place and ready to use.

New tunnel named

By STEVE LEBLANC
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) – For the better part of two decades, from drawing board to finishing touches, the new tunnel running underneath downtown Boston has been known by its awkward shorthand: Interstate 93.

Those days could soon be over. The backbone of the Big Dig is about to get a name: The Liberty Tunnel.

Gov. Mitt Romney, House Speaker Thomas Finneran, D-Boston, and Senate President Robert Travaglini, D-Boston, reached a deal Monday on a name for the long-awaited roadway.

Romney said the name is intended to honor veterans "who have fought so courageously throughout our Commonwealth's history to protect our freedom." He said the war in Iraq is a poignant reminder of that history.

The name is a change for Boston, which typically names bridges, tunnels and buildings after people.

For the new Interstate 90 connector linking the Massachusetts Turnpike to Logan Airport, Statehouse leaders took a more traditional route, paying homage to late U.S. House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, who pushed for federal Big Dig funding.

Two other Big Dig milestones already have names.

The third harbor tunnel is named after Red Sox legend Ted Williams while the Big Dig's crowning jewel, the new Leonard P. Zakim Bunker Hill Bridge, is named for the late civil rights activist and a key Revolutionary War battle that took place a stone's throw away.

Construction began in 1991 on the $14.6 billion Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project, better known as the Big Dig.

The naming agreement comes just days before the official ribbon cutting for the northbound lanes. The hoopla initially planned for the Thursday event has been scaled back because of the war in Iraq, Big Dig officials have said.

For the first time, drivers coming from the west and south of the city will be able to enter the new Liberty Tunnel, travel under downtown Boston, and climb onto the Zakim Bunker Hill Bridge.

The one-and-a-half mile stretch of highway, which will replace the elevated Central Artery, will have just two exits, one near Government Center and another near North Station.

The southbound lanes of I-93 are set to open next year.

Making a smooth transition from the existing elevated roadway to the new underground highway will require a coordinated traffic ballet lasting seven days, Big Dig officials said.

Traffic through the Sumner Tunnel has already been limited to the left lane to let workers connect the right lane to the new underground highway.

On Wednesday night workers will close exit 26 – the Storrow Drive exit – off the existing I-93. Officials are urging people who want to connect from the highway to points along Storrow Drive to use public transportation although an alternative route will be mapped out for drivers.

On Friday, at about 7 p.m., the entire length of I-93 northbound through the city will go to a single lane.

If all goes as planned, all the new roadways, ramps and connections will be up and running by midnight Sunday.

ANDREW TAMC/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Give my regards...

Jeff Tietze and Danny Ferreira rehearse at the Fine Arts Center for the UMass Percussion Ensemble's performance on Broadway next Monday, April 7.

WRITE FOR NEWS

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN @ YAHOO.COM

Bartenders Have More Spirit! Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/21/03 - Thursday 3/27/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
DREAMCATCHER (R) 1:00 4:05 7:10 10:05*
VIEW FROM THE TOP (PG13) 1:55 4:50 7:10 10:00
BOAT TRIP (R) 1:15 4:40 7:45 10:25*
PIGLET'S BIG MOVIE (G) 1:05 3:00 4:55 7:00
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:15 7:15 9:45*
AGENT COOY BANKS (PG) 1:50 4:25 7:05 9:40*
WILLARD (PG13) 1:10 4:00 7:30 9:50
YEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:20
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 9:55
BARBERYN (PG13) 9:00
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:20 10:05
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:30 4:30 (7:25) 10:10
(-) - No show Wednesday 3/26
Senior Show 3/27/03 - THE HUNTED
* no passes/superpasses
• NO PASSES: NO SUPERPLAYERS •
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

A gig you can bank on.

Local supermarket branches are seeking:
Bankers
(Selling products, providing customer service, and processing transactions)
Call 1-877-INAISLE to apply today.

Where there's a Citizens Bank supermarket branch, there's a unique opportunity for you to market your sales skills on the Floor How? Simply by approaching in-aisle shoppers to sell our great products and services. With variable schedules including evening and weekend hours and great benefits for full-time and part-time employees, it's as easy as freshly-baked pie.

CITIZENS BANK
Not your typical bank ®
www.citizensbank.com/employment
Citizens Bank is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer committed to building a diverse workforce. M/F/D/V

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Protesters out of hand: Demonstrate without violence

Nearly a week into the Attack on Iraq, the demonstrating both for and against the war continues to grow. The small anti-war protests of months past have now become enormous rallies while gatherings in support of U.S. action in the Middle East have also popped up.

The viewpoints that each group is trying to convey are a perfect example of how American freedoms are best put into action. Each side is actively exercising its right to free speech.

One must be careful though not to overstep the thin lines with which protesters tread and cross into angry aggression.

Scorns of people by the thousands have filled the streets in major cities like New York and San Francisco as well as the small towns of America like our own beloved Amherst. By and large, the protesters have remained peaceful, raising their voices and lifting their signs for all to hear and see.

Yet there have been some who have crossed the line.

Certain protestors have attacked police and other officials. In these circumstances, all law enforcement was attempting to do was keep what some would describe as a mob under control.

Those in favor of the war are not without incident themselves. In instances of blatant discrimination, vandals in California attacked a dry cleaning establishment. The reason was not because the owner was an Arab, but because the name of the business was French Cleaners. France's opposition to the war has been well documented, as has the response by America (freedom fries anyone?). However, this is no reason to attack a business, whose only Franco connection is in its name.

While protests across America have crossed the line at times, things have been far more volatile in the rest of the world. Protesters against the attack in both sides of Europe, Asia, Australia, South America, etc. have made their views heard loud and clear.

While it may turn some of our stomachs at the sight of a model Statue of Liberty holding a missile in one hand and a leaky oil drum in another, as was seen at a protest in Germany, the demonstration is still peaceful.

Other riots have resulted in Molotov cocktails being thrown at officials. Gunfire and stonings have resulted in injuries and even death to both police and protesters alike. Even in America, a protester has died from a fall off the Golden Gate Bridge, though there is speculation that it may have been a suicide attempt.

It is honorable to watch people speaking their minds and expressing their views about awesomely important world events, as has been case not just for the past week, but for the past few months. This has to be done though, with a sense of order.

Police respect the right for a peaceful demonstration. Protesters in turn must keep their rallies peaceful. The voice of their message will be lost on the melee that ensues when they swarm around law enforcement or vandalize private property.

To those in Amherst and around the world, it is a simple credo to follow: Keep demonstrating, just without disorder.

Information from CBS News was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

What the hell are we doing?

Sean Jacquet

I sat and watched in disbelief as the first bombs dropped on Baghdad, and wondered, is this the world we live in?

It seems odd to me that two nations are at war because two guys in suits can't compromise. What's more, Saddam and Bush aren't even doing any of the actual fighting. Because two men are pissed off at each other, hundreds of Iraqi and American soldiers have to die to resolve (hopefully), this little spat. Remember, it's easy to support war if you don't have to do your own fighting.

Now Bush claims this is necessary. After all, he did exhaust all diplomatic means of negotiation. It was of the utmost importance to invade Iraq, effectively giving the middle finger to the UN, the very body created (supposedly) to keep world peace. Oh and by the way, wasn't the creation of the UN our idea?

So, a good portion of the world despised the U.S. prior to the invasion, and now we're telling France, Russia, and Germany, once our allies, that we don't really care what they think. If we want to bomb the hell out of the barren, impoverished landscape called Iraq, then we're going to do it. And there's nothing you can do to stop us.

That, to me, is a retarded strategy. Granted I don't know much about politics, but I do know this: Don't piss off the few friends you do have. And as for the people that already hate us? I can't imagine this "liberation" campaign will repair our "Great Satan" image. Bombing poor people, killing Saddam, and installing a puppet government aren't the best ways to rid us of our imperialist reputation.

And this idea of "liberating" the Iraqi people? Sure, we may kill Saddam and end his oppressive regime, but that is simply a by-product of what we're really after. Bush is invading Iraq because there's something to be gained. What that something is I have no idea, but I doubt we're doing this from the goodness of our hearts.

Bush claims he wants to make the world a safer place, and deposing Saddam would do that. If that's true, why aren't we dealing with North Korea, which, by all accounts has a much more advanced weapons program than Iraq? And they have made no attempt to disarm. If North Korea is such a threat, why are we ignoring them to focus on Iraq? There's a reason that we're invading Iraq and avoiding all the other issues facing the country right now. We just have no idea what that reason is.

> "The economy is in the dumper, yet we're hell-bent on fighting a war that may not even need to be fought."

Speaking of things we should be focusing our attention on, how about the economy? The economy is in the dumper, yet we're hell-bent on fighting a war that may not even need to be fought. Bush asked Congress for $80 billion to finance the war. We couldn't put that money toward anything better? I don't know, maybe educating our children, or patching the holes in our economy.

Oh yeah, and what about that Osama bin Laden fella? Have we found him yet? How's the search going? I thought capturing him was a top priority. Why haven't we heard about him for a while? Might this little attack on Iraq serve as a nice little smokescreen to divert attention from the slow progress of the war on terrorism? No way, the President would never do something like that.

Another thing that bothers me about this whole debate is how you are perceived if you don't support the war. If you oppose an invasion of Iraq, you're a goddam un-American liberal hippie pussy.

Un-American? Free speech and the right to express a dissenting opinion is the very basis on which America was founded. The right to criticize the decisions of the government is distinctly American. If I'm exercising my right to free speech, the very freedom that is supposed to be synonymous with America, how can I be considered un-American?

It just seems incomprehensible to me that while I'm going out on Saturday night, there are kids my age in Iraq getting killed, or watching their friend's head get blown off because two guys in suits can't come to some kind of agreement. Now I'm hearing about this American soldier who threw a grenade into his own tent in Kuwait, killing one and injuring 15.

What the hell is going on? We're not going to stick around much longer if we keep this up. It's like George Carlin says, "the planet isn't going anywhere. We are. The planet is fine. The people are fued." While that is part of his stand up routine, he's more right than we'd like to admit.

Sean Jacquet is a Collegian

Park here and pay up

Life is full of uncertainties at UMass, but one thing is for sure. If you are a student with a car on campus, you are bound to run into parking difficulties sooner or later. For many, this aspect of student life has become all too familiar as the little trailer complex on Forestry Way known as Parking Services has made the lives of thousands of UMass students and employees miserable.

Allison Leshefsky

Both the Dartmouth and Lowell campuses allow their students to park free of charge in numerous designated areas throughout their campuses. Not only does UMass-Amherst stand alone in regard to parking fees for students, it does so in an unjustly manner.

The cost of a parking permit, regardless of what lot, depends upon each individual student's academic rank. Freshman, of course, are forced to pay almost double what a junior or senior must pay in order to park. This system of rank is also used when distributing faculty permits that vary in price according to salary, which is used as a cost factor.

> "After parking their vehicles...students and faculty are the victims yet again in their daily battle with Parking Services."

The students and faculty are charged ridiculous amounts that vary from 40 dollars for parking in a lot that may be miles from where they live or attend classes to 635 dollars for simple convenience. After parking their vehicles, in order to carry out their respective duties, students and faculty are the victims yet again in their daily battle with Parking Services.

It is not at all surprising when they return to their vehicles to find that dreaded little yellow envelope addressed to the Parking Scholarship Fund in which they are forced to mail away what seems to be an entire life savings. Parking Services may issue tickets anywhere from 20 dollars to 100 dollars, depending on the violation, which is often difficult to avoid. This injustice is equally as pathetic as taxing the poor.

Two years ago when UMass student Sam Wilkinson became another victim of Parking Services, he decided to challenge the system with a modest proposal. Instead of paying 90 dollars (two 40 dollar tickets and 10 dollars in late fees) to the Parking Scholarship Fund, Wilkinson proposed to give the money to a charity of his choice – AIDS Project Hartford, a deserving group in the local community.

This proposal was addressed to parking manager Michael Brennan in a February 2001 publication of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Along with Wilkinson's written proposal was a photograph of the check he wrote for his donation to the AIDS Project in Hartford.

After causing such a major stink, Wilkinson's proposal was finally accepted by Parking Services thus allowing him to graduate. It was student action, or rather reaction to Parking Services' cruelty, which allowed justice to be served in some respect.

With student elections already in the past, it is the responsibility of the winners to fight for student rights on this campus. Meanwhile, the Sam Wilkinson's of UMass must unite in a collective action of students fighting for rights against money draining pirates such as Parking Services.

Allison Leshefsky is a Collegian Columnist.

A return to reality

Courtney Charles

For the last week I've been in paradise. I've watched the sunrise over the Caribbean after falling asleep on a tropical beach. I've danced the night away to a native band's beat.

And then I came back here to school and responsibility. I came back to a war. I came back with more unanswered questions than when I left Amherst more than a week ago.

I question our country's motives in world politics and the stability of this nation's economic policies. I become even more cynical about our nation's leaders, and in what direction their leadership is taking us.

I feel guilty for enjoying the Bahamas when my friends are mourning for their brothers and lovers overseas fighting. I feel bad watching my best friend sit glued to a news station, waiting to hear the names of the marines lost in an ambush, wondering if her brother is safe.

Why is it so easy to just forget about what's going on with the serious international tensions? To forget about work and school?

I drove through the whole eastern seaboard and I didn't see a somber country at war. I thought I was going to drive through a nation on edge, but that was not the case.

Besides the fact that gun stores have inherited the south and 12-year-olds do their local ammo shopping in Wal-Mart, the landscape was calm.

In fact, during the route I took I encountered more friendly people than I have in the north. People were anxious to help with whatever they could, well, besides some of the folks of a small place by the name of Crooked River in Georgia, who tempted us with some fake free firewood.

Being back here just seems so bland and depressing, although it is nice to not have to squat in the woods to take a whiz or worry about my girls popping out of my bathing suit.

But back here at school is so tense, like the calm before an awful storm. Here I have real problems, with serious responsibilities that I cannot neglect.

> "Vacations show us a different perspective of the world, a view from a different window to the world."

Here the war is a real thing. Here I know people overseas in Kuwait and Afghanistan. Some of my high school friends who I used to goof around with are over there fighting a war of blood for oil, a war that our generation will be paying for out of our pockets and hearts for the rest of our life.

Vacations are more than just a break from work and the same old thing. Vacations show us a different perspective of the world, a view from a different window to the world. They allow us to see life from another vantage point, one that may be more desirable than the one to which we will return.

Everything in the Bahamas was so easy and carefree, like a long summer nap in a porch swing. But then reality sets in again, life comes back and smacks you in the ass, waking you up from what is quickly becoming a distant dream.

And while I am remembering these dreams I cannot help but ask myself 'What is all the fuss about?' And really, what is the big deal, the point to all off this monotony we put ourselves through, day after day, and all for what? So that our president can reward our efforts as a nation by sticking us in the middle of a country that we have no business being in?

That's just ridiculous. But what is even more ridiculous is that we continue to let it happen, we continue to let it be pushed further and further, and at the same time, even more out of our control.

Our daily work blinds us, it sets up an impenetrable shield that we cannot see through, much like our vacations blind us from responsibility. But like vacations always end, our blinds must come off, and we must realize our responsibilities and obligations to the world as a nation.

Courtney Charles is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include [illegible] number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 250 and 300 words [illegible] Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and [illegible] be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail [illegible]

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Another King masterpiece lost on the silver screen

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Stephen King rarely gets his due at the movie theater. The author's novels have been a popular wellspring for originality-starved screenwriters for over a quarter of a century, yet even at their most faithful, they rarely capture the magic that makes King's monster shows resonate. King – for all his reliance on pop culture riffs, regional colloquialisms and bloody gore – knows how to give horror a human dimension that stings. He has a gift for veering from splashing blood to thoughtful examinations and back again, all without missing a beat.

When you walk into a movie theater showing a Stephen King film, you know what to expect. Gore. Monsters. B-level actors gamely rifguring to make sense of the material.

Occasionally, there's the A-list King movie. Think "Misery" or Kubrick's operatic refiguring of "The Shining." However, more often than not, we are treated to the same bargain basement freak show, like in the films "Children of the Corn," "Maximum Overdrive," "Graveyard Shift" and countless other awful horror duds.

"Dreamcatcher," based on the alien invasion novel King wrote shortly after a car accident nearly took his life, is a film that manages to cross both worlds. It's an A-list effort that has a haphazard and patched together feel. It's made by an acclaimed director and written by an Oscar-winning screenwriter, William Goldman. It stars a handful of actors capable of giving good, even great, performances and yet stills manages to fall apart before our very eyes a jumble of technical achievements that amount to nothing.

The movie does kick off on a frigid, winter-chill foreboding note. Four friends, forever united by a moment of heroism from their childhood, gather for their annual hunting trip deep within the desolate, icy recesses of the Maine woods. Henry (Thomas Jane) is a suicidal shrink who can barely conceal his contempt for an obese patient, Jonesy (Damian Lewis), the King stand-in, is a professor recovering from a nearly fatal accident. Beaver (Jason Lee) is a genially vulgar guy in Buddy Holly glasses, and Pete (Timothy Olyphant) is a charming, alcoholic car salesman with a talent for finding anything.

The director is Lawrence Kasdan, a man known for his intimate ensemble dramas ("The Big Chill," "Mumford.") Here he taps into King's sense for the rituals of male camaraderie. The best scenes in "Dreamcatcher" are the ones in which the guys gather and proceed to joke, jibe and bond in the form of King's dense, pop-culture-and-slang-saturated language. The men live by the motto "SSDD" (as in "same s—t, different day") and have been bound by a telepathic link ever since they saved a mentally retard boy, "Duddits" Cavell, from bullies, haunting and tormenting them.

Soon the movie implodes in spectacularly gruesome fashion. A lost hunter covered in a red rash enters the camp and soon proceeds to release a slimy, toothy, eel-like creature from his rectum. People are killed and injured, and one of the men is possessed by an alien that adopts a fey British accent and the name Mr. Grey.

Then enter Morgan Freeman, sporting a very ugly flattop haircut. He proceeds to suck the life from the movie. Freeman's Col. Abraham Curtis has spent 25 years chasing aliens and has quarantined the local townsfolk – all of whom have been infected with a red fungus named Ripley – with plans to slaughter them all. As the deranged Curtis, Freeman begins by speaking in soft, velvety commands before leaping sneers, grunts and

Continued on page 6

World's apart making sweet music together

Two musicians at two ends of the musical spectrum and a pair of new albums, both released with a little help from their friends. In a world of overblown pop and rock, a flip of the 'No Code' coin offers a two-sided glimpse of what's going down on the songwriter front.

No code

Matthew Despres

• • •

Lisa Germano's voice is beautifully broken like Victoria William's voice is broken: her unmistakable, faint delivery lilts up and down like a collapsed needle across a weathered LP. The voice and sense of space it inhabits – an unselfish, self-awareness that joins up with the sparse instrumentation in tow – turns itself around with the same ego Chan Marshall (Cat Power) employs: a confidence so simple it takes an opposite reaction to remind her that it's really there at all.

In sunpler words, this is Germano's show entirely, the songs, as fragments, are curiosities that stack up as pieces of one deep, 12-note chord. Absorbed as that whole, "Lullaby For Liquid Pig" is plentiful in its rewards.

"Pearls" makes a strong motion toward capturing the deceiving gentleness of the album; a three-minute music box that unwinds at its own absence, it's counted off by a toy piano melody, an element Germano strings throughout the album for texture and support. "Candy" is something of a lyrical counterpart: there's a strong hook in her lethargic delivery, a sly invitation to discover what the hell is pushing her voice along so coolly as she spits such pointedly dark words.

Lisa Germano
'Lullaby For Liquid Pig'
iMusic

The hushed atmosphere that hovers above all of "LFLP" is a difficult one, though certainly worth exploring and a world away from Germano's earliest history that included violin work with John Mellencamp. The pop and country posturings of the latter have little influence here, though – her songs crumble away from the familiar verse-chorus fitting and run instead as exercises testing the capacity of music to transmit a story. Some stand out as eloquent statements, while others fade away as unconscious asides. Both add up and into the unique dialogue.

As "Into the Night" weaves its way out and toward the album's coda, Germano reminds us to "Close your eyes, it's not a pretty sight / And I'll tell you what, it's not gonna be alright this time." Her assurances and personal demons aside, there is plenty alright with "LFLP." Uninterested in momentary statements, she harkens back to the tradition of albums as cohesive, personal statements. And for that effort alone, her time should be warmly and curiously appreciated.

• • •

As the most dynamic piece of Ben Harper's latest single, "With My Own Two Hands," bassist Juan Nelson navigates the deep end with a confident swagger; his instrument speaks in short bursts of affection that dare to spike the leisurely, reggae drawl set forth by the Innocent Criminals surrounding him. In some ways, he alone sounds interested enough to rise above the mix, and as a piece itself, this song is a guilty nod to the whole: "Diamonds On the Inside" passes as a lukewarm effort by Harper's standards, the band playing too cleanly in the dark corners it once imaginatively mined.

Ben Harper and The Innocent Criminals
'Diamonds on the Inside'
Virgin Records

Continued on page 6

The Academy Awards may all be handed out...

However, the losing Collegian round table panelist still needs to clear up a few matters

So the tradition goes like this. The big winner of the Oscar pool gets to sit down in front of a computer and proclaim their superiority to the entire campus. Well, it didn't quite work that way this year. Andrew Merritt, Johnny Donaldson and Jim Pignatiello all tied for first place with two accurate picks a piece, and myself, Lizzy Nielsen, stood alone in last place with only one correct pick. So we're reversing the tradition. Instead of one person declaring their supremacy, I'm going to declare my inadequacy.

I'd first like to apologize to the Academy for referring to them as a "bunch of rich people with splintery poles shoved way up their asses." I was sadly incorrect when I declared that it would be below 32 degrees in hell when Eminem would win an Oscar. Apparently the Devil was figure skating last night when Eminem won for "Lose Yourself" from "8 Mile." I throw myself at your mercy, and I am unworthy of mopping up your spit. When Will Ferrell gets nominated for his performance in "Old School," I will not doubt the Academy's ability to be "hip."

As far as the Best Supporting Actress category goes, I did go on record saying I thought Catherine Zeta-Jones deserved it, but that I didn't think she'd win. Unfortunately, almost only counts in horse shoes, and I lost again in this category. Only Diane Lane-obsessed Johnny D. was able to get this one right. Johnny, I am unworthy. Your movie knowledge far exceeds mine, and I apologize for ever doubting your picks during our roundtable session. You're fired.

Onto Best Supporting Actor. The only critic to accurately pick this was none other than our resident Sports Editor/wanna-be-arts writer Jim Pignatiello. Jim, your movie knowledge is unparalleled, even by the Star Wars hating Johnny Donaldson. Jim, I bow at your supremacy when it comes to the subject of movies. I spend my weekends out having fun and partying at bars instead of descending into movie theaters and seeing every single movie to ever be released. Perhaps if I start spending my whole weekend at Cinemark, one day I will be as cool and smart as you. Stick to writing about bouncing balls and guys beating each other up, and stay out of my department.

Merritt, Merritt, Merritt. Don't you know that doing what everyone else is doing is always safe? Three words: Best Picture Category. For once, Johnny and Jim decided to agree, and when Johnny and Jim agree, it would be a logical move to go along with them. I followed the crowed and picked "Chicago," but you, Merritt, you decided to go against the grind and show us all that you know so much more. You were going to show us that "Gangs of New York" was the best movie of the year. Wouldn't have been great if it had actually won? Good try, sophomore, but this time you failed. Good luck next year.

However, Merritt, you do deserve an ounce of props for your venture against the grindstone in the Best Actress category. Each one of us

'Willard' squirms and 'View' drops

Cuba Gooding Jr.'s new comedy 'Boat Trip' runs a ground

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Willard." Crispin Glover has hooded, penetrating eyes, sunken cheeks, waxy-white skin and a nose that narrows into an elegant hawk's beak. Glover looks absolutely cadaverous. He appears to be living life as a vampire, but he may have been the only possible person alive to play the title role of "Willard," remake of the 1971 revenge horror fable. As Willard Stiles, an alienated young man who uses the horde of rats he befriends to seek vengeance on his brutish boss (R. Lee Ermey), Glover shakes and seethes and trembles with barely concealed rage and despair. Glover hunches his shoulder, he speaks in a halting, unsure voice, he shudders and writhes. In other words, a star is creepily, magnetically reborn.

'Willard'
Directed by Glen Morgan
Starring Crispin Glover R. Lee Ermey
New Line
Rated PG-13
100 mins.

"Willard" is not a very scary movie, but it is one of sublime, unrelenting squirminess. Glen Morgan, the writer/director, shoots everything with a stylized, Hitchcockian flourish. The rotting mansion Willard lives in, his equally decrepit mother. They're part "Psycho," part Grand Guignol camp. "Willard" is not a movie of subtlety, but that's not what it promises. What it does promise is rats and the movie doesn't let the audience down. There are rats, rats and even more rats, including a gentle white one named Socrates and a nasty foot long monster named Ben, squirming over unlucky bodies. "Willard" may not have enough material to sustain its entire 100 minutes – the movie at times feels a bit flimsy – but it does offer a sly and squirmy good time.

• • •

"View From the Top." As Donna Jensen, a small-town girl who dreams of escaping her dead end life by pursuing her dream of becoming a top international flight attendant (you heard that right), Gwyneth Paltrow speaks in a twangy Southern drawl and wears a series of tight, crayon-colored outfits. "View From the Top" is the kind of movie that may be admired by the 14-year-old fashion plates who strut their way through the local shopping mall. For everyone else, the movie is really quite dreadful: shallow, vapid, materialistic, dull, in all aspects charmless and stupid. Paltrow, all beaming Pepsodent smile, is badly miscast in a movie that wouldn't have cut it as a "Saturday Night Live" skit. Speaking of "SNL," Mike Myers makes an appearance as a testy instructor with one crossed eye (a gag he milks about five times too many) and fails to add any kind of luster to the film. Bruno Barreto gives the film a swank, brightly colored 60s feel, but he can't decide if this is a love story (Mark Ruffalo, the only good thing here, is Paltrow's all-too-little seen interest), a wacky comedy or a follow-your-dreams inspirational story. In fact, it's all three and nothing at the same time.

'View From the Top'
Directed by Bruno Barreto
Starring Gwyneth Paltrow Christina Applegate
Miramax
Rated PG-13
83 mins.

Continued on page 6

'WrestleMania XIX' nearing showtime

Corner to corner

Emilie Duggan-Hicks

It seems a little ridiculous to sit here and write a column about something as trivial as my predictions for "WrestleMania XIX" given that our country has just gone to war. I was, however, given the task of writing this column, and so write it I did, no matter how insignificant it seems. I did not wish for this war but, what will happen, will happen.

We do not live in a perfect world. Today's society is marred by violence and anger, and we witness hatred on the news everyday. So, while I'm saddened that things have escalated to the point they have, I'm not going to put my life on hold or ignore what it is that I enjoy.

That said, let's talk about wrestling.

I was too young to remember the first "WrestleMania." It was held in 1985 and; even if I had been allowed to watch wrestling back then, I doubt I would remember anything that happened. In fact, I don't really remember much of any "WrestleMania" I've seen, with the exception of last year's. But, this year, I will actually pay attention to what is going on. I will sear it into my memory so that years down the line I can recite to my children how Kurt Angle took on Brock Lesnar, defying doc-

Continued on page 6

King's 'Dreamcatcher' a nightmare

[illegible] this may be the [illegible] performance the authoritative [illegible] has ever given. "Dreamcatcher" [illegible] a cinematic first: the first time Morgan Freeman kills a movie by [illegible] in it.

[illegible] worked in a 600-page [illegible] incoherent and inane on [illegible] screen. The more and more [illegible] eyes this may be the [illegible] performance the authoritative [illegible] has ever given. "Dreamcatcher" [illegible] a cinematic first: the first time Morgan Freeman kills a movie by [illegible] in it.

"Dreamcatcher" tries to convince us it's intended as a serious horror film, the sillier and stupider it gets. It's a movie that tries to wring blood-curdling horror out of the act of... passing gas.

Characterizations flip-flop, the plot stutters and wheezes. The movie quickly degenerates from quiet menace into a bloody FX circus filled with gory, devastated bodies. CGI monsters and swirling mystical vortexes. The special effects are indeed good, and the movie looks almost menacing with its snowy forest vistas. Kasdan and Goldman throw in a couple of good ideas – I liked the literal visualization of a "memory warehouse," an antique chamber stuffed with notes and files – but "Dreamcatcher" the movie is about as frightening as a whoopee cushion.

Is Ben Harper the music world's latest diamond in the rough?

[illegible] is to say Harper's penchant for infusing [illegible] a transcendent quality has vanished; he's [illegible] better than most, and he is a love song tuned [illegible] to a power burn ("When She Believes") or a fists [illegible] for peaceful revolution ("WMOTH"), he [illegible] transmit a passionate sound. The organic [illegible] band taking different routes to get there, [illegible] what made it work in the past – the place [illegible] that kinks as he pushes it higher more [illegible] coherent and inane on [illegible] produced the same feeling a Leon Mobley [illegible] given breakdown. On "DOTI" there are [illegible] moments of playful synergy, and the resulting [illegible] mapped out and disappointingly inten-

The [illegible] is a simple, southern-touched jaunt, [illegible] Harper's lyrics suffer from the [illegible] sentimentality that warms the music, [illegible] the kinks." Harper didn't quite rally enough of [illegible] and canned is the resulting sound when placed alongside the feeling he's trying to summon.

"When She Believes" succeeds because it turns away where the others head along straight lines till morning. The organ grinder melody that shuffles away as Harper's hushed voice follows a step behind may be heavy on the sweet, but ultimately wins on that very point. It's unafraid to shout out exactly what it is – an emotionally trimmed ballad, nothing more or less.

In the end, it's Nelson who pockets a touch of the old school and reigns as the shining star on this set. When Harper sings about bringing the funk, it's the bassist that delivers. Where Harper innocently places the fate of the world in his two hands, Nelson cups the bottom end in his and bears the true heft. The collective intention among Harper's Criminals is undoubtedly good; but the ability to deliver, on this set at least, something falls just short. Head for 2000's "Live From Mars" for a taste of the overwhelming remainder, and then to a live date yourself to watch the man work magic where he's truly at home: onstage with the audience in his two hands.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Thoughts after the Oscars are given

[illegible] Golden Globe Winner Renee [illegible] to take this category, but [illegible] pricked fake-nosed [illegible] Kidman from the pseudo- [illegible] "The Hours." Merritt, [illegible] a painful movie-critiquing [illegible] compared to your vast [illegible] and cinematic intellect [illegible] are crowned your stars in The [illegible] notable next year, and [illegible] exclusive in the Arts depart-ment anytime.

I am a pathetic movie critic I have such a lackluster knowledge of movies compared to the three of you, and I bow to your vast knowledge. However, there are more important things in life than being a mastermind when it comes to the movies. Think of not spending your weekends in darkened movie theaters and dropping saluable dollars on movies that could be spent on other, more worthwhile things, like Grateful Deads at Charlies. I picked the important one, Best Picture, and I think I should get a hall a point for the Best Supporting Actress category. Even so, I still lost.

What's left to say? The entire point of this column is for me to declare my inadequacy as a movie critic to the entire campus. And I have.

Good luck next year, boys.

Lizzy Nielsen is a Collegian Columnist.

Cuba Gooding Jr. sinking in the new comedy, 'Boat Trip'

[illegible] that dissipates into thin air

• • •

[illegible] "Boat Trip" is at my time as a movie fan, I [illegible] an actor squander an Oscar win [illegible] than Cuba Gooding Jr. did. Ever since he [illegible] the Academy Awards stage in 1997 to [illegible] and for Jerry Maguire," Gooding [illegible] has through far too many bad [illegible] Gaming on the heels of the [illegible] "Snow Dogs," in which Gooding [illegible] dentist who inherits a sled dog [illegible] Boat Trip."

[illegible] once again coasting on enthusiasm, [illegible] man who accidentally boards a gay [illegible] longer a compliment to say a movie [illegible] "National Lampoon" signifier, and "Boat [illegible] a movie that deserves to be ranked with that "Lampoon" title. Too shallow to be offensive, it still traffics swishy stereotypes. The movie manages to reach the level of pathetic. Gooding and Horatio Sanz, as his typically horny best friend, are hooked on a cruise catered to gay men, and the movie ties itself in knots to prove that: A) the guys don't really like being on a gay cruise, B) that gay men aren't that bad at all, and C) there has to be a female love interest for each man.

'Boat Trip'
Directed by Mort Nathan
Starring Cuba Gooding Jr. Horatio Sanz
Artisan
Rated R
93 mins

Gooding, through the movie's senseless plot contortions is matched up with the hottie dance instructor (Roselyn Sanchez), while Sanz ogles the Swedish Tanning Team (don't ask.) Gooding musters up a lot of good humor, and there are a few (emphasis on few) meager laughs. Sanchez makes for charismatic eye candy, but a few redeeming elements can't save a movie bound to hit a comic iceberg.

'WrestleMania XIX' almost here

[illegible] and putting off neck [illegible] he could wrestle in this [illegible] match.

The [illegible] inside me is jumping [illegible] thought of Kurt Angle [illegible] Lesnar. It pairs up two [illegible] stars. [illegible] an NCAA [illegible] and Olympic champi- [illegible] has the potential to be [illegible] clinical match of the [illegible] The frustration inside me [illegible] that World Wrestling [illegible] (WWE) should allow [illegible] pass as bigger against Bos- [illegible] Now when there is such a [illegible] of Kurt Angle become- [illegible] on even doing, before [illegible] formed a team. With Angle about [illegible] off for at least a year because [illegible] knee, there's really only [illegible] go. Winner: Brock [illegible] is the only option.

Only then I'm really looking forward to it between the current [illegible] champion, Triple H, and Booker T. The WWE has been playing the race card in building a feud between these two, and while I don't necessarily think bringing in such a sensitive subject as a story-line is a good idea, it has been fantastic watching Booker T. ingest everything that Triple H is saying and doing to insult him. I just know that come "WrestleMania," he's going to unleash all the rage building inside, and he's going to come out on top. Winner: Booker T. Though, for how long is a whole different essay altogether.

If you read my column, you know how I feel about both The Rock and Stone Cold Steve Austin. Though I can't stand either of them, Stone Cold is starting to grow on me. I'm beginning to understand his appeal, and for that reason alone, I'm hoping he wins. I don't have much to say about this match, because I probably won't watch it. Winner: Stone Cold

Speaking of matches I won't watch, Vince McMahon, owner of the WWE, versus Hulk Hogan. Isn't Hulk Hogan about 80 now? Vince McMahon isn't much younger. One of the conditions of this match is if Hogan loses, he'll never wrestle again. Would that really be such a bad thing? Winner: Hulk Hogan because Hulkamania will never die. Shawn Michaels versus Chris Jericho, the Heartbreak Kid versus the King of the World, the Showstopper versus a huge-in-his-own-mind rock star. The bigger the stage, the better the performance from both these men, and this match-up has the potential to be the most entertaining of the night as both are prone to comedic antics. It's hard to predict who will win this. Nostalgia wants Shawn Michaels to win, Logic is saying that Jericho probably has the upper hand in this match, if only because he's younger. Winner: Shawn Michaels, just because Jericho needs to be knocked off his pedestal.

The current Cruiserweight Champion on "SmackDown," right now, is Matt Hardy. He's set to take on a true cruiserweight, Rey Mysterio, at "Wrestlemania." Matt won the title at last month's pay-per-view, "No Way Out," after dropping enough weight in two weeks to actually be considered a cruiserweight. Both men have pretty unique wrestling styles, and it will be interesting to see how they work together. Winner: Rey Mysterio, simply because Hardy isn't really a cruiserweight.

Those are the biggest matches set for "WrestleMania XIX." While none of my predictions are bound to come true, it was fun trying to guess what the WWE's next move will be. One thing is certain "WrestleMania XIX" is sure to top last year's, which leaves fans wondering what could possibly be in store for next year's 20th anniversary of the event.

Emilie Duggan-Hicks is a Collegian Columnist.

Attention: All writers for the Arts and Living Magazine should meet at 6 p.m. in the Collegian office. Those who cannot attend need to speak with Jen, Nick or Lizzy to discuss deadlines and coordinate photo opportunities.

WINSLOW TOWNSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pittsburgh's Brandin Knight (20) drives to the basket during first-half action Sunday, in Boston, during the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

Pitt advances into Sweet 16

By JIMMY GOLEN
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – There might not be a stronger team heading into the NCAA tournament's round of 16 than Pittsburgh.

With a 74-52 victory over Indiana on Sunday, Pitt completed its second blowout in two rounds.

Pitt beat the Hoosiers and Wagner by an average of 24 points, second only to Kentucky, which beat lower-ranked opponents by one extra point combined. Pitt's average of 36.5 points allowed also is second-lowest in the field, to Michigan State's 50.

"The way they play defense will help them whoever they play," Indiana coach Mike Davis said. "That team never runs out of gas."

Jaron Brown scored 20 points and Brandin Knight added 17 points, seven assists and five steals to beat Indiana, which made it to the title game last year. Chevon Troutman grabbed nine rebounds to go with his 10 point as Pitt (28-4) advanced to the Midwest regional semifinals in Minneapolis to play No. 3 seed Marquette (25-5).

The Golden Eagles are led by Travis Diener, who scored 55 points in victories over Holy Cross and Missouri for the school's first trip to the regional semifinals for the first time since 1994.

"They have outstanding talent," Pitt coach Ben Howland said. "Diener is as good a shooter as there is in the country."

Pitt didn't have much basketball success before Howland arrived, so he had to find his inspiration elsewhere in the city's sporting lore.

With a style Howland referred to as "Pittsburgh Steelers basketball," used a bulky frontcourt rotation of Ontario Lett, Donatas Zavackas and Troutman to carry on the tradition of the Steel Curtain defense that brought the city four Super Bowl titles in the 1970s. Listed at an average of 6-foot-7 and 246 pounds – but probably heavier – they pushed around Indiana's taller but spindly George Leach (6-11, 240) and Jeff Newton (6-9, 225).

"We're not tall. We're burly," Howland said. "We want kids that are tough. That's what wins."

Indiana (21-13) trailed by one before going scoreless for the last 6:33 of the first half, committing five turnovers during that the span while missing five shots – mostly long, contested 3-point attempts.

Upsets aren't what they used to be the clear exception to the rule. At the Indianapolis subregional just down the road from the Bulldogs' classic gym, four of their brethren – Holy Cross, Southern Illinois, Western Kentucky and Wisconsin-Milwaukee – were beaten by Marquette, Missouri, Illinois and Notre Dame by a total of 11 points. It might be that coach Todd Lickliter was the only one in Butler colors who appreciated how lucky they were to draw the longer straw twice in a row.

Continued from page 6

"The greatest thing is we get to stay together," he said. "I can't tell you how much fun it is to just be around these guys, to watch them prepare and compete. I just want to prolong this as long as possible."

All sorts of improbable pieces fell in place to help Butler get this far. The talent drain of the last decade never hit the Bulldogs because they don't draw many stars to begin with. Six of this year's players are seniors, including Sunday's hero, Archey. And Lickliter, who has exactly as many tournament appearances as Pitino does national championships (one), is the third coach they've played for.

If the program has a star, it's Hinkle Fieldhouse. The Butler gym was used to film the ultimate underdog movie, "Hoosiers," and Lickliter understands its pull as a recruiting tool. It is short on amenities, but long on inspiration.

"When you walk in, there's a feeling to this place. Especially for me," Lickliter, who played for his father at nearby North Central High, said recently. "I grew up here and played high school basketball here. I would say there's a tremendous feeling about it, and this team upholds that as well as any team you could ask to uphold it."

Whether it was Archey on the greatest 3-point tear of his life, or Duane Lightfoot's 14 points off the bench, or even reserve Rob Walls' exchange of sneakers with Cornette after the senior center soaked his by crashing into some coolers behind the bench in pursuit of a loose ball, the Bulldogs have become a team.

If nothing else, Butler's kids understand the notion of playing together. It's the only real advantage they've got.

Bay Hill still Tiger's domain

Continued from page 6

on by food poisoning.

Nordegren spent Friday night in the hospital receiving fluids.

Woods didn't have that option.

"The problem is, it's so easy to check into a hospital, but getting out is the hard part," Woods said. "I wanted to get my fluid levels up in case today was hot and humid, but ... I didn't know if they were going to let me go. So, I decided not to do that."

Woods was helped by a cool, steady rain that drenched Bay Hill, not to mention a big lead going into the final round and a game that looks better than ever.

Woods is 28-2 when he has at least a share of the 54-hole lead, and he has won the last 16 times he was leading after 36 holes.

Woods finished at 19-under 269 and became the first player since Gene Sarazen in the Miami Open (1926-30) to win the same event four straight times.

Brad Faxon missed a 6-foot par putt on the 18th hole that cost him $189,000. He had a 74 and dropped into a four-way tie for second with Kirk Triplett (70), Kenny Perry (71) and Stewart Cink (72).

Faxon knew he didn't have a chance, not after Woods laced a 3-wood from 265 yards into 12 feet on No. 4 for an eagle to increase his lead to eight strokes.

"When he's got a seven- or eight-shot lead, he's not going to throw up all over himself," Faxon said, only seconds later realizing his dubious choice of words.

"He was ready to play," Faxon said. "As sick as he felt, I don't think if he felt great he would have played much better than that."

Especially not on this course, where Woods first won in 1991 in the U.S. Junior Amateur.

Palmer might own the Bay Hill Club & Lodge, but Woods owns the tournament.

His 11-stroke victory was the largest margin in the 25-year history of Bay Hill, breaking by two the previous mark, set by Fred Couples in 1992.

Woods won the 2000 U.S. Open by 15 strokes at Pebble Beach, the '97 Masters by 12 strokes and the 2000 NEC Invitational at Firestone by 11 strokes.

He never made it look more easy, even though he has rarely had it so hard.

"It was mind-boggling watching the way he played," Cink said.

Whatever hopes Faxon or Cink had against a wounded Tiger disappeared quickly. Woods saved par with putts of 15 feet on the second hole and 12 feet on the third. Then, he laced a 3-wood that faded gently toward the flag in a steady rain and stopped 12 feet away.

Woods made the eagle putt, and the lead was up to eight.

The only thing left to determine was the margin of victory, the runner-up and whether Woods could make it through his round. He often stopped in his tracks, doubled over in pain and gritted his teeth.

Playing wasn't any easier.

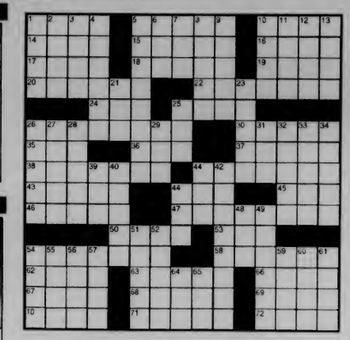
"If I wasn't in contention, I wouldn't have gone. There's no way," Woods said. "It was a joke. Every single tee shot hurt because my abs were obviously sore from last night, and I continued on while I was playing."

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vitard

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Derrick Genova



BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Elliot G. Garbauskas

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Elliot G. Garbauskas

ACROSS
1 Coop up
5 Walking place
10 Hwys.
14 Mock fanfare (hyph.)
15 Serve the throne
16 Flying prefix
17 Cable fan
18 Baby bedding
19 Baby beluga
20 Shade-loving plants
22 Beanery beebees
24 Tenet
25 Ration out
26 Lobby furnishing
30 Daintily ornament
32 Mother rabbit
35 Bugs Bunny's pursuer
38 Dixie capital
41 Making coffee
43 Web-footed bird
44 Superman foe Luthor
45 Film maker
46 A Midgley
47 Be quiet (2 wds.)
50 9 to 5, commonly
53 Eggs, to Ovid
54 "Guernica" painter
58 Command
62 Crumbly soil
63 "Sound, Wash
64 Weight (2 wds.)
66 "Don't tell (2 wds.)
67 Ding-a-Ling Bailey
68 Draw forth
69 Bargain event
70 Skip a turn
71 Defiant reply
72 Potter's oven

DOWN
1 Work with acid
2 South Seas tuber
3 Uproars
4 Strategy
5 Be lucky
6 Film speed: Init.
7 Grand total
8 Fashion goddess
9 Herring
10 Magazine stand
11 Actress — Hatcher
12 Emerald Isle
13 Cries audibly
21 Beside Shade
23 Talk or discuss
26 Fem. honorific
28 Proverb
29 Turbine part
28 Hemingway
29 ——— Hartnett
31 Type
33 Buy another subscription
34 Tight bath filler
36 Cheese choice
37 Ms. Merkel
39 "A Fool Such As ——"
40 Beginning
41 Curl: prov.
42 Slapping firm
43 Eight pounds
48 Night bird
49 Fingernail nine
51 Chicken ala reseal
52 "——, Jolene" (Dolly Parton hit)
54 Dripping sound
55 Perch
56 Pianos
57 Major Hoople
59 Asian mountains
60 Little creek
61 Intelligent
64 Admin. head
65 Make do with

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-28-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

TUESDAY
- High: 65
- Low:39

WEDNESDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 32

THURSDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 28

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Macaroni & Cheese
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER
- Honey Garlic Roast Pork
- Baked Stuffed Fish
- Red Thai Tofu Steak (vegan)
- Jamaican 3-Beans (vegan)

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew F. Sacco
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Anth. Tamulonis
COPY EDITOR
Eric Soderstrom
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Jennifer DiMeglio
PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Lovel · Gerry Auger

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm just a simple man, trying to make my way in the universe."

- Jango Fett

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Take care that you don't attempt to say something directly opposite to your body language.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You may have to wait throughout the day for the information you need.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your ideas may be challenged today, and it's important for you to hold your ground.

cancer • JUN. 22-JULY. 22
Contact from someone far from home will inspire you to do something that is uncharacteristic.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Take care that you don't attempt to say something directly opposite to your body language.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Someone may be taking you seriously today when you are just playing around.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Stay on track today despite any attempts the competition might mount to pull you away from your desired course.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
If you find yourself talking to the sink today you should listen to it because most likely it will respond.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
What usually would have been a clear cut situation will get a little fuzzier.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You can prove yourself an excellent listener today if you stop being so stubborn.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Take care that you don't blow your own horn today. You don't want to attract attention to yourself.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You can score a number of points if you simply cater to the needs of a loved one.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Wanna buy/sell stuff locally
No Shipping, Payment, Delivery Hassles. Need Classes/cows or Classmates? Free! Visit www.collegeshack.com today!

Fraternities, Sororities, Clubs, Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jan, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-6000

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium III's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Cruise line entry level on board positions or year-round. 941-329-6434 cruisecareers.com

CAMP CANADENSIS. Pocono Mountains, PA. 12 hours from New York and Philadelphia. A premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/16. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

Office assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, receive inventory, computer data entry, answer telephone. All around person needed. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

EMPLOYMENT

UNIQUE INTERNSHIP OPPORTUNITY. Ogilvy Public Relations seeks interns for Fall semester 2003 to implement an award winning public relations campaign. Internship work is conducted on campus, primarily between September and December 2003. Open to undergraduates entering their junior or senior year of study. Students with majors in public relations, communications, marketing, advising and journalism are urged to apply. E-mail resume to: internprogram@ogilvypr.com. Deadline: March 31, 2003.

Looking for commission-based sales associates to work in Amherst, Holyoke, Northampton. Email resumes to jobs@collegeshack.com

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Summer Jobs on Martha's Vineyard! Store Managers, Assistants, Associates. Work for Soft As A Group in one of our retail stores in Edgartown Positions, housing available May 15th Richard White @ 413-323-8520 email @ rdwhite27@charter.net

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Acts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-399-CAMP or check out our website at www.independentlake.com and apply online.

UMASS Football video staff is looking for interested students to help video tape practices + games for the upcoming football season. Experience preferred, but will train. Scholarship aid + work/study available. Beginning Late Spring 2003. Come be a part of the championship tradition. Contact Bill Sisler at 577-0319.

EMPOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3085 ext 516

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

Boxing Lessons for self-development in Amherst area with retired pro Djata Bumpus. 413-584-1966 All major credit cards accepted.

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

EMPLOYMENT

Spanish speaking for business development position. PT, must be available early morning. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288 www.aroundcampus.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Zywicki honored

Named conference player of the week after 14-goal break

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior Jeff Zywicki, an attackman on the No. 6 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, was named the Eastern College Athletic Conference Player of the Week Monday.

Zywicki notched 19 points (14 goals, five assists) over a three-win week that improved the Minutemen to 7-0 (1-0 ECAC) overall. The Maroon and White outscored its opponents by a combined total of 43-15 in the three contests.

Zywicki opened the week with a career performance in UMass' 15-5 win over Albany on Tuesday. The Sapean, Ontario native set career-highs in goals (seven) and points (nine) as the Minutemen dismantled the Great Danes.

The key to his game is finding all of the garbage goals," UMass coach Greg Cannella said, referring to Zywicki's talent for putting home rebounds. "He's a great player."

The Minutemen returned to Richard J. Garber Field for the sixth straight game to take on Hartford three days later. UMass dominated throughout, jumping out to a 6-0 lead and holding down the Hawks for a 14-5 lambasting.

Zywicki led the Maroon and White with four points (two goals, two assists) on the afternoon, while seven Minutemen notched two points or more on the afternoon.

To end his week, Zywicki and the Minutemen played outside Garber for the first time all season. UMass headed to Hempstead, N.Y. for Sunday's matchup with No. 13 Hofstra.

Led by Zywicki's six points (five goals, one assist), the Minutemen doubled up the Pride, 14-7.

For the season, Zywicki leads the country in points (36) and goals (25). He also ranks third in the nation in points per game (3.14) and 12th in assists with 12.

Zywicki's 36 points are more than the junior had amassed in his first two years with the Minutemen.

This is the second ECAC Player of the Week Award for the Minutemen this season. Senior midfielder Kevin Leveille won the award on March 3.

JAMES SCHAFFER / COLLEGIAN

Jeff Zywicki is the second UMass men's lacrosse player to earn an ECAC Player of the Week Award this season. No. 9 leads the nation in points (36) and goals (25).

Minutemen plagued by inconsistency

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team continues to battle inconsistency, but managed to finally find its winning stride over spring break, winning two games on a trip to Florida and taking one of three from Atlantic 10 rival Duquesne.

UMass (3-7 1-2 Atlantic 10) opened the weeklong road-trip on a sour note, dropping its lone game in Sarasota, Fla. to Northern Iowa (6-7). Junior designated hitter Sean Sarno carried the offensive load in the contest, going 2-for-4 with two runs batted in.

Panther righthander Kory Kelchen allowed five runs in five innings of work to pick up the win, while UMass junior righthander Eric Chown was shelled for six runs in two plus innings for the loss.

"Our pitching still isn't where it needs to be," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We're not consistently getting guys out, and obviously that's hurting us."

The Maroon and White's first victory of the 2003 campaign came in impressive fashion, as freshman righthander Matt Torra hurled a complete game, two-hit shutout against Columbia (3-5) in Bradenton, Fla., leading the Minutemen to a 4-0 win. Torra struck out seven and did not walk a batter to earn his first collegiate victory.

"[Torra] was a real boost for us," Stone said. "He threw strikes and got them to hit it to the right places. He was in control out there."

After having their contest with the Indiana Hoosiers rained out, the Minutemen again took to the field in Bradenton, and again found themselves on the losing end, this time to Yale, by a 6-1 count.

Righthander John Toffey battled wildness and took the loss for the Minutemen, giving up two earned runs on two hits and five walks in two-and-one-third innings.

"We reverted back to a lot of bad things [in the Yale game]," Stone said. "We were back to being impatient at the plate and wild on the mound."

The Minutemen concluded their spring trip on a high note, downing Eastern Kentucky 7-4 in their final game in Bradenton. Mike Athas paced the offense, going 2-for-3 with a triple, two RBI and two runs scored.

Sophomore righthander Mike Crane earned his first win of the season, allowing four runs on six hits in five innings, while striking out four. Sophomore lefthander Scott Ratliff picked up the save, striking out two in two scoreless innings of work.

"We didn't consistently perform like we wanted to [on the trip]," Stone said. "But it was a good way to finish things up."

The Maroon and White then traveled to Pittsburgh to open its A-10 schedule with a three-game set against Duquesne.

In game one of a doubleheader Saturday, the Dukes (9-10 2-1 A-10) held on to win by a score of 6-4. Senior Jeff Altieri led the offense with a two-run homer, while Athas again had an impressive performance, going 2-for-3. Torra tossed his second complete game of the season in the losing effort.

In game two, the Dukes scored seven runs in the fifth inning to win 7-1. Sophomore Keith Doherty took the loss, allowing five earned runs on six hits in four-plus innings.

The Minutemen salvaged the final game of the series on Sunday 8-2, as Altieri blasted a double and a home run, while driving in three runs to help UMass post its first conference win of the season.

Chown picked up his first win of the season, allowing one earned run on four hits while striking out eight in six-plus innings of work. Ratliff earned his second save of the year with three shutout innings of work.

UMass returns to action this afternoon as they battle Connecticut in Storrs, Conn.

Tiger conquers Bay Hill again

Food poisoning can't stop him

By DOUG FERGUSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) – Tiger Woods fourth straight victory in the Bay Hill Invitational will only look routine in the record books.

Sure. Woods closed with a 4-under 68 on a rainy, sloppy Sunday. He played the final 44 holes without a bogey, and won by 11 strokes, the biggest rout in the 25-year history of Bay Hill and the fourth time in his career he has won by double digits.

What made this rare was how Woods ducked outside the ropes and dropped to his knees, his stomach heaving from a nasty bout with food poisoning.

He winced after every drive. He sat on his bag after holing out on every green. He walked so slowly that Woods was 40 yards behind his playing partners, a stark contrast to the quick and purposeful strides he normally takes when he's in the lead.

Sanity only returned to Bay Hill when Woods tapped in a short par putt on the 18th, weakly raised his right fist to salute the gallery and posed with the silver sword that tournament host Arnold Palmer presents to the winner.

"I'm proud of this round," Woods said. "I didn't feel my best and still was able to go out there and make no bogeys with the lead. That's something you always want to do."

He can do without the rest.

Woods had a five-stroke lead after three rounds, a huge advantage because he has never lost a PGA Tour event when leading by more than one shot after 54 holes.

He was in complete control until shortly after a dinner, a pasta dish that gave him such a wicked case of food poisoning that he vomited nearly 30 times before he arrived at Bay Hill on Sunday and went to his knees three times on the first five holes.

The pasta was prepared by Elin Nordegren, his girlfriend, who two days earlier collapsed outside the clubhouse from dehydration brought

Continued on page 6

PETER CUNOSKY / ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tiger Woods tees off in the rain on the third hole of the final round of the Bay Hill Invitational in Orlando, Fla., on Sunday.

Why NCAA upsets don't mean what they used to

By JIM LITKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

They are called "mid-majors," apparently because "floor mats" was already taken.

Or because the college presidents in charge at those schools understand that alumni would not open their wallets for a basketball program that year after year is described as undermanned or overmatched.

That's the reality that Butler and many other schools face at this time of year. Usually, they wrangle invitations to the NCAA tournament as champions of second-tier conferences – hence the "mid-major" tag – and then they're supposed to clear out when the time comes to divvy up the serious spoils.

"On paper, people think we're nothing," Butler's Joel Cornette said Sunday, remembering the buildup before the 12th-seeded Bulldogs tipped off against No. 4 Louisville. "We watched TV and could barely even tell we were going to play."

There are a dozen reasons why, beginning with the high-profile coach on the opposing sideline, Rick Pitino, and a talent deficit starting with Cardinals star Reece Gaines and extending all the way to the end of the Louisville bench. But as the Bulldogs' 79-71 victory proved that doesn't count for as much as it once did.

The truth is that the best basketball-playing seniors in the land are currently putting in their third season as pros. The same is true, essentially, about the best juniors, sophomores, freshmen and any high schooler with half as much game as LeBron James. Comb the NBA's draft board from the past few seasons, then imagine how much wider the gap between the mid-majors and the top few teams in the big conferences would be if those kids were still in the NCAA mix.

Because they aren't, the number of real powerhouses is down to a handful, and schools such as Butler get to hang around a little longer and talk a little louder than they used to. And being the only double-digit seed besides No. 10 Auburn left in the round of 16 has proved to be intoxicating stuff, indeed.

"It's not our goal just to get to the Sweet 16," Darnell Archey said. "Our goal all along has been to be national champions. We're thrilled and excited, but we're not satisfied."

Come Friday, Oklahoma figures to have something to say about that. The best games so far have been supposed mismatches on the order of Butler-Louisville – see Arizona's escape from Gonzaga – but everything suggests it's going to get harder from here on out.

Butler slipped past No. 5 Mississippi State in round one,

Continued on page 6

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 104

Peace encouraged on campus

Rally for peace on Student Union steps

By KELLY FARRELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Songs of war and peace opened a rally on the Student Union steps of the University of Massachusetts yesterday afternoon as about 200 students and faculty expressed their concerns about the war with Iraq and their hopes for world peace.

Following the rally, students marched around campus, picking up more students along the way, including those eating lunch in the Blue Wall. The group of about 40 students marched up to the Whitmore Administration Building and back to the Campus Center.

At the rally, Tom Juravich, of the UMass Labor Center, strummed his guitar and sang with Lisa Gaughran, a local musician and therapist. As the two sang, "there's mean things happenin' in this land..." more people began to join the crowd in front of the Student Union.

Speakers at the rally included Kate Billman-Golemme of the UMass Antiwar Coalition and Sunaina Maira, Assistant Professor of Asian American Studies. In addition, Ann Ferguson of the Philosophy and Women's Studies Department spoke at the rally and played a large role in organizing the Peace Convocation.

Maira addressed the crowd with concerns for Americans being held hostage within the U.S. including South East Asian and Arab immigrants.

"We will not let you divide our community of color," she said addressing the Bush Administration's policies since the events of September 11, 2001.

"Stop, stop, stop the war!" the crowd chanted as Molly Agarwal, senior in Business and Asian American Studies, stood up to the microphone to speak with the group. Agarwal spoke about the challenges of deciphering truths within a "frequently biased media."

Agarwal stressed to the crowd "Any action is better than inaction, no matter what your stance is."

Most people at the rally said they were supporting the troops by pushing for them to be brought home.

However, there was another group of about 10 students who voiced a different opinion. The students gathered around holding "Bush-Cheney" signs and expressed their desire to support the troops in Iraq.

"I want to get the message out there that people should support the troops who are risking their lives," Jason Rennie of the UMass Republican Club said while holding a large American flag.

About eight other students eventually joined Rennie and another man from the Republican Club who was also carrying a large flag. At one point there was a sign next to the group of ten counter-protestors that read, "White Men for War!" The group said they didn't put the sign up.

"Last time I checked, the American flag and the peace sign were not at opposite sides of the spectrum," Billman-Golemme said after sharing a story of being given the middle finger by someone who supported the war at an earlier protest.

Despite this idea that patriotism and peace could coexist, some of the counter protesters disagreed. As the peace activists chanted, "Books not Bombs," a number of the counter protestors chanted "U-S-A, U-S-A."

Meir Hamilton, a Social Thought and Political Economy senior, also spoke at the rally.

"Action is a great way to get over that surreal, disempowered feeling that people got when the war began," Hamilton said.

Former UMass student Phyllis Rodin, another featured speaker, said she began her activism in 1969 against the use of nuclear power. She spoke of her concern for constitutional rights. In regards to recent campaigns to impeach President Bush, Rodin asked rhetorically, "How can you impeach a President who was never elected?"

THE COLLEGIAN / LEA DEVINE

A pro-war protester stands strong during yesterday's Peace Rally on the Student Union Steps. The rally was one the first events of yesterday's UMass Peace Convocation that also included workshops and teach-ins.

Teach-ins at UMass

By MORRIS SINGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

War protestors gathered yesterday afternoon to learn from several professors about the negative aspects of war in Iraq.

The teach-in, which took place in The Hatch in the Student Union, featured six professors and one student voice. Professor of Communications, Sut Jhally was one of the first to offer his opinion and several facts on the Iraq issue.

"It is very important to link the external and the internal struggles," Jhally said. "I actually believe that they are the same struggle because they are part of the same ideological apparatus."

In connecting the two concepts, domestic and foreign policy, Jhally touched on the issue of propaganda. To Jhally, a lot of what he sees communicated in the media is inaccurate or untrue. He blamed this on a government attempt to use the media to persuade the public that war in Iraq is in the best interest of the American people.

Jhally brought up a concept mentioned by Confucius, who taught that it is necessary in controlling a people, to "rectify the language." In relation to modern times, Jhally said Confucius would be referring to controlling the media. Control of the facts that are available would most likely force people to think along very specific lines, he said.

"If you can control the categories in which people think, you can imprison them in their own imaginations."

He also compared what the current Bush administration is doing to methods that the Nazi government employed during World War II. He quoted Hermann Ghoering, a member of the Nazi party to emphasize his point. Jhally, quoted, "All you have to do is tell them [the people] they are being attacked, and denounce the peacemakers for lack of patriotism and exposing the country to danger."

He said that the events of September 11, served as the propaganda that the Bush administration was looking for, and that he feels this is why the United States is at war with Iraq now.

"If Sept. 11, [2001] wasn't planned, Osama bin Ladin came along and answered his [George W. Bush's] prayers," Jhally said.

Chris King, a professor of Nursing, also spoke at the event. She said she feels that because of her profession, she has an obligation to speak out against the war.

"Health workers know the effects of war," she said.

King focused primarily on humanitarian concerns and highlighted the situation that she says Iraqi citizens are facing now as a consequence of the attacks.

Continued on page 3

SGA Senate to discuss elections

Presidential and Student Trustee results to be ratified

By KRISTIN SHREWSBURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A motion to ratify the 2003 Student Government Association Presidential and Student Trustee elections are on tonight's Senate agenda.

Concerns have been addressed by Student Trustee candidate Brian Thompson after accusations were made regarding illegal campaigning towards incumbent President elect David Carr and Student Trustee elect Hannah Fatemi.

Allegations were made claiming that posters had been removed from the Southwest Tunnel as well as claims that elections ballots had been thrown out and discounted. Amidst these growing concerns of illegal campaigning, Chancellor of Elections Yousef Munayyer met with both parties last night in an effort to discuss any and all allegations.

"There was a complaint made by Brian Thompson against Justin Provencher and that complaint was brought to my attention," Munayyer said. "I called a hearing and both parties agreed to attend, which I feel is important to stress that both parties agreed to the hearing."

Munayyer continued, saying that due to a lack of evidence the case would not be presented before the entire Elections Commission.

"There was not sufficient evidence to proceed to the Elections Commission and this was a solution that I came to," Munayyer said. "I wanted to deal with this issue before the Senate met to ratify the elections."

Questions of lost elections votes were also presented to Munayyer. A complaint was filed that elections ballots from commuter students were not counted and were thrown out of this year's election.

"There were no thrown out ballots and any accusations stating so are false," Munayyer said. "Any problems with the elections can still be dealt with, but I expect the Senate to ratify the elections because they went well."

As members of the SGA Senate convene tonight to make their decision to ratify this year's election, other issues still sit on the Senates agenda. Speaker Dan Saunders explained that despite elections issues, the Senate still has a lot of work left in the next six weeks.

"With Dave winning again we won't have to take a break, and the one big thing left is setting an agenda with the Senate for the next four to six weeks," Saunders said. "I don't think there should be any problems with the Senate ratifying the elections."

Other issues the Senate is looking at are Student Union and Campus Activities space allocations. Concerns have arisen over new possible space for the Campus Activities Office and its functioning management.

"We're going to be looking in to space allocations and vending as well as looking at the future Campus Activities Office and how its functioning management might be changing due to the budget," Saunders said. "We want to make sure that they put groups and agencies first."

Members of the Ways and Means Committee are also finishing up the budget for the 2004 school year to be presented to the Senate in April. As for further elections this year, Senators will also be voting on their future Speaker and Associate Speakers at the last Senate meeting in May.

"We have a lot of things coming up really quickly," Saunders said. "We have the FI budget being presented by the Ways and Means committee [and] we have Speaker and Associate Speaker elections coming up so there's a lot left to do."

The SGA Senate will convene tonight at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 174.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9

ALTERNATIVE BREAK
GREENSPAN'S WILD TIMES IN A RETIREMENT COMMUNITY
PAGE 4

'ANIMOSITISOMINA'
MINISTRY PREACHES ON NEW RELEASE
PAGE 6

WOMEN'S LACROSSE
UMASS TAKES TWO OF FOUR OVER SPRING BREAK
PAGE 10

Dean of Students Office holds forum to help students cope with the war in Iraq

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an effort to help cope with feelings concerning the war in Iraq, the Religious Affairs Committee and the Dean of Students Office held a forum yesterday in the Campus Center, allowing community members and students to express their points of view concerning the conflict.

Organizers, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, Rev. Michael Greene and Richard Pioli of the Dean of Students Office stressed to a mix of 20 students and community members the importance of allowing the forum to be based on discussion of feelings and concerns, not of political viewpoints.

Before beginning Perlmutter made it clear that no debate was allowed and asked participants to remember to use terms like "I feel" and "I hope" rather than bringing in terms or ideas that coincide with debate.

Organizers had no goals in terms of the number of people they were looking for to attend the forum.

"We really didn't know how many people would show up and we were not sure what response we would get, but we were hopeful," Greene said. "We thought people would need a safe place to share feelings."

Each participant had the opportunity to speak for one minute to 90 seconds – following each speaker the group paused to reflect in silence. Many participants expressed concerns related to the effects of war, feelings of hopelessness, and most felt placed in positions of ambiguity.

The main goal of the forum was to present students with the opportunity to express viewpoints in a safe place, without a call for debate or judgment.

"Here on campus it can be difficult for some to express their views," Greene said. "We wanted to have a place for people to share ambivalence and mixed feelings and not to be judged for it."

Organizers were pleased with the amount of respect participants held for each other, and felt that students as well as the organizers themselves left the forum feeling comforted and a little more hopeful.

"It went very well, it was what I hoped it to be," Perlmutter said.

"People around the circle came from different political perspectives but by talking about our feelings we built connections as opposed to barriers."

Students who participated said that the event was helpful and in such a confusing time and it was a good opportunity to come to terms with mixed feelings.

"I think it helped a lot," said Ben Greene, a sophomore Philosophy and Linguistics major. "I came planning just to listen; as I got to hear people speak, it helped me sort out my own feelings."

Both students and organizers expressed the need for more opportunities to voice points of view on the conflict in a comfortable setting.

"Political action is needed," Perlmutter said. "But there is also a need for quiet personal reflection and connection with others, in moments and spaces like this."

American troops fight Iraqi attack

By DAVIS ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

American infantry troops fought off an attack by Iraqis in the desert Tuesday, inflicting heavy casualties in a clash less than 100 miles from Baghdad. British forces battled for control of Basra, a city of 1.3 million souls sliding toward chaos.

Defense officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said between 150 and 500 Iraqis were killed in the ground battle near An Najaf, adding there were no immediate reports of American casualties.

Iraqis launched their attack on a day of howling sandstorms – weather bad enough to slow the U.S.-led drive toward the Iraqi capital.

Despite the adverse weather in some parts of Iraq, U.S.-led warplanes bombed targets in the northern part of the country and briefly knocked government television off the air in the capital. And U.S. troops in control of a vast Iraqi air base sealed 36 bunkers, earmarked as possible sites of Saddam's elusive weapons of mass destruction.

American officials issued fresh cautions, as well, about the possible use of chemical weapons by Iraqi troops, although no weapons of mass destruction have yet been found by advancing American and British forces.

As the pace of combat quickened, American and British officials sought to prepare the public for something less than a quick campaign, and predicted difficult days to come.

Still, President Bush forecast victory during a visit to the Pentagon. "The Iraqi regime will be ended ... and our world will be more secure and peaceful," he said.

Not surprisingly, Saddam saw it differently. State television carried what it described as a message from him to tribal and clan leaders, saying, "Consider this to be the command of faith and jihad and fight them."

If confirmed, the initial reports of fighting near An Najaf would make it the first major ground encounter between advancing Americans and the Iraqi units guarding the approach to Saddam's seat of power.

A senior military official said the U.S. troops had hunkered down

Continued on page 3

RICHARD VOGEL / ASSOCIATED PRESS

Flight handling crew prepare to launch an F/A-18 Hornet off the USS Theodore Roosevelt for a CAS (close air support) mission.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN COMMUNITY BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY MARCH 27

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE Professor Davydd Greenwood (the Goldwin Smith Professor of Anthropology from Cornell University) presents the lecture "Anthropology's Unclean Sense of Engagement." Ann Rudolph at 12:15 p.m. in the New York Room of Mary Woolley Hall at Mount Holyoke. The event is free and open to the public and is sponsored by the college's anthropology department.

UMASS – Professor Zhongxin Sun and Nai-Ni Chen present the workshop "Terms in Motion" at 5 p.m. in Hasbrouck Hall room 251. The workshop starts with Lunch-to-Go events and ends at 10 o'Clock. Food and movie start at 7. The event is free and open to the public. For more information, call 577-2486.

THURSDAY MARCH 28

UMASS – An art exhibition entitled "Bill and Tess Rock: New Paintings" opens today at the Central Gallery in Wheeler House. The exhibition runs from March 27 through April 27, with a reception March 30 from 2 to 5 p.m. Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday from 3 to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. It is free and open to the public. For more information, call 545-0880.

UMASS – A celebration entitled "Refugees of a World on Fire" will commemorate women of color involved in literature, art and activism. The event is a part of the celebration of Women's History Month and Women of Color Week at UMass, which runs from March 24 through March 30.

UMASS – The Nai-Ni Chen Dance Company will put on a performance featuring traditional Chinese rituals and festivals in the Bowker Auditorium at 10 a.m. Tickets are $5. For more information, call 577-2486.

UMASS – Dr. Sally Cohen, associate professor and Director of the Center for Health Policy and Ethics at the Yale School Nursing, will present the lecture, "Promises to Keep: The Politics of Child Care Policymaking" at 4 p.m. in Thompson Hall room 620. The lecture is free and open to the public. For more information, call Kathy Colon at 545-3940.

UMASS – The Student Alliance for Israel will hold a general interest meeting at 7 p.m. in the Hillel House Front Room. All are welcome to attend.

UMASS – A "Spring Break-Out for Peace" will be held with students from the Five College area marching against the war. Hampshire College students are planning a strike, followed by a march with Amherst College, Amherst High School and UMass around the UMass campus and into Amherst center. The march will start at 3:30 p.m. on the Student Union steps.

UMASS – There will be announcements of further actions throughout the week including "Spring Break-Out for Peace" this Thurs. March 27, in which students from the Five Colleges will march against the war. Hampshire students are planning a strike followed by a march with Amherst College, Amherst High School, and UMass around the UMass campus and into Amherst center. The March is scheduled to begin at 3:30 p.m. on the Student Union Steps.

UMASS – Poet and author Maya Angelou will speak at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center as a part of "An Evening with Maya Angelou." This event is part of the celebration of Women's History Month 2003 and Women of Color Week at Umass. For ticket information, call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511.

UMASS – The Hillel House will host a night at the Hippodrome, a nightclub in Springfield, for first-year Jewish students. The event is open to students over the age of 18 with a cover charge of $10.

UMASS – Hip-hop artist and community activist Sister Souljah will make a presentation at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Souljah has one solo album and has worked with Public Enemy in the past. The event is a part of Women's History Month and Women of Color Week at UMass.

FRIDAY MARCH 29

UMASS – The Hillel House will host a conservative Shabbaton with Rabbi Elyse Winick, the assistant director KOACH, the college outreach program from the United Synagogue of Conservative Judaism. The service is at 6 p.m. in the Hillel House, with dinner after at 7:15 p.m. At 8:15 p.m., Winick will host a discussion on Jewish views on war.

SATURDAY MARCH 30

UMASS – The Women of Color Conference will be held in the Student Union Ballroom at 7 p.m. March 29 and March 30. The conference will feature workshops on life after college, portrayals of women in the media, women's health issues and sisterhood. Brunch and dinner will be provided. To register at the Black Student Union Office in Student Union room 407.

UMASS – The Hillel House will host a conservative service followed by a free lunch from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Later in the evening, a Luau party will be held at a place yet to be determined. For more information, email jmarcus@student.umass.edu or nellbabe99@hotmail.com.

SUNDAY MARCH 31

UMASS – The Newman Center and the Hillel House will collaborate to work with the Meals on Wheels program. To get involved, meet at the Hillel House at 11:45 a.m. Meals are for the Ann Whalen House in Amherst.

UMASS – Bachutz. The Hillel House's outdoor club, will host indoor rock climbing at 12 p.m. No experience is necessary. Cost is $16 each. To RSVP, call 546-3013.

MONDAY APRIL 1

UMASS – The Hillel House hosts Israeli dancing from 7 to 8 p.m. No experience is necessary.

UMASS – The Hillel House hosts a Tefilah talk at 7 p.m. in the Hillel House.

TUESDAY APRIL 2

UMASS – Armand M. Kuris from the Evolution and Marine Biology and Marine Science Institute at the University of California will present a lecture on the biological control of the European green crab at 3:30 p.m. in the Alexander Conference Room of Fernald Hall.

UMASS – The exhibitions "Linda Matalon: Open Gates: Recent Sculpture and Drawings" and "Julie Heffernan: Paintings 1995-2002" open at the Herter Art Gallery. Both displays run through April 9. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.

UMASS – "Jim Dow: American and National League Baseball Stadiums" opens at the University Gallery at the Fine Arts Center. The exhibit consists of panoramic photographs of our country's baseball stadiums – some of which no longer exist. It runs through May 16. Admission is free. For more information, call 545-3670.

UMASS – The exhibition "The Way I See It," a work by Michael Coblyn, opens at the Augusta Savage Gallery at 101 New Africa House. The exhibit runs through April 18. Gallery hours are Monday and Tuesday from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. For more information, call 545-5177.

UMASS – The Hillel House hosts a Jewish women's collective entitled "Let My Sisters Know" at 7:30 p.m. For more information, email jeanie@student.umass.edu.

- Compiled by Dan Lamothe

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulik Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

18th Annual MATHEMATICS COMPETITION

April 9, 2003 @ 7:15 in rooms 101-103 LGRT

Coporate Sponsors: Microsoft Research
Nukove Scientific Consulting
Solutions by Computer
State Street Global Advisors
Sun Life Financial

FIRST PRIZE = $1600 cash
SECOND PRIZE = $1000 cash
THIRD PRIZE = $400 cash

2003

- Sign up in room 1623-D LGRT by noon April 9th and bring ID to competition
- The competition is open to all freshman and sophomore degree students on the Amherst Campus
- Continuing education students and students who are closely related to members of the Math Stat department are not eligible
- For additional information and sample problems go to www.math.umass.edu

GET PAID TO GO TO SCHOOL. TALK ABOUT ROLE REVERSAL.

The U.S. Air Force will pay for you to continue your education while you serve your country as a nurse. Through selection into the Air Force Institute of Technology program, you could earn your advanced degree in as little as two years and get paid to do it. You'll be part of an elite team of medical professionals who have chosen to serve their country in this proud institution. To learn more about Air Force Nursing, please visit airforce.com or call 1.800.423.USAF to request more information.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

Americans fight off Iraqi attack against a sandstorm when Iraqis – either Republican Guard or paramilitary Iraqi troops – opened fire with rocket-propelled grenades.

Continued from page 1

Some of the 7th Cavalry's equipment was damaged in the attack, the official said. The unit is part of the Army force driving on Baghdad. Some elements of the force are farter north, near Karbala, with only the Medine armored division of the Republican Guard between them and Baghdad.

Details were sketchy, as well, of the situation inside the southern city of Basra, Iraq's second-largest with 1.3 million residents. British journalists reported that residents were staging an uprising against pro-Saddam forces and that Iraqi troops were firing mortars at them.

A senior British commander, Maj. Gen. Peter Wall, said "We don't know the scale" of any revolt, but added, "Of course we would be very keen to capitalize on it."

The Iraqis denied all of it. "The situation is stable," Information Minister Mohammed al-Sahhaf said in an interview with Al-Jazeera, an Arab satellite television network.

United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan and others have warned of a possible humanitarian crisis in the city. The International Red Cross said during the day that it had begun repairs at a war-damaged water-pumping station serving the city.

Thus far in the campaign known as Operation Iraqi Freedom, Americans said they had taken more than 3,500 Iraqi prisoners. There was no accurate death toll among Iraqi troops or civilians.

American losses ran to 20 dead and 14 captured or missing. The remains of the first two to die were flown overnight to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware.

A total of 20 British troops had also died, including two killed Monday by friendly fire.

Weather or not, the U.S.-led invasion moved ahead.

The U.S. Central Command, which oversees the war, announced the capture of an Iraqi military hospital used as a military staging area. Officials said Marines confiscated more than 200 weapons and stockpiles of ammunition and more than 3,000 chemical suits with masks, as well as Iraqi military uniforms. The Marines also found a T-55 tank on the compound.

Elements of the U.S. 3rd Infantry Division were about 50 miles from Baghdad and hit Republican Guard units defending the Iraqi capital with an all-night artillery barrage.

Thousands of other troops hastened – as much as the sandstorms would allow – to join them for the coming battle against Saddam's seat of power.

But some helicopters were grounded by the weather, and combat aircraft taking off from the USS Harry Truman returned a few hours later without dropping bombs on their targets.

Distant explosions could be heard in Baghdad, and efforts were underway to dig deeper defensive trenches around the city. Witnesses said Saddam's intelligence headquarters as well as a sprawling defense complex were hit in overnight bombing.

Bush, after receiving his war update, said U.S. forces were clearing approaches to the port city of Umm Qasr of Iraqi-laid mines. "Coalition forces are working hard to make sure that when the food and medicine begins to move it does so in a safe way," he said.

Sensitive to international criticism that relief was slow in reaching Iraqis, the administration dispatched national security adviser Condoleezza Rice to the United Nations for a discussion of the issue. White House spokesman Ari Fleischer blamed Saddam for slowing the flow of goods by placing mines near Umm Qasr, adding, "There's a massive stockpile that stands by and ready," he said.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair, who will confer with Bush this week at the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., was at pains to prepare the British public for difficult days.

"There will be resistance all the way to the end of this campaign," he said. Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld also made clear he didn't know how long the war would take. "We're still, needless to say, much closer to the beginning than to the end," he said.

The war unfolded side by side with diplomatic maneuvering.

Speaking in Toronto, the American ambassador Paul Cellucci said Canada's refusal to send troops to the war effort has upset and disappointed the United States and caused a "bump in relations."

In Saudi Arabia, Foreign Minister Saud al-Faisal said his country has contacted the United States and Iraq with a peace proposal, and was awaiting a response.

He did not disclose the proposed terms. The Bush administration said it was not aware of any Saudi peace proposal, and there was no response from the Iraqi government.

Yellow ribbons across the nation to honor U.S. troops

By JOANN LOVIGLIO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Sales are booming for yellow ribbons, as people across the nation are reviving the traditional show of hope for American combat troops' safe return, retailers and manufacturers said Tuesday.

As yellow ribbons began popping up on trees, poles and homes in communities of all sizes, the nation's largest ribbon manufacturer has added shifts to keep up with demand.

"Yellow – by far – is No. 1 right now," said Nancy Schott of Berwick Industries in central Pennsylvania. She said the ribbons are selling six times faster than the No. 2 red-white-and-blue striped variety.

Sales of yellow ribbons have doubled at Paper Mart, a California-based distributor of paper products and office supplies, said advertising manager John Bechtold. Retailers Kmart and Wal-Mart said they have seen nationwide increases in the demand for yellow ribbon and American flags.

The custom of hanging yellow ribbons was popularized two decades ago during the Iran hostage crisis and took hold during the Persian Gulf War.

"Every tree, every sapling, every light pole have yellow ribbons on them," said James "Jet" Truman Jr., mayor of Valley Center, Kan., whose store ran out of them in short order.

The town of 5,000 people outside Wichita is where Pfc. Patrick Miller, captured in Iraq along with four fellow troops, went to high school.

"It's our way showing our support for him, his family and the rest of the troops," Truman said. "I have a son over there, too. It's close to home for many of us."

The war also is close to many in Middletown, Del., a community of 8,000 with several residents stationed in the Middle East, Mayor Kenneth Branner Jr. said.

"We made around 300 (bows) and we're making more," he said. "We wanted to have it so anyone coming into town, from any direction, can see them."

Branner said the custom helps communities unite and gather strength during times of confusion and grief.

"We didn't do it as a political statement," Branner said. "People have different opinions about the war, but we all want the safe return of our troops and we wanted them to know we support what they're doing."

University students in Berkeley, Calif., passed out ribbons during weekend war protests; nearly 100 people decorated the main thoroughfare with yellow ribbons in Saint Clair, about 100 miles northwest of Philadelphia; and Wal-Mart employees in Council Bluffs, Iowa, spent a recent lunch break tying yellow ribbons on every tree in a downtown park.

Yellow ribbons also adorned the front porch of the Palestine, W.Va., home of Pfc. Jessica Lynch, 19, among a dozen soldiers missing from a supply convoy ambushed in southern Iraq.

Some say the origins of the tradition trace back to the Civil War; others say it started with the wife of Bruce Laingen, then-ambassador to Iran. She tied yellow ribbon around an oak tree in her front yard after Laingen and others were taken hostage in 1979.

On the Net: Yellow ribbon history: http://www.loc.gov/folklife/ribbons/ribbons.html

Professors speak on war with Iraq

Continued from page 1

"The importation of food is disrupted. The importation of medical supplies is disrupted. The importation of [medicinal] drugs is non-existent," she said.

Hampshire College Professor Michael Klare spoke of the military aspect of the war, and how he sees U.S. action as unfair.

He described the situation as one where what he sees as the world's only superpower, the United States, is teamed up with the United Kingdom against what he calls a "third- or fourth-rate" nation, from a military standpoint.

SARAH LEIGH/COLLEGIAN

Dan Clawson of the Sociology Department discusses "Ten Lessons from the Vietnam Anti- War Movement."

Klare said he feels one of the problems in the weeks to come is how the Iraqi people will deal with the coalition forces, once Saddam Hussein's regime is no longer in power. He thinks that some things already indicate that it will not be a friendly greeting.

"We have not seen the dancing in the streets that we were told to expect," he argued.

The United States also has two seemingly conflicting objectives in the war, Klare said. He said he sees one objective is the punishment of the Iraqi regime, and the other is a liberation of the Iraqi people.

"They want to punish Iraq and especially Saddam Hussein for his defiance," he said. "[This] entails heavy destruction of the Iraqi state."

However, liberating the Iraqi people would involve a minimum of damage to Iraqi infrastructure, he said. Therefore, he views these two objectives as mutually exclusive.

"You have two war aims both present in this war that contradict each other – one that seeks maximum destruction and the other that seeks minimum destruction."

T. Leah McQuaid was the only student speaker at the teach-in. She stressed that an Iraqi democracy must come naturally and that a military cannot force one upon a population.

"No country can be liberated unless they do it themselves," McQuaid said.

Dan Clawson, professor of Sociology, encouraged the participants at the teach-in, saying that even if the protests seem like they are not accomplishing anything, he feels that they are.

"It's in their interest to persuade you that the anti-war movement is having no effect when in fact it is."

Economics Professor Jim Crotty was the last person to speak at the event, saying that America may be fighting this war to secure economic opportunities. It is important to not overlook this aspect, he said.

"When you think about how to think about the implications of the cost of war in Iraq," Crotty said. "One must set them in the context of a global economy."

High-tech business leaders back UMass President William Bulger

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) - Four high-tech business leaders on Tuesday threw their support behind University of Massachusetts President William Bulger, whose office would be eliminated under Gov. Mitt Romney's proposed budget.

The open letter to Romney and Bulger was signed by Ray Stata, chairman of Analog Devices, George W. Chamillard, chief executive of Teradyne, Inc., Henri A. Termeer, president of Genzyme Corp. and Michael J. Costello, managing partner of PriceWaterhouseCoopers.

"As entrepreneurs and technologists, we appreciate the governor's bold efforts to transform state government, particularly the state's public higher education system," they wrote.

"However, we do not believe that replacing the UMass president's office with a new governance structure and dismantling the current five-campus system is good for the future of public higher education, science research, or our technology economy," they said.

Bulger spokesman John Hoey said the president has worked hard in his seven-year tenure to build relations with the business community.

Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman said they "appreciate the input" from the high-tech leaders, but plan to push ahead with their proposed reorganization.

"The main function of President Bulger and his office is to allocate funds to the campuses and raise money," Feddeman said. "Under Gov. Romney's reorganization plan, both of these responsibilities will be handled elsewhere."

Romney hopes to cut higher education spending by $100 million. Bulger has launched his own campaign to preserve the system, and his $309,000-a-year job.

Under the governor's plan, the flagship Amherst campus would be spun off into a state-funded but independently run institution and UMass Medical School in Worcester would be privatized.

Six state college and community college campuses in central and western Massachusetts would be merged.

UMass campuses in Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell would lose a combined $17 million and operate in a regional system. The College of Art and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy would be spun off and independently run.

www.dailycollegian.com
collegian.com

McMurphy's welcomes Live Music
THE GUITAR DUDES
every wednesday
NO COVER
positive ID required

UMass CAMPUS RECREATION

START TIME TO ENTER — CAMPUS RECREATION
Swim Meet (M/W)..... A.S.A.P
Weekend Flag Football (M/C)..... A.S.A.P.
Weekend Lacrosse (W)..... A.S.A.P.

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C)..... 4/22
Quickball, Diamond Derby (M/W)..... 4/22
World Cup Soccer (M/W)..... 4/22
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-APRIL 4TH - 6TH
-THE BALLROOM
-LORD JEFFERY INN
-DOWNTOWN AMHERST
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

EOC
NOW HIRING FOR FALL 2003!
THE RESOURCE REFERRAL PROGRAM
AT EVERYWOMAN'S CENTER
Volunteer, Intern and Work-Study Positions.
APPLY NOW!
Call 545-0883, Stop by at Wilder Hall ground floor or go online at www.umass.edu/ewc/rr for an application
Interviews start the week of April 7.

Introducing
Natalee Prince
Ethnic Hairstylist
Caslmir Kocot
79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.256.3440

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St
Amherst
www.RealEstateByLefty.com
Now Accepting applications for June 2003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cost of priviate institutions may drive students to public schools

The country's most expensive University just made it's asking price a little steeper. Ivy League institution Harvard recently announced a cost increase of 5.5 percent, the largest such increase in a decade.

The bump will take effect for the 2003-04 academic year, pushing the price for tuition, fees and room from $35,950 this year, to $37,928 next year.

Now arguably the most selective institution of higher education in America has become even more stringent by eliminating a new line of candidates toward the bottom of the financial scale.

The folks at Cambridge plan to combat the hike with an increased financial aid budget. Harvard will increase its financial aid funds – which are used by two-thirds of its undergraduate students – to approximately 105 million dollars per year.

It is a good effort to save face, but the price jump makes it increasingly prevalent that the best education for the dollar can no longer be found in private institutions.

During a time when a struggling economy is being hurt even more by the presence of war, parents of potential college students can no longer afford to send their children to Universities for almost $40,000 a year.

Especially when an education of similar equality can be found in public institutions for about half the price and even less than that for in state students.

Public universities have closed the gap in recent years. What they lack in the brand name value of an Ivy League diploma, they more than make up for in range of opportunity.

State schools, which generally have enrollments of 20 to 30,000 students, offer a wide array of challenging and highly regarded majors. Plus their asking prices are much kinder to members of the middle class and below.

So Harvard is losing out on kids with used cars and no beach house, like it cares. But since it's inception, Harvard has held on to its title as the college of record in the United States.

What Harvard did has always affected what path other universities take. But with the rising costs, that persona may change rapidly.

Harvard is always near or at the top of percentage of accepted students that attend the school each year, affirming its throne as the school that everyone aspires to attend.

But now more and more people won't be able to afford the school. Which means that some applicants will have to turn down the acceptance for financial reasons, and others may not even apply at all.

That should severely limit Harvard's pool of applicants, sending those honors students elsewhere and possibly changing the balance of power in the collegiate landscape. How can a school that caters mainly to the super rich set a standard among Universities? Answer, it can't, at least it won't be. Especially when the best students in the country are spurning highly priced private schools for quality state schools.

Pretty soon dreams of attending an Ivy League schools will be forbidden in middle class homes. And we believe it's for the better. It's ludicrous to ask almost $160,000 for four years at Harvard, when you can get a similar education for half the price just down the road at the University of Massachusetts.

It might not sit well with the student who has spent his youth dreaming of seeing Harvard on his or her diploma. But it'll sure make the check writer happy.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Playing our games and moving on

Matt Elder

Our generation is being faced with decisions and events that we probably thought we would never have to deal with. History is being written right now as we go to war with Iraq. This will be in our grandchildren's history books 50 years from now. As the war continues into completing its first (of hopefully not many) weeks, we are being forced to figure out how to balance life in the United States while still showing respect for the men and women fighting for our freedom.

What should stop? What should keep going? These questions are being raised as people are trying to continue their lives, while trying to avoid being accused of not showing the proper respect for the people fighting. There are certain events that are obviously of higher publicity than others. Obviously, no one is concerned about pick up basketball games ending early.

Recently, a lot of decisions have been made about the war with Iraq. Especially in the sports world people are left wondering if they should postpone games and cancel series out of respect for the soldiers fighting for our country. Some games have been cancelled, while others are going on as scheduled.

Most guys know March as the month of NCAA basketball. Brackets are frantically filled out, picks made, and money is won and lost. Any memory I have of the month of March involves me sitting in front of my TV and watching basketball while filling out my bracket as I try to win my pool.

As the war was imminent, the NCAA committee was forced to decide if the games should go on, or be put on hold due to the war.

The decision was made, and the games went on as planned.

So far, nothing has happened to any of the games, and we have witnessed a great tourney so far. I've heard many interviews with soldiers in Iraq, and they all agree with the decision. They even admit in their spare time, the soldiers are known to fill out a bracket and listen to a game or two. They all said the same thing: our life must go on as planned regardless of what's going on.

"So far, nothing has happened to any of the games, and we have witnessed a great tourney so far."

Baseball was faced with this choice during World War II, and we decided to continue our games. The commissioner of baseball even discussed the decision with the President to make sure that no toes were being stepped on as we continued our way of life. We played our games, and we lived our lives. Of course, there are always opponents to every decision, but as the war ended people agreed that the right choice was made.

In this time of war, we must not let it affect our lives. March Madness is a staple of this month, and it wouldn't be the same without it. It was also discussed to cancel the Oscars, but we chose to continue with that. Besides that idiot Moore bashing the U.S., it was a successful night. War is tragic, and there are no real winners. As we continue to tip toe around normalcy, we must realize that we need to continue our lives like nothing is going on.

As unfortunate as that sounds, it's what must be done. We can't let it affect us. Stories are still being written in the New York Post about how the NCAA tournament shouldn't have started. If this is true, where do we draw the line? Postpone the baseball season? Stop the NBA and NHL seasons, both with a month left? Why one and not the other? The answer is simple: we can't stop anything.

Continuing our way of life is not meant to disrespect the people fighting for the freedom of millions in Iraq. Continuing our life is making sure that we don't make ourselves prisoners as we watch the somber coverage across seas. We are force fed 24 hours a day of war coverage, and without the simple outlets like sports we will be losing throughout the duration of the war. We will be losing because it will be changing our daily lives, and we can't let that happen.

Matt Elder is a Collegian Columnist.

An alternative spring break

Jesse Greenspan

Spring break. These two words usually conjure up images of half-naked college kids lying on the beach. For me, it was a little different, as I spent five days visiting my grandparents at the Kings Point Retirement Community in Delray Beach, Fla.

Day 1: I met my cousin at Bradley Airport and we flew down to Florida to meet our grandparents. Upon arrival at the retirement home, we went straight to the shuffleboard court before taking a dip in the pool. I tried the hot tub, but it was unbearable. A sign said the water was 105 degrees, and I wondered whether that was in Fahrenheit or Celsius.

That night, my grandparents took us to a dance at the community center, with the band "Poppy" performing live. I walked in and looked around. Besides my cousin and me, none of the other 200 people were under the age of 70. My grandmother dragged me out onto the dance floor for the electric slide (who knew that old people did that?) and I realized that I had learned nothing at all the Bar Mitzvahs I'd been to. I still didn't know how to do it, so my grandmother took my hand and led me along, as I tripped and spun like a bumbling idiot.

Day 2: Today we went to an afternoon show at the main clubhouse to see the Fort Lauderdale Ballet Classique, a group of 11 to 17-year-olds. Halfway through, I looked around and the lady sitting next to me had joined much of the audience and had fallen asleep.

"Old people," I snickered. "They can sleep through anything."

Twenty minutes later I was out like a light myself, snuggling up to the person next to me.

"How did you like it," I asked my grandfather after the show, who was sitting directly behind me.

"I don't know," he said. "I slept through most of it."

Later in the day, a car zipped by us with a 'PLAYGRL' license plate. I looked at the driver, and she was a senior citizen who could barely see over the steering wheel.

Day 3: In the morning, we went to the Bronx House reunion, which was a club my grandparents belonged to in New York growing up. Once again, no one under 70 was there, and I began to wonder if anyone in Florida was actually younger than retirement age. We were going to hit up the early bird special at 4 o'clock, but it started to pour so we went back to the retirement home. When it cleared up, I challenged my 80-year-old grandfather in tennis, and he proceeded to destroy me. I was sweating like a pig by the time he was done with me.

"Besides my cousin and me, none of the other 200 people were under the age of 70."

That night at the local Chinese buffet, one whole row had a salad bar and another had desserts (pastries, fruits, eclairs, etc.) Even at Chinese restaurants old-person food is basically the same.

Day 4: At the pool, I realized my cousin and I were the only people in Florida who went swimming without a hat and sunglasses. One of my grandparents' friends came over to us and told my 19-year-old cousin that she should be a model. After complimenting her for a few more minutes, she turned to me and asked me how old I was.

"Twenty-one," I said. "I graduate from UMass in a few months."

"Twenty-one?" she said with surprise. "But you look so much younger than your cousin. I thought you were in high school or something."

I leave it to the old people to destroy your self-esteem.

For our last night in Florida, my grandmother decided to take us to a bar to listen to music.

"Make sure you take your sweatshirt," she ordered as we got ready to go. The temperature was about 85 degrees.

At the bar, we sat at a table and listened to the band play a bunch of classic-rock covers. After about two songs, my grandfather couldn't take it anymore.

"Frank Sinatra is rolling in his grave," he said.

Day 5: This was our last day at the retirement home, so we went swimming in the morning and ate an Italian feast for lunch. Then my grandmother packed us up with six sandwiches, at least 25 cookies, two bottles of water and a cup of tomatoes for the three-hour plane ride home.

That concluded the vacation, but 40 years from now I will most likely return for a life of food, swimming, tennis, shows and reunions.

Jesse Greenspan is a Collegian Columnist.

Turning off the war

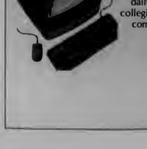
Stephanie O'Shea

American troops, tanks and tax dollars are situated throughout the Middle East proving to Saddam and his associates that ultimatums are serious business, especially when the preempt primetime television. Stocks are down, terror alert levels are up and the corresponding headlines are really bringing out the poindexter in me. My homepage is set to CNN, and the informative commentaries of Time and Newsweek are consistently ousting the cheap thrills of Stuff and Cosmo from their top ranks in my magazine preference hierarchy. My 14-year-old sister does not comprehend my news habit, much like I could take or leave the O.J. trial when I was the one in eighth grade. With my synapses firing from all the hype, I should be anxious to state my stance on this war. My opinion only hallway counts, however, because although my mind is engaged, my heart remains apathetic.

I regard this apathy as a blessing and deny its cop-out status, because it is something proliferated by external forces. I have not cried or lost sleep over the conflict in Iraq, because its most personal effect so far has been an ever-shrinking balance on my debit card each time I pay at the pump. Even so, I drive a little Toyota, which gets 1,000 miles to the gallon. My younger brother is of combat age, but he is not on the Arabian Peninsula taking orders and staring death in the face with a nervous anticipation. He lives at home, attends art school and is a Wendy's regular. My cousin is abroad in London, and although there is worry that her hot pink Pumas and American accent will get her assaulted, there is comfort in the fact that Tony Blair has emerged as the Bush Administration's greatest foreign ally.

I choose to bask in the gray area, but as educated and informed citizens, many students on this campus feel obligated to voice a clear stance on this war. My eyes cannot help but roll at those who wrap themselves in the haute couture that is protesting at UMass. I give due credit to those who are active in this world, but I have a sneaking suspicion that some students yell and hold signs for the same reason they went to Woodstock 99 – it makes for a good conversation piece. I encourage anyone and everyone to convey their opinions, but it would be more productive and effective if in the future, they came via eloquent and well-reasoned arguments to this page, or any publication, so that others may consider it at their leisure over lunch or during breaks. Some people are on the fence, and if you can make them privy to information that Peter Jennings or Brian Williams will not, try to push them off it.

"I give due credit to those who are active in this world, but I have a sneaking suspicion that some students yell and hold signs for the same reason they went to Woodstock 99 – it makes for a good conversation piece."



If your Fleet account looks like mine, and you are saving up to be poor, chances are you spent last week on the couch in front of the television thinking both that Saddam picked the worst body double ever to deliver his speech and that it would suck if a bomb came through your window. Ironically enough, I almost left my hometown Wal-Mart in disgust after being subjected to the sheer insolence that was broadcasting the battle play-by-play over the store's PA system. Shoving politics down the throat of a girl with a penchant for impulse items while she is trying to browse the makeup in peace is just poor retail etiquette. It is like "Real TV" has spawned all over the media, but that show is only good with the option of turning away during the most graphic parts.

During spring break, I had the luxury of putting the clicker down, calling up my friends and going out for some good ole fashioned college-aged silliness. I am fortunate to have no stake in the Middle East, namely a human life I care about. I appreciate that my current life circumstances do not require me to grow up as quick as orders can be delivered, or as fast as a neighborhood can explode with a missile's impact. My condolences go out to those who are scared for someone, and to those who wear desert fatigues in a place where devastation cannot come to a commercial.

Stephanie O'Shea is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

In order to be considered for publication, all [illegible] address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters to the Editor should be no more than 300 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Columns should be 550 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for length and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submission to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

A manual for the madness

Regan McKendry

For a sports fan, certain times of the year are indicative of what game has ownership. Baseball and the fall classic take over October, while the NFL playoffs culminating with the Super Bowl are the kings of January. However, no single month is defined by one specific sporting event than the month of shamrocks and spring's birth. That's right, it's March, and for most people, that means it's time for the madness.

The NCAA tournament kicked off this past weekend with a barrage of games. Forty nine of the 64 total games (if you include the play-in) have already taken place, cutting the field from 65 teams down to just that very sweet sixteen. Unfortunately the only local team left is UConn (can't very well root for them, can you?), but there's still the bracket that provides all the interest in the world.

Ah yes, the beloved bracket. A simple 8 by 11 inch sheet of paper filled with each person's personal path to financial fortune, or so everyone claims when they first fill them out. Of course, sports betting outside of Las Vegas is illegal and the NCAA frowns upon gambling of all sorts, particularly on its most publicized event of the year. That is why those brackets printed in newspapers and magazines across the country are for entertainment purposes only (wink wink). And it sure is entertaining, particularly if you win (back in 1998 I split $200 50-50 with another senior in high school due to a tie.) The largest pool in high school at the time was run by a student, and about a third of the faculty were in on it (what great role models.)

Though it's too late to fill out the bracket for this year, as we were on spring break last week, I wasn't able to give all of you advice on how best to make it to the top of the pack. I may not be Dick and Digger, but I'll do my best to offer tips on having a terrific tournament.

One must understand upsets in filling out their sheets. Small schools that most of America didn't know existed are transformed into buzzwords across the country. This year's Cinderella team is Butler, a 12 seed advancing to the second weekend. In the past there's been such darlings as College of Charleston, Valparaiso and Kent State. Gonzaga has become a nationally recognized school simply for their giant killing abilities, and they almost did it again this past Saturday.

"Roy Williams is a great coach, but those Jayhawks have the NCAA equivalent of the curse of the Bambino..."

When trying to pick those first round shockers, or even trying to find a dark horse for the tourney, don't invest too much time and energy. The people who usually win the pools and pick all those great upsets, often have less of a clue about college basketball than Sister Mary down at St. Brigid's. Pick what schools seem right in your gut, especially if you like the mascot (who couldn't love a team called the Salukis.) If you find one with the same mascot as your high school, even better (Though following this logic, while I'm supporting the College of Charleston, I have a number of friends at work back home who could whole heartedly support Duke).

All mascot campaigning aside, just remember that a 16 will win someday, but you won't probably pick it, since none have done it yet. A 12 will always beat a five, can you just determine which one it is? And Kansas will always disappoint you somehow. Roy Williams is a great coach, but those Jayhawks have the NCAA equivalent of the curse of the Bambino (watch for Coach K and the Blue Devils to take care of that this Thursday).

Don't ride streaks either. For every John Wooden UCLA team or the Lady Huskies to our South, there are tons of teams that come into the tourney hot off a long losing streak with which pressure keeps mounting to keep it going, and usually things burst well before making it to the Final Four. The same way the UMass football team charged towards its national championship with a regular season ending loss to UConn, teams that come into the tournament refocused and energized will succeed better. Only four of this year's 16 teams remaining came into the big dance having won their conference tourney. And sorry folks, but the one of those four riding the huge winning streak, Kentucky, isn't gonna' be partying down in the French Quarter come next week.

But remember, that whether your bracket wins you all the bling bling, or just gets flat out busted, to enjoy the games. Unlike most professional players, these kids are out there playing for the shear love of the game, and there will be so many nail-biting, gut-wrenching moments in these match-ups that you'd be hard pressed to turn away for a minute, even just to get another beer.

Love every moment of these three weeks, for they come but once a year. Oh, by the way...if a certain point guard from Indianapolis lights it up tomorrow night for the Blue and Gold, I told you so first.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Columnist.

A weak foundation for action

Elizabeth Carter

All I want is honesty. I don't want to be lied to, I don't want to be deceived, I don't want to have the assumption made for me that the truth is more than I can take. In any society it should stand that if you want the truth from your government, you should not have to dig and sift through miles of propaganda and lies in order to unearth it. I'm tired of listening to President Bush's bad grammar on television and I'm tired of the rest of the world screaming "no blood for oil." Quite frankly this war, that has only just begun, has been tiring me out for some time now. In the midst of all this exhaustion, I decided it was time to take a closer look at this situation. You don't have to agree with me; however I believe there is a deeper reason for this war, other than "weapons of mass destruction" and the liberation of the Iraqi people.

I mean my goodness, if we did that then every 'evil' dictator that we support might start believing they could get away with more than just their usual murders!"

Facts first: we as Americans love nothing more than the idea of freeing a nation of oppressed people. The majority of us try to be good people with good values and ethics, and we are people who like to hear about the triumph of freedom. After all, that's what this country was built on. What better way to usher a nation into war than playing upon their innate emotions. Yet what are we to do when our good nature is twisted and used against us? What are we to believe, and who are we to believe when the source of the lies is the only source readily available?

I watch the news every day and every day I hear Bush preaching to the nation about the liberation of the Iraqi people, and saving the world from weapons of mass destruction. In fairness, the suffering masses in Iraq deserve their freedom and they deserve to live without the oppression of a cruel and conniving dictator. However, full-scale wars aren't waged for humanitarian reasons – that is a simple fact. Now the question is posed: what of the many dictators ruling in the majority of the countries surrounding Iraq? What about the oppression of their people, and what about their weapons? Why haven't we heard anything about their misdeeds? It should appear our government suffers from the malady of selective sight, where we only see the Devil when the Devil will no longer play our game, since apparently the corruption and "evil" in that region, outside of Iraq, doesn't really matter.

For in spite of their cruel authoritarian actions, the other dictators have not disobeyed the mighty will of the United States of America. Here is how I believe things to be: the reason we are at war with Iraq is because they disobeyed and it doesn't matter how much they've disobeyed, it's the fact that they did at all. It doesn't matter whether they are a true threat to the world, and it especially doesn't matter that their government is killing its own people in droves. The bottom line is they did not cooperate in accordance with the U.S. What kind of precedent would we be setting if we let them get away with that? Granted this could have been solved diplomatically, but where's the lesson in that? I mean my goodness, if we did that then every "evil" dictator that we support might start believing they could get away with more than just their usual murders! That is precisely why I believe we are embroiled in this war. Although oil is an important factor it is tied into the fact that the underlying power we exert in the Middle East must not be disrupted, it must be shown that our power still remains strong, and can/will be exercised whenever we decide it need be.

The objective of the Bush administration with the staunch cooperation of the media is to achieve the American peoples backing of this war by any means necessary (enter stage right, propaganda). I am simply asking you to not allow this administration to masquerade the war on Iraq as a holy crusade to liberate the oppressed, spread democracy and to save the world from the mighty (ha, that's laughable) force of Iraq. If it was, then I would truly be proud of this war, and I would be proud of our President, but I'm not and I cannot be. I think it is a disgrace that this war must be couched under these false pretenses in order to garner any national support. What can be said for any war in which the only means to gain support is through deception? For if the people who were suffering and being oppressed in this world really mattered, the U.S. would be waging about 500 wars simultaneously, and if weapons of mass destruction were such a serious national concern then we'd be working a lot harder to resolve the ongoing issues with North Korea (you know the country that threatened nuclear holocaust). Yet as we can see neither of those things are actually primary concerns, from which my prior conclusion was formed.

All in all, doing the right things for all the wrong reasons will never sit well with me, and I hope it doesn't sit well with you either. This war is not about the good guys and the bad guys. We're all the bad guys if you take a close enough look. The pretenses of this war have been conceived with media deception to blindside the public from the fact that its real purpose is to maintain American power within the Middle East. As well as to further prove that we are the only remaining superpower, and no one has the ability to put us in check. I just think it's so desperately sad that our noble soldiers have to go fight, and die for a war whose foundation has been erected upon lies.

Elizabeth Carter is Collegian Columnist.

Faces we pass on campus

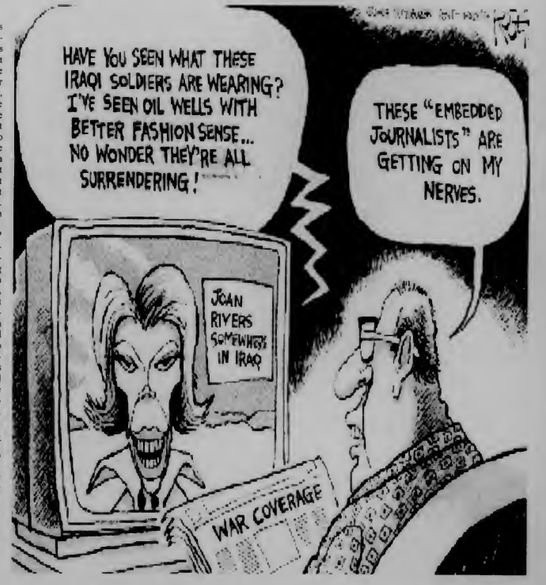
Nick Ames

He is bored. He begins to worry that he has left his stereo faceplate in his car and he rifles through his backpack to check; it's not there. He wonders if someone is stealing his stereo at this very moment. He has a yellow sticker. He drives a Jeep or a Pontiac or a Jetta, it doesn't matter. He lives in a tower, on the small side of the z-room. There are posters; Marley, Weezer, Budweiser. Sometimes he doesn't talk to his roommate for a few days at a time. He has a favorite hat, you know, the fitted Red Sox one, in the normal color scheme: blue and red, the way it's supposed to be. He has been to a frat party, he went to the one with Homer Simpson in front of it, he drank one cup and left, $5?

"He wonders why kids will riot when the Yankees lose the World Series, but can't seem to organize an uprising to lower the drinking age, something he wants to see happen."

He once rode in the elevator, floor sticky, spit running down the doors, with a beautiful girl. She got off three floors below him. He is an SOM major, he wonders if she might be an SOM major. Maybe they could start a business together. He once lost his Ucard. He's lost his key twice. Sometimes people vomit in the bathrooms, usually on Friday nights, sometimes Thursday, sometimes Saturday. He is from Worcester, Brockton, Billerica, it still doesn't matter.

He calls his parents once a week; they talk about money, his car, his brother's Little League game. He played soccer, hockey and lacrosse in high school. He's not good enough to play any of those sports here. He doesn't vote, protest, or march because he doesn't care; it's too early to care he thinks, he has no interest in giving up his last carefree years of fun to thoughts of Saddam, Osama and Bush. He is upset that gas is expensive these days; he considers using the busses more often. He once waited 40 minutes for the right bus once. He shudders when he thinks about that.



Sometimes, on those really cold days, he just wants to get high, play video games and order some Wings. Actually, he wants to do that most of the time. He usually puts too much food on his tray in the DC; a lot of people do that. He has been to Fort Lauderdale, Cancun, South Padre, it continues not to matter, for a Spring Break. One time, his Intro to Microeconomics lecture was so boring he got up and left after 15 minutes. He's pretty sure he has 45 credits; he hopes he has 45 credits. He wants this to be over, but he hopes it never ends, these pre-paid years of freedom. He once drove home in the middle of the night on a Tuesday for no reason, just to be home with his dog, or his cat or, his fish or, his bed, or his family. He wonders why kids will riot when the Yankees lose the World Series, but can't seem to organize an uprising to lower the drinking age, something he wants to see happen. He has been to a Red Sox game; they lost; they won; it was fun; it's always fun. He loves that grass, great things happen on that grass; the baseball player's red carpet. He wonders if he'll live in a house or an apartment, what he'll be able to afford.

Will he drive a Lexus or a LeBaron?

He takes notes with a Bic pen on college ruled paper. He has binders, a calculator, a computer, a backpack. Once, while messing around on a basketball court with his friends, he sank a shot from half court. He went to that Dave concert, yeah that one on that amazing summer evening, when it seemed like Woodstock, drinking cold beer in the parking lot. He has gotten speeding tickets, yeah more than one. He can't help it – it's fun to go fast, crazy behind the wheel of your car. He wonders if he'll listen to Snoop in 20 years, he prays to God he does. He wonders if he will ever become so hopeless he donates money to a television evangelist. He wonders if he'll have children and he hopes they won't be deformed. He hopes no one has stolen his stereo; he paid for it himself, money from his job at CVS, Stop & Shop, Starbucks, it ceases to matter.

You go here, I go here, whether we wanted to or not, whether we had a choice or not. It doesn't matter if you're in a sorority, fraternity, or Sylvan; you still go to UMass. This is our school and we are all in this together. Let's help each other get through this, not this war or this school, but these years, these years of being young and restless, dazed and confused, poor and pissed. Let's face it, whether you wear Gucci or Gap, you can still be hit by a car on University Drive, flipped over the hood and left mangled by the side of road. Let's share the love, let's pass the Courvoisier, and let's have some fun...together.

Nick Ames is a Collegian Columnist.

War shouldn't be taken for entertainment

David Grant

War coverage has been dominating the news this past week, and will likely continue for an unforeseen period of time. In the middle of such a historical event such as war, the work of journalists has been nothing short of spectacular. However, there is a distinct difference between the 24-hour cable news programs and the traditional broadcast stations in this time of uncertainty.

While the participants of this analysis, CNN, FNC and ABC have flexed their technology muscles, concerned Americans are left to choose between chaos and calm when seeking news coverage. The flashy Fox Network boasts many distractions on its broadcast screen. The information is hard to disseminate and is enough to cause panic and concern. A crawl at the bottom of the screen with the latest updates and messages like "War Alert" and "Terror Alert" leave an unsettling feeling inside, but also spew excitement. In sharp contrast, with its blue backdrop and familiar face in Peter Jennings, ABC offers a matter of fact and serious tone to the viewer and some comfort amidst the tragedy and unexpectedness of war. With CNN, the typical Wolf Blitzer and Aaron Brown are keeping the network afloat with continuing coverage of war including embedded reporters that take up a large chunk of time while new developments come into the station.

Referring back to spectacular journalism, one can argue whether sensationalism of live war coverage is good or bad for the American public. Embedded journalists from all networks traveling with American troops are on "the front line" and quick to report events as they happen. This instantaneous information is unprecedented for war coverage and is available through videophones. On CNN, a disturbing statement was made from embedded reporter Walter Rodgers on Saturday night. Aaron Brown went to a live report where Rodgers described his experience as "fun." An embarrassed but composed Brown, with his usual smirk, asked Rodgers what he meant. Rodgers was able to make a quick save by referring to the excitement and adrenaline the soldiers and he were feeling after sitting for months awaiting orders.

CNN and Brown, along with Fox commonly referred to war as a "game." Peter Jennings found himself in a similar situation but was able to correct himself before the damage occurred. Jennings said on Saturday, "There are many stages in the game, excuse me, process." The viewers who watch ABC and Jennings expect war not to be reduced to a game and rely on this important distinction from the cable news shows.

These examples of sensationalism sell ratings but discount the seriousness of war. A Fox anchor added, "this is unprecedented live footage of war," while CNN and ABC, hailed the news coverage as "historical," "dazzling" and "a moving experience" and are showing a segment referred to "images of war." All three stations are narcissistic, plugging their courageous journalists exclusive reports.

"Since the cable news programs have more time to fill, this nothing is being turned into a produced drama, adding sound and terrific description by reporters."

Although Fox News Channel has top ratings, the network used trickery to keep its viewers glued to the screen. On Sunday, March 23, in the early morning, embedded reporter Richard Leventhal was live via videophone for about 15 minutes. During this time, he was describing what was labeled a dramatic "firefight" with troops in Northern Iraq. Using the sounds of outgoing gunfire during routine target operations, Leventhal led the viewer to believe a battle was taking place live on Fox. Both the anchor and Leventhal used language like "it's happening on both sides" and smooth description to create a false sense of chaos to sensationalize the event. The viewer, like myself did not learn until the very end that there was no incoming fire and it was a routine operation. Ted Koppel of ABC is embedded but has not used the same exploitation to reel viewers in. In fact, what you would expect from Koppel, you get: A serious, no frills report on what was happening as soldiers moved across the border. An interview speculating what may happen and different responsibilities of military personnel was all he could report since there was nothing happening just a few days into the conflict. Since the cable news programs have more time to fill, this nothing is being turned into a produced drama, adding sound and terrific description by reporters.

All three broadcasts used top military experts to guide them through possible conflicts that lie ahead. Fox is using Oliver North while CNN has hired Wesley Clark to help Aaron Brown. These experts have a bias towards administration and war because they were in the situation before. Without these experts and embedded reporters, the networks would have little to report. A conservative Fox interviewed republican senator John McCain, who ensured the American public the war was progressing as planned and added a prayer for American troops. A conservative ABC's attempt to be liberal failed when Jennings interviewed two student organizers of protests across the country. While the subject was important, especially since CNN and Fox gave little coverage to it when the war began, Jennings tone and facial expressions appeared to be denouncing the students. He asked questions such as, "What will protests accomplish with war already underway?" Jennings, although maybe not intentionally, showed a conservative bias by seemingly discounting protests at a time when he thinks American troops should be receiving support.

As some of the differences in news delivery are pointed out in this analysis, it's important to note the coverage has been draining for some viewers while captivating for others. With the rules laid out, networks are showing "battlefield pictures never seen before," according to Fox. Journalists have made a commitment to show the American public a realistic view of war, despite restrictions. Whether people are ready for this is a question producers of networks ask themselves. These risks can lead to serious consequences as a cloudy road lies ahead.

Are some journalists in grave danger or not? When soldiers are met with hostility, the sounds and sights may be too horrific for viewers. The media are aware the important role they play in both sending messages to Americans and the world. Are the media too close or politically aligned and therefore not allowed to report all information? To this point, the American military has been portrayed as heroic in its quest for humanity, but are other things taking place behind the scenes? There may be one side of the story being told, however one thing is clear: War as entertainment may be setting up viewers for a realistic shock and awe.

David Grant is a Collegian staff member.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Interior design student set to illustrate creativity

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Meredith Rosenblum walked through the old ivy-ridden dairy barn setting opposite the Mullins Center. Carefully, she maneuvered across the aging floorboards. Patiently, she navigated through stored machinery and bails of hay and envisioned all the possibilities. After measuring walls, doorways and window widths, Rosenblum crept past the rusty post beams back into the glaring sunlight.

Then it was on to the studio.

This interior design student decided last semester to complete redesign plans for the building as her final project at University of Massachusetts. Concept models, rendered drawings, floor plans and mission statements line the semester's itinerary. There's work on the architecture computer design program and meetings with advisors to keep Rosenblum busy. For weeks, she has researched the dairy barn, but her preparation is about to pay off, she says.

"I've been taking measurements to get the floor plan, which still needs to be tweaked, but I'm reaching the creative portion now," Rosenblum said. "I have to take pictures of textures I like that I might want to use and begin to think about my concept models [e.g. a room's seating design]."

With her ideas gaining momentum, she plans to one day see her two-dimensional drawings transform into three-dimensional models, but final submissions and her presentation (due May 12) quickly approach.

Rosenblum's idea evolved slowly, she said. A mentoring professor suggested she hypothetically redesign the interior of this aging dairy barn as a showcase of her cumulative knowledge from classes. Initially, she decided to make the approximated 2,000-sq. ft. building a second campus hotel. However, she shifted her idea after talking with the building's caretakers and venturing inside the space.

"I began to see the program needed to be a lot smaller," she said. "I'd decided I'd make it a bed and breakfast for campus and attach either a conference or gallery space, but more and more, it became a conference area with the accommodations being secondary."

By presentation time, Rosenblum must produce models, material samples for the furnishings, a final floor plan and a program of the product space. The aspect Rosenblum says she's most anticipating, though, involves artist renderings, where she'll scan her concept drawings into the computer, color them and add realties like lighting and shadows.

Rosenblum's project will spotlight her portfolio and reveal her imagination's capabilities. Though unlikely any organization will move her plans into action, a similar idea has been considered before.

In the early '90s, an interior design student compiled concepts to turn the dairy barn into an Alumni Center. The Alumni Association looked into the project, but concluded the building did not allow for enough space. Furthermore, as this old building falls under the Amherst Historical Society's protection, it cannot be knocked down.

But working with a theoretical project has its advantages, Rosenblum said.

"There's not budget to work with," she explained. "And if there is [a ball] in the design's way[, you can pretend it doesn't exist ... unlike] something very obvious [to structural support]."

The project's overseers will, however, enforce public building codes on Rosenblum's designs. But things like setting bathroom stalls to certain inch requirements to meet handicap codes will only strengthen her portfolio capstone, she said.

Attention toward such detail hoists interior design away from interior decorating, Rosenblum stressed. Her emphasis derived from recent workshops advocating for the state bill to make interior design a licensed practice. Propelled by leaders of the International Interior Design Association and National Council for Interior Design Qualification (NCIDQ), the bill drives to make the state publicly acknowledge the field as a professional practice and may just change future job market procedures.

"If architecture is defined as the art of science of designing structures for human interaction (Webster's definition), then interior design is the art and science of understanding people's behavior in order to create functional spaces within the structures that architects design," former NCIDQ President Lisa M. Whited wrote in 2001 of the bill's justification. "Interior design is all about human behavior and human interaction."

Interior decorators simply explore fabrics and wall hangings, Rosenblum said, but the professional field differs.

"I think is sculpting the interior space to make a program for specific people to accompany the specific feel of a house," she added.

In focusing so specifically, Rosenblum said she feels more personally connected to her final project than any other she's completed.

"You [become much more attached with this kind of thing, because you're constantly thinking about it," she said. "It's your baby."

And soon, Rosenblum's baby will illustrate to future employers the formal training, dedication and creativity in her field.

Ministry get back to their angry roots

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

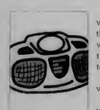
IT HAS BEEN FOUR YEARS SINCE MINISTRY'S last release "The Dark Side of the Spoon" was unleashed – relatively normal amount of time between albums by Ministry standards. Last year saw both the contractual split with Warner Brothers in the release of their "Greatest Fits" best-of compilation and their new marriage with Sanctuary records on the tour album "Sphincter Ministry's "return," now a regular event, comes touting the press' claim that the original dark princes of industrial are angry again. After all, the new album is animosity spelled forwards and backwards (sort of). While "Animositisomina" does posit a return to form for the long-troubled group whose rotating cast has always retained the core of Al Jourgenson and Paul Barker, one has to wonder when exactly it was that Ministry stopped being angry.

Ministry
"Animositisomina"
Sanctuary

Their last two albums, "Filth Pig" and "The Dark Side of the Spoon" were every bit as spiteful and bile-filled as the new full-length. Perhaps the assertion was made due to the fact that as Industrial's godfathers were straying and often stumbling off into new sonic territory, the rest of the genre collapsed under the weight of its own excess. Skinny Puppy split to form several side projects more geared towards Warp flavored IDM and glitch. Trent Reznor examined the most complex and inaccessible musical sphere of his career, ostracizing many of his newfound fans searching for the next "Closer." A myriad of other artists disappeared completely, occasionally showing up on limp and futile Cleopatra tribute albums and performing in nearly bankrupt goth clubs, looking like parodies of their former selves. For the most part though, the musicians simply got old. The studios found that they could be replaced with more commercial-sounding Ministry rip-offs or new dance-oriented novelty genres like electroclash, goa, and dark trance.

So along comes Ministry with the intention of saving the day. At first, it is a refreshing ride back into the early 1990s. There is no white boy rapping, no pop-rock leanings and no ego flexing. Instead, it is 10 disjointed dirges carrying the baggage of Industrial's most versatile history behind them. But does it save the day? Not quite. "Animositisomina" is rather in a league of its own. A more proper title might have been "Regreterger" or perhaps "Hangoveregnah." The often-dubbed "Grandpa" Jourgenson sounds aged and beat. After surviving a nasty heroin addiction and a potentially lethal spider bite, Jourgenson really doesn't care about being the spokes model for anything anymore. He just feels lucky he made it this far. Many of the songs twist and churn at odd tempos, suggesting a crippled, though no less menacing, demeanor that Grandpa Jourgenson uses as he approaches his spite for all the reigns of authority and hostility, including the methods used to punish himself in the past. He is not nearly as beaten as he sounded on 1999's "Dark Side of the Spoon," but this is an album of recovery and his newfound singing abilities and reacquired faux English drawl shriek of experience. Perhaps this is heavy music's "Hotel California," a eulogy by Jourgenson for himself who, for all intents and purposes, should have been dead several times by now.

With this said, "Animositisomina" still comes off as mainly a nostalgia trip reminding us of how watered down the new dark wave has become and how so-called heavy music has either gotten rich by ripping off Ministry (Static X, Powerman 5000) or why they should probably consider ripping off Ministry (and yes, Fred Durst has enlisted Jourgenson to appear on his next album.) Despite the vast influence Al and Paul have wrought, it is hard to shake the notion that Ministry are, at least partly, ripping themselves off. The new batches of songs, though clearly their best in about a decade, bring nothing new to the table except life experience. Sonically, the tracks of "Animositisomina" can be described as a clever amalgamation of the best elements of "Filth Pig" and "The Dark Side of the Spoon." The traces of electronics are as distant as ever except on the magnificent harmonic piece "Broken." The first track "Animosity" is easily the most pissed song on the album, just like the first cuts off of "Pig" and "Spoon" respectively. There is even a healthy combination of the sludge metal on the first half of "Filth Pig" and the helium-induced aggropop of the latter half. While it is a darkly joyful union, it curiously smells like 1995; the long-awaited proper follow-up to 1992's classic "Psalm 69: The Way to Succeed and the Way to Suck Eggs."



Also like "Filth Pig," the best song on "Animositisomina" is a cover. This time it's Magazine's "The Light Pours out of Me." Like their blissful reworking of Bob Dylan's "Lady, Lady, Lay," it is the perfect example of what Ministry are capable of if they simply settle down and focus on writing dark, angular pop. Jourgenson and Barker have always sided on the violently aggressive edge of the Industrial/Metal sphere – they used to perform behind a 12-foot-high chain link fence which fans would regularly climb and hurl bottles towards, as witnessed in their concert film "In Case You Didn't Feel Like Showing Up." However, a search into their back catalogue will reveal their roots in latter-day post-punk and early synthpop ("The Light Pours out of Me" has been a longtime tour staple along with Public Image Limited's "Public Image"). Their first official foray into industrial, 1985's "Twitch," sounds like the missing link between New Order and Front 242. Their next release "The Land of Rape and Honey" was a sparse, screeching masterpiece with disorienting sound effects and riffs, growling vocals, and a danceability that would become the backbone of their native Chicago's Wax Trax records. Their dialogue samples from syndicated news and Stanley Kubrick films became a mainstay of the genre, absolved by everyone from Rob Zombie to early technophiles. Kubrick, a self-proclaimed fan, wrote them into the script for a film that eventually became Steven Spielberg's homage "A.I." "A Mind is A Terrible Thing to Taste" brought the metal guitars into the foreground, where they have remained ever since.

For a band that's undergone as many transformations as Ministry has (not to mention the countless number of side projects with pals like Ian Mckaye and Jello Biafra), "Animositisomina" finds Ministry drifting along in a rift of sameness. Not that this is necessarily a condemnation. It is still their strongest set of material since "Psalm 69" and easily wipes the floor with their tired contemporaries. However, Ministry peaked the heavy scale on the unrealistic BPMs of "Psalm 69" and the atmospheric wasteland drones of "Filth Pig." That's why material like the melodic "Broken" and the tightly executed "The Light Pours Out of Me" are the most exciting pieces found here.

However, if heavy music truly does need Ministry (and it just might), I will offer this final defense of "Animositisomina" in the form of a history lesson. At the height of Ministry's success, they released the potent time bomb of a single "N.W.O." a harrowing foreshadowing of the death of the American Dream (not to mention the L.A. riots) that feature George Bush Sr. ranting in an Orwellian nightmare drone about "Good and evil. Right and Wrong. A new world order." With the rhetoric of good and evil elapsing into a second Bush's campaign against various destitute nations of the world, maybe the relevance of Al and Paul's brand spiteful and neurotically paranoid music is greater than anticipated. As the modern protest movement begins to be mocked by the corporate media for its recycled "Give Peace a Chance" antics, perhaps we should look to the boys who were personal friends with such frontrunners as William S. Burroughs and Timothy Leary.

"Unsung," off of "Animositisomina" decries the things that have already been done in the name of the "heroes" of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks. And Al does not sound simply upset or alarmed. He is pissed. Sometimes you have to shout just to be heard at all. Maybe it is time to get angry again.

Bowling for Soup swims with latest release

Rockin' Out
Samara Marblestone

Hey guys, I just want to tell you that I'm thrilled to write this article that you're about to read.

Want to know why?

Well kids, I'm writing about the rock band Bowling for Soup. This name might ring a bell to a few lucky ears being that their first hit single, the incredibly catchy tune "Girl All the Bad Guys Want," has been dancing its way throughout the airwaves for the past month or so.

I'm happy to write about these guys because I've been a fan of them for about six months, and I'm thrilled they are finally gaining some publicity and airwave success.

I might as well add to that!

So here's what's going on. Bowling For Soup, who has been around since the '80s, consists of colorful (literally), dynamic, humorous, energetic, fun musicians – lead vocalist Jaret von Erich, guitarist Christopher van Malmsteen, bassist Erik Rodham Clinton and drummer Gary Wiseass. Erik and Jaret started the band in the '80s as a hair metal cover band. To our undying advantage, the boys have changed their musical genre just a tad.

Well, a lot more than a tad.

Their debut album, "Rock on Honorable Ones!!!" was released by Crystal Clear Records in 1997, and only sold 10,000 copies in two years. Ouch. Von Erich's grandfather lent the boys money to put out a second album in 1998, titled "Tell Me When to Whoa!" Yep, you guessed it. Despite their rockin' talents, this album flopped as well.

After switching to Silvertone Records in 2000, Bowling for Soup put out its third album, "Let's Do It For Johnny!!" This album contained a song (that I personally love) called "The Bitch Song," and believe it or not, it actually caught the attention of several people and was played on the radio briefly.

Do you guys remember it? I don't either.

Between then and the release of their first hit album, Bowling for Soup appeared on the soundtracks of "Crossroads" and "Jimmy Neutron: Boy Genius." Hey, you have to start somewhere.

Finally last August, the boys put out their fourth and first hit album, "Drunk Enough to Dance." The album contains 16 songs and 12 hidden tracks! Although it was not a success at first, it slowly built a fan base and exploded onto the airwaves with "Girl All the Bad Guys Want."

I first heard about Bowling for Soup through my roommate. Their sound, especially von Erich's strong, unique voice and von Malmsteen's bold guitar melodies, caught my attention like Brad Pitt in nothing but a towel. Every song that I've heard from them has something about it that gets in your head, but not in an annoying way. What I'm trying to say is that these guys are so talented, and I'm surprised that it took them so long to get noticed.

The songs of Bowling for Soup are generally about girls. I don't blame them. Girls are pretty cool, being that I am one myself. "I can't really write about anything but girls, because I really don't know about anything else," stated the married von Erich on Bowling for Soup's website.

I really hope these guys tour this summer. I mean, the guys have already toured with bands such as Blink 182 and Sum 41 just to name a few. I think it's about time for these guys to headline and spread their catchy, fun rock all over the place. On their website, it's also mentioned that the "magic ingredient" for the band is beer. If that's so, drink up boys! Funnel, chug, do a keg stand, whatever. It's working, so far.

Samara Marblestone is a Collegian Columnist.

Around since the '80s, Bowling for Soup is now starting to gain wide appeal. The band is described as colorful, dynamic, humorous and energetic.

Fugitive filmmaker's Oscar win may ease filmmaking for exile

By Anthony Benzican
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Roman Polanski's surprise Oscar win for directing "The Pianist" has returned Hollywood's attention to a filmmaking career that includes at least two films considered cinematic classics, "Rosemary's Baby" and "Chinatown."

"There is tremendous interest in Roman and what he's doing next," his agent, Jeff Berg, said Tuesday, although Polanski has yet to decide on a new project.

Berg refused to say who has approached him about working with Polanski, but pointed out that the filmmaker has never wanted for celebrity colleagues, even in the years since a 1977 sex crime made him flee to France. Walter Matthau starred in Polanski's 1986 comedy "Pirates," Harrison Ford in 1988's "Frantic" and Johnny Depp in 1999's "The Ninth Gate."

With a hit on his hands, the 69-year-old Polanski should be able to attract A-list stars more than ever. "Actors are used to traveling," Berg said.

Polanski's victory Sunday night was met with huge applause and a partial standing ovation at the Kodak Theatre. In a brief statement issued in Paris, Polanski said that he was grateful for the recognition.

"I am deeply moved to be rewarded for the work which relates to the events so close to my own life, the events that led me to comprehend that art can transform pain," he said.

"The Pianist" drew on Polanski's experiences from childhood. A Polish Jew, he escaped from Krakow's ghetto and lived off the charity of strangers until reuniting with his father years later. His mother died at the Auschwitz death camp. Polanski's pregnant wife, Sharon Tate, was brutally murdered by Charles Manson's followers in 1969 in her Los Angeles home.

After pleading guilty to having sex with a 13-year-old girl, Polanski fled Los Angeles for Paris to evade sentencing out of fear the judge would disregard a plea bargain with prosecutors and sentence him to 50 years in prison.

Polanski still faces arrest if he returns to the United States, and the Oscar is unlikely to change that. But it could make it easier for him to work around the obstacle of his criminal case.

He has since worked mainly in Paris, where he lives with his children and wife, French actress Emmanuelle Seigner.

But his Academy Award suggests that Hollywood continues to admire his talent, and Oscars for "The Pianist" lead actor Adrien Brody and screenwriter Ronald Harwood already have stoked renewed interest in working with the director.

You don't have to unwrap it, unroll it, or worry that it can break.

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective. Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Of course, using condoms is the only way to protect yourself against HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases, but make sure you're also as protected as possible against pregnancy. That's why more women than ever are choosing Depo-Provera — it's 99.7% effective when administered on time every 3 months.

Remember, Depo-Provera doesn't protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Some women using Depo-Provera experience side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight weight gain. You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant, if you have had any unexplained periods, or if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a possible decrease in bone density.

Depo-Provera. One of the best and most convenient ways to protect yourself from pregnancy. Ask your health care professional if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

Depo-Provera®
Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Call toll free 1-866-519-DEPO or visit Depo-Provera.com.

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Please see important product information on adjacent page.

© 2002 Pharmacia Corporation UX002161702 9/02

Klein disrupts game; Brody honors soldier; Rapper Fabolous arrested

NEW YORK (AP) — Security guards had to escort fashion designer Calvin Klein back to his seat at a New York Knicks game after he walked up to Latrell Sprewell and talked to him in the middle of play.

Sprewell was about to inbound the basketball just before the end of Monday night's game against the Toronto Raptors when Klein got up from his courtside seat at Madison Square Garden and approached him. Then he grabbed Sprewell by the arm and struck up a conversation with him.

"I wasn't nervous," Sprewell said. "I was a little surprised, like, 'Is security going to come over here at some point or what?' I didn't know that was him."

Security did come over and ushered the 60-year-old designer back to his seat. After he sat back down, he yelled, "Sprewell!"

Representatives for Klein did not immediately return calls for comment Tuesday.

Sprewell declined to divulge what Klein said to him. The Knicks defeated the Raptors 100-90.

NEW YORK (AP) — They weren't watching the Oscars, but it wasn't long before Ada and Thomas Zarobinski heard that best-actor winner Adrien Brody mentioned their son, a U.S. soldier stationed in Kuwait, in his acceptance speech.

The Queens couple was listening to news of the war in Iraq when a neighbor told them that Brody, who received the award for playing a Holocaust survivor in "The Pianist," ended his remarks with a goodwill message for Tommy Zarobinski.

"There are feelings of both happiness and sadness," Ada Zarobinski told Newsday in Tuesday's editions. "Because I wish my son was here to see Adrien's success."

Brody received a standing ovation for his emotional speech, in which he urged the audience to "pray for a peaceful and swift resolution to the war.

"And I have a friend from Queens who's a soldier in Kuwait right now, Tommy Zarobinski, and I hope you and your boys make it back real soon," he said.

Brody, who grew up in Woodhaven, and Zarobinski, a native of Rego Park, attended the Fiorello H. LaGuardia High School for Performing Arts together, where Brody studied acting and Zarobinski studied drawing.

The two, who grew up like brothers, "would cut school together and do all sorts of pranks — just like regular kids," said Thomas Zarobinski Sr.

"Here he is making the Oscars for the first time in his life, and he's talking about my son," Zarobinski told the Daily News. "That's amazing."

Tommy Zarobinski, 31, joined the Army National Guard in 1996 and has been stationed in Kuwait since November, Newsday said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rapper Fabolous has been arrested again after police found a gun in the vehicle in which he was riding.

The rapper, whose real name in John Jackson, was arraigned on charges of criminal possession of a weapon Monday. Bail was set at $2,500.

A security guard at Webster Hall, a downtown club, called police Sunday night after seeing a member of Fabolous' entourage stick a gun in their van, police said. Officers later pulled the van over and allegedly found a 9mm pistol inside.

The rapper's attorney, Albert Hanks, said Monday that the pistol belonged to a bodyguard hired by Fabolous' record company to protect him as he performed.

The bodyguard told police that the gun was his, which should have cleared the 25-year-old rapper of criminal responsibility, Hanks said.

"When you arrest the bodyguard that doesn't make the papers," he said.

Four other people in the van also face criminal weapons possession charges, said police spokesman Sgt. Michael Wysokowski.

Fabolous was arrested twice in two days in January, once for allegedly driving with a suspended license and the second time after police said they discovered guns in a car he was riding in.

The rapper, whose hits include "Young'n," recently peaked at No. 3 this past week on the Billboard album chart with his latest release, "Street Dreams."

—Associated Press

ABC wins prime-time rating race

NEW YORK (AP) - Despite the least-watched Academy Awards since at least 1974, ABC earned a rare prime-time ratings victory last week.

The week was clogged with reruns and interrupted by news coverage of the war in Iraq. Most of that coverage is not included in Nielsen Media Research's rankings because it was commercial-free.

The Oscar telecast, minus the glitz and glamour because of the war, was watched by 33 million people. That's more than 4 million fewer than the previous low, in 1987 when "Platoon" won best picture. Nielsen doesn't have viewership figures for the Academy Awards before 1974.

For the week, ABC averaged 13.4 million viewers (8.6 rating, 14 share), NBC was second with 10.3 million viewers (6.8, 11), Fox had 10 million (6.0, 9), and CBS had an extremely rare fourth-place showing, with 9.3 million viewers (6.2, 10).

The WB and UPN, both with 2.9 million viewers, were in a virtual dead heat (WB 1.9, 3; UPN: 1.8, 3). Pax TV had 1.1 million viewers (0.8, 1).

In a big news week, NBC's "Nightly News" lengthened its lead in the evening news ratings race, averaging 13.2 million viewers (9.2 rating, 17 share). ABC's "World News Tonight" was second, averaging 10.6 million viewers (7.6, 14) and the "CBS Evening News" had 8.4 million (6.0, 11).

A ratings point represents 1,067,000 households, or 1 percent of the nation's estimated 106.7 million TV homes. The share is the percentage of in-use televisions tuned to a given show.

For the week of March 17-23, the top 10 shows, their networks and viewerships: "Academy Awards," ABC, 33 million; "American Idol-Tuesday," Fox, 21.1 million; "Oscar Countdown 2003," ABC, 19.5 million; "American Idol-Wednesday," Fox, 17.2 million; "Survivor: Amazon" special, CBS, 16.4 million; "Friends," NBC, 14.9 million; "Fear Factor," NBC, 14.7 million; "Scrubs," NBC, 14.2 million; "Judging Amy," CBS, 14.2 million; "JAG," CBS, 14 million.

- David Bauder, Associated Press

Oakland leads the way in AL

Continued from page 10

Veritable stars Mike Sweeney and Carlos Beltran lead a decent offensive attack that will allow Kansas City to finish ahead of the rebuilding Cleveland.

4. Cleveland Indians
Key additions - Brian Anderson, Jason Bere, Travis Hafner, Eric Wedge
Key losses - Einar Diaz, Charlie Manuel, Eddie Perez, Jim Thome, Jaret Wright

What did Cleveland lose when it couldn't re-sign first baseman Jim Thome? Only its team leader in average, runs, homeruns, and RBI. All is not lost, though; starting this season in Thome's stead is rookie Travis Hafner, a highly-regarded prospect acquired from the Rangers. Make no mistake – this is a rebuilding year for first-year manager Wedge and the Indians. With Hafner and 21 year-old rookie Brandon Phillips on the right side of the infield, and Josh Bard behind the plate, the team is looking toward the future. 5. Detroit Tigers
Key additions - Alan Trammell
Key losses - Juan Acevedo, Luis Pujols, Robert Fick, Mark Redman, Randall Simon

Sharing "Worst Team in the Majors" honors with Milwaukee last season, Detroit doesn't figure to improve much this year. Trammell inherits a very young team without much promise. A bright spot is 24 year-old first baseman Carlos Pena, a potential gold glover/all-star with good power.

AL WEST

1. Oakland Athletics
Key additions - Erubiel Durazo, Keith Foulke, John Halama, Ken Macha, Chris Singleton
Key losses - Ray Durham, Art Howe, Cory Lidle, Billy Koch

After winning the West last year the A's made an early postseason exit in the divisional playoffs. Now, in what most likely is Miguel Tejada's last season in Oakland, GM Billy Beane will pull out all the stops to make the club a winner this year. He already signed Erubiel Durazo to bolster a lineup that includes last year's MVP Tejada, Eric Chavez, Jermaine Dye and Scott Hatteberg. As good as the offense is, the pitching may be even better. Any of the Big Three (Tim Hudson, Mark Mulder, Barry Zito) has finished first or second in Cy Young voting each of the last three years. When all is said and done, the A's will once again finish atop the West, and this time, take the pennant.

2. Anaheim Angels
Key additions - Eric Owens
Key losses - Al Levine, Orlando Palmeiro

The World Series champs had no need to make changes with the talent and depth they already have. Five different Angels led the team in the five major offensive categories (Avg., Runs, HR, RBI, SB). There are questions, of course: Will Darin Erstad continue his good season-bad season streak? How much does Kevin Appier have left in the tank? How does Aaron Sele still have a job? If the scrappy Angels were in any other division they would probably be heading back to the playoffs as the wildcard, but alas, this is the AL West, probably the strongest division in baseball if Texas continues to improve.
3. Seattle Mariners
Key additions - Greg Colbrunn, Bob Melvin, Randy Winn
Key losses - John Halama, Lou Piniella, Ruben Sierra, Ismael Valdes

What separates Seattle from Texas is pitching: the Mariners have it, the Rangers do not. It's why the M's have more wins than any other team in the last three seasons, and why they will hold off Texas for the No. 3 spot in the West. With Ichiro and Winn atop the batting order there will be many RBI opportunities for Bret Boone and Edgar Martinez. But this team is getting older, and one wonders how many productive seasons Boone, Martinez and John Olerud have left.

4. Texas Rangers
Key additions - Einar Diaz, Doug Glanville, Buck Showalter, Ugeuth Urbina, Esteban Yan
Key losses - Frank Catalanotto, Hideki Irabu, Jerry Narron, John Rocker, Ivan Rodriguez, Kenny Rogers

There's no doubt Showalter will change things in Arlington for the better. The Rangers remain an offensive juggernaut with the likes of Alex Rodriguez, Rafael Palmeiro and Juan Gonzalez, and the pitching cannot be much worse than what it was last season. The closer role has been seriously upgraded with the Urbina signing, and Glanville brings much more defense to the center field position than Carl Everett ever has. This team is close to overtaking Seattle as the third best team in the West, but it's probably a year away from happening.

Divisional Playoffs:
Oakland over Minnesota
New York over Chicago
A.L. Pennant: Oakland over New York
2003 MVP: Alex Rodriguez
2003 Cy Young: Pedro Martinez

Padres grab Merloni

Continued from page 10

"The toughest part is that I've spent my whole career here and I have so many special memories and made so many friends here," he said. "It's going to be tough after growing up there and playing my whole career there, the way the fans treated me was amazing. I have so many special memories."

Epstein said Merloni's popularity - Fenway Park fans greeted his occasional at-bats with a chorus of "Lou!" – made the decision to offer Merloni on waivers more difficult.

"It's tough to see Lou go," Epstein said. "I talked it over with Lou that he will always be (part of the) Red Sox. After his playing days are over we'll have a place for him if he wants to stay in baseball."

Merloni's departure clarified Manager Grady Little's final roster decisions somewhat, but he wouldn't say how exactly. It could improve fellow infielder Damian Jackson's chances of making the team, or it could simply change Little's calculus about whether to carry 11 or 12 pitchers.

"We're proud for Lou," Little said after Boston's 3-0 loss to Pittsburgh in Bradenton. "He did an awfully good job when he was with the Red Sox. But he's getting a good opportunity now with a great city and we wish him the best."

Merloni didn't travel with the team on Tuesday. He planned to stop by Boston's clubhouse in Fort Myers on Wednesday and say his goodbyes before heading west to play in a Triple-A exhibition game Thursday in Portland, Ore.

Merloni said he'd already spoken to Padres' manager Kevin Towers, who was looking for an infielder who could hit left-handed pitching. Though he would be unlikely to break immediately into San Diego's starting infield, Merloni figures he may get more at-bats off the bench because the National League has more double switches.

"It's going to be hard to leave, but this is a great opportunity," he said. "It will be a better situation for me. Now I'll get to see what it's like on the other side."

Notes: RHP Steve Woodard pitched four outstanding innings for Boston on Tuesday, giving up just one hit in four innings, walking none and striking out three... RHP Robert Person pitched one inning of relief. He is working through a sore hip, but Little says it isn't serious...Little says five pitchers remain in the hunt for the either one or two final bullpen slots...LHP Matt White may start the season on the disabled list. His back injury is apparently more serious than first thought...Little announced his opening day lineup, which has Kevin Millar at first base, Shea Hillenbrand at third, and David Ortiz, Jeremy Giambi or perhaps Doug Mirabelli as designated hitter. But he says Boston will likely have four different lineups in the four-game season-opening series at Tampa Bay alone.

Long break for UMass

Continued from page 10

the place of the departed Drown, the attention is cast towards the underclassmen.

"Sophomore Maura McGarrity has shown that she can," Bolduc said, "and freshman Jackie Nesbit had a nice eight meter shot on Sunday."

Nesbitt scored her second career goal on Sunday.

After the UNH game, UMass traveled to Hanover, NH to take on Dartmouth.

Dartmouth, ranked 14th in the country, promptly scored seven goals in the first half, and six more in the second half leading to a 13-6 victory over the Minutewomen.

UMass mustered only three goals in the first half. The second half was the same story as Dartmouth held the Minutewomen to three goals and extended its lead to eight, before the Minutewomen scored three more.

Leslie Pollock helped herself to two goals and Lydia Robinson contributed two more goals. Which gave Robinson and Pollock four of the team's six goals.

Lana Smith scored four for Dartmouth, leading the Big Green to victory.

Thankfully for the Minutewomen, the next opponent was the University of Albany.

Albany has won one game this year and has been outscored 88-54. The Great Danes did not put up much of a fight. The game was over early as the Minutewomen dominated, winning 20-1.

Albany's Amanda Heller gave up 20 goals on 23 shots. Heller did not get much help from the defense, which gave up 37 total shots. The Great Danes turned the ball over 23 times in the game compared to the 13 committed by UMass.

The Minutewomen play La Salle this Saturday at 3:30 p.m. at Garber Field.

sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/21/03 - Thursday 2/27/03 ONLY.
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND THX ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
STARTING FROM THE MIDDLE (PRE-VIEW SAT 2/22) (PG13) 7:30 P.M.
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25*
DOGS AND EAGLES (PG13) 2:00 7:00*
DARK BLUE (R) 1:40 4:30 7:50 10:30*
DAREDEVIL (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15*
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (D) 1:10 3:15 5:10 7:05 9:10*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 (7:05) 10:00 (+No SHOW SAT 2/22/2003)
HOW TO LOOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS(PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:10
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
CATCH ME IF YOU CAN (PG13) 1:10 9:00
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 5:10
Sunday Show 2/27/03 - THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE
*NO passes/no superSavers
Ticket Vouchers available @ cinemark.com

Familiarity breeds content.

AMHERST downtown we have it all!

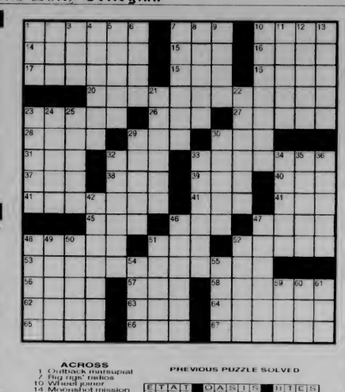
Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year
DEPO-PROVERA
This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.
What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
ONLY
ONLY
Percent of Women Experiencing an Accidental Pregnancy in the First Year of Contraceptive Use
Method | Lowest Expected | Typical
What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What symptoms may signal problems while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases such as chlamydia, genital herpes, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B, and syphilis.
What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
CB-7-5
Pharmacia & Upjohn Company
Kalamazoo, MI 49001 USA
Pharmacia & Upjohn

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • BY ELLIOT G. GARBAUSKAS

GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

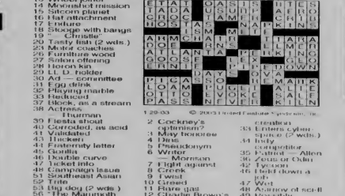
GET FUZZY • BY DARBY CONLEY

ELSIE HOOPER • BY ROBERT D. KRZYKOWSKI



JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • BY MARK VELARDI

THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • BY DERRICK GENOVA



ACROSS
1 Outback marsupial
5 Big cigar makers
10 Wilmington's st.
14 Mounted mission
15 Sitcom planet
16 Hat attachment
17 Endure
18 Shaggy with bangs
19 Sleeping spot
20 Tasty fish (2 wds.)
23 More creative
26 Furniture wood
27 Token offering
28 Hanoi's bay
29 Lt. Lt. holder
30 Ad — committee
32 Egg-shaped
35 Playing marble
37 Reduced
38 Brook, as a stream
39 Actress Hunnam
40 Fiesta afoul
41 Vitamin, as acid
43 Validates
45 Tiebreaker: Abbr.
46 Double curve
47 Ticket info
48 Campaign issue
50 Southeast Asian
51 Dill
53 Big dog (2 wds.)
56 "The Mammoth Hunters" heroine
57 Rest-and-breakfast
58 Kid woman's son
62 Help in a crime
63 Bellyache
64 Quintessence
65 Yiekl territory
66 Gershwin
67 Treaty ratifier

DOWN
1 Kids' card game
2 Cockney's dismissal?
3 Tiny bovine
4 Dilute
5 Pseudonym
6 Writer — Morrison
7 Flight against
8 Creek
9 Owed
10 Small
11 Pure gas
12 Charlie Brown's pal
13 Make glad
21 Liar (2 wds.)
22 Spindle
24 WWII vets (hyph.)
25 First letter
29 Actress Ansuk
30 Pills
32 Henson creation
33 Editor's cyber query (2 wds.)
34 Hall of — Fame
35 Pabst — Allen
36 Zeno or Otto
42 Tycoon
46 Hold down a job
47 Bird
48 Acronym at sea
49 Possibly
50 Cowgirl Gold
51 Storied founder
52 Thinger-ber
54 Gang
55 Malt beverages
59 Mideast city
60 Unhappy topic
61 Addams Family cousin
64 Vitriolic

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-28-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

WEDNESDAY
- High: 57
- Low:31

THURSDAY
- High: 56
- Low: 27

FRIDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 32

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Cream of Broccoli Soup
- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Beans & Rice
(vegan)

DINNER
- Cream of Broccoli Soup
- Turkey Cutlet
- Roast Beef/Au Jus
- Madras Tofu Curry
(vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Elledge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Sarah Lloyd
COPY EDITOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Lizzy Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jennifer DeMeglio/Jennifer Eastwood

QUOTE OF THE DAY

He not busy being born is busy dying.

- Bob Dylan

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Stay in your house all day today and play that new Zelda game. Everyone else is doing it.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
This weekend, attempt to drink alcohol out of a children's sandpail.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Do not eat any food that belongs to your roommate today. It might save your life.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Notice how your life has become a reflection of the movie "Swimtan?" Yeah, good luck with that.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Despite the balmy weather, going to class in your birthday suit is still generally unacceptable.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Try to stop cursing today. Every time you curse, a fairy somewhere dies.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Denial ain't just a river in Egypt. Everyone else knows you're clinically insane. Come to grips.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If someone asks you for a kiss today, promptly throw some kickin' chicken in their face.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Riding on roller coasters with hangovers is never, ever recommended.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Today you should learn to think for yourself. It's annoying the crap out of a lot of people.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Talk about your awesome Spring break all day today. You'll make others mad.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
If you throw up on an airplane before it takes off, you are a pathetic individual.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Wanna buy/sell stuff locally ... No Shipping. Payment. Delivery Hassles. Need Classreviews or Classnotes? Free! Visit www.college-shack.com today!

Fraternities, Sororities, Clubs, Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-real-estate.com 253-7879

Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnreal-estate.com 253-7879

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium III's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS! Help new students get off to a good start. Peer Advisors needed for Summer Orientation. --Competitive Salary. --20hrs/week--Mid-May to Mid July Applications @ 15 Goodell Deadline April 11

EMPLOYMENT

Office assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, receive inventory, computer data entry, answer telephone. All around person needed. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

UNIQUE INTERNSHIP OPPORTUNITY. Ogilvy Public Relations seeks interns for Fall semester 2003 to implement an award winning public relations campaign. Internship work is conducted on campus, primarily between September and December 2003. Open to undergraduates entering their junior or senior year of study. Students with majors in public relations, communications, marketing, advising and journalism are urged to apply. E-mail resume to: internprogram@ogilvypr.com Deadline: March 31, 2003.

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for commission-based sales associates to work in Amherst, Holyoke, Northampton. Email resumes to jobs@collegeshack.com

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Summer Jobs on Martha's Vineyard! Store Managers, Assistants, Associates. Work for Soft As A Grape in one of our retail stores in Edgartown Positions, housing available May 15th Richard White @ 413-323-8520 email @ rdswhite27@charter.net

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Acts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, News-paper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-598-CAMP or check out our website at www.independencelake.com and apply online.

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

EMPLOYMENT

Spanish speaking for business development position. PT, must be available early morning Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

Boxing Lessons for self development in Amherst area with retired pro Djata Bumpus. 413-584-1906 All major credit cards accepted.

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst, 548-9992

TRAVEL

Mexico/Carribean only $250 round trip! Europe $189 one way! Other world wide destinations cheap. Book on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000.

Spring Break with STS. America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed, non-smokers, Donors Ages 21-32. Generous compensation paid. For more information contact Robert Nichols, Esq. (781) 769-6900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Split decision for Lax

Women struggle, but bounce back

By Ari Jankelowitz
Collegian Staff

Kelli Kurtz faced a difficult task at the Carrier Dome on Sunday: shut down second team All-American Leigh-Ann Zimmer and help the Minutewomen to victory. Kurtz held Zimmer to only two goals on Sunday, but UMass fell 8-5 to Syracuse.

Zimmer, whose two goals gave her 15 for the season, now has scored in 24 straight games.

"You need 30 shots to win," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said. "We only got 14 - that is not enough."

The Minutewomen were held to a paltry three shots in the first half, as they dropped passes and looked to be struggling on offense. In the first half, the scoring belonged to Syracuse as the Orangewomen scored four goals on fourteen shots. UMass only tallied one goal on a pass from Lydia Robinson to Iada Emery. Emery beat Syracuse goalie Carla Gigion top shelf for the first goal of the game for UMass.

The game turned out to be a defensive struggle as the Minutewomen outshot Syracuse 11-7 in the second half and scored four goals. Yet Syracuse weathered the storm as they also scored four goals, more than enough for the win.

Kristi Doyle played consistent," Bolduc said. "She is improving every day since the Connecticut game. Which is one, to need some with a thirst for improvement."

Doyle had nine saves on 20 shots by the Orangewomen.

Bolduc called the play by the defensive unit during the Syracuse game "the best I have ever seen from this team. They are finally understanding how good they can be. Holding to only three goals to the number eight team in the country is a very big confidence boost."

After beginning of Spring Break the Minutewomen were to host their games at the University of New Hampshire 9-8.

Jaclyn Dyers paced the Minutewomen with three goals as they moved ahead in the first half. They controlled the ground ball with a 21-15 advantage and had only six turnovers compared to New Hampshire's 17.

UMass rang up a 13-11 lead with 22:17 and Doyle made 10 saves on the day, including eight stops made by Wildcat goalkeeper Danielle Martin.

The setback went down as a costly victory in the record book.

Within the first two minutes of the game, Tracey Dewar suffered a serious knee injury that could end her season.

With Tracey out, Bolduc said "We probably would have won the Syracuse game. She is a threat. All we can do now is get good input from our younger players to step up."

With the Minutewomen turning to a committee to fill

SARAH LEFTON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Midfielder Lori Kain scored three goals in the Minutewomen's four-game split over Spring Break. All three tallies came in a 20-3 rout over Albany.

A-10 awards for vet and rookie

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team saw two pitchers earn awards this week, while the baseball team suffered a loss to a rival.

Kaila Holtz and Jenna Busa were both honored by the Atlantic 10 for their excellence this spring. Holtz, a senior, earned the A-10 Pitcher of the Week award for her efforts in the A-10/Big East Challenge last weekend.

The Vancouver, BC native threw two complete-game shutouts en route to the Minutewomen's 4-0 sweep at the inter-conference tournament.

Holtz got things started for UMass with a 4-0 defeat of host Villanova. The ace struck out four, walked two, and held the Wildcats to four hits.

She followed up with another stellar performance against Seton Hall the next day, blanking the Pirates on three hits and one walk. The big stat for the right-hander, though, was her 12 strikeouts that kept SHU at bay while the Minutewomen cruised to a 3-0 victory.

It is the sixth career Pitcher of the Week award for Holtz.

The Minutewomen's young talent was also recognized, as freshman hurler Jenna Busa received the A-10 Rookie of the Week award.

Busa, a native of Lexington, Mass. shined in her second career start, and scattered five hits with three walks, striking out seven to hold the Wildcats to no runs in six innings of work. After sophomore Kelli Arnold came in to finish the 3-0 UMass victory, Busa earned her second win of the season.

Connecticut 17, UMass 3

The early season woes continue for the Massachusetts baseball team. Cogneticut blew the Minutemen away 17-3 yesterday in Storrs, CT.

Catcher Mike Leonard went three-for-six with a homerun for the Huskies, and pitcher Eric Drown struck out seven, and gave up three hits and three walks, holding the Maroon and White to three runs, and only one earned.

The game went to just eight innings before being called due to darkness. The Minutemen spent the final two innings without coach Mike Stone, who was ejected in the sixth for arguing balls and strikes.

Junior Mike Athas had a hit and an RBI for UMass, but runs were scarce in the Minutemen's last game before the home opener on Thursday.

Merloni picked up by San Diego

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) – Lou Merloni looked like he might be a lifer for the Boston Red Sox, the team he grew up watching in Framingham, Mass.

Instead, the utility infielder is heading to San Diego, where he hopes he'll find regular, Major League playing time – the one thing missing during an otherwise agreeable 10-year career in the Red Sox organization.

Merloni, 31, found himself on Boston's roster bubble yet again this spring. After splitting time between Boston and Triple-A Pawtucket in each of the last three seasons, he faced new competition in the infield this year from offseason pickups Bill Mueller, Todd Walker and Kevin Millar.

The parting seemed amicable. General manager Theo Epstein sent Merloni on his way with good wishes and a few tips on where to grab a beer in San Diego, where he used to work for the Padres. Merloni said he'd miss Boston but looked forward to a chance for more playing time.

"This is great. I'm fired up," Merloni said Tuesday. "Playing for a National League team, I'll get a lot more playing time. It's great for me personally."

Merloni has played his entire career in the Red Sox organization, except for part of the 2000 season in Japan. He hit .247 in 84 games last season with the Red Sox. He's a career .271 hitter.

Continued on page 8

Oakland gets straight A's in AL

By Jim Crook

Pick yourself up. Dust it off. If you thought a team that finished 45 games out of first place the year before could top the 2002 World Series champs, look everyone in the eye and say with great thing [illegible] you think. Here is [illegible] things will [illegible] in the American League.

AL East

1. New York Yankees

Key additions - Jose Contreras, Hideki Matsui, Todd Zeile
Key losses - Orlando Hernandez, Ramiro Mendoza, Mike Stanton

The rich kept getting richer as the Yanks landed the two premier foreign free agents on the market in Contreras and Matsui. The club has endured off-field distractions like David Wells' new book and owner George Steinbrenner publicly questioning Joe Torre's work ethic. Internal strife aside, it will require a herculean effort to take the East away from the Yanks, whose lineup features Alfonso Soriano, Jeter, Jason Giambi, and non-Godzilla. The rotation is strong with the likes of Mike Mussina, Roger Clemens, Andy Pettitte et al. The only question mark surrounding this team is the health of closer Mariano Rivera, who has been the backbone of the Yankees' pitching staff for years.

2. Boston Red Sox
Key additions - Theo Epstein, Jeremy Giambi, Ramiro Mendoza, Kevin Millar, Todd Walker
Key losses - Brian Daubach, Cliff Floyd, Rey Sanchez, Ugueth Urbina

The final standings of the AL East from top to bottom haven't changed in five years, and the likes of Giambi, Millar and Mendoza are not about to change that. General manager Theo Epstein's first off-season was relatively quiet, but he strengthened the depth of a team whose bullpen was a problem last year. How Epstein's closer-by-committee approach will work is yet to be seen, but the bullpen is full of ready arms. Whether or not the Sox can top the Yankees depends partly upon the knuckleball of Tim Wakefield, who has assumed the No. 3 spot in the rotation behind potential 20-game winners Pedro Martinez and Derek Lowe.

3. Toronto Blue Jays
Key additions - Mike Bordick, Frank Catalanotto, Cory Lidle
Key losses - Chris Carpenter, Jose Cruz, Jr., Felipe Lopez

The Blue Jays may be more than just a thorn in the side of their AL East counterparts this season. GM J.P. Ricciardi has assembled a nucleus of young, talented players like Roy Halladay, Eric Hinske, Vernon Wells and Josh Phelps. Along with perennial powerhouse Carlos Delgado and adequate closer Kelvim Escobar, the group should lead Toronto to future success, and don't be surprised if it happens this season.

4. Baltimore Orioles
Key additions - Omar Daal, Rick Helling, Kerry Ligtenberg
Key losses - Mike Bordick, Chris Richard, Chris Singleton

There's not a lot to get excited about here if you're an Orioles' fan. There's a lack of talent and youth on the big league club and the farm system is about as barren as Boston's. Though their recent acquisition of the power-hitting prospect Jack Cust may prove to be a coup, and Daal and Helling add depth to the rotation, the overall prognosis in 2003 for the O's is not good.

5. Tampa Bay Devil Rays
Key additions - Marlon Anderson, Travis Lee, Rey Ordonez, Lou Piniella
Key losses - Steve Cox, Randy Winn, Esteban Yan

Much like the addition of Buck Showalter to Texas, the hiring of Piniella in Tampa Bay will pay immediate dividends to the organization. Piniella has the managerial experience a young team needs and the D-Rays have good, young players in Aubrey Huff, Toby Hall and 21-year-old starters Rocco Baldelli and Carl Crawford. The team has a decent upside and will be fun to watch with Sweet Lou at the helm.

AL Central

1. Chicago White Sox
Key additions - Bartolo Colon, Brian Daubach, Billy Koch
Key losses - Royce Clayton, Keith Foulke

The White Sox underachieved last year, and the addition of Colon will put them over the top. The one-two combo of Colon and southpaw Mark Buehrle gives Chicago the best right-left punch this side of Arizona. The lineup is potent with annual MVP candidate Magglio Ordonez, Paul Konerko, and Carlos Lee, who, at 26, is poised for a breakout season. Expect a slight bounce back from Frank Thomas and a solid rookie year from third baseman Joe Crede. Chicago scored 88 more runs than Minnesota last year, and the improved pitching should get them to October.

2. Minnesota Twins (Wild Card)
Key additions - Mike Fetters
Key losses - David Ortiz

RON MARGOT/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Anaheim Angels' Tim Salmon watches the flight of his two-run home run in Game 2 of the 2002 World Series against the San Francisco Giants.

The Twins' off-season was rather quiet but they signed their best player, Torii Hunter, and retained the young talent that makes this a very deep team. The Twins were Central favorites last year because of their starting pitching, but the starters' ERA was 4.38 and it was the work of the bullpen that carried them into the postseason. With ace Eric Milton out for four to six months, Johan Santana and Eddie Guerrero will again shoulder a heavy load. Since the division is the weakest it's been in years, expect Minnesota to beat up on Cleveland, Kansas City and Detroit and emerge as the AL's wild card team.

3. Kansas City Royals
Key additions - Albie Lopez, Tony Pena, Desi Relaford
Key losses - Paul Byrd, Roberto Hernandez, Chuck Knoblauch, Tony Muser, Jeff Suppan

Ever heard of Runelvys Hernandez? Unless you live in Kansas City you're probably unaware that first-year manager Tony Pena has tabbed him as the Royals' starting pitcher on opening day. Hernandez and an assembled group of unproven pitchers will attempt to keep the Royals in games while the hitting should put runs on the board.

Continued on page 8

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2003 · NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 · VOLUME CIX ISSUE 105

Preparing for war

A student readies to be shipped out

COURTESY DAVID GRANT

Student Ignacio Martinez was recently activated by the United States Marines and says that it is very likely he will end up deployed to Kuwait.

By David Grant
Collegian Staff

While many students at the University of Massachusetts prepare for that final semester push, at least one student's semester has come to an abrupt end due to war.

Ignacio Martinez, a 24-year-old undergraduate on inactive reserves, received his orders over spring break and will fly on Monday to Camp Pendleton in San Diego. After that, he will likely be deployed to Kuwait.

Martinez, a sophomore living on the Native American floor in the Central Residential Area's Chadbourne Hall, has been busy all week trying to tie up loose ends. Martinez is expected to be gone, according to the letter he received, at least one year, and maybe more.

"This is an interruption in my short-term goals, my education," said Martinez, while packing up his room. "I'm not sure when I'll be coming back."

ACCEPTING IT

Despite the somber news, Martinez has remained calm and has put aside all his own fear and nervousness to make the people around him feel more comfortable.

"People on my floor don't know how to approach me," said Martinez. "I want people to remember me for Ignacio, not a marine."

A confident and strong Martinez said it does no good to worry right now, but he knows those feelings eventually will surface.

"I don't think I will feel that way until I get back to the base," said Martinez.

Deidra Perez, a junior psychology major and neighbor of Martinez said, "Ignacio has no choice; it's frustrating and horrible."

Perez said that Martinez is smart and compassionate about human life and is worried about innocent people.

"We will miss him on the floor," she said.

Since the war began, the media has shown images of prisoners of war and their families, creating a sense of uncertainty of what will happen in the future.

Continued on page 3

Romney education head explains plan

Says key to plan is accountability

By Scott Eldridge II
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to convince students on 29 state university, college and community college campuses that Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney's education reform plan is sound, special education advisor to the governor Peter Nessen met yesterday with student journalists.

Business Consultants from Bain & Co. – Romney's former business firm – worked with Board of Higher Education employees to develop the proposal, aimed at cutting costs in the midst of a $3.2 billion funding crunch.

Research showed uneven spending among the schools, as well as a varied system of financial support for the schools. According to Nessen, the cost-saving measures were looked at separate from physical plant and maintenance operations.

Nessen explained the governor's proposal alongside Chancellor of the Board of Higher Education, Judith Gill. One question the proposal hopes to answer is, "How can we make it work more cost effectively for the students," she said.

The plan includes regionalization of many of the 29 state campuses, combining some state colleges and community colleges under the auspice of one administration.

"We think it's an opportunity to create resources that all of these campuses need," Nessen said.

Included in the cost savings from the shared administrative tasks, Nessen said that joint purchasing for campuses in a region would allow the schools to optimize on discounts for buying bulk items.

He stressed, however, that no campuses would be closed or lose their identity.

"It would be a sin for those communities," he said, "to lose those resources."

He went further to dispel a rumor that four campuses would close under this plan, saying that that solution is "too easy."

As for the five University of Massachusetts campuses, the proposal sets the UMass-Amherst campus as a stand-alone flagship campus separate from the other four UMass campuses.

The Amherst campus, he said, would look to increase international and out-of-state students to the campus, at a rate of 1,500 students per year. The plan would place tuition and fees under one label – student charges. A higher rate for out-of-state students, said Nessen, would help defray the costs for in-state students.

"If you can afford to pay more for public higher education then we're going to ask you to do so," said Gill. "The dollars that are given by those who can afford to give will go towards students who can't."

This, the proposal dictates, allows the state an opportunity to remain affordable to Massachusetts students and to use incoming revenue to increase student financial aid for in-state students – a $44 million package statewide. An additional $50 million would be saved, by the plan's estimates, as earned revenue for the campuses.

Also changed under this plan is statewide tuition retention. Currently, only student fees stay on campus. Tuition money from all 29 campuses flow into state coffers, and are then allocated by the legislature and the governor.

Combining administrations and creating "efficiencies" in college administrations would streamline "backdoor services" – including bursar services, human resources and other bureaucratic services on campuses. According to Nessen, this would save $33 million from state and community colleges and $33 million from the UMass system.

Before presenting this plan to the legislature, Nessen consulted the President's and chancellors' offices as to what cuts their respective schools could endure. UMass president William Bulger said the system could find $40 million to cut.

Continued on page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Peter Nessen, special advisor to Governor Mitt Romney on education, listens to questions during a conference yesterday.

Anti-war march planned for today

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

Five-College students plan to strike today, marching from Haigis Mall at the University of Massachusetts at 4:30 p.m. into Amherst Center to demonstrate students' lack of support for the war in Iraq.

The march is part of a weeklong campaign called "Spring Break-Out for Peace," organized by the Five-College Anti-War Coalition.

Students from Hampshire College, Amherst College, Mount Holyoke College, Smith College, UMass and Amherst Regional High School are planning various events throughout the day, including strikes and anti-war marches from UMass into Amherst and from Northampton High School into downtown Northampton. The march in Northampton is planned for 2 p.m. today.

The goal is to demonstrate a "massive rejection of Bush's war," said members of the Five-College Anti-War Coalition.

Hampshire students have planned to strike for the day. Mount Holyoke and Smith students are planning teach-ins, vigils and marches of their own. Student groups throughout the Pioneer Valley are also planning to meet at Haigis Mall today for the Amherst anti-war march.

Students from Amherst High School are planning to march to Haigis Mall and join the Five College students in a march to Amherst. High school students are also planning to refuse to take their seats during classes tomorrow in order to push for teachers to discuss the war in class.

Another event planned as part of the Five-College Anti-War Coalition's "Spring Break-Out for Peace" is a demonstration tomorrow at 4 p.m., from Kollmorgen Corporation, a weapons manufacturing plant on 347 King St. in Northampton, to the downtown area. The "die-in" is planned to be a dramatic event demonstrating local residents' lack of support for military manufactures. Civil disobedience will be a large part of the demonstration.

"Those who wish to participate in the die-in should wear white that they don't mind getting stained," said Lisa Depiano of the Antiwar Coalition, regarding the use of fake blood at the "die-in." These participants should "realize arrest is a probability," she said.

Those wishing to demonstrate their support with less risk of arrest should wear black, said members of the Anti-War Coalition.

Maya Angelou to speak tonight

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

In celebration of Women's History Month, the internationally respected writer, poet and educator Maya Angelou will speak at the University of Massachusetts tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Angelou, hailed as one of the greatest voices of contemporary literature, has appeared internationally, presenting issues of class and race struggles in her poetry and autobiographies. Known as a renaissance woman, she has authored 12 best-selling books, including "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings," "The Heart of a Woman" and her current best seller, "Song Flung Up to Heaven." She is also known for her most famous poetry collections, "I Shall Not Be Moved" and "Phenomenal Woman: Four Poems For Women."

Dr. Angelou is also an actress, producer and playwright. A member of the Director's Guild of America, Dr. Angelou has also produced six plays, including "And Still I Rise" for the Oakland Ensemble Theater. In addition to producing, she has starred in "Cabaret for Freedom." The multi-talented woman wrote the original screenplay and musical score for the film

"Georgia, Georgia." She was both the author and executive producer of a five-part television miniseries, Three Way Choice.

As an educator and activist, Dr. Angelou's work has extended far beyond her writing and performances. In 1960 she became the northern coordinator for the Southern Christian Leadership Congress (SCLC), where, under the leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, she became involved in the ongoing

Continued on page 3

KELLEY STEVANOVICH/COLLEGIAN

Maya Angelou

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 12
COMICS PAGE 11
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 11

A NEW MEDIA
WEB LOGS SHED LIGHT ON WAR IN IRAQ
PAGE 4

CANCER AWARENESS
RELAY FOR LIFE BRINGS HOME CAUSE
PAGE 5

NAILBITER?
UMASS LAX SAID TO FACE PENN STATE
PAGE 10

President and trustee elections ratified

HASA CASA granted money for conference

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The 2003 Presidential and Student Trustee elections were ratified by the Student Government Association (SGA) Senate last night. The SGA also made a $10,000 allocation to the Casa Dominicana and the Haitian American Student Association (HASA CASA) for a national conference that includes appearances by hip-hop artist Wyclef Jean and director Jonathan Demme.

Despite primary concerns over illegal campaigning, the SGA Senate passed this year's elections with few questions.

"I just want to thank everyone who helped me out with the elections," Chancellor of Elections Yousef Munayyer said. "I'm glad to say that these were very fair elections."

Student Trustee Bill Powers told the Senate that he felt that fixing the elections By-Laws of Title 8 of the SGA Constitution would enable even more successful elections in the future. Munayyer agreed, saying that not only were the rules of Title 8 complicated, but that action should be taken by the Senate to clarify details more clearly for future elections.

"Title 8 was an adventure to me, and I'm sure past Chancellors of Elections would agree with me. I think that they do need to be changed," Munayyer said. "There are things that should be dealt with to distinguish the guidelines more clearly to help anyone in the future deal with problems."

Munayyer commented on questions revolving around illegal campaigning, saying that all parties agreed to meet prior to last night's meeting, and that all the issues at hand had been resolved.

"The elections commissions job doesn't end after the Senate's ratification, and we will be working for 30 more business days so complaints can still be filed if individuals have problems," Munayyer said. "I know when appointed there were some people who may have doubted if I could do the job, and seeing the Senate ratify the elections makes me think that I was able to change those minds."

Members of the Senate also addressed the outcomes of this year's referendum questions and what action will be taken in the future, specifically around the issue of smoking on campus. Chair of University Policy Blake Kleppe addressed the Senate, saying that any input regarding smoking and possible regulations will be considered by University Policy.

Kleppe noted that all the referendum questions except for the smoking one passed with a large majority.

"A lot of these questions have to do with University

Continued on page 3

LIBRARY LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Newly elected Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi sits during yesterday's SGA meeting. In the background is Senator Levi O'Brien.

Student prepares for war

Ignacio Martinez

Martinez said the media has sensationalized the war, and that he is trying not to watch too much news before he leaves.

He has no delusions of morels sitting on the base, and has accepted the reality he may fight in the war.

"There is a real chance I will have to fight in Iraq," said Martinez, a sergeant in the Marines.

Martinez said some people don't understand that marines are human beings with feelings just like everyone else.

"People have misconceptions of Marines being gun toting sol diers," Martinez said. "It's not true at all."

COUNTING THE DAYS

As the clock ticks down to Monday, Martinez is spending time with his girlfriend, Sylvia Zamora, a junior at Smith College studying archology and Latin American studies.

"We've been in a relationship for three years," said Martinez, while smiling and looking at a picture of them.

Both Martinez and Zamora are from Los Angeles and have been away from each other before. Martinez was deployed to Kuwait for seven months for training and said the conditions there were horrible.

"When I was there it was 114 degrees in the desert with no [illegible] I was always scheduled for something," he said.

Martinez signed a three and-a-half year contract with four years of active duty and another two years of reserve duty. Now in active duty, the only require ment of him is to be reinstated in the event of war. With his previous experience in Kuwait, Martinez said he is not surprised that he received orders.

However, this time the circumstances are different, and combat may be inevitable.

"I'm not worried about being apart, we have been apart before. I'm worried about Ignacio going to war," said Zamora. "It's unpredictable and you can never be prepared for something like this."

Zamora is also upset that Martinez is being pulled out of school midway through the semester.

"It shows you where the priorities of our government are in terms of education," said Zamora.

Although he received a letter notifying him of his orders on March 12, the specific details were delivered to Martinez over spring break. Even with the news, Martinez kept his commitment to spend the week in North Carolina on a community service operation, repairing a historical replication of a Native American village damaged by several ice storms this past winter.

Joyce Vincent, Associate Director of Native American Support Services, was with Martinez on the trip. She said Martinez is "an extraordinary person and an excellent student."

Martinez is enrolled in two classes taught by Vincent.

Vincent said she is unsure what will happen to the investment Martinez has made in the semester. She said it's possible he will be withdrawn from the semester and receive a refund. She said the policy should be different.

"His investment in the semester should not be taken away from him," Vincent said. She said that if he has been producing A-grade level work, he should receive an A for the semester and leave on good academic standing.

She said the transition back to school should be an issue considered by the administration, since it could be shaky.

"We don't know what type of environment he will be in and he could have battle fatigue syndrome," Vincent said.

While Vincent has been doing her best to help Martinez prepare for his future, he thinks of her as more than just an advisor.

"She has been like a mother to me by showing concern, guiding me and making me feel comfortable," he said.

With all of his bags nearly packed, Martinez said he would hang out with Zamora and friends in what will be his final weekend of the semester at UMass.

Paratroopers land successfully

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

Army airborne forces parachuted into northern Iraq on Wednesday, seizing an airfield as a prelude to opening a northern front against Saddam Hussein. British warplanes bombed an enemy convoy fleeing the besieged city of Basra in the south.

One week into the war, the possibility of a major battle loomed within 100 miles of the capital as a larger convoy – this one made up of elite Republican Guard forces – moved in the direction of American troops aiming for Saddam's seat of power.

Jumping from low-flying jets into the Iraqi night, an estimated 1,000 paratroopers landed near an airstrip in Kurdish-controlled territory less than 30 miles from the Turkish border.

Hundreds of miles to the south, the unchallenged bombing of Iraqi forces leaving Basra raised hopes that ground troops could soon enter the city, feared at risk for a humanitarian crisis.

The military developments unfolded as the first humanitarian delivery of supplies rolled into southern Iraq, greeted at the border by hungry children.

With American and British forces massing to the south, west and now the north of Baghdad, the Iraqi regime kept much of the news from its own people. Instead, it emphasized a claim that two American cruise missiles had killed 14 civilians in Baghdad and wounded dozens more.

"This war is far from over," President Bush said in a quick trip to the Florida headquarters of U.S. Central Command, which is overseeing the war. Still, he said victory was only a matter of time, adding, "There will be a day of reckoning for the Iraqi regime, and that day is drawing near."

For the second straight day, swirling sandstorms hampered American units. The bombing campaign was crimped, as well, but Baghdad television was knocked off the air for several hours, and explosions were heard, as well, near the oil-rich city of Kirkuk in the north.

Lt. Col. Thomas Collins, spokesman for the U.S. Army Southern European Task Force, confirmed that paratroopers were on the ground, many of them elite Rangers. "I can only tell you yes, they've gone in. They're on the ground," he said.

American commanders had hoped to move a large force into northern Iraq from Turkey. But the parliament refused to allow that, and the parachute drop was the beginning of an alternative plan.

Harriers and Tornado jets flying out of Kuwait attacked the Iraqi convoy leaving Basra, a city of more than 1 million people in southern Iraq, according to a British military source. The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the column included as many as 120 vehicles, tanks and other armored vehicles.

Bush says toughest battles ahead

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

MacDILL AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) – President Bush said yesterday the war in Iraq is far from over and the toughest battles lie ahead as coalition forces near Baghdad. After rallying troops, Bush flew to Camp David for a war council with British Prime Minister Tony Blair.

"I can assure you there will be a day of reckoning for Iraq, and that day is drawing near," Bush told hundreds of cheering American troops and their family members in a packed hangar in Florida.

"Our military is making good progress in Iraq, yet this war is far from over," he said, making a last-minute change of wording that dropped a reference to the U.S. military being "ahead of schedule."

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer, briefing reporters on the way here aboard Air Force One, said Bush would tell his audience, "our progress is ahead of schedule, yet this war is far from over."

Bush decided to delete the "ahead of schedule" phrase during a final review of the speech on the plane, aides said later.

U.S.-led troops encountered stiffening Iraqi resistance as the ground war entered a sixth day. And American and British casualties raised questions about battle plans.

But Bush proclaimed anew that allied forces would prevail and overthrow the government of Saddam Hussein.

"As they approach Baghdad, our fighting units are facing the most desperate elements of a doomed regime. We cannot know the duration of this war, but we are prepared for the battle ahead," Bush said in his hangar speech.

"We will stay on the path, mile by mile, all the way to Baghdad and all the way to victory," he said to thunderous applause.

Bush received classified briefings on the war during his visit to the headquarters of the U.S. Central Command on this Air Force base in Tampa, Fla. The unit's top general, Tommy Franks, is running the war from a command center in Qatar.

The president spoke a day after the first bodies of American servicemen were brought back to the United States.

"We pray that God will bless and receive each of the fallen, and we thank God that liberty found such brave defenders," the president said.

He said their deaths would not be in vain.

"Day by day, Saddam Hussein is losing his grip on Iraq. Day by day, the Iraqi people are closer to freedom," he said.

Beset by criticism that the war was being mainly fought by U.S. and British troops, Bush listed contributions from other coalition members.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester, The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating with revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. In 1891, the College Signal is [illegible] the Weekly Collegian in 1904 and then the Collegian in 1906. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a [illegible] publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call 413-545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

2003 MAKING ART
Making a Living
Wednesday workshops for emerging artists
Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

• Visual Artists and Writers April 2
• Marketing • Galleries
• Distributors • Contests
• Agents
Daniel Grant, author of How to Start and Succeed as an Artist

• Performing Artists April 9
• Marketing • Agents
• Contracts • Working in Education
• Collaborations
Jazz guitarist Michael Gregory and theater artist and educator Tracy Vernon

• Art and the Law April 23
• Co-sponsored by Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts of Massachusetts

• Art-Related Careers for Artists April 30
• Web sites • Teaching • Licensing
• Careers involving additional study (art conservation, art appraisal, art therapy, architecture, interior design, scientific and medical illustration)
• Arts Management
• Publishing, art galleries, museums, the theater, collectibles
• The design field
Daniel Grant

Who should come?
• UMass and Area Students in the Arts
• Dancers • Visual Artists
• Musicians • Actors • Writers
No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $20 or $40 for the series. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@contined.umass.edu to reserve a seat.
For more information: www.umass.edu/aes

plus Arts and Activism
Thursday, April 15
Find out about the power of the arts to make a difference in your community.
Media artist and 5-College visiting professor Liz Miller joins visual artist Beverly Naidu in showcasing their community-based cultural work.

UMASS Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on. (Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

SGA ratifies elections; grants conference money

Continued from page 1

Policy, and now we are going to have to take our constituents' voices and make a decision," he said.

The Senate also approved a $10,000 loan from the Finance Reserves fund for HASA CASA to help fund its upcoming Blood Sweat Tears Spirit of Survival event, which will occur from April 4 to April 6. The national conference is the first to be held at a public university.

"To me there is absolutely no question that every dollar given is being spent to the fullest and it will be paid back within a week of the event," Chair of the Finance Committee Pat Higgins said.

The SGA also passed a motion requesting that Auxiliary Services create a debit system within its services plan that would allow students to pay for their full meal amount. Currently the YCMP meal plan allows you one swipe of $5.50 to be spent regardless of the purchase price.

The motion requests that further proposed changes surrounding the prices of new programs be discussed with members of the SGA. It also requests that the price of food not be affected by any program that may be introduced in the future.

"This is probably one of the more important motions that we've passed all semester because students really lose a lot of money, especially if all they want to buy is a coffee and a cookie. Hopefully we'll be able to get this rolling," Speaker Dan Saunders said.

"I think the Senate is moving quickly and I just want to make sure that we maintain the relationships we have made this year and continue them into the next year," he said.

Insider's view

An inside perspective of Tuesdays anti-war rally held on the steps of the Student Union. The rally did not receive as much attention as previous gatherings. At its peak an estimated 150-200 students were in attendance.

Angelou to speak at Fine Arts Center

Continued from page 1

struggle for civil rights. She served as an ambassador for UNICEF International in 1996, and is a member of several service committees, including the W.E.B. DuBois Foundation here in Massachusetts. Dr. Angelou is also well known for her work improving conditions for women in third world countries, primarily in Africa.

Dr. Angelou's achievements have earned her much recognition. In 1981, she was appointed to a lifetime position as the first Reynolds Professor of American Studies at Wake Forest University. In 1995 the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences presented her with a spoken-word Grammy for "Phenomenal Woman."

In January 1993 she read "On the Pulse of Morning" for Bill Clinton's inauguration, and became the second poet in U.S. History to have the honor of writing and reciting original work at a Presidential Inauguration.

Dr. Angelou's visit is one of many events taking place this week in honor of "A History We Call Our Own: Women of Color Week at UMass," an event sponsored by a number of organizations on the UMass campus. The events feature well-known women of color, including artists, writers and activists. The events are all designed to highlight the contributions and visions of women of color during women's history month.

"We couldn't think of a better speaker than Maya Angelou," said Jillian Stasiak, president of the Distinguished Visitors Program. "She touches on so many identities here at UMass, she's a perfect representative for this week."

Other women featured this week include Betita Martinez, M. Jacqui Alexander and Sister Souljah. The "Women of Color Week" is sponsored by the Office of ALANA Affairs, the Women of Color Leadership Network, Women's Studies, the Distinguished Visitors Program, the Black Student Union, Solidarity and Food For Thought Books.

"An Evening with Maya Angelou" is currently sold out. For more information contact the Distinguished Visitors Program at umassdvp@yahoo.com or the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511.

Business leaders support Bulger

BOSTON (AP) – Four high-tech business leaders yesterday threw their support behind University of Massachusetts President William Bulger, whose office would be eliminated under Gov. Mitt Romney's proposed budget.

The open letter to Romney and Bulger was signed by Ray Stata, chairman of Analog Devices; George W. Chamillard, chief executive of Teradyne, Inc.; Henri A Termer, president of Genzyme Corp.; and Michael J. Costello, managing partner of PriceWaterhouseCoopers.

"As entrepreneurs and technologists, we appreciate the governor's bold efforts to transform state government, particularly the state's public higher education system," they wrote.

"However, we do not believe that replacing the UMass president's office with a new governance structure and dismantling the current five-campus system is good for the future of public higher education, science research or our technology economy," they said.

Bulger spokesman John Hoey said the president has worked hard in his seven-year tenure to build relations with the business community.

Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman said they "appreciate the input" from the high-tech leaders, but plan to push ahead with their proposed reorganization.

"The main function of President Bulger and his office is to allocate funds to the campuses and raise money," Feddeman said. "Under Gov. Romney's reorganization plan, both of these responsibilities will be handled elsewhere."

Romney hopes to cut higher education spending by $100 million. Bulger has launched his own campaign to preserve the system, and his $309,000-a-year job.

Under the governor's plan, the flagship Amherst campus would be spun off into a state-funded but independently run institution and UMass Medical School in Worcester would be privatized.

Six state college and community college campuses in central and western Massachusetts would be merged.

UMass campuses in Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell would lose a combined $17 million and operate in a regional system. The College of Art and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy would be spun off and independently run.

-Associated Press

Nessen explains plan

Continued from page 1

The restructured higher education system, said Nessen, allows schools to operate for the benefit of the students. "Campuses haven't remembered what they're about," he said.

The plan, he continued, would counter the financial burdens that students face when fees are raised year after year.

"We're looking for them to reinvest in the right areas. We just think it has been a lazy process," said Nessen of school expenditures.

Campuses would be rated by their performance and held accountable, said Nessen, to statewide standards of performance. However, individual campuses would enter into contracts on their performance with the board.

"If the campus doesn't buy it, you can't hold it accountable to a performance it never agreed to," he said.

Hostage released after 5 hours

By MARTIN FINUCANE
Associated Press

LOWELL, Mass. (AP) – A female hostage was released unharmed yesterday after she was held for nearly five hours in a variety store by two men who took her captive after a botched jewelry store heist, police said.

The woman ran to safety in a police armored car outside Mickey's Variety store just before 5 p.m. The suspects surrendered minutes afterward, exiting with their hands up while a SWAT team trained guns on them. Onlookers applauded the police after the suspects were taken away.

"This was a phenomenally successful conclusion to a very dangerous incident," said Lowell Deputy Police Superintendent Kenneth Lavallee.

Police had been unable to reach the suspects for hours because they didn't answer the phone in the convenience store, despite repeated calls. Finally, they picked up.

"I think they understood they had no other option," said Richard Stanley, North Andover chief of police and commander of the Northeastern Massachusetts Law Enforcement Council SWAT team, which responded to the scene.

Police did not immediately release the names of the suspects or their alleged hostage.

The incident began around noon, when two men allegedly robbed a nearby jewelry store and tied up the owner, Lowell police Capt. William Taylor said.

When the suspects exited the store, a Lowell police cruiser happened to be nearby on an unrelated matter, Taylor said. Seeing the police, the suspects rushed into the convenience store on Chelmsford Street and took a hostage, Taylor said.

The SWAT team sealed off and evacuated the area and began efforts to reach the suspects.

Police finally reached the men by phone around 4:30 p.m. The hostage was released and the men were in custody in about half an hour.

Lavallee said the outcome was the result of "a very controlled, very deliberate response to a very dangerous situation."

A SWAT team takes two suspects into custody yesterday after a female hostage was held for five hours in a variety store.

Write for news

Rent One of Ours
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Cargo Vans
POTTERS
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass Amherst

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0711
135 Main St. Northampton 586-0355

U Card
U Get Credit!
Swipe your Ucard when you purchase any vended Coca-Cola product, and you are automatically entered to WIN $100, $50, $25, or $10 credit on your Ucard!
GO UMASS !!!

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST
online at www.fineartscenter.com
545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS FOR TICKETS
Catch the beat
Share the Joy

SUNDAY, MARCH 9: ROTTERDAM PHILHARMONIC
FAC Concert Hall at 3:30pm

SATURDAY, APRIL 12: MINGUS BIG BAND
FAC Concert Hall at 8pm

THURSDAY, APRIL 17: RHYTHM IN SHOES WITH THE RED CLAY RAMBLERS IN RAMBLESHOE
FAC Concert Hall at 7:30pm

Rambleshoe
Rhythm in Shoes
RED CLAY RAMBLERS

TAKE 3 and SAVE 15%
545-2511 OR
1-800-999-UMAS
TICKETS ONLY $7, $10, $15
FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Web forums should continue to offer different opinions

As the war in Iraq continues, its most consistent theme has also been its most damning element – uncertainty. The more we hear, the less we know, and the vast differences in opinion are often broad enough to leave some people unwilling or unable to form and voice strong opinions of their own.

Most consistent, for better or worse, has been the media coverage – not in terms of accuracy or full-on objectivity, but in the unparalleled access they've gained to live combat situations and the soldiers leading them. In the midst of talking heads that still wildly speculate on little information and repeat three minutes of information over the course of an hour, the opportunity to let the cameras do a majority of the speaking has brought the conflict home, and perhaps helped to shed light on the realities of war that had previously been obscured to the public eye.

Even still, the coverage will never be wholly comprehensive – it's an unrealistic, and perhaps unwelcome idea that could never, in any shape or manner, be carried off to a degree of success. The variables are too great, the geography too expansive and the intelligence too shrouded to be shared freely in a public sphere.

In light of that, however, the current conflict in Iraq has adopted an alternative method of reporting that has, in some cases, sidestepped the interests of the networks and sent home more primitive and personal accounts. The Web log community – a rampant breeding ground for discussion (if it exists, it has a home here) – has attached itself to the war, and some of its most visible components are those reporting with broadcast outlets and print publications. Perhaps confined by editorial hands, reporters are now submitting copy straight to the people – a refreshing idea that cuts through the image campaigns run by nearly everyone else.

Which doesn't agree with the networks. CNN drew the line at Kevin Sites, who was filing reports and uploading pictures from the front on his blog. Time Magazine has been more lenient; the emphasis is on the publication, and there is freedom to post at will once the work has been done. In a time of misinformation, it's healthy to see a mass periodical allow its reporters such free reign.

The military has also allowed for a surprising amount of freedom as well. Soldiers have busied themselves filing first-person accounts and photos from the front, offering editorialized but strong images of the war that is being fought; the war we're likely not seeing on television, hearing on the radio or reading about in the papers.

Despite the obvious wealth of opinion, information and dialogue that blogs can produce, the potential upside must realistically be countered by another obvious truth – the ease with which reality can be distorted. Free from the editor's hands, we must learn to pick and choose our way among those in the mix.

It's another advancement, another step, and a welcome one if it's approached carefully. We're hearing voices that have been silenced and seeing faces that have too long been hidden. We at The Collegian hope the movement matures into a steady and productive one.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

Information needs to get out sooner

Scott Eldridge II

"So, what's this?"

"What's what?"

"This, this story, it says something about the police arresting people... protesters I guess... what's the deal?"

"Be more specific, do you want to know why the police are arresting or why the protesters are protesting?"

"I guess I want to know both," the high school student replied.

Chemistry on a Tuesday morning in March is a far cry from a hypothetical current affairs class in any month.

"Anyone else have any questions about today's paper? We have 10 minutes left and most of you have finished your work." At that point the attempt to summarize months of diplomatic struggles, years of military conflict and even centuries of strife laden nationalism was, at most, desperate. What was offered, though, was without a doubt appreciated.

"We don't get this anywhere else," one female student divulged.

"Not even in history, no other teachers are talking about this?"

"Some are, but not really. They tell us to follow the news but its tough stuff."

Agreed. Even after years of "understanding" the conflict it's a challenge to explain. On a later half duty, that same student was seen watching a history lesson on the political climate and international diplomacy of the Middle East so attentively that she didn't notice the fill-in educator sitting outside that room for a moment, with education now reaffirmed.

Later in the day more questions – alas from new, under-informed pupils – posed in the same inquisitive, hopeful demeanor.

"I don't get the whole deal. We are at war but they can't bomb us, can't reach our soil and haven't attacked any other country in over a decade?"

There were some facts, building blocks to work off of at least. Trying to bridge a political chasm, the explanations were delivered. Fifty-fifty, some understood the information and asked more questions. Particular interest in a TIME magazine article on war commander Tommy Franks sparked a few more.

"Spoiled by the availability of information, the seminars, the speakers, the rallies, the towering library, the high speed access - it's easy to appreciate and take our options for granted."

At least there was dialogue. Still, time was precious, the bell rang, the day drew to a close.

Spoiled by the availability of information, the seminars, the speakers, the rallies, the towering library, the high-speed access – its easy to appreciate and take our options for granted. Prowar, pro-life, pro-student, pro-Kennedy, pro-Bush. At UMass these are options made available by the choices we have, whether checking out Sut Jhally's latest documentary, David Horowitz's talk against reparations several years ago or navigating through John Nash's resource economics, day by day we are given an unwieldy amount of resources for information.

These high schoolers are not.

Confined to the math, history, English and sciences we all saw in wave one of secondary education, it limits what we can learn before the voting age. With the trial of times including war, torturous politics and waning economics it is important to extend the offering to a younger faction.

High schools looking to fill their yearbooks with photos of the educated, best and brightest would be wise to set time aside and explain the world today.

It is frightening to think that the same students who were shaky on their current events may opt for military service when time permits. Several students were waging on the rebellious front. "School is a waste," one opined, "I'm out of here at 16 whether my parents like it or not."

Maybe he'll stick around if he's learning about where he's living, what his country is up to, what other countries are up to.

Maybe one period a week, 15 minutes a day, anything added to explain the world he is so anxious to enter would inspire this 15-year-old to finish his "four-year-sentence."

We can only serve to better our society by helping these students out, by offering what we know about what is going on and adding to their coffers of information.

Especially in a time that is propelled so quickly by knowing what's going on.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian Columnist.

Lie down, roll over and play dead

Mark Ostroff

An old man stands in downtown Baghdad, holding the little girl in his arms. Her right leg is missing at the knee and all that is left is hanging pieces of bone and muscle and blood trickles down from her mouth and onto the old man's pants as he unloads her from a truck and lays her alongside other children with similarly stolen childhoods.

Her face is frozen with shock and awe, proving the success of the military campaign that bears the same name.

As American televisions become gorged with the animation of waving flags, THX-tested cinematic logos and controversial "analysts and commentators," the truth about the war, its cause and impact become water under the bridge.

In due time, the reality of shell-shocked children will simply cease with the push of a button, as we tune in to watch trash-talking media hacks like Bill O'Reilly and Mike Savage, who would claim their own mothers were terrorists if it got them ratings.

Although they're not real news anchormen, many people hold them with the same regard that one would give a real journalist. They use their time and pseudo-wisdom to trash liberal opponents on TV, sending a message that those who do not support our leaders belong with the terrorists.

As corporate media outlets allow these obnoxious "commentators" to sway American opinion with grossly subjective and ignorant rubbish, the Bush administration wallows in the filth of mass ignorance, by way of the escalating culture of blind loyalty in America.

In a culture where skepticism leads to shame, America is becoming nothing more than a pack of wagging dogs, waiting for another treat from their master, who always has one.

Americans are being encouraged to wrap themselves in a flag and "stand by the President" without asking any questions.

During the Clinton years, American taxpayers funded the entire payroll of the Taliban government. Now, we're expected to believe that we're on a mission to rid the world of "evil" dictators. How could a rational person eat this up when their government funds and supports regimes throughout the world that kill and torture their own people?

Another thing I would like to know is how our leaders expect us to support their actions when they're constantly caught in a web of lies and humiliation. Let's look back at our fiasco in the UN, in which the very case against Iraq was flawed from the constant barrage of "intelligence" that Colin Powell had presented to the UN Security Council. It turned out to be plagiarized from outdated information with "cooked" figures. This included documents that cited Iraq's uranium mining operations, which were, in fact, confirmed as a forgery. Why do we think that this does not deserve scrutiny?

Let's also remember that these inspectors were sent on wild-goose chases over "sanitized" chemical weapon sites that didn't even have running water.

Does "standing by our leaders" also compel Americans to accept that Halliburton actually "won a contract" for putting out fires and rebuilding oil wells in Iraq? What our vice president forgot to mention is that when he was CEO for this corporation, he had done roughly $8 million in business with Saddam Hussein (the enemy).

This corporation is currently under investigation for fraud (Enron style) and has our vice president on their payroll for "consulting fees." However, there is no conflict of interest whatsoever, because the White House says that there isn't.

In the context of this whole situation, I will not support my leaders. I will not wrap myself up in the flag along with the rest of the deluded. I have neither the heart nor the stomach for such an Orwellian cause.

I will never support the actions of our troops in Iraq. I will only wish them a safe return. I wish the same for the Iraqi people as well. Unlike what many would like you to think, they have families too. If this means that I become a member of the "Axis of Weasels" then so be it. I follow my own conscience, not someone else's.

It's easy to support a cause when you don't have to be the one to explain to the little girl why it was only right and justified that she was maimed and traumatized for life. I don't think that any of us will ever be able to give her a good enough reason.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

editor@dailycollegian.com

(413) 545-1592

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

Letter to the Editor

Celebrating women in more positive ways

To the Editor:

I am writing this column in response to the article by Ben Feder, titled "Misconceptions of Poster Women." I would like to call attention to a few things not mentioned in his article. Whether we all like it and accept it or not, women have a deeply rooted desperation to look like the women in the media. The fact that men find poster women's physical attributes desirable enough to put them on their walls reinforces that desperation. The constant bombardment of media is a major force of socialization. Few of us ever stop to think about who told us that these women were desirable, and why it is that we find shapes and sizes of certain body parts to be ideal. We are all products of our upbringing and various degrees of socialization.

The generalization that is made in saying that, "We males love women. We love everything about them" is a little scary to me because it ignores the fact that there are men in the world who do not love women at all. Some men are so conditioned by this portrayal of women as simply objects that they learn to appreciate only the body parts and the sexual satisfaction that they get from women. For this reason, women even on this campus have to be fearful of being alone at night outside and in the bathrooms and hallways of the dorms where they live (which are supposed to be at least as safe for women as they are for their male neighbors). The education here is supposed to be equal opportunity, but how can it be when women, in seeking out the school's resources, have to either wait for a friend to go to the library with, risk going alone, experiencing fear and anxiety or not go at all. The men on campus can take a walk to the library at night with confidence for the most part that they will not be attacked. For these reasons and numerous others, I am not able to be "cool" and shrug off my boyfriend and other men ogling at nearly nude women. As a female, I am beginning to see more and more the potential consequences of this seemingly harmless activity.

I truly appreciate the attempt to justify an everyday activity of many men's (and women's) lives. Regarding women and men as objects is something that many people do and accept without understanding the reasons behind it. The action of objectifying is a product of a system that I also have yet to grasp completely. This system is an intriguing and at times dangerous mechanism in shaping who we are. I see it too often succeed in limiting our capacity to view each other as human beings. Every time a comment is made about a body part as if it were some hot car to be admired or a commodity to be had, a human being is deprived of the chance to be seen as a person with emotions and a personality.

I acknowledge that as a product of our socialization, women objectify men as well. Some of the consequences of this that I know of are those of men becoming addicted to lifting weights and steroids in order to achieve the "ideal" male body. Men seem to be terrified of being "skinny" and not "jacked" enough. I believe that these consequences are indeed valid, but if we are to recognize them, we cannot ignore the ever-present consequences that women face. These include but are not limited to: seeking facial reconstructive operations, breast implants, liposuction, (and on a smaller scale to achieve the same effect) buying push up bras, high heels, tummy control bathing suits and various make-up products, (and the more devastating) developing emotional disorders such as depression and Body Dysmorphic Disorder, and what we always hear about, the eating disorders.

The statement made that "Men also love to celebrate women. That is why we display scantily clad girls up on our walls" is an interesting contradiction. If the true intention had been to celebrate women, the focus would be on their intelligence, strength and personal qualities. The act of displaying them merely supports the fact that women are quite often appreciated for their appearances, and not for their qualities as people.

I would like to see some of these issues kept in mind, especially in the discussion of misconceptions. I will leave off with this final thought – consider also the women whose careers as models we are supporting by the mass consumption of these posters (magazines, calendars, videos, etc.). They may not necessarily like what they are doing. My younger sister who was seriously pursuing modeling had been told by an agency that she (6 ft tall, 125 lbs with the thin amazon model look of right now) would have to drop two sizes before they would even consider her. With her already tiny frame, I firmly believe that if she had gone through with it and dropped two sizes, she would not live to experience the results of her efforts. A few weeks later, my mom happened to get some valuable advice from a family friend who happens to be a model attorney. He asked her about my sister: "Is she happy with her social life, and have a lot of friends? Does she like being active and does she do sports? Does she do well in school?" The answer to all of these was yes. He then advised my mother not to encourage a modeling career and he summed up in a few words the biggest misconception concerning poster women: these girls are not having fun.

Yvette LaRue
UMass student

Real communication in an increasingly electronic world

Jamie Loo

After returning from spring break, I've finally let winter go. Despite the fact that I didn't get to go sledding with my DC tray one last time, being in Florida last week has warmed me up to the idea that spring is fast approaching.

Yes, I was in Florida. My regards to everyone else who was at home or working over break; I did that for my first two spring breaks (I feel your pain). And while I can't say my Florida experience was anything like one of my colleagues, who spent Spring Break with a colony of people over 70, I spent my break with people who were mostly under age 12 (including some of my friends who acted like they were two). We were in Walt Disney World for the week and went to all the theme parks in Orlando. Seems happy and magical, right? Not quite. Ten people, ten different personalities and interests made for an interesting mix.

We could've made several television shows out of Spring Break, including a spin-off of the Real World and Survivor: Orlando. By the second day most of us had voted at least four other people out of the condo and into exile at the Comfort Inn on International Drive with our other friends. The few times all ten of us were together there was some conflict or another. Thus we broke off into small groups for a good portion of the trip, meeting occasionally for meals and for attractions we all wanted to see. This was accomplished conveniently with the aid of cell phones.

"It's so much more meaningful to pick up the phone and hear 'Hello' from someone you care about than to hear a bubba-bling from instant messenger."

I don't have a cell phone. Up until this year, I hated the thought of ever getting one for my future occupation. I always maintained that if I was away from a reachable phone line, chances were I didn't want to hear from anybody. Plus, there really never is a convenient time to have your cell phone on. Whenever you go somewhere, such as a movie or to class, ideally you can't have your cell phone on. It would be tough to turn it on walking between classes as well, especially if you're walking and talking to someone else. Adding to the frustration is the possibility that I would become an annoying cell phone user. You know, the type of people who drive carelessly talking on the phone or who just walk into the road at crosswalks without looking. I never want to be "that" person. Problem is, life has been busy enough that I need certain people to be able to reach me at all times and I need to be able to reach the outside world too, from anywhere.

When we were in Florida we used them like walkie-talkies to meet up with each other, and if I wasn't with someone with a cell phone then I was usually lost. Due to this I got screwed twice at Pleasure Island (not in that way, pervert!), and ended up taking the bus back to the hotel alone one of those times because I couldn't meet up with my friends. The other cell phone-less person on the trip, Joe, luckily never got lost.

I guess constantly being surrounded by people with cell phones has caused me to cave in to the need for one. I've never been one for technology; I wholeheartedly hung onto my Walkman and fought off CD players in high school, and it took me a while to catch onto the instant messaging and e-mail craze. I'm still desperately clinging onto my professional 35 mm cameras and rolls of film, while most of my photography inclined friends have moved onto professional grade digital cameras. Yet, the times are changing and I suppose this is part of our changing society.

I think my true fear lies in the loss of communication between people. As much as I like being able to e-mail people and get messages almost instantaneously, I miss seeing handwriting and stationery. There's so much more of a connection when you can see your friend's handwriting and the time they took to write to you; to see the type of stationery they used, the way it's folded or the way it smells, and in tough times a teardrop on the page. There's so much personality in a handwritten letter. I also miss having long phone conversations with my friends as opposed to talking over instant messenger. It's so much more meaningful to pick up the phone and hear a "Hello" from someone you care about than to hear a bubba-bling from instant messenger. Plus, you have the added bonus that you have that person's complete attention talking to you, and not to six other people.

Despite my initial reservations, I've learned to embrace technology and will probably get a cell phone in the future. I think having a cell phone will help me increase my communication with friends because no matter where I am, I'll be able to reach them, or in spring break's case, meet up with people. And though the ten of us were not necessarily the happiest together at all times, at least when we were apart we could still reach each other at a moment's notice and attempt to have peace. And when we were together, we were in each other's faces communicating loudly and clearly and not via fiberoptics.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

Did you know?

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Arts and Living examines quitting tobacco smoking and anti-use activism.

Story and design by Jennifer Eastwood

TOM SCHIFF SITS IN HIS OFFICE at Health Services at the University of Massachusetts. It's an eclectic room, papers askew over desktops. On one wall, a poster of a Claude Monet-painted field of flowers hangs. On another lies a diagram of a cigarette and many of its negative effects on a human life.

Tom Schiff is the Tobacco Treatment Specialist at the University. An ex-smoker himself, Schiff spends his days advocating methods to quit smoking. His schedule is packed. He meets with students to discuss options or obstacles in their quitting smoking. He also arranges ways for activists to spread messages against high-rolling cigarette industries over campus.

But why, you ask?

Health, he answers.

Over 400,000 U.S. deaths annually stem from smoking-related illnesses, states one statistic in Schiff's thick pile of information – all on tobacco usage.

Smoking is the single largest cause of preventable sickness and death in the country, another one reveals.

More and more statistics follow, each one on par with the ones handed out by local bureaus of the American Cancer Society across the country.

Tobacco relates to 87 percent of all lung cancer deaths and 30 percent of all cancer deaths, yet another states.

And more continue. If all adults ceased using tobacco and no children started, almost 30 percent of all cancer deaths would be prevented.

But beyond all of these widely gauged numbers and national projections, Schiff provides the statistics for closer to home. He surfs through a bit more of his papers for this one, but soon, he finds it.

"They're tired of smoking. They feel their lungs. They know they can't walk up the stairs or hill the way they used to..."
-Tom Schiff of UMass Health Services

"Twenty-five to 30 percent," he says.

Yes, 25-30 percent of UMass undergraduates right here in the Pioneer Valley use tobacco in some fashion (mostly through cigarette smoking, Schiff says). Those within that percent seeking to quit have support groups and other local outlets to help them. Schiff's office is one such example.

Schiff says, recalling his youth, that he smoked tobacco frequently in high school and college – up to a pack a day at times. By the time he reached his mid-20s though, he had pretty much stopped. He continued to "dabble" in what he calls social smoking, but that too soon came to an end.

He says his reasons for quitting first came down to health alone. As a self-proclaimed "athletic guy," Schiff says he slowly became aware of the relationship between his physical activities and his smoking.

"The older I get, the more health conscious I become," Schiff adds.

At the time, Schiff chose to quit in stages. The majority of his smoking ended swiftly under a conscious effort, but the dabbling lingered as part of his social existence. Over the years, however, Schiff began to read and hear facts about the tobacco industry itself. This, he says, is where his stance on smoking even on the rare social occasion began to shift.

"Everybody knows smoking's not good for you, but I started looking at the way [the cigarette industry] does advertising," he says.

Accompanying his trailed-off sentiment was a sheet he provided listing 10 reasons why to stop smoking. The last item on it, "to be an independent thinker," offered a few claims supporting Schiff's disgust.

"The Tobacco Industry thrives on manipulating people into thinking they are a positive influence in our culture," one such claim stated. "Yet the Tobacco Industry spends more annually on advertising their charitable works than they do on the charitable works themselves."

And, to mark his political stance as well as for his own health's sake, Schiff decided to forego tobacco smoking altogether. But it wasn't easy, he adds.

Schiff recalls his recovery period – a time before nicotine replacements were available. Images of toothpicks and chewing gum flood his mind, he says, for such items were used to sooth the feelings he had from smoking urges.

"That's what worked for me," Schiff says. "But everyone who smokes has a different relationship with tobacco. It has different meanings for different people. The ways in which people quit are individual."

Schiff was offered his current position a year ago, where he had the opportunity to work with treatment as well as with education.

"It's one thing to educate people," Schiff says. "It's another to help people go through the process. It can be really hard for them."

But he's up for the challenge.

UMass students who do smoke tobacco tend to increase their use from freshman to senior year, Schiff says, and so, many of the students who do come to him for counseling are older students who feel they are tired of the habit.

"[More] people quit [and come to him] when it gets to be springtime," Schiff says. "They're tired of smoking. They feel their lungs. They know they can't walk up the stairs or hill the way they used to. Their teeth are yellow. They're tired of burn holes in their clothes. They are tired of being told they can't smoke in restaurants – tired of the expense."

He notes how the average pack of cigarettes equates about $5 when state taxes are included, and that such an expense for a smoker who goes through a pack a day reaches approximately $1,800 in cost.

Schiff's specialty area is discussing the health concerns that accompany smoking, but the program, he says, is small right now. But like all things he believes are important, it wasn't easy, he adds.

However, with funding now recently cut short because of statewide cuts to social programs like Schiff's (about 90 percent of the funding), the future of his counseling services may indeed be uncertain. Those involved may even look into some form of public and private donations system to increase funding, Schiff explained.

"Smoking is the single largest cause of preventable sickness and death in the country..."

But there's one thing for certain. "I think we're pretty committed to having this service be free," he says.

This is but one service of many across the state and even in the area. But it is one service right here on this campus designed specifically for its students.

I want to quit.

What can help?

- Look into prescription or over-the-counter medications to help subdue your withdrawal symptoms or urges to smoke.
- Inform others, including friends and family, of your intention to quit smoking. Seek support from those closest to you.
- Gain support from free or low cost health care services.
- Remove objects that remind you of smoking (matches, lighters, ashtrays, etc.) from your living/working environments.
- Cleanse your house and/or automobile of a cigarette smell.
- Ask your friends who smoke not to smoke around you.
- Avoid places where smokers frequently gather.
- Use physical and mental activities to calm any nervous energy. Try taking long strolls or deep breaths of fresh air. Busy yourself with crossword puzzles or even gardening.
- Use oral substitutes - toothpicks, carrots, apples, raisins - to help counteract smoking urges.
- Don't fool yourself into a "one won't hurt" attitude. It will.

THE ABOVE TIPS ARE SUGGESTIONS ADVOCATED BY THE AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

COURTESY AMERICAN CANCER ASSOCIATION

American Cancer Association Relay for Life coming soon

HAVE YOU EVER LOVED a person so much you would do anything to help them out? Have you ever loved someone so much and know that they love you in return? And finally, have you ever lost that person you love to a heart-breaking illness that robs people of their lives regardless of their age, sex or religion? I know you have; by now I'm sure we all have. And if you've ever wanted to start doing something about it, your chance is coming at the end of April.

For the first time ever, the American Cancer Society is bringing its Relay for Life to the Five College Area of Western Massachusetts. The college communities of Amherst, Hampshire, the University of Massachusetts, Smith and Mount Holyoke will be participating in the program to celebrate those who have won their battles

Continued on page 7

Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds charm the Oakdale

Duo venture out on first accoustic tour since the summer of 1999

By Megan Healy
Collegian Staff

When Dave Matthews walks on a stage one can expect that he will be greeted with vigorous applause and a chorus of shouts and screams. It is a given. Men scream. Women scream. "I love you, Dave." All are on a first-name basis.

The scene was not much different at the Careerbuilder.com Oakdale Theatre in Wallingford, Conn. last Wednesday, when Matthews, accompanied by musician Tim Reynolds, took the stage to kick off their long anticipated acoustic tour. The Oakdale exploded with cheers and applause that lasted for nearly five minutes, as eager fans welcomed back the now legendary Matthews and Reynolds.

Dave Matthews with Tim Reynolds
Wallingford, Conn
March 19

For die-hard fans of Dave Matthews and his band, this show marked the triumphant return of a collaboration that many believed would never come together.

By the late 90s Matthews and his guitar virtuoso had set out on three different acoustic tours, performing at college auditoriums across the country. In 1999 they even released a live album from a show they had played at Luther College in Decorah, Iowa back in 1998.

For reasons that can only really be known to Matthews and Reynolds there was no acoustic tour in the years following. Uncertainty surrounding the situation led most to believe that the Dave and Tim shows were a thing of the past. No one expected to see the musicians perform together again.

The audience at the Oakdale realized it was witnessing a moment in musical history, the energy was electrifying in the moderately sized theatre.

With 11 albums under his belt and with the addition of nearly 30 new songs to the Dave Matthews Band repertoire since the last acoustic tour in 1999, Matthews had a wide array of material to choose from, and predictably buzz left many wondering what would make it onto stage. So when Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds reached for their guitars, the crowd silenced and respectfully sat down.

Opening with last year's radio favorite, a timely anthem about the necessity of love, "Everyday" gave the crowd its first taste of the Dave and Tim experience. At the end of the first number, Matthews addressed the audience, expressing sadness over the current state of world affairs.

"We've made a decision. The entire world from this day on will live in peace and harmony," he said, and urged audience members to "spread the word." The musician's anti-war sentiment appeared to be shared by many, as overwhelming applause broke out for the second, and certainly not the last, time that evening.

The musicians consulted one another for a moment and then broke into the heartrending ballad "Grace is Gone." Though slightly shaky, the visibly nervous Matthews delivered one of the most highly impassioned renditions of the song since its first appearance in the summer of 2000.

In the running tradition of Dave and Tim shows, quite a few tunes were revamped. "Big Eyed Fish," a tune that underwent some rewriting in the studio last winter, was played in its original form while songs such as the tranquil "Pay For What You Get" and the upbeat "One Sweet World" were extended with outros.

Rounding out the first half of the show were crowd favorites such as "Where Are You Going," the aggrieved "Bartender" and "Lie In Our Graves," a song Matthews often says is about "being dead and happy."

One of the perks fans have enjoyed during previous acoustic tours is the level of interaction that Matthews maintains with the audience, and the show at the Oakdale did not disappoint.

Matthews' oddball antics and wacky personality came out in full force between numbers, as the singer told stories and responded to comments from the crowd. Though he has toned down the drug and alcohol references along with the profanity, he kept the audience in hysterics analyzing the cathartic power of the word "elbow" and doing an animated impression of a lame horse his family was caring for (you probably had to be there).

At one point, when yet another fan could no longer stifle her urge to scream an admission of adoration to Matthews, exclaiming in a near-shriek, "I love you, Dave," he paused, cocked his head to the side and replied, "Thank you very much. As it turns out, I love you too. What a freaky coincidence."

The second half of the show not only served as a showcase for Reynolds' awing talents for those who were unfamiliar with him, but reiterated to the crowd the tremendous chemistry that exists between the two phenomenal musicians.

Reynolds played two solo numbers, flooring the audience and receiving standing ovations for both. Returning to the stage after "Kundalini Bonfire," Reynolds' second solo, Matthews looked to his compatriot and then to the audience and said, "That is why I am such a huge Tim Reynolds fan."

Powerful performances of "When The World Ends" and the chilling "Don't Drink the Water" complimented the complex acoustic arrangement of "Grey Street," igniting the crowd in a roar of applause.

The show reached a sensational climax with an unparalleled rendition of "Dancing Nancies," an extended jam furiously brought to life by both Matthews and Reynolds.

Though the performers then told the audience good night, the audience would not let them offstage for long. Matthews and Reynolds returned after a few minutes to a rowdy, raucous crowd and thunderous applause. Capping off the show, which clocked in at three hours and five minutes, was a three-song encore.

As the first notes of "I'll Back You Up" rang through the theatre, the audience members quickly subdued themselves and experienced the rare and poetic masterpiece in complete silence. It was closely followed by the consistently strong "Drive In, Drive Out," and Matthews and Reynolds released all their remaining energy in the song. The extraordinary show was drawn to a close with "Ants Marching," a perennial favorite in the world of Dave Matthews finales.

For those looking to see Dave Matthews out of his usual element, playing with his band in massive stadiums, this acoustic tour with the masterful guitarist Tim Reynolds may just be that chance. The smaller venues attract more respectful concertgoers and give fans the opportunity to experience two legends illustrating what live music is really all about.

COURTESY JOCELYN WIN

Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds serenaded the Oakdale Theater on their first acoustic tour since 1999.

Micrology tackles bacteria history and provides means of prevention

Since we live in a world where nutritional sustenance is required on a near constant basis, it's only natural that at some point, we experience illness. We've all been there and done that; the seafood allegedly tasted so good on the way down, and the next thing you know you're worshipping porcelain for the next three days. The resulting unpleasantness is probably a result of food poisoning or a potentially allergic reaction, to some varying degree.

But how do you know when you've been infested with wretched bacteria? Your earliest symptoms of discomfort are the warning signs, and medical assistance could confirm the differences between gas pains and unending nights curled up in a fetal position on your sofa. The following is an overview of food borne illness and the microscopic mayhem that the wee buggies can do to your innards.

E. Coli bacteria was first discovered in the human colon in 1885 by a German bacteriologist named Theodore Escherich. Eventually the aforementioned horn of the bacteria included one of the letter's initials. Pretty cool, isn't it? Years from now, one of you could have your own bacterium named after you.

Once this stuff is ingested into your system, it travels itself to your large intestine and causes inflammation due to the toxins secreted. Incubation occurs anywhere from three to nine days before symptoms become visible. And when they do, let's just say things get ugly. Vomiting, cramps and diarrhea are the result of infection, and although antibiotics do not relieve symptoms, most individuals recover within a week or so after infection.

Salmonella rose from the depths of obscurity in the late track of a pig. Also found in 1885, salmonella is named after its discoverer, Daniel Salmon. Thankfully enough, you can catch the bacteria if you overcook the fish that bears his last name. Symptoms of this illness are similar to E. Coli, but are usually accompanied by fever. People with weakened or fragile immune systems can experience more severe forms of the illness, due in part to salmonella's ability to contaminate the blood stream and infect areas such as the aorta or bone.

MICROLOGY
Jessica Pelletier

To prevent contamination, it's important to keep clean the areas and utensils used in the preparation of food. Raw and undercooked foods such as sashimi or a juicy, medium-rare steak may also contain strains of the bacteria. Many restaurants are required by law to state that the consumption of undercooked foods may result in such illness, and some refuse to serve their meats with any trace of pinkness to guard against lawsuits. So, next time you're offered a spicy tuna roll by a shady man in a trench coat, beware.

Campylobacter jejuni (pronounced camp-e-low-back-ter j-june-eye) is the new bacteria of choice on the block.

Prior to 1975, the Center for Disease Control and Prevention did not recognize this strain of bacteria as a source of food borne illness. But, lucky for us, they've reviewed the data and this little gem is now the most common source of sickness in the United States. (Salmonella comes in second place, but that bacteria is, like, so five minutes ago.)

The symptoms for this bacterial infection are similar to salmonella with the added bonus of muscle pain and headaches. The icing on the contaminated cake is that potential long-term effects can be generalized paralysis and/or death. Yep, while everyone else is picking a winning college basketball team, I'm going with disease. And this year it's campylobacter jejuni all the way, baby!

So, I hope this has all been very informative, and to those reading this while trying to catch a quick bite to eat, I'm very sorry. But the next time you finish doing the Technicolor yawn, just remember the toxins your body is trying to rid itself of and smile to yourself, knowing that you are just a little bit wiser for your illness.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

'Hipster' is an amusing and satirical glimpse at society

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

It's deck to a be a juicer, but ishtar to be a frado. Having lots of kale may polish some of the tassels, and being a walls can too. Phish are definitely jerry, and as for being Goth or a Slipknot fan forget it.

If you did not understand one word I just typed, than Robert Lanham's "The Hipster Handbook" may be just for you. Who doesn't want to be considered hip? Who wants to be thought of as uncool? "The Hipster Handbook" is a book about all things hip and so totally now. By the way, an almost literal translation of the first paragraph would read something like this: it's cool to be a guy with sex appeal, but bad to be a deluded, ugly guy. Having lots of money may impress the ladies, but being handsome can too. And Phish are for hippies. (No letters please; that's what the book says, not me.)

'The Hipster Handbook'
By Robert Lanham
Anchor Books

"The Hipster Handbook" covers everything that needs to be known on how to be a hipster, from vocabulary to style to even what kind of hipster you are. It gives you the do's and do nots for almost every social aspect of life: the kind of music a hipster listens to, the clothes they wear, the bars they attend, the people they date and so on.

"The Hipster Handbook" opens with a brief introduction that highlights the 11 clues that you are (and are not a hipster). If you attend a liberal arts school with a crappy football team, have kissed someone of the same gender and have one Republican friend referred to as "your one Republican friend," you may be a hipster. If you teach Sunday school, watch college football and listen to the Dave Matthews Band, you are definitely not hip.

A glossary of common hipster words and attitudes follow. Deck means cool; fin is the complete opposite of deck. A bob is a crunkite, a girl a tassel and a slutty girl a chipper. Juicers and wallys are guys with sex appeal; frados aren't. To be drunk on beer is to be "shellacked" because of a bronson. Understanding yet? Hipsters hate corporations (and the mainstream in general), are serious about music, love irony, are politically liberal and never admit to being a hipster.

There are ten kinds of hipsters in existence. A UTI (Unemployed Trust Fundert is a rich kid who pretends to be poor, and rarely works a job. The WASH (Waitstaff and Service Hipsters) are the hipsters you see working as bartenders and music store clerks (i.e. the main characters in "High Fidelity"). Loners tend to be nerdy, antisocial hipsters. The Schmooze is all about networking. Homosexual hipsters are either A) Maxwells (gay men, further divided into straight-laced formfitting Maxwells and flamboyant Glam Rockers) or B) Carpets (lesbians subdivided into butch Metal Carpets and feminine Plush Carpets); bisexuals are referred to as CK-1s. The Teeter is a skate-punk hipster, and a Clubber is a usually teenaged rave-loving hipster. The Neo-Crunch is a modern day hippie hipster. Polits are those sensitive, smarty-pants hipsters who usually become professors.

And finally, there's the Bipster, which can be glibly described as a country-bumpkin version of a hipster.

Goth, hippie and rockabilly styles are to be avoided. Same thing with the white man dreadlocks, Catholic school outfits, pimps, white homeboys, grunge, traditional Mohawks and suburban casual. Any one of these styles make you automatically uncool. Also making the crap list, Girls Gone Wild, plastic surgery, playing sports, listening to Red Hot Chili Peppers and joining fraternities/sororities.

Of course, "The Hipster Handbook" is meant to all be a big joke. It's classified as humor, but the read is not exceptionally funny. Lanham's writing style is caught somewhere between sly joking and serious exploration of the hipster lifestyle. "The Hipster Handbook" has a winking tone throughout it; a subtly satirical bent that says this is just one big HAHA. But the satire may be too subtle. There are precious few times when "The Hipster Handbook" made me laugh, guffaw or even chuckle. It's a cute, fast read, moderately amusing, but unnecessary and unremarkable. It's the kind of humor book you pick up, read and toss away, forever forgetting what you just read. It doesn't invite a second read through, because there is nothing here to savor.

Won't "The Hipster Handbook" become instantly dated in a few months anyway? The lingo will become passé, the things considered cool will pass into the dumb and the kinds of things that were once stupid will become kitsch, and therefore become ironically cool. Besides, handbooks are so fin.

GET HOT.

Lots of hot tops from Urban Outfitters

ZANNA
downtown
Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Plan Ahead For Next Year...

Excellent Location...¼ Mile From UMass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Arts@dailycollegian.com
Arts@dailycollegian.com
Arts@dailycollegian.com

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Foxy Loxy
Monkey and The Rice Rurner
Kaiser Quartet
UPSTAIRS AT THE ABC
POOL / DARTS / PINGPONG
LATE NIGHT MENU TIL MIDNIGHT
24-26 N. Pleasant St. • Amherst MA
(413) 253-4400
www.amherstbrewing.com

CINEMARK
The Best in Entertainment
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/21/03 - Thursday 2/27/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
DRAWING DOWN THE MOON (CHEAK PEEK-VIEW SAT 2/22) (PG13) 7:30 P.M.
THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE (R) 1:00 4:00 7:20 10:10*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 1:45 4:35 7:40 10:25*
GODS AND GENERALS (PG13) 2:00 7:00*
DARK BLUE (R) 1:40 4:30 7:50 10:30*
BARENTS (PG13) 1:30 4:40 7:30 10:15*
THE JUNGLE BOOK 2 (G) 1:10 3:15 5:10 7:05 9:10*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:10 7:10 10:05
SHANGHAI KNIGHTS (PG13) 1:25 4:25 (7:05) 10:00 (1/40 SHOW SAT 2/22/2003
HOW TO LOSE A GUY IN 10 DAYS (PG13) 1:05 4:05 7:25 10:10
THE RECRUIT (PG13) 1:35 4:45 7:35 10:25
ABOUT SCHMIDT (R) 1:25 4:15 7:20 10:20
CATCH ME IF YOU CAN (PG13) 1:10 9:00
LOTR-THE TWO TOWERS (PG13) 5:10
Senior Show 2/27/03 - THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE
* no passes/supersavers
♦NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

COURTESY AMERICAN CANCER ASSOCIATION

The dots on the U.S. map represent sites where Relay for Life events are held. The American Cancer Society predicts that more than 3,800 communities will hold Relay for Life events this year. This is a 460 increase in events from 2002.

Local Relay for Life arriving this April

Continued from page 5

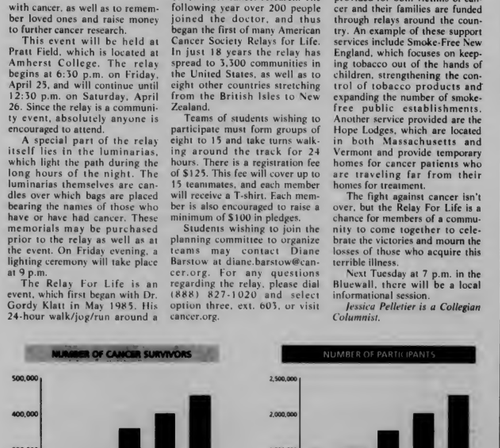
with cancer, as well as to remember loved ones and raise money to further cancer research.

This event will be held at Pratt Field, which is located at Amherst College. The relay begins at 6:30 p.m. on Friday, April 25, and will continue until 12:30 p.m. on Saturday, April 26. Since the relay is a community event, absolutely anyone is encouraged to attend.

A special part of the relay itself lies in the luminarias, which light the path during the long hours of the night. The luminarias themselves are candles over which bags are placed bearing the names of those who have or have had cancer. These memorials may be purchased prior to the relay as well as at the event. On Friday evening, a lighting ceremony will take place at 9 p.m.

The Relay For Life is an event, which first began with Dr. Gordy Klatt in May 1985. His 24-hour walk/jog/run around a Tacoma, Wash. track raised $27,000 for cancer research. The following year over 200 people joined the doctor, and thus began the first of many American Cancer Society Relays for Life. In just 18 years the relay has spread to 3,300 communities in the United States, as well as to eight other countries stretching from the British Isles to New Zealand.

Teams of students wishing to participate must form groups of eight to 15 and take turns walking around the track for 24 hours. There is a registration fee of $125. This fee will cover up to 15 teammates, and each member will receive a T-shirt. Each member is also encouraged to raise a minimum of $100 in pledges.



Students wishing to join the planning committee to organize teams may contact Diane Barstow at diane.barstow@cancer.org. For any questions regarding the relay, please dial (888) 827-1020 and select option three, ext. 603, or visit cancer.org.

Programs to support services provided for both victims of cancer and their families are funded through relays around the country. An example of these support services include Smoke-Free New England, which focuses on keeping tobacco out of the hands of children, strengthening the control of tobacco products and expanding the number of smoke-free public establishments. Another service provided are the Hope Lodges, which are located in both Massachusetts and Vermont and provide temporary homes for cancer patients who are traveling far from their homes for treatment.

The fight against cancer isn't over, but the Relay For Life is a chance for members of a community to come together to celebrate the victories and mourn the losses of those who acquire this terrible illness.

Next Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Bluewall, there will be a local informational session.

Jessica Pelletier is a Collegian Columnist.

450,000 Cancer Survivors Walked — 2.25 Million Relayers

GRAPHS COURTESY AMERICAN CANCER ASSOCIATION

Attention ALL Collegian members:

Did you miss the first Editor-in-Chief 2003 election debates last night? If so, make sure you come to the second set of debates on Wednesday, April 2 at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Room 168C. All members are invited to bring questions for candidates. Those who do not wish to ask their questions directly can present them to the current Editor-in-Chief, Matt Sacco.

Burk continues fight with Augusta, ready to protest

By Timothy Williams
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – Martha Burk believes it is "appalling" that women who fight for the United States in Iraq face discrimination at home at private golf clubs like Augusta National.

"Broadcasting the Masters now and showcasing a club that discriminates against women is an insult to the nearly quarter million women in the U.S. armed forces," she said at a news conference Wednesday.

Burk, chairwoman of the National Council of Women's Organizations, was invited by a half dozen City Council members and representatives of civil rights groups denouncing CBS and the club for its all-male membership. Several council members planned to introduce a resolution Wednesday condemning Augusta National and asking CBS not to broadcast the tournament.

The Masters, the year's first major tournament, will be held April 10-13, and Burk has said she plans to protest in Augusta, Ga. The American Civil Liberties Union has filed a federal lawsuit on her behalf to hold a protest at the club's front gates.

Burk said the club's all-male membership is an affront to women in the U.S. armed forces, particularly those in Iraq.

"It's appalling that the women who are willing to lay down their lives for democratic ideals should be shut out of this club. ... Democratic ideals do not include discrimination," she said.

Club spokesman Glenn Greenspan characterized Burk's remarks as "grandstanding."

"Ms. Burk will say anything to get publicity," Greenspan said. "But if she is invoking the troops to draw more attention to herself, only three words apply – shame on you."

When asked before the news conference whether her message would be lost because of the attention on Iraq, Burk said her position would actually be strengthened.

"Women in the military know what it's like to fight for equal opportunity," she said. "While I know that more important things are on their minds, as more important things are on the mind of the nation, including us, it is just part of a continuum of discrimination."

Council member Gale Brewer held up a T-shirt with the CBS logo that read "Continues Broadcasting Segregation."

"CBS has refused to cancel its coverage of the Masters even though it is held at a venue that discriminates against half the population," she said.

CBS did not immediately return a call for comment.

The proposed City Council resolution "condemns the gender segregation" and urges all broadcast media, particularly CBS, to "refrain from airing the Masters as long as it is held at Augusta or any other venue that promotes segregation and discrimination."

Burk also said there would be a protest outside CBS on Saturday.

NFL owners pass on pair of potential rule changes

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

PHOENIX (AP) – NFL owners changed nothing.

The league closed its annual spring meeting Wednesday by voting down a proposal to give both teams a shot at the ball in overtime. And it tabled a proposal to expand the playoffs from 12 teams to 14.

The plan to change the overtime rule got 17 votes, seven short of the 24 required for passage.

"They made the decision because the current system presents a tremendous reward or risk. That's something that adds a lot of excitement to the game," said Indianapolis general manager Bill Polian, who helped convince the other teams by citing the Colts' 23-20 win overtime win over the Broncos in the Denver snow.

The expansion of the playoffs got more support than either commissioner Paul Tagliabue or competition committee chairman Rich McKay expected.

But it was tabled until the league's May meeting in Philadelphia because, Tagliabue said, the league had to study the ramifications for both competition and television coverage involved in adding two wild-card teams.

Some teams also are concerned that only one team would have a bye under the proposed system. And both Tagliabue and McKay noted it was a change in an agreement to wait two years with the new eight-division alignment before tinkering with the playoffs.

"We had no problems last year with the alignment," said McKay, Tampa Bay's general manager. "The teams that made the playoffs were the teams with the best records."

The change in overtime was proposed after a record 25 games went into an extra session last year. Ten of those were won by a team on its first possession and 58 percent were won by the team that won the coin toss at the start of the OT.

One of those was the game in Denver, which seemed to sway many teams.

In that contest, which was televised nationally, the Colts' Mike Vanderjagt tied the game with a 54-yard field goal in regulation. Indianapolis then won the coin toss in overtime and moved the ball far enough for Vanderjagt to try a 51-yarder into the wind, which he made.

Polian said that if it wasn't sudden death, coach Tony Dungy certainly would have chosen to punt; he sent the punting team on the field until Vanderjagt convinced him to try the field goal.

"That game made our season," Polian said. "It's probably the main reason we made the playoffs. If there had been two possessions, a defensive-minded coach like Tony certainly would have tried to pin them back. That would have been the right call. But the reward for kicking was much greater – we won the game on the spot."

In another move, the league changed the rules involving onside kicks in the final five minutes of games.

In the past, if a ball did not go 10 yards, went out of bounds or was touched illegally, the kicking team was penalized, but had a chance to kick again from five yards back. McKay said that while that was rewarding a team for an illegal play, coaches wanted it retained; the coaches feared teams would stop trying surprise onside kicks.

It finally passed when it was amended to cover only the final five minutes, when a trailing team often tries to get back in the game by getting another possession through an onside kick.

The owners also spent considerable time discussing racial diversity in hiring practices. There was no agreement, however, on what discipline to take against the Detroit Lions, who hired coach Steve Mariucci without meeting the new guidelines to interview at least one minority candidate.

The Lions said that five prospective black candidates turned them down because it was clear that Mariucci was the first choice for the job.

Team manager has many roles to fill

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) – As team manager for Chip Ganassi Racing, Andy Graves must do it all, from building race cars to balancing the budget.

He's also the team's "environmentalist," a guy who tries to keep the peace and lends an ear when needed.

"It's my job to keep everyone's environment right," Graves said. "I kind of think of it as a part-time baby sitter, part-time bartender. I have to listen to everyone's problems and make sure everyone gets along."

A crew chief used to be able to fill that role. But in the rapidly expanding world of NASCAR, more and more car owners are looking for a detail-oriented expert to lighten the crew chief's load.

With Ganassi based in Pittsburgh, Graves and Tony Glover run his entire three-car operation.

Jimmy Makar moved up to team manager at Joe Gibbs Racing after 11 seasons as a crew chief and one Winston Cup championship with Bobby Labonte. Makar now focuses on improving technology and long-term goals.

Todd Parrott is now team manager at Robert Yates Racing, overseeing Dale Jarrett and Elliott Sadler's teams instead of just being the crew chief for Jarrett.

Just last week, Gil Martin became team manager of Kevin Harvick's No. 29 Chevrolet at Richard Childress Racing after being the crew chief.

"This is a position that you will see a lot more of as the years go on," Makar said. "Right now there's only a handful of us, but that will change because the business is just too big for one person to do it all."

Childress recognized that last week when he moved Martin out of the day-to-day operations and made Todd Berrier Harvick's crew chief, responsible for readying the car for each race weekend.

"We all have the resources and the equipment to succeed, but it boils down to the people," Childress said. "There's just not enough time for one guy to be in the fab shop, to be working with the crew, to be hiring the right people. So Gil, who is excellent with people and details, is now free to focus just on that and Todd can work on the car."

Everyone's idea of a team manager is different.

Brian Whitesell, longtime manager at Hendrick Motorsports, supports Jeff Gordon and Jimmie Johnson's crews. He briefly tried being a crew chief when Ray Evernham left late in 1999, winning his first two races in that role.

But he was getting lost in the day-to-day details and moved up to manager at the end of that season.

"It was a neat deal. I won a couple of races and proved to myself that I could do it," Whitesell said. "But that's all I needed to do. The greater good of the team was for me to move on."

Now Whitesell is in charge of making sure everything runs smoothly on race weekends, which sometimes means massaging the personalities of crew chiefs Robbie Loomis and Chad Knaus.

"Chad is really aggressive and Robbie is real laid back," Whitesell said. "So I'm the buffer between them. I push one guy, calm the other guy down and play off their differences."

Makar is slowly working his way away from the race track, putting his focus on wind-tunnel time and testing sessions so he can free up the crew chiefs to work on weekend race setups.

He missed his first race since the 1991 season on March 9, when he was testing cars in Phoenix while Labonte and teammate Tony Stewart raced in Darlington, S.C., and Makar had to watch it on TV.

"It was strange, sort of like an out-of-body experience," he said. "My wife really thought I was going to have a hard time with it, but it certainly wasn't as difficult as I thought it was going to be."

The goal is to scale back Makar's time on the road. Traveling full time since 1979, he's now ready to spend more time at home with his 8-year-old twins. Next weekend will be his first real break – he'll miss the race at Talladega and take a trip to the mountains.

But at Ganassi, Graves and Glover are highly visible at the race track and instrumental in every decision their teams make over a weekend.

Glover sits atop Sterling Marlin's pit box, helping crew chief Lee McCall call the race, and Graves stands high up on the roof spotting for rookie Casey Mears while coaching crew chief Jimmy Elledge.

Graves and Glover, both former crew chiefs, walk a fine line of trying to give enough input while allowing the actual crew chiefs to make their own decisions.

Either way, they've lightened the crew chiefs' workload and helped take some pressure off every move they make.

"We have a lot more help and our organization has a lot more depth with Andy and Glover," Elledge said.

"Responsibilities have been delegated and parameters have been set. It all runs a lot smoother because of the experience we've got in management roles helping all three teams and all three crew chiefs."

Celts freefall continues

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – The Golden State Warriors took out their frustrations from a damaging loss on the slumping Boston Celtics.

Jason Richardson scored 31 points in a 107-93 win over the Celtics on Wednesday night, one day after the Warriors lost by 21 points to the team with the NBA's worst record – the Cleveland Cavaliers.

"That was a devastating way to start our road trip," Golden State coach Eric Musselman said. "We had a team meeting and the team seemed focused."

It took nearly three quarters before the Warriors broke open a close game but they broke it open in a big way.

Golden State built a 22-point lead midway through the fourth before the Celtics, who lost their season-high sixth straight game, scored the last eight.

Boston remained in sixth place in the East. The Warriors, with 10 games left, have an outside shot at a playoff berth in the tougher Western Conference.

"If we were in the East, we'd be right in the playoff race," Richardson said. "We talk about that all the time."

Richardson had seven assists as the Warriors, the league's third-highest-scoring team, got big games from everyone.

Antawn Jamison had 29 points, including 15 in the third quarter, and seven rebounds. Gilbert Arenas added 23 points, 11 assists and seven rebounds and Troy Murphy finished with 18 points and 11 rebounds.

With 52 percent shooting and a 48-33 rebounding advantage, it didn't hurt the Warriors to get just six points from the rest of their team.

"You have to make shots in order to beat a team like that because they're going to make you score a lot of points," Boston coach Jim O'Brien said.

But the Celtics shot only 15-of-44 in the second half, 34 percent, after sinking 55 percent in the first half, which ended with the score tied at 55.

Paul Pierce had 23 points and Eric Williams 15 for the Celtics.

"We fought for two or three quarters, then the fight was over with," Pierce said.

The Warriors took an 81-74 lead at the end of the third quarter on a driving layup by Arenas – who then slammed the ball off the floor. Antoine Walker protested that Arenas should get a technical foul, and referee Dan Crawford assessed one to both Arenas and Walker.

Things kept getting worse for the Celtics after that. The Warriors opened the fourth quarter with a 20-5 run that made it 101-79, their biggest lead, with 5:55 remaining.

"This was the best time for us to get them" during a losing streak, Arenas said. "Once we blew open the lead, you could see them hanging their heads."

Murphy and Williams traded baskets at the start of the surge before Murphy hit a jumper and Arenas sank a 3-pointer, making it 88-76.

Pierce then made a free throw before Golden State got the next eight points on 3-pointers by Arenas and Richardson and a layup by Jamison that gave the Warriors a 96-77 lead with 7:29 to play.

Walker's layup broke the run, but Richardson followed with a layup and Arenas hit another 3-pointer as the lead grew to 101-79.

"Every team in the East has gone through" a losing streak, Walker said. "It's just unfortunate that ours came now."

There were 13 lead changes in the first half and neither team led by more than four points until Murphy's free throw made it 71-66 with 6:13 left in the third quarter.

Notes: The Celtics played without two of their top eight players. Starting C Tony Battie had a sore left knee and G Tony Delk missed the game because of his father's death. ... In their other meeting this season, the Celtics reached their season high for points in a 125-117 win over the Warriors. ... Jamison made his 237th straight start, the second longest among active players behind Utah's John Stockton.

JAMES N. HAPPERS COLLEGIAN

A twinbill...

Lori Kain and the UMass women's lacrosse game will take on La Salle at Richard F. Garber Field Saturday afternoon. That contest will follow the noon men's game against Penn State.

$39 to $99

Each way with 14-day advance roundtrip purchase.
Travel Tuesday, Wednesday, or Saturday.

Fares will be up to $40 more each way when you travel Sunday, Monday, Thursday, or Friday.

Fares do not include a federal excise tax of $3 per takeoff and landing.

Wanna get away? Now you can. Fly Southwest Airlines for just $39 - $99 each way with roundtrip purchase. Be sure to purchase your ticket at least 14 days in advance, within one day of making reservations, and by April 7, 2003.

Seats are limited and won't be available on some flights that operate during very busy travel times and holiday periods. For reservations, call your travel agent or Southwest Airlines or log on for low fares℠ at southwest.com®.

SOUTHWEST

SOME OF THE PLACES WE FLY

Albuquerque (Just an hour away from Santa Fe)
Austin
Baltimore/Washington (BWI) (29 miles to downtown Washington, D.C.)
Chicago (Midway)
Ft. Lauderdale (22 miles to downtown Miami)
Harlingen/South Padre Island
Las Vegas
Los Angeles (LAX)
New Orleans
Oakland (18 miles to downtown San Francisco)
Phoenix
Providence (A better way to Boston)
Reno/Tahoe
Salt Lake City
San Diego
Seattle/Tacoma
Tampa Bay
West Palm Beach

Service may not be available from all cities. Offer applies to published, scheduled service onl

En Español 1-800-VAMONOS (1-800-826-6667) southwest.com
1-800-I-FLY-SWA

Tickets do not include airport assessed passenger facility charges (PFC) of up to $18, and a federal September 11th Security Fee of up to $10 roundtrip per person will be charged. Your plans must include a stayover of at least one night. Tickets are nonref ble not for sale purchased through our Group Tickets Program, may be applied toward future travel on Southwest Airlines. Fares are subject to change until ticketed. Any change in itinerary may result in an increase in fare. Service to and from Ora and Houston Intercontinental airports not included. Holiday periods include Easter, Memorial Day, July Fourth, and Labor Day. Does not include travel to or from Florida markets from April 7 through April 13, 2003. ©2002, 2003 Southwest .

Dollars cost TX coach's job

Continued from page 10

Anybody searching for the heavy in this story could do worse than to focus on Brown, who doubles as Denison's football coach.

He hired Carson in 1993 after the previous coach failed to get the fighting Yellow Jackets into the playoffs five straight years, and said Tuesday: "Earl has done everything I've ever asked of him. But after this, we all felt, him included, like it was in his best interest to resign."

Brown won't say much else, but he told the Herald Democrat last week that rumors Carson was forced out because he was planning to report rules violation in the football program were "nonsense."

"There just shouldn't even be any credibility to that," Brown said. "There has been no rules violations by the football program or Bob Brown."

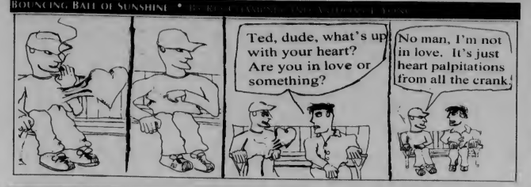
Denison superintendent Henry Cooper said Tuesday, "There's more to this than meets the eye," but then refused to detail any problems with Carson beyond the pay-per-play offer.

"Sometimes, you get comfortable in a position and you don't think about the consequences of your actions as a coach," Cooper added cryptically, "or an administrator or superintendent, for that matter."

As soon as Brown learned of the payouts to Denison's players, he filed a report with the University Interscholastic League, which governs prep sports in Texas. Then, he was told to bring the matter before an executive committee made up of representatives from the five other schools in Denison's district.

That group convened Wednesday and publicly reprimanded Carson. That effectively ended the matter without it being referred back to the UIL. Although it was the only punishment handed out, Carson had already decided not to fight for his job.

"What's the point?" he asked. "I've always been of the opinion that once you're not wanted somewhere, whatever the reason, it's time to move on."



Carson told the newspaper word got back to him that Brown "suspects me of turning him in for rules violations, which I didn't do."

He still wants to coach somewhere, though, and last season's finish – the Yellow Jackets won 12 of their last 18 games after a 3-10 start – suggests he can still do the job.

"I've got to move on," Carson said. "This is not like the college guys that have due process clauses in their contracts where they get paid no matter what. I've got bills."

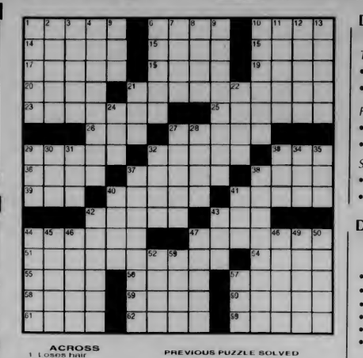
There is a mandatory sports meeting every Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom. All staff members are required to attend. Interested writers are always welcome.

BOUNCING BALL OF SUNSHINE • By Reg Gorman and Tom Thaves

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Leiknes

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley



THAT'S WHAT SHE SAID • By Dobbs & Gerson

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

ACROSS
1 Loses hair
6 Nevada town
10 Fees
14 Thunders
15 Tell
16 Refrigerator stick
17 "Wait Until Dark" actor
18 Eat out
19 Strains of jeans
20 Walk
21 Modern energy source (2 wds.)
23 Sea whale
25 Some exams
26 Aloft
27 Milled
29 Real estate —
32 Monitor
33 Startled cry
36 Thanker for 37 Tendon
38 Unusual
39 Emergency signal
40 Proprietor
41 Feel anxious
42 Fade away
43 Land
44 Strong
47 Threatens
51 Salon sight
54 Scent finder
55 Dory need
56 Rushed off
57 Sharp
58 For the asking
59 Carol of song
60 Poet Stephen Vincent
61 Impudent talk
62 Foxes' dogs
63 Houston athlete

DOWN
1 Cheeky
2 Major artery
3 Los Angeles cager
4 Wet
5 Job application info
6 Toxic gas
7 Kinkcans
8 Sampled of 1492
9 Bashful
10 Wassaw's country
11 Actress Verdugo
12 Party hearty
13 Works hard
21 Tofu constituent
22 Dock
24 Tell me
26 Viking letters
28 Cross a highway
30 Parlor and Unser
30 Moo — gai pan
31 Coast Guard off.
32 Fork prong
33 Corn serving
34 Mineral state
35 Pivotal
37 Trained places
38 Love affairs
40 Cry of dismay (2 wds.)
41 Murderous
42 Taste and smell
43 Moines
44 Faculty VIPs
45 Scarlett of Tara
46 Gets bored
47 Fashions
48 Dracula's title
49 Aromatic chemical
50 Look after (2 wds.)
52 Dimple's locale
53 Harness attachment
57 Perry Mason's ory

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

1-30-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

THURSDAY
- High: 58
- Low:31

FRIDAY
- High: 57
- Low: 42

SATURDAY
- High: 63
- Low: 43

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Tomato Rice Soup
- Grinders By The Inch
- Turkey Grinder and Ham Grinder
- Roasted Vegetable Grinder (vegan)
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)

DINNER
- Tomato Rice Soup
- BBQ Chicken Quarters
- Baked Chicken Quarters
- Old Fashioned Beef Stew with Biscuit
- Ginger Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew Despres
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
James Schatter
COPY EDITOR
Jesse Greenspan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Lizzy Nielsen / Dan Simmons

QUOTE OF THE DAY

It's different now that I'm poor and aging. I'll never see this face again.

- Interpol

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you dine in the luxurious UMass dining commons today, be cautious of the gravy. It knows.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Today you can rely on beating that videogame which has caused the lull in your academic performace.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't be surprised if you end up sitting in "the broken chair" in all of your classes today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Today is the day to skip all your classes, screw your test, and play music all afternoon.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
The sun comes and goes. Clouds fly by. Rain falls and dries. But you're still ugly.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Put yourself into the running for something spectacular today, and that spectacular thing is a bus.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Do not eat that extra helping of chicken nuggets. The person next to you thinks you are fat.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You have a big, huge ketchup stain on the back of your pants.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You know how your significant other is acting distant? They've had indiscretions with your roommate.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You know that burning sensation you get when you urinate? Yup, that sucks.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You know how you haven't spoken to any of your friends in weeks? They all hate you.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You're gonna want to go to the bathroom today, but they're all closed for cleaning. Too bad.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Study Abroad in Florence, Italy. Request a Free Catalog (800)266-4441 Or Visit www.GoWithCEA.com

Do you only speak English? We need you! The department of linguistics is looking for monolingual speakers of English (high school foreign language ok). You will be paid $9 for a one our experiment. For more information, contact Dr. Jon Pater: pater@linguist.umass.edu

Wanna buy/sell stuff locally . . . No Shipping, Payment, Delivery Hassles. Need Classreviews or Classnotes? Free! Visit www.college-shack.com today!

Fraternities, Sororities, Clubs, Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6601 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer sublet w/ all utilities included. 2 Bedroom Apt. Cliffside in sunderland All utilities included on Bus route 1-413-665-9333 only $820/month.

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHRL.ORG

FREE DELL COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 IN SAVINGS WHEN YOU MOVE IN! Delux 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & HOT WATER Plenty of free, on site parking. Minutes from UMass-On free busline CALL SUGARLOAF ESTATES 413-665-3856 Visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.Brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors, NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500.obo 413-253-1456

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

HELP WANTED Part time. $8.50/hr. Brandywine Apt. needs a leasing person. Tues., Thurs., Weekends. Call 549-0600.

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6192.

Office assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, receive inventory, computer data entry, answer telephone. All around person needed. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-1942

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for commission-based sales associates to work in Amherst, Holyoke, Northampton. Email resumes to jobs@college-shack.com

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Summer Jobs on Martha's Vineyard! Store Managers, Assistants, Associates. Work for Soft As A Group in one of our retail stores in Edgartown Positions, housing available May 15th Richard White @ 413-323-8520 email @ rdwhite27@charter.net

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Waterskiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-399-CAMP or check out our website at www.independentlake.com and apply online.

Spanish Speaking for business development position. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com.

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000++ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288 www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TTDJ Turntables 1 Gemini PMX06 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0711

FOR SALE

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

RENTAL PROBLEMS

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2003

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nailbiter expected

Past games have been thrillers

By JIM PIGNATIELLO
Collegian Staff

If the past is any indication, Saturday's game between the No. 6 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team and Penn State should be a classic.

The Minutemen (7-0, 1-0 Eastern College Athletic Conference) squeaked by with one-point victories in each of the last two matchups, including last year's come-from-behind 13-12 victory at State College, Pa.

Penn State (3-3, 0-2 ECAC) is an outstanding program," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "They have a tremendous amount of talent. They have great size and great skill. I don't know why it is [that the games are always so close]. They are just competitive and it's a league game. We expect the same this weekend."

Cannella also expects the Nittany Lions, who enter in the midst of a four-game losing streak, to come after his Minutemen with reckless abandon.

"They are going to bring a lot to this game," Cannella said. "They know that it's been a one-goal game the last two years and I'm sure they feel they should have won last year. I thought we were lucky coming out of there. They are going to come motivated. They are going to come to knock us off to make their season."

The Maroon and White enters its seventh home game of the season with the reigning ECAC Player of the Week and national leader in points (36) and goals scored (23), Jeff Zywicki. The junior scored 19 points in UMass' 3-0 Spring Break to earn the conference award.

"It's key for any team," Cannella said of Zywicki's ability to score on rebounds. "Any team that has guys that finish the ball when they have opportunities, they're a good team. Fortunately for us right now it's working out for Jeff. We just hope he can continue to do that.

"He's the one that will tell you, he's on the end of it," Cannella added. "He's gotten some ground balls and put them away, but he's on the end of receiving some real nice passes and good looks. We need that with our style."

The goal-feed combination of All-American candidate Kevin Leveille and Chris Fiore is also key to UMass' offensive attack. When that duo is on the field, the opposition must use long-stick defenders to cover them, leaving an attackman guarded with a short stick.

"Just having those guys out there creates matchup problems for any team," Cannella said. "But the key for it is to have guys who understand what their role is going to be when that happens."

Cannella is also pleased with the Athletic Department's announcement that Saturday's game at Garber Field will be Youth Lacrosse Day.

"Young fans are encouraged to wear their youth lacrosse jerseys, which will get them into the game for free.

"It's certainly a result of [UMass Athletic Director] Ian McCaw and his direction trying to help the program," Cannella said. "It's great, we've never had that here. Hopefully we'll be able to attract more people to our games."

The game starts at Noon, with the women's lacrosse game against Lasalle to follow at 3:30.

JAMES M. HARPER JR./COLLEGIAN

UMass freshman Clay Stabert has played in four of the Minutemen's seven games this season. He notched the first point of his career with an assist in last Friday's 14-3 rout of Hartford.

Long road finally leads to Lorden

By ANDREW MERRITT
Collegian Staff

The road has been particularly hard on the Massachusetts baseball team, with the Minutemen winning just three of their first 11 games, all away from Amherst.

The Maroon and White will finally have a chance to enjoy the comforts of Earl Lorden Field, though, as the Hartford Hawks come to town today for a 3 p.m. matchup.

Neither squad has had a particularly successful spring, with the Hawks sitting on a 1-11 record. Both teams also suffered recent losses at Connecticut – UMass was blown out 17-3 on Tuesday while Hartford dropped an 8-4 decision yesterday.

If there is a bright side for the Minutemen, it's that they finally get to play a real game in Amherst.

"We're definitely anxious to play a game at home," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "Every year you have to start off on the road, so you get used to it, but yeah, it'll be nice to be home."

Stone's words ring particularly true in the wake of the 17-3 defeat to UConn. The Minutemen committed four errors in the contest, and needed four different pitchers just to get to the eighth inning before the game was called due to darkness. Stone showed some early-season moxie, getting ejected from the game in the sixth.

"We just talked about leaving [that game] behind and moving on," said Stone, who left it behind two innings before the rest of the team.

The Minutemen are still tinkering with their lineup and the rotation is still fuzzy, although Stone is increasingly confident in the pitching picture.

"Our weekend rotation is very solid, with [freshman Matt] Torra, [sophomore Keith] Doherty, and [junior Eric] Chown," he said. "We thought we had the midweek rotation set too, but we just didn't pitch well [against UConn]. I still like the arms we have."

The closer spot seems to be locked up by Scott Ratliff, giving Stone at least a measure of stability. Ratliff currently holds the best earned run average on the team (0.87), and has given up just seven hits and one earned run in six appearances while striking out 12 in 10 1/3 innings of work.

On offense, junior Mike Athas leads the way with a .342 batting average and five runs batted in. Athas has also bashed three doubles and a triple, both of which lead UMass.

Freshman Jon Davis gets the ball today for his first collegiate start. The Ludlow, Mass. native struggled in his only appearance this year, allowing two hits and a run in 2/3 innings against Alabama.

Davis hasn't pitched since that brief appearance on March 9, but if there's an early trend for the Minutemen, it's a reliance on youth. The Minuteman roster features 14 freshmen, a group that includes the brightest star of the spring, righthander Matt Torra. Torra sparkled in UMass' 4-0 win over Columbia on March 16, going all nine innings for the two-hit shutout.

Hartford is winless in its last five games, including a 24-2 massacre at the hands of Navy. Its lone win came on March 18 against Sacred Heart, a 5-4 extra-inning victory. Kyle Valentine earned the win, giving up seven hits and one earned run while striking out four.

"It seems like Hartford is struggling, too," Stone said, "but we have to be ready to play every day."

Dollars cost Texas hoops coach his job

By JIM LITKE
Associated Press

A month before LeBron James drove a Hummer to school and started modeling $400 "throwback" jerseys, a coach in Texas offered $1 to any player on his team who took a charge in a game.

"One kid got good at it and probably made himself $11 or $12," former Denison High coach Earl Carson chuckled. "I think 10 other kids got a dollar each.

"The good news is I didn't pay anybody until the season was over and I've since collected all the money back, so at least their eligibility won't be a problem. The bad news is my administration felt it was something they couldn't live with so I'm out of a job."

Both James and Carson tripped over the eligibility line, but their falls couldn't have turned out much more different.

James wound up sitting out a few games, but barely skipped a beat. He returned to the Akron (Ohio) St. Vincent-St. Mary lineup in plenty of time to claim a third Ohio state title in four years, and probably spent Tuesday auditioning interior designers to furnish the mansion he'll build shortly after becoming the NBA's top draft choice in June. Carson, meanwhile, was just beginning what could be a long and difficult search for a new job.

Three weeks ago, without lawyers or friends in high places, Carson went before the school board in Denison, a town of 22,000 near the Texas-Oklahoma border and birthplace of President Eisenhower, and resigned over the $23 payout.

The board accepted, even though the coach was well liked by players and their parents during his nine years there, and compiled a 324-251 record, including playoff berths in four of the past five years.

"Now, of course, I wish I'd just kept the money in my pocket. But it sure served its purpose at the time," Carson said. "It got those kids thinking about playing defense by moving their feet a little."

Though Carson told his players he was resigning the next day, most people in town knew little about the matter until Sunday, when the local newspaper ran a story with some of the details. The more they learned about it, the more they wondered whether Carson was hung out to dry.

He certainly was – and it almost certainly had less to do with the dollar bills Carson handed out at the end of this season than some of the toes he stepped on along the way.

"It doesn't matter if he paid those kids $1 or $1,000," Denison High athletic director Bob Brown insisted Tuesday. "Rules and regulations govern every aspect of life. That's just the way it is."

Continued on page 8

Youth movement serves dominating UMass 'D'

By MATT BRADY
Collegian Staff

It isn't on the same level that it was last year. With the loss of senior All-American Matt MacFarland and a young core, Massachusetts' defensive unit is definitely not on the same level as the 2002 squad.

It's better.

Through seven wins, UMass has allowed just 44 goals – 6.3 per game, despite losing its most experienced defender in co-captain Tom Fallon to a groin pull. In fact, in the four games Fallon has missed, the Minutemen have allowed just over five per contest.

"Those guys were playing really well before Tommy got hurt," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "I think the entire group – when Tommy went down as he's the emotional leader and has been there for four years as a starter – they all kind of picked up their game. It's not one or two guys. They did it as a group."

The status of Fallon, who went down with an injury following UMass' 10-9 victory over conference foe Navy, is still "up in the air. Day-to-day," according to Cannella.

Without No. 44 on the playing surface, an inexperienced squad needed a leader to emerge. That came in the form of the man between the pipes – goaltender Bill Schell.

"Billy has established himself as a leader out there," Cannella said. "Once Tommy's out, who is it? Billy Schell, our sophomore goalie has done a great job with that."

The current down-low defense is highlighted by one junior, Chris Gervat, one sophomore, Matt Garcia, and a pair of freshmen, Jack Reid and Steven Byrnes. The pair of freshmen has been impressive this season, with Reid a mainstay down low and Byrnes converting on the offensive end as well, dishing out three assists in last weekend's 14-7 win over Hofstra. And as with any young defensive unit, the coaching staff has as much claim to the credit of its success as anyone.

"We knew we would be a lot younger down there," Cannella said. "I thought we'd be good. We knew we'd be solid in goal. We knew we had some talent there. It was just a matter of those guys playing hard every day and just trying to play the style that [assistant coach] Andy Shay has implemented. You have to give Andy credit for a lot of that."

With an offense that has hardly missed a beat from last year's squad, it is easy to overlook the defensive unit. But despite incredibly impressive efforts on the offensive end by Eastern College Athletic Conference award winners Kevin Leveille, Jeff Zywicki and Sean Morris, as well as considerable contributions by Chris Fiore, Gene Tundo and Chris Doyle, the true strength of the Minutemen lies at the other end of the field.

"The strength of our team this year has been our defense, there is no way around that," Cannella said.

"You look at the big games that we've won, the defense has done the job – they've allowed the offense to relax and take some chances. It's really the defense as a unit that has stepped up."

Sophomore defenseman Matt Garcia (34) and crew have done an impressive job after senior Tom Fallon went down with an injury. In the four games Fallon has missed, UMass has given up just over five points per game.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 106

Maya Angelou visits UMass

EMILIE TUCCIAN-HICKS/COLLEGIAN

Maya Angelou spoke to a sold out house last night as part of the Distinguished Visitors Program. Angelou read a number of poems, including one of her most famous, "I Shall Not Be Moved."

By FERRON SALNIKER
Collegian Staff

Cheers and applause filled the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at the University of Massachusetts last night as one of the greatest voices of contemporary literature, Maya Angelou, arrived on stage.

Introduced as "the most incredible writer of our time" by Jillian Stasiak, president of the Distinguished Visitors Program, Angelou was greeted by a standing ovation. After asking the audience to be seated, the internationally respected writer, poet and educator broke into song. After another round of applause Angelou thanked the crowd.

"Six years ago I stopped being enchanted by airplanes," she said. "So to come from Winston-Salem in North Carolina to Amherst by bus is no small matter. I mean it when I say I'm glad to be here."

Angelou described the importance of African-American song and poetry. She also presented the audience with a bit of African-American history.

"Africans came here first in 1619. That was one year before the Mayflower docked," Angelou remarked. "And we are still here, the last ones hired and the last ones fired."

Laughter erupted from the crowd as Angelou spoke on topics ranging from her knee injuries to stories of her childhood.

"I love to laugh as you probably noticed," she said through her chuckles. "I don't trust people who don't laugh."

Speaking more seriously, Angelou took the audience through her childhood in Stamps, Ark. In listing her many achievements, Angelou gave credit to her grandmother and Uncle Willy. She described her uncle, who was paralyzed on his right side, and her grandmother as the adults in her life who helped her survive. She described them as her "rainbows in the cloud."

"Each one of us has incredible power. Each of us has potential beyond measurements," Angelou said. "We each have potential to be the rainbow in the cloud for someone else."

Angelou stopped speaking after she was raped at an early age by her mother's boyfriend, who was later killed. She claimed it was poetry that brought her voice back.

"Poetry helped me to return to my voice," she said, "and as you've noticed, I've hardly stopped talking since."

Angelou read a number of poems including one of her most famous, "I Shall Not Be Moved," and often paused to sing 19th Century African-American folk songs. The Renaissance woman stressed the importance of having courage and believing in peace.

"Without courage you can't practice any other virtues consistently," she said. "Bring peace with you, encourage your children to be peacemakers."

The poet also asked the audience to refrain from using racial slurs.

"I will not sit in a room where derogatory words are being used," she said. "The word n_____ was created to dehumanize people. It is poison."

Before reading a poem that she wrote and recited for the United Nations on its 50th anniversary, Angelou called for the audience to do its part to abolish ignorance. "The truth is we are all in positions where everyday we can lay down our burden of ignorance," she said.

Angelou reminisced about when the United Nations was established in 1945. She used to sit in front of City Hall in San Francisco and think, "If I wasn't black, pregnant and six feet tall, I could go into that building, too."

Years later, she was asked by the United Nations to write a poem for its 50th anniversary and for the world. She said it was because someone in her life was able to be the rainbow in her cloud.

Angelou has authored 12 best-selling books including "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings," "The Heart of A Woman" and her current best-seller, "Sung Flung Up to Heaven." Her autobiographies and poetry are known for their discussion of present issues of class and race struggles.

The multi-talented woman is also an actress, producer and playwright. A member of the Director's Guild of America, Angelou has produced six plays, including "And I Still Rise" for the Oakland Ensemble Theater. She not only produced, but also starred in "Cabaret for Freedom." She was both the author and executive producer of a five-part television miniseries called "Three Way Choice."

As an activist, Angelou's work has extended beyond her writing and performances. Angelou became the northern coordinator for the Southern Christian Leadership Congress (SCLC) where, under the leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, she became involved in the ongoing struggle for civil rights. Angelou is well known for her work toward improving conditions for women in Third World countries, primarily in Africa.

Angelou's visit was one of many events taking place this week in honor of "A History We Call Our Own: Women of Color Week at UMass," sponsored by a number of organizations on the UMass campus. The events, which feature well-known women of color that are artists, writers and activists, are all designed to highlight the contributions and visions of women of color during Women's History Month.

"So often, women of color's voices are marginalized, ignored or silenced," said organizer Sonny Suchdev. "Therefore, we wanted to bring these voices to the forefront and dedicate the last week of March to women of color."

March for peace held

By KELLY FARRELL
Collegian Staff

Student protesters left Haigis Mall yesterday afternoon, marched through Amherst Center, the Hampshire Mall and local stores, and then made their way back home without incident.

The group of about 250 students from the Five Colleges and local high schools blocked intersections downtown and along Route 9 on its way to the Massachusetts Army National Guard's recruiting station in the Hampshire Mall. The group then marched into Wal-Mart and then to Amherst College before disbanding in Amherst Center.

"I think this is a first protest for a lot of people," said Joshua Jackson, a student of Hampshire College. "I don't know if a lot of Americans understand the possible consequences of this war. I don't know if a lot of the kids here do, but I think they do. I think that's why there's a sense of urgency here."

The group of protesters included people on bikes, skateboards, roller blades and stilts. They all carried signs with new and old messages for peace, including "Honor the troops by questioning their leaders," and "If war is the answer, you're not asking the right questions." Others read: "You can't liberate a corpse" and "History need not repeat, repeat, repeat."

In addition to holding signs, protesters had flags – representing both Iraq and the United States.

"This is our flag too," said protester James Brady regarding the idea that the U.S. flag could be a symbol for supporting peace, as well as a symbol for supporting war.

Amherst resident Dade Singapuri handed out free peace pins. Activists had stickers and wore T-shirts with messages such as "Why do we kill people for killing people to show that killing is wrong?"

Police towed the line of protesters and blocked the streets as they marched, chanting slogans such as, "No blood for Empire," and, "Drop Bush, not bombs."

The crowd sat down blocking the intersection at North Pleasant and Main Streets while people passing by honked their horns, waved the peace sign, bowed in solidarity, climbed up through their sunroofs and gave a parade of high fives as if they were welcoming a sports team.

Others yelled obscenities, revved their engines and burned rubber to demonstrate their lack of support for the peace movement. Frustrated by the walking pace of traffic, a Gulf fuel truck driver laid on his horn for several minutes until the crowd decided to clear the road for him to get by.

Another man showed his lack of support for peace by getting out of his car holding a U.S. flag and confronting the protesters shouting, "The boys are here, the men are there."

Many onlookers stayed neutral and expressed little of their own opinions. Ryan Koutsogiananas witnessed the protesters blocking the intersection of Route 9 and South Maple Street in front of the Hampshire Mall.

"You do what you have to do," Koutsogiananas said. "They could've stopped traffic longer than they did. They made the point that they want the war to stop and that [protesting] is the way to do it."

Once inside the Hampshire Mall, protesters stopped in front of a recruiting station of the Massachusetts Army National Guard, which was closed for the day.

A poster in front of the recruiting station read, "Earn your degree. Tuition free." Protesters wrote in red on the sign: "We won't die for education."

Protesters left the Hampshire Mall without incident soon after. A member of the group called for a visit to Wal-Mart and the group followed. After marching through the store, protesters sat down near the front registers and chanted, "War-Mart, Wal-Mart, Stop selling war toys."

Just as management was discussing with police how best to remove the protesters, the peace activists called a moment of silence for everyone suffering due to the war. They soon left the store, again without incident, chanting, "Money for jobs, not for war."

As the sun began to set, many protesters grew weary, and decided to take their mission onto the PVTA bus as they headed back home. About 50 others decided to march back on Route 9 through Amherst Center to Amherst College dining halls.

Sister Souljah to visit

By JESSE HIRSCH
Collegian Correspondent

Sister Souljah, revolutionary hip-hop artist turned social activist, will speak at 7:30 p.m. in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Ballroom as a part of the celebration of Women's History Month.

Souljah has emerged as one of the most powerful voices of contemporary black womanhood despite being labeled by critics as divisive and excessively angry in her discussions of racial hierarchy. Her speech will round out a diverse week of events in honor of "A History We Call Our Own: Women of Color Week at UMass," a celebration of the accomplishments of well-known artists, writers, and activists.

Souljah is often remembered for the controversy sparked when then presidential candidate Bill Clinton publicly attacked her debut album, "360 Degrees of Power." Since then, her accomplishments have been numerous, ranging from grass-roots political activism to her current charitable work in the employ of Sean "Puffy" Combs.

Souljah has also spent time as a political commentator for KISS-FM in New York, as a featured actress on the sitcom "A Different World," and as a humanitarian relief worker in Zimbabwe and Mozambique. Her travels and lectures have taken her all over America, Europe and Africa.

Currently she is the executive director of Daddy's House Social Programs, established by rap artist Sean "Puffy" Combs' non-profit

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 4
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 5
SPORTS PAGE 8
COMICS PAGE 7
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 7
MY BROTHER'S DUTY
WAR'S PERSONAL EFFECTS
PAGE 4
BANDWAGON
THREE NEW BANDS ON THE VERGE OF BREAKING OUT
PAGE 5
MINUTEMEN WIN
BASEBALL WINS HOME OPENER VS. HARTFORD
PAGE 8

Lombardi praises students

By S.J. PORT
Collegian Staff

Chancellor John V. Lombardi told the Faculty Senate yesterday that the University of Massachusetts will continue the fight to save programs and maintain excellence. He said students have done their part and that it is time for the University to do theirs and convince the legislature to match the commitment of the students with equal effort.

Lombardi made it clear that he intends to continue talking to legislators about funding professors' pay raises. And he will persist in his efforts to keep programs at their current level so that students, comprising the group he said has repeatedly stepped up to bat for the University, do not suffer.

"[What] is important for everybody to keep very solidly in mind all the time as we have these conversations," Lombardi said, "is that of all the people who care about the University, there is one group that over the last two or three years has consistently stepped up and done more to sustain this enterprise and its programs, and that's the students."

The chancellor said that he has a "pretty tight focus" to return the same commitment that students have. "As we recognize that our students have really done their part," he said, the University must now do its part to "persuade legislators to match the kind of support and commitment our students have shown."

Concerning budget cuts and proposed reorganization, Lombardi said he expects to maintain core activity and maintenance. He also expressed resolve to continue the fight to fund contracts and raises promised by the Swift administration.

"We will not quit this conversation," said Lombardi. "It is one of highest priorities, and concerns the critical needs of our University."

Lombardi did not see a resolution to the contract discussion in the immediate future, saying that if it is not solved during the next couple of years, the University will find itself in serious trouble.

Following his announcements, faculty members prompted Lombardi for comments on Bulger's recent promise to cut $40 million from the UMass budget.

"We've all had conversations about the reorganization of public higher education," Lombardi said. "For a newcomer to this Commonwealth it's been quite a bit of theater, that's for sure. Parts of it are still obscure to be, in part, because I don't understand the language in which these words are being spoken."

Lombardi said that he believed Bulger's memo concerning how the system would face this drastic cut was a harsh statement to help the legislature realize how drastic and crippling the cuts would be to the University.

Bulger's plan to cut $40 million included saving money by decreasing or privatizing the physical plants, further consolidating programs, phasing out low enrollment programs and majors, decreasing course services (including advising and childcare) and making an additional 1,000 staff layoffs.

"These are amalgamations of what will happen on five different campuses," Lombardi said.

Continued on page 3

EMILIE TUCCIAN-HICKS/COLLEGIAN

A member of the Faculty Senate speaks at yesterday's meeting. During the meeting, Chancellor Lombardi praised the commitment of the students.

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

"What do you think about the war?"

By Emilie Duggan-Hicks

Jessica Danger
Senior
Exercise science

"I'm against it. I think that it's the wrong approach to solving problems. And I think this is a distraction from other things the government is doing that aren't right."

Erika Dumicic
Senior
History and Italian

"I have no comment."

Carrie Drzik
Sophomore
Theater

"I don't feel educated enough to really have an opinion but I feel we should be supporting our troops."

Kevin McClintocko
Sphomore
Theater

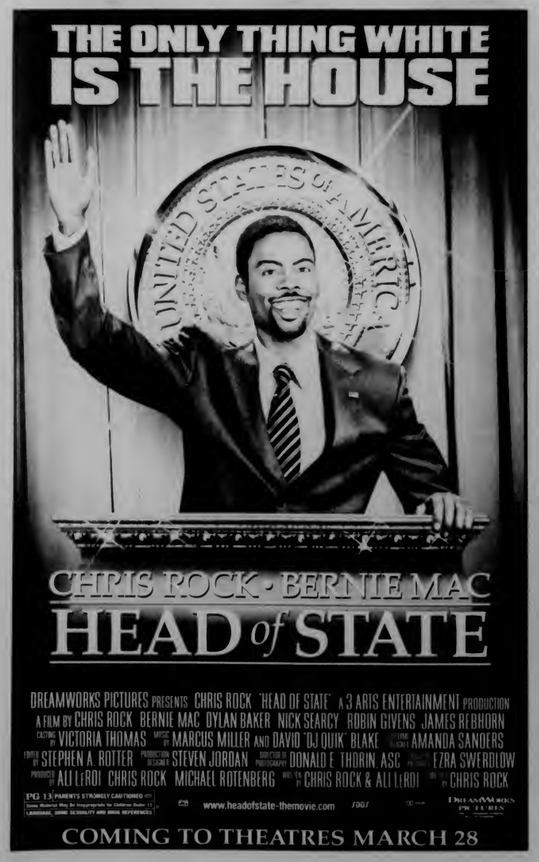
"I have friends in Iraq. I have friends on the peace side. I'm trying to support my friends, but I support peace more than anything."

Kate Mettam
Sophomore
Theater

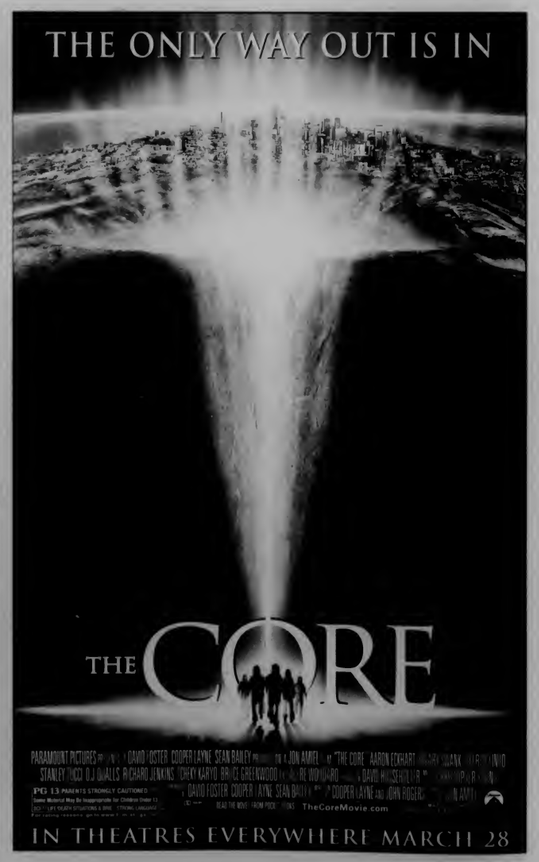
"I wish that war wasn't the answer and I'm not happy about this. But our troops are doing the best they can and we need to support them."

Chris Nadeau
Sophomore
Spanish Education

"I believe the Bush administration is glorifying its point that it's trying to help the Iraqi people when it's just furthering our own interests."



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of ... semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of ... printing jobs on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded ... Year. The Weekly College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then ... Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has ... since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) ... weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew E. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Dan Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

Bulger excluded

BOSTON (AP) – University of Massachusetts President William M. Bulger will be excluded from an upcoming meeting where Gov. Mitt Romney will discuss his higher education overhaul plan with the chancellors of the five UMass campuses, aides to the governor said.

Romney's aides said Wednesday that Bulger was not invited to the April 2 meeting because his views were irrelevant, since Romney has targeted Bulger's office and job for elimination.

"The fact of the matter is, there is no role for the president's office going forward under the Romney reorganization plan," said Eric Fehrnstrom, the governor's spokesman. "President Bulger has also made his views well known on our plan."

The plan, which aims to save $150 million in higher education spending to help close a $3 billion state deficit, would eliminate the UMass presidency and system administration to save $14 million. It also would diminish the research missions of the Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell campuses, the College of Art and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy would be spun off and independently run and UMass Medical School in Worcester would be privatized.

On March 10, Bulger, who is paid $309,000 a year, denounced the governor's plan as a "corporate takeover" of public higher education.

Last Tuesday, four high-tech business leaders – Ray Stata, chairman of Analog Devices; George W. Chamillard, chief executive of Teradyne, Inc.; Henri A. Termer, president of Genzyme Corp.; and Michael J. Costello, managing partner of PriceWaterhouseCoopers – threw their support behind Bulger, who has been head of the UMass system since 1996.

"It seems puzzling that one would hold a UMass-related meeting that did not include the president," said Robert Connolly, a spokesman for Bulger.

Jean MacCormack, chancellor of the Dartmouth campus, said she might not attend the meeting if Bulger is excluded, because he has been closely involved in academic and fiscal management for the last seven years.

"I don't want to participate in something that has got a different agenda than was advertised," MacCormack told The Boston Globe. "I'm not sure what I'll do about the meeting."

Romney originally had planned a one-hour meeting with the leaders of the 29 state colleges and universities to explain his overhaul plan, but now is seeing them in smaller groups before the plan is sent to the Legislature in early May.

- Associated Press

EMILIE DUGGAN-HICKS/COLLEGIAN

All we are saying

A UMass student participates in yesterday's rally for peace at Haigis Mall. The peace march continued through Amherst Center, and out to the Hampshire Mall and WalMart.

John Bulger to plead guilty to perjury

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – The brother of fugitive James "Whitey" Bulger will plead guilty to federal charges stemming from comments he made to grand juries investigating his brother, who is wanted by the FBI in connection with 21 murders.

John P. Bulger's attorney, George F. Gormley, made a brief appearance in U.S. District Court on Thursday to tell Judge George O'Toole that Bulger will enter a guilty plea on April 10.

"He told the court that he wishes to do that," Gormley said after the hearing.

Bulger had been scheduled to stand trial April 6 on two charges each of perjury and obstruction of justice. He was indicted in 2001 on charges of lying to two federal grand juries investigating his brother.

Bulger allegedly told a grand jury in 1996 that he did not know his brother had a safe deposit box. The indictment claims John Bulger made a payment in 1996 for a box in Clearwater, Fla., opened by James Bulger four years earlier.

The indictment did not specify what the safe deposit box contained or what it was used for.

John Bulger is also accused of telling a different grand jury in 1998 that he had not heard from his brother directly or indirectly since James Bulger disappeared in 1995. Prosecutors said James Bulger had contacted John Bulger through an intermediary in 1996.

Investigators have tried to track any attempts by James Bulger to contact John Bulger or his other brother, William Bulger, the former president of the state Senate who is now president of the University of Massachusetts.

John Bulger faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison on each of the perjury charges and 10 years on the obstruction charges.

James Bulger, wanted in connection with 21 murders committed while he was a top informant for the FBI, disappeared in January 1995 after his former FBI handler warned him of a coming racketeering and extortion indictment. Former FBI agent John Connolly Jr. is now serving a 10-year prison sentence for racketeering and obstruction of justice.

Worker dies after smallpox vaccine

By Laura Meckler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – A second health care worker has died of a heart attack after receiving the smallpox vaccine, and officials are investigating whether vaccinations are to blame for cardiac problems seen in 17 people who have been inoculated.

The vaccine has never been associated with heart trouble, but as a precaution, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is advising people with a history of heart disease not to be vaccinated until further investigation is complete.

CDC officials said Thursday there was some evidence the smallpox vaccine has played a role in heart inflammation. They were less certain whether three recent heart attacks were related to the vaccine.

In New York state, officials halted smallpox vaccinations altogether while the heart disease issue is sorted out.

Also Thursday, an expert panel advising CDC raised questions about the government's vaccination program.

The Institute of Medicine suggested the CDC was moving too quickly beyond its first stage of vaccinations, which include public health and hospital workers, into a second stage, which includes a large group of emergency responders. The report, released Thursday, also called on the federal government to compensate people injured by the vaccine.

On Capitol Hill, lawmakers struggled to do just that, but a House vote scheduled for Thursday was abruptly canceled amid questions about whether Republicans had enough votes to beat back a somewhat larger Democratic compensation plan.

The issue of smallpox vaccine safety gained new urgency this week after a Maryland nurse died Sunday of a heart attack, and the CDC launched an inquiry on a possible connection between heart disease and the vaccine.

The second death came Wednesday to Virginia Jorgensen, 57, of St. Petersburg, Fla., who was a nurse's aide at a local hospital. She suffered a heart attack about two weeks after being vaccinated against smallpox.

Like the other vaccine recipients with heart troubles, Jorgensen had a history of high blood pressure and other factors that put her at risk for heart attack.

"She's been having heart problems for almost a year," her husband, Robert Jorgensen, said in an interview Thursday. After the vaccination, he said, "within a few days she was feeling like she had a cold coming on and then it got bad."

The recent deaths "display a sense of urgency" and make it plain legislation is needed, said Rep. Richard Burr, R-N.C., the chief sponsor of the Republican legislative package.

The latest GOP version would pay about $262,000 if a person dies or is permanently and totally disabled by the vaccine. Those less severely injured could receive up to $50,000 per year in lost wages, up to $262,000. They could also get unpaid medical expenses.

Democrats want more for lost wages and want funding for the program guaranteed.

On the question of heart problems, CDC officials are investigating 17 cases, including seven civilians and 10 people vaccinated in the military program. The civilian cases include three women who had heart attacks – two of whom died – and two with angina, or chest pain. The last two suffered heart inflammation, and all 10 military vaccinees suffered heart inflammation.

Hip-Hop artist turned social activist to speak company for children. The program serves 600 inner-city children from ages six to 16, helping them to gain confidence and see themselves as powerful individuals. Sister Souljah also educates teens about womanhood, manhood and teen pregnancy.

Continued from page 1

"Women of Color Week" is sponsored by the Office of ALANA Affairs, the Women of Color Leadership Network, Women's Studies, the Distinguished Visitors Program, the Black Student Union, Solidarity and Food For Thought Books.

The event is free and open to the general public. For more information contact the Distinguished Visitors Program at umassdvp@yahoo.com or Shameeka Leacock, president of the Black Student Union, at 546-0580.

Lombardi commends spirit of the students at Faculty Senate

Continued from page 1

He went on to explain that the legislature is trying to save money by cutting from the "fat" of the University system.

"Let's not imagine there's a lot of fat in this system, that if we pinch it we'll be left lean and handsome. If we squeeze it in this manner we'll be left limping, crippled. We'll not be the same as what we are," Lombardi said. "There is no fat."

The Faculty Senate, following announcements and further discussion with Lombardi, voted unanimously to reinstate Ernest May as secretary of the Senate again. May accepted the post and will continue his work for another three-year term.

The next meeting of the Faculty Senate will be on April 10 at 3:30 p.m. in Herter Annex 227.

All Collegian Staff:
The Master EIC Debate will be held on Wednesday April 2nd at 7 p.m. in room 168C in the Campus Center. Voting will take place between April 3rd and April 11th.

www.dailycollegian.com

Boston University
SUMMER TERM 2003

Experience a Boston Summer!

Call us at 617-353-5124 or visit the Summer Term website at:

www.bu.edu/summer

Boston University is an equal opportunity/affirmative action institution and employer

2003 MAKING ART Making a Living

Wednesday workshops for emerging artists

Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

- Visual Artists and Writers April 2
  - Marketing • Galleries
  - Distributors • Contests
  - Agents

  Daniel Grant, author of How to Start and Succeed as an Artist
- Performing Artists April 9
  - Marketing • Agents
  - Contracts • Working in Education
  - Collaborations

  Jazz guitarist Michael Gregory and theater artist and educator Tracy Vernon
- Art and the Law April 23
  - Co-sponsored by Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts of Massachusetts
- Art-Related Careers for Artists April 30
  - Web sites • Teaching • Licensing
  - Careers involving additional study (art conservation, art appraisal, art therapy, architecture, interior design, scientific and medical illustration)
  - Arts Management
  - Publishing, art galleries, museums, the theater, collectibles
  - The design field

  Daniel Grant

Who should come?
- UMass and Area Students in the Arts
- Dancers • Visual Artists
- Musicians • Actors • Writers

No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $10 or $40 for the series. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@continued.umass.edu to reserve a seat.

For more information: www.umass.edu/aes

plus
Arts and Activism
Thursday, April 15
Find out about the power of the arts to make a difference in your community.
Media artist and 5-College visiting professor Liz Miller joins visual artist Beverly Naidu in showcasing their community-based cultural work.

UMASS Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 2003

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Leaders needs to work together, pass kidnapping alert network

Buried behind all of the war coverage, two stories in the national news yesterday stood out. The first was the United States House of Representatives passing a bill 410-14 that approves a nationwide Amber Alert network. This will coordinate national searches for children who are declared missing by law enforcement officials. In the second, the reunion of a North Carolina girl with her family after four years missing served as a reminder why the House thought it was important enough to pass the bill in the first place.

In a world in which children are abducted all too often, any defense needs to be considered. The Amber Alert system, named after Amber Hagerman, a nine-year-old that disappeared from Texas in 1996, already exists in some shape or form in 39 states. Its biggest positive point is that it organizes special broadcast alerts as soon as the news becomes available to all – news where timeliness is vital if a child has been abducted and is in danger.

While yesterday's reunion of 15-year-old Wanda Pevia and her family was certainly joyous, it also shows some of the horrors that potentially await children labeled as "missing" or "abducted." Pevia has reappeared after four years with two kids to care for – an enormous load for anyone, let alone a child of 15. Missing children who have recently reappeared, including Pevia and Utah's Elizabeth Smart, do nothing to alter the idea that efforts need to be made to prevent similar situations in the future. While they survived, their lives are forever altered.

Congress has gone around on the issue before, with differences between the House bill and the Senate bill resulting in nothing at all being passed. That's nonsense. The main differences between the two versions of the bill are provisions that the House has added, including a strict crackdown on sex offenders and a mandatory search of federal buildings when children are declared missing.

Last year, the Senate approved a bill creating the child kidnapping alert network, but balked at added provisions. That same scenario is very likely again, and that's a shame.

"Here we are again, facing the same misguided strategies, and this time again with even more reason for the Senate to reject the bill which the Amber Alert bill is buried in," said Rep. Robert Scott, D-Va., before Congress, according to CBS News.

It's a valid point. Each time measures are added to the bill, even measures with potential like the sexual offender crackdown, it becomes more and more difficult to gain the consent of enough voting members in both the Senate and in the House.

House and Senate negotiators now face the daunting task of finding some middle ground, and senators and House members face the criticism that comes with potentially failing the American people with too much political bickering and not enough action once again.

Hopefully, a compromise can be reached.

Information from missingkids.com and CBS News was used in the writing of this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

A soldier's story

Jen Hodson

After war broke out last week, I knew that it wasn't in my heart to talk about anything else but what's going on in today's battlefield between the American and Iraqi soldiers. These important matters should be addressed and I feel that since I have been given a privilege to speak, I will use it.

The war between the United States and Iraq has broken out and there couldn't be more confusion about what's happening to the soldiers who are so bravely risking their lives for people such as us in today's society. I worry every time I watch the news, and even more so for my brother who is a Marine out there amongst all the rest fighting for our country and trying to make our lives better ones to live.

My brother just turned 30 a couple of weeks ago and I remember him saying to me in an email, "If you had asked me at age 20 where I would have been in 10 years, I would have never guessed that I'd be spending my 30th birthday here." He's told me what it's like out there, just being in the middle of pure chaos, how he constantly fears for his life and has a gun by his side at all times. I know he's scared, and I am too.

After hearing Bush's speeches and news of going to war, I was so upset that I didn't know what to think. All I knew was that family was most important and my brother was out there in the middle of what could be the final years of his life. Trying not to cry in front of others is hard, especially when people talk about the war, because I know that maybe tomorrow could be the last day that I ever hear from him.

I'm really sad because I feel like some people take for granted what the American soldiers in the Middle East and everywhere else in the world are doing for us. Some people seem to not even take notice of the war or choose to remain uneducated about it. When talking about the soldiers, I've even heard people say, "Well that's their job," or, "They should have expected to go to war when joining the military," and that angers me.

I feel like people who say things like that don't really understand what's at risk and are being insensitive to others' feelings. Maybe they should think twice before saying anything at all. What these men and women are doing for us shows they are the bravest and most patriotic of our kind. They are out there fighting so we don't have to.

> "What these men and women are doing for us shows they are the bravest and most patriotic of our kind."

Coming home from spring break was heartbreaking. Seeing my parents fight and not hearing from my brother was the hardest of all. Times are really tough and I have found myself glued to the TV set in tears some days, wondering whether or not the person they are talking about on the news is him. Sometimes I try to forget about it all and go out, but everywhere I look there's something about the war. How many deaths today? How many tomorrow? When will it end? E-mail connection has been shut off completely, and now it seems as though hearing from him is almost a miracle for us.

I have grown numb over the last week or so, and can only wonder how he is doing by glancing at pictures he sent to us of him and the troops before the war broke out. It's becoming harder and harder to concentrate on schoolwork and to deal with everyday things that I'm normally used to. So many others are in the same situation as I, and it makes me sad to know that the world is in so much pain. But it seems as though there isn't much we can do about it.

In closing I would like to express how grateful I am for what all the soldiers out there are doing for our country and the American people. I'm sure most of you know someone who is at war or have friends or acquaintances that know someone who is at war, and I offer my deepest sympathies to you. I am so proud of my big brother and want him to know that I love him so much and hope he and everyone else out there comes back home safe and sound.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian Columnist.

Failing at diplomacy

Yousef Munayyer

The war has begun. And its first casualty has been identified: the United Nations.

Before that first cruise missile hit its target, a dangerous blow was dealt to the United Nations. The ramifications of this war being launched without the consent of the United Nations Security Council will change the face of international relations as we know it.

There was debate going on for a while within the Security Council as to how to proceed with disarming Iraq. The United States failed to make the case to convince the members of the Security Council. The United States then withdrew all efforts and began this war. And after that distinct failure, administration officials blamed it on the French. Some congressmen want to rename french fries and french toast.

This just highlights how unseriously this issue has been taken, and the complete disregard that this administration has for the global organization. If we are to deal with nations that disagree with us by bombing them, changing their government or renaming food attributed to them, I foresee serious problems.

> "If we are to deal with nations that disagree with us by bombing them, changing their government, or renaming food attributed to them I foresee serious problems."

The French had said that they would immediately veto a resolution calling for the use of force to disarm Iraq. Instead they, along with other nations, proposed other resolutions calling for steps to be taken before force is used. The United States would not accept such measures.

Then we heard pundits and even administration officials say that the French "torpedoed" the diplomatic process. All of a sudden the country that was advocating for a more tolerant more peaceful resolution was acting undiplomatic. I still do not see how that makes sense. I still do not accept that a diplomatic solution could not be established, especially in the case of a pre-emptive war.

We cannot forget that Iraq did not attack the United States. This doctrine of pre-emptive strikes is the most dangerous thing that could happen to diplomatic efforts. Iraq is a secular, non-fundamentalist, socialist nation. Al-Qaeda is a fanatical Islamic fundamentalist organization headed by people who have publicly denounced Saddam Hussein as an "infidel" (the same language they use to refer to Americans).

The only link between the two is the letter "q" in both names. But that would mean Mozambique would also be linked in this terror triangle even though it might just be on the list of nations in the "coalition of the willing." But who knows ... that list is updated with third-world nations dependent on United States aid frequently.

So there is no link between Iraq and al-Qaeda. Hans Blix has reported that Iraq has been dismantling banned weapons throughout the process, yet we still blame the French for sabotaging (oh no, a French word!) the diplomatic process by threatening to use a veto. This is another thing I do not completely understand.

The United States, the supposed even-handed mediator in the Palestinian conflict, has vetoed 34 Security Council resolutions condemning Israel for its actions against Palestinians, incursions across internationally recognized borders, and even the killing of United Nations relief workers. Yet this administration still has the nerve to blame the French for saying they would use a veto.

The United States' protection of Israel by the Security Council has been the only thing holding back the United Nations from helping to resolve the raging conflict. And when the French are going to use one veto we hold them responsible for breaking the diplomatic process in our own pre-emptive war. And what even further amazes me is how people still wonder why the rest of the world dislikes Americans.

This strike is nearly unilateral, with the exception of the British and moral support from Micronesia. (Yes, it is a member of the "coalition of the willing." I'm curious as to how many people actually know where Micronesia is. Do you think President Bush does?) America appears to be arrogant (a role we like to attribute to the French) and acting in its own interest. The dislike for American foreign policy is no longer contained in the Middle East as it may have been in the past, and has now spread across the rest of the world.

So now the United Nations has been crippled even further. Its role as a diplomatic arena to prevent war is now nearly irrelevant. The United States, to the delight of many administration officials, has brought itself above the United Nations and international law again.

Hopefully Gulf War II will not lead to League of Nations II. Officials may accuse the French of "torpedoing" a resolution, but what they must realize is that they dropped a weapon of mass destruction right on the head of the United Nations' legitimacy.

If Saddam is found and removed (which may be difficult since he, like Clark Kent, is a completely different person with glasses on, and makes about as many public appearances as Dick Cheney), Iraq will have to be rebuilt. The United Nations is already considering using $2 billion to do this, a record high for any aid through the organization.

The only hope left for the United Nations, the only opportunity it will have to recover from this near fatal blow, would be for it to take very firm control of the rebuilding of Iraq and to assure that the government in Iraq is chosen by the people of Iraq – not by the White House.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian Columnist.

The wonderful words of Marvin Gaye

Eduardo Bustamante

"What's goin' on?!"

The "liberal" media has done a terrific job of scaring me with a combination of color-coded terrorist warnings and images of death and destruction in Iraq. Their 100 percent objective, 100 percent support of the war coverage has kept me totally preoccupied. I will now take a look at what I've been ignoring.

The first thing is that since George W was elected not a single good thing has happened for this country.

Bush lost the majority vote but with a little help from the Electoral College, his daddy's (his daddy's appointed Supreme Court justice), his brother the governor, and his cousin at Fox News, he managed to steal the election. Democracy? Out.

The Homeland Security and Patriot Acts have given intelligence agencies the power to suspend the Bill of Rights, and permission to act in any manner they see fit without public accountability. Freedom? Out.

So what's in since Bush's election? War and depression.

Other measures of administrative success are better described in terms of up and down.

What's up? Government hypocrisy, oil prices, unemployment, poverty, taxes on the poor, the national deficit, protests, international instability, the number of United Kingdom military police rebelling against Tony Blair, corporate scandal, terrorism, countries with chemical and biological weapons (15), countries with ties to terrorism (16), standardized testing, people dying from a new extreme strain of the common cold called SARS (500 cases and 22 deaths), ethnic diversity among United States ground troops in Iraq, and finally, people that don't like the U.S.

The president of Somalia announced publicly that he prays nightly for Iraq to win the war. Russia, France and Germany have publicly denounced it. Even the Vatican has called out the president.

What's down? Taxes for the rich, national security, the stock market, the economy, accessibility to higher education, funding and quality of public education at all levels, the income of middle class households, the United Nations, support for the war (people are just now realizing that war is about killing people), consumer confidence, funding for military veterans' programs, the belief that there is a difference between the Republican and Democratic Parties (only 39 percent of the population voted in the last elections), the number of congressmen whose families will die in the war (of the 535 congressmen only one has a child enlisted in the armed forces), and finally, U.S. citizens' understanding of international policy (40 percent of Americans recently polled believe that Saddam Hussein was personally involved in the September 11 World Trade Center attacks).

Michael Moore wrote in an open letter to President Bush, "The majority of Americans are not fooled by your weapons of mass destruction ... Here's what threatens us: two and a half million jobs lost since you took office, the stock market having become a cruel joke, no one knowing if their retirement funds are going to be there, gas now costs almost two dollars a gallon, the list goes on and on." But does it? Yes.

President Bush recently cut federal funding that allows poor children who can't afford school lunch to receive it for free. That's right, I said it – he took their lunch money! What's worse is at the same time that Bush is taking lunch money from poor kids, he is requesting a $1.5 trillion tax cut that primarily benefits the rich.

North Korea broke off U.S. liaison talks a few days ago and pulled out of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. North Korean officials claim that the U.S. is pushing the Korean peninsula to "the brink of war" and breaking its treaty obligations.

Pakistan and India are also developing nuclear missiles. Tariffs placed on steel by Bush have not only been deemed illegal, but some claim that they have cost 200,000 Americans their jobs in the past year.

Apparently, 200,000 is a special number, as it is also the number of U.S. military casualties deemed acceptable by the Pentagon for the war.

Dozens of women at the U.S. Air Force Academy are stepping forward to expose a culture in which nearly all women expect to be raped. What's worse is they expect that if they come forward, they will be punished or expelled. Billions in cuts have been proposed for food stamps, child nutrition programs, and healthcare for the poor. And the icing on the cake – Saddam challenged Bush to a debate and Bush refused.

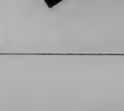
Due to this war I have also forgotten some things. For some time I had hoped to see teachers, firefighters and policemen paid a decent wage. They still don't get paid jack. I had also hoped to see campaign finance reform and free public health care. No love there either.

There was also Bush's No Child Left Behind Act that promised equal opportunity education for the poor. It is now coming in severely underfinanced.

I had also hoped that we could catch a six foot seven inch Saudi Arabian world famous multi-millionaire terrorist, who symbolically castrated the U.S. and killed thousands of innocent civilians. I haven't heard his name in quite some time, though. Honestly, how hard could it be to spot a world famous, six-foot-seven-inch Saudi Arabian terrorist with a dirty beard and a turban in a crowd? I'm sure that we'll remember, and find him right before the next election.

I was also under the impression that we were going to rebuild Afghanistan. I wonder what happened with that?

I also vaguely recall ties between the White House and Enron. However, I can't seem to find the video of Bush Jr. and Bush Sr. yuckin' it up with Enron's executives anymore. That tape and any talk of its implications have simply disappeared.

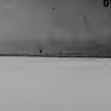


I'm feeling unpatriotic. I will now ignore the attack on America's elderly, poor, children and veterans. I will also ignore that this attack coincides with the very rich lining of their pockets. If you will excuse me, we just got moved up to Orange. I am going to sit on my couch like a boob, scared s___less, with a remote in one hand and a roll of duct tape in the other.

Information from the New York Times and BBC was used for this column.

Eduardo Bustamante is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion

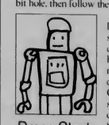


In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, [illegible] number or e-mail address. Letters should be between 200-400 words in length and [illegible] Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as "Editorial/Opinion." Letters may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: (413) 545-1592

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Box Amherst, MA 01003



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 2003

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hand held Game Boy a must have toy

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

Over spring break, not only was I driving up and down the Eastern seaboard, but I got time to review the latest toy from the people at Nintendo. They sent me a Game Boy Advance SP, GBA SP for short, and I think this may possibly be the greatest handheld system of all time. If you care to dive deeper into the rabbit hole, then follow the words.

In the past few days some of you out there may have seen the new commercial for the GBA SP. The system came out this past Sunday. I tested it out and this little handheld is loaded with positive aspects. Anything you didn't care for with the original GBA has been improved through this new little system. Everything from battery power to the eye straining view screen has been improved. There isn't any real key addition to the GBA SP because its improvements are everywhere on the system.

The first noticeable addition is how compact it is. The new GBA SP works like a flip phone to make it compact enough to fit into your pocket. The other advantage to the flip screen is that you won't get a bunch of scratches or cover the screen with whatever food particles are in your pocket. The other two major enhancements are the front light for the LCD screen and the battery pack. These are two problems that were lacking in all previous Game Boys. The front light provides clear vision at any time of day and at any angle, as where the GBA needed to be directly under a light for better viewing. The front light even has a little switch to make the battery power last much longer.

Speaking of battery power, do not stock up on AA batteries before you buy the system. It has its very own battery pack with a plug to recharge it. This little battery packs a punch that couldn't be delivered by most batteries. The pack, when fully charged, can last up to 10 hours of game play and 18 hours if the LCD screen is turned off. This is the feature out of all of the others that may be the decisive factor for buyers. This will mean never having to buy batteries costing you around $50 after a month's use. The other positive about the GBA SP is it has a three-hour recharge time, which is not bad considering the amount of hours you can get from it when it's done.

The newly released Game Boy Advance SP has improved on the last model in many ways, such as battery power and view screen.

Another addition, which some may already realize, is that the GBA SP acts like a universal Game Boy, so to speak. It can play any Game Boy game ever made. Anything from "Metroid Fusion" all the way back to "Super Mario Land" are playable. It will even add a touch of color to your older games so you don't have to stare at a gray scale Mario for 10 hours. This enhancement is also good for previous Game Boy owners that didn't want to upgrade to GBA when it came out. Instead of rushing out to buy a new game, you can just pop in an old one for a while.

The graphics are also enhanced as it has a 32-bit processor with an LCD screen. This combination makes most games even more enjoyable, but there are exceptions to the rule. Don't expect it to work magic on your older games and make them look spectacular. When you start up an older game it will be smaller than the screen size. To fix this just tap the L or R button to make it full screen. But be warned, as this will degrade the quality of the graphics slightly. Other than that, the graphics are simply mind-blowing for a handheld system.

With all of these excellent additions there cannot possibly be any negative features, right? Well, that's not true. There is one feature which Nintendo should have left in: a headphone jack. This will possibly be the most irritating thing about the system. If you're stuck in the family mini-van for a nice day long drive with two screaming children and your parents, you won't be able to hear anything coming from the GBA SP.

Even with its poor sound design, the GBA SP is possibly the best handheld to ever be released on the market. Its $99.99 price tag is very reasonable since you won't have to purchase the batteries over and over again (the recharge cable comes with the system). If you're a gamer that takes to the skies or the road a lot, this is definitely an item to add to your collection.

It comes in a cobalt (metallic blue) color or platinum, for those who like their GBA SP to match with their daily outfit. It has all of the capabilities that the previous model had, such as connecting to the GameCube for extended play of your GameCube games. The GBA SP is currently available at the nearest video game retailer.

Coming up in the next edition, I will follow up on "The Legend of Zelda: The Wind Waker." This is one game that may give Nintendo a further advance toward being on top of the gaming industry as we know it.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian Columnist.

Evanescence, Idlewild and Vaux yearning for your attention

Idlewild (above), who thrive in a land that's somewhere between pop, rock and punk, are this close to breaking out with their new album "The Remote Part."

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

One of the greatest pleasures ever afforded to a music fan is the act of discovering an act on the verge. It is that of finding a band before success spoils them, claiming that band as your own and then smiling as everyone jumps on the handwagon, knowing you heard them just as they stepped on the road to the stratosphere.

Evanescence 'Fallen' Wind-Up

Little Rock's Evanescence, Scottish power-pop rockers Idlewild and reanimcore punks Vaux sound nothing alike, and come from all corners of the world, yet they share one common thread; they are three bands on the verge, waiting for their chance to shine.

Evanescence's first single, "Bring Me to Life," has earned them significant comparisons to Linkin Park (not to mention radio airplay and a spot on the "Daredevil" soundtrack). Chunky, barreling guitars glossed over with a sleek electronic shine and a crystalline piano opening are mated with a rap breakdown and random, vicious screams courtesy of guest vocalist Paul McCoy of the band 12 Stones. The gimmick here that separates Evanescence from the rest of the LP sound-alikes clogging the market: the lead vocalist is a woman, Amy Lee.

Lee's vocals sound like nothing else in the world of modern rock, even if the music does. Her vocals are voluptuous, deep oceans of brilliance amidst a sea of grunting guitars, groveling bass and hungry, snarling drums. Lee never resorts to screaming, barking or moaning her lyrics. She stays on the side of actual singing, and all the gloriously better for it. Her voice is exquisite – at times ethereal and worldly, absolutely gorgeous and able to bring elegance and beauty to the guttural rock.

Diversity is a key ingredient for Evanescence. Their debut album, "Fallen," alternates between radio rocker style songs like "Bring Me to Life" and songs like the lush, chilly ballad "My Immortal." Dewdrop strings and cool pianos are Lee's only accompaniment as she sings her lament. Ghostly moans and perfectly eerie choral backing underline the Goth-tinged "Haunted."

Evanescence's music has a more subtly spiritual aspect than the usual sad-boy rock. While the album is almost entirely built up from images of sadness, angst, pain and depression, "Fallen" waxes poetry with mournful lyrics like "in my field of paper flowers and candy clouds of lullaby, I lie inside myself for hours and watch my purple sky fly over me." The unrelenting gloom here makes "Fallen" to be one heavy listen.

But stuttering computer effects, random bursts of violin and piano, graceful imagery, occasional fits of rocking out (as in "My Last Breath") and Lee's rapturous vocals make the pain go down easier.

Idlewild has slowly begun building a fan base in the States thanks to 1998's "Hope is Important" and 2001's "100 Broken Windows." That small, but loyal fan base should get exponentially bigger with the release of the band's third and best album, "The Remote Part."

Vaux 'There Must Be Someway to Stop Them' Volcom Entertainment

The four boys, led by the unique voice of Roddy Woomble, thrive in a land that's somewhere between pop, rock and punk, yet never fall into one of those categories (or any variant, either). The blistering fervor of "A Modern Way of Letting Go" follows the galloping drums and curving guitars on the pop crunch of "You Held World In Your Arms."

Idlewild 'The Remote Part' Capitol

"American English" sounds like it may just be an exquisite, heartbreaking epic in the Coldplay tradition. Idlewild also managed to pull off a tricky feat; writing music in which the lyrics are hitter (like "constantly searching to find something new, but what will you find when you think that nothing's true?"), yet making the music so inviting that you are pulled into its endless depths.

So it goes throughout the short (too short, in my opinion) length of "The Remote Part." With music ranging from toothy rock masterpieces such as "(I Am) What I Am Not," to sensitive, beautiful ballads such as "Live In A Hiding Place," to glorious Britpop nuggets such as "I Never Wanted," "The Remote Part" rocks as the year's first perfect album. Almost nothing about this album steps wrong – Woomble's warble is coated with passion, the music is heavy on rewards, the lyrics are smart and meaningful. In other words, there is nothing here that should make Idlewild hang its head in shame.

"The Remote Part" is 100 times better than the already excellent "100 Broken Windows." And it may be 1,000 times better than some of the stuff already released this year.

In five years Vaux could be doing what Queens of the Stone Age are already accomplishing: mixing heavy, ear-splitting music with a little pop sheen. "There Must Be Some Way to Stop Them" is wall-to-wall ferocity. 30-odd minutes of trembling, quaking, head-splitting punk that could leave you gasping for air. Vaux has no time for rest. The band throttles forward almost entirely on volcanic intensity, preferring only to sing when vicious screaming and bloody instrumentation start to leave the members broken and battered.

Lead singer – make that screamer – Quentin James Smith can rage with the best of them, his voice an insolent snarl hurling out songs with titles like "Set It To Blow," "Ride Out R__h" and "Shot in the Back." Fellow band members follow through with sulphur-coated musical attacks.

But what separates Vaux from some screamcore artists, what could put them on a path to creating a masterpiece as QOTSA did last year, is the fact that they make their music accessible. Melodic shifts and harmonic scales are buried under these barnstorming fits. Not being a fan of this kind of screaming punk, not being impressed with the new Blood Brothers release, it's kind of a surprise that I could listen to Vaux and not be turned off. But that's the paradoxical beauty of this band: it can push its throats to the extreme and yet still make music that sounds like music.

Blake pleads innocent to shooting

By Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Actor Robert Blake pleaded innocent Thursday to murder and conspiracy charges in the death of his wife.

During an arraignment hearing, Blake and co-defendant Earle Caldwell agreed to waive their rights to a speedy trial. The case was likely to go to trial in October.

Blake, who was released on bail for the first time after his preliminary hearing earlier this month, stood as a prosecutor read the charges against him, which include murder and solicitation to murder.

"Mr. Blake, to those charges how do you plead?" asked prosecutor Pat Dixon.

"Not guilty, sir," Blake said.

The 69-year-old actor is accused of killing 44-year-old Bonny Lee Bakley, who was shot to death on May 4, 2001, after dining with her husband at a restaurant in their Studio City neighborhood.

Blake claims he found his wife shot in their car after he went back to the restaurant to retrieve a handgun he carried for protection.

Prosecutors say Blake killed her himself because he was unable to hire a hit man. Prosecution witnesses testified that the actor felt Bakley was a bad influence who associated with disreputable people and might eventually lead their daughter into child pornography.

Caldwell, who is Blake's former handyman-bodyguard, also answered "not guilty" when asked for his plea on a murder conspiracy charge.

While arriving for the hearing, Blake, the former "Baretta" star, thanked those who helped free him from jail on bail March 14 after nearly a year in solitary confinement. He credited the judge who set bail, Lloyd Nash, with "saving my life."

The judge who presided over Thursday's hearing, Superior Court Judge Darlene Schempp, set a hearing for June 19 on pretrial motions, including a defense motion to dismiss the charges.

Prosecutors are not seeking the death penalty.

Entertainment Briefs

Billboard Latin Music Awards to honor Armando Manzanero and El General

MIAMI (AP) – Latin songwriter Armando Manzanero and rap artist El General will be given special honors at the Billboard Latin Music Awards in May.

The awards show, which honors the most popular artists on Billboard's Latin music charts, is set for May 8 at the Miami Arena. Manzanero, whose songs include "Somos Novios," "Adoro" and "Te Extrano," will receive the Hall of Fame award for long-term artistic merit and for expanding the boundaries and promotion of Latin music.

El General, a pioneer of Latin rap, will receive the Spirit of Hope award for his dedication to humanitarian causes, Billboard magazine editors said Tuesday.

The Panamanian artist has helped disadvantaged children in his home country. In 1994, he founded Poor Children Without Borders to pay for the schooling of needy children of single parents.

"These are awards based on extraordinary accomplishment and extraordinary commitment," said Billboard Latin bureau chief Leila Cobo. "And these are extraordinary artists: Armando Manzanero as a living icon whose music is beloved worldwide and El General as a role model dedicated to furthering the lives of children in his country."

Ades' 'The Tempest' to have world premiere in London

NEW YORK (AP) – The world premiere of Thomas Ades' "The Tempest," and The Royal Opera House premieres of Shostakovich's "Lady Macbeth of Mtensk" and Sondheim's "Sweeney Todd," highlight the 2003-04 Covent Garden season in London.

A new production of Handel's "Orlando" and new co-productions of Gounod's "Faust," Verdi's "Aida," Strauss' "Arabella" and Britten's "Peter Grimes" will be staged, the company announced Tuesday. There also is a borrowed production of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" that's new to the house.

"The Tempest," a co-production with the Royal Danish Opera and the Opera du Rhin in Strasbourg, France, opens Feb. 10, 2004. Simon Keenlyside is Prospero, Ian Bostridge is Caliban, Cynthia Sieden is Ariel in her Royal Opera debut and Ades conducts in his company debut. The libretto is by Meredith Oakes, and the production is by Tom Cairns.

"Lady Macbeth of Mtensk" opens April 1, 2004, with Katarina Dalayman as Katerina Ismailova, John Tomlinson as Boris Ismailov, Christopher Ventris as Sergei and music director Antonio Pappano conducting. The production is by Richard Jones.

"Sweeney Todd" opens Dec. 15 in a production first seen at the Lyric Opera of Chicago in November. Thomas Allen is the Demon Barber of Fleet Street, Felicity Palmer is Mrs. Lovett and Rebecca Evans is Susanna. Paul Gemignani conducts in his company debut.

Los Angeles to spruce up area outside new Walt Disney Concert Hall

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Officials launched a $14.5 million beautification project that will spruce up a two-block area of downtown outside the new Walt Disney Concert Hall.

The project will create wider, unobstructed sidewalks, with space for outdoor dining on two blocks of Grand Avenue between Temple and 2nd Streets. The roadbed will move about 20 feet east of its existing location outside the Music Center. New trees, lighting, benches and parks will create a pedestrian corridor.

"It will give the whole Grand Avenue a boulevard feel to it, a promenade feel, instead of what it is now," said Los Angeles County Supervisor Zev Yaroslavsky.

People will be able to congregate as they wait to get into the Walt Disney Concert Hall, scheduled to open in October, he said Tuesday.

County spokeswoman Judy Hammond said the project, whose future had been in limbo due to the state budget crisis, is back on track after the release of $9.5 million in state and federal transportation funds.

The remaining money for the project comes from the Music Center and other sources, she said.

Associated Press

Sox break camp; head for Atlanta

By Justin Pope
Collegian Staff

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Lightning flashed, thunder clapped and a torrential downpour struck City of Palms Park on Thursday washing out the Boston Red Sox's Grapefruit League finale against the Minnesota Twins.

But for a franchise accustomed to a never-ending hurricane season of clubhouse storms, this was the sunniest spring training in years.

The Red Sox, who raced to Atlanta for two more exhibition games before opening day Monday in Tampa Bay, broke camp healthy. They hit well and the bullpen looked sharp.

Off the field, the newcomers seemed to blend in, and unlike last year there was no confusion about who would manage the team or lead the front office.

"It was definitely a lot more peaceful and a lot more calm around here," centerfielder Johnny Damon said. "We know what we had to get done and we did it. We didn't waste any time out there. That's all you can ask for in spring training."

There were speed bumps. Little hoped to have his 25-man roster set when he left here, but he's still whittling five pitchers into two bullpen slots. Left-handed starter Casey Fossum struggled. Pedro Martinez sounded off about his contract extension, and Manny Ramirez sounded off hardly at all, sticking to a vow of silence that began late last year.

But that was small potatoes by the standards of this tumultuous franchise. Fossum still has Little's support. The bullpen, which will have all new faces from the one that left here a year ago and dragged the Red Sox down all season, was outstanding.

Ramirez, meanwhile, made plenty of noise at the plate, hitting .490. Shea Hillenbrand, shrugging off trade rumors, hit .471.

Martinez finished 1-3, but struck out 26 and walked none in 18 innings of work. His deadline for a contract extension by opening day still could prove a major distraction, but he looks healthy.

The Red Sox finished spring training 13-14-1, but it's a baseball axiom that spring records mean nothing. Little said things couldn't have gone much better.

"We're coming out of here as healthy as we can possibly expect to be and we're looking forward to getting started," Little said in his office Thursday.

Little was asked if things were easier for him this year compared to last, when he was hired midway through camp.

"I've had a better chance to communicate with the players more on an individual basis," Little said. "That's a big factor, especially with the way we're going to operate coming out of spring training. With the position players and the bullpen, it takes good communication because there could be some surprises pop up on somebody.

Little didn't seem heartbroken about Thursday's rain-out. Boston's third in seven days. He'd already called in a bunch of minor leaguers to avoid injuries to his starters, and figured the Twins had done the same.

"If we'd have played that game you would have seen Rochester playing Pawtucket," he said.

He'll use this weekend's game to try to stretch out not only his pitchers but position players as well.

But time for that is running short, and now Little takes his team north for the games that count. With no off days in the first two weeks, he'll quickly find out what his bullpen is made of and whether his team has the "character and personality" he hoped for.

"It takes that to play in the market we're playing in up there," Little said.

Baseball will once again serve as America's true pastime

It blurred dianated its fans with a maddening and heartbreaking work, creating one of the most exciting seasons in memory. Wistfulness signed in the following year. Book executives labor distances, high ticket prices, whines about shockingly salaries and predictable Yankees World Series victories sent after year have soured the entire Ebbets. Older folks accuse it accurately, of not being what it once was. Younger folks label it too slow and old-fashioned.

But part of baseball's beauty lies in its ability to reform and dig itself out of holes. It battles itself back from the worst of situations. Whatever problems remain with the game (nine-inning games that take four hours, or a ridiculously long season) they are improving.

In August, owners and players signed a four-year labor agreement, which means 11 seasons with no labor quarrels and strike threats. For the past two years we have been reminded of baseball's beauty as we saw two of the all-time greatest World Series.

Two seven-game thrill rides in which the winning team had to overcome a three-to-two game deficit. The winners were not the Yankees, but instead the Diamondbacks and the fairy-tale Angels.

In Ken Burns' PBS documentary "Baseball," author Gerald Early says that when civilization is studied 2,000 years from now, America will be remembered for three things: the Constitution, jazz music and baseball. Early said these three things were the most beautifully constructed things that this culture ever produced.

Now we turn to it with open arms, looking for a way to feel something besides what we feel now. Regionally we turn to the Red Sox, who have as good a shot as anybody this year (does anyone else see this offense as capable of scoring 900-plus runs?). Nobody knows what the future holds but all we can do is set aside our worries for a while, and let baseball take hold of our hearts and remind us why it feels so good to be alive.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headache relief, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.

Results you can feel.

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society

Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

New WORLD Theater presents

blessing the boats

Written & performed by Sekou Sundiata
Directed by Rhodessa Jones

April 2 & 3 at 8 pm
Bowker Auditorium, UMass

This heart-felt performance chronicles five tumultuous years of Sundiata's life – his struggle with life-threatening kidney failure, his subsequent organ transplant and recovery. Blessing the boats blends solo theatrical performance, literary reading, stand-up comedy, spoken word performance and the storytelling of a griot.

SPECIAL EVENT — The Bridge to Life: Panel Discussion on Organ Transplants, Diversity & Survival. Monday, March 31st, 7:30 pm, Cape Cod Lounge
Call NWT, 545-1972 for more info.

Tickets: $15-general public; $8-low income seniors,$5-students. Call the FAC Box Office, 545-2511

www.newworldtheater.org

This production of Blessing the Boats is made possible with support from the Ford Foundation and the Network of Cultural Centers of Color

The Ford Foundation

GET HOT.

Sandals are here! Steve Madden, Diesel, and Dansko.

ZANNA
downtown
Amherst

Plan Ahead For Next Year

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

Voted Best! 2001

By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145

Men's Lacrosse, Division I

No.	Name	Record	Points	Previous
1	Johns Hopkins	(8) 4-1	196	4
2	Virginia	(1) 5-1	190	1
3	Princeton	2-2	171	7
4	Georgetown	(1) 5-0	164	5
5	Syracuse	3-2	163	3
6	Massachusetts	7-0	161	9
7	Maryland	4-1	158	2
8	North Carolina	5-2	125	13
9	Rutgers	7-0	113	10
10	Loyola	5-1	107	9
11	Duke	6-3	97	8
12	Navy	4-2	84	12
13	Notre Dame	4-3	70	11
14	Cornell	4-2	63	15T
14	Hofstra	5-3	63	15T
16	Yale	3-1	34	14
17	UMBC	4-1	31	20T
18	Towson	2-3	29	17
18	Villanova	5-1	29	18
20	Ohio State	3-2	21	20T

Others receiving votes (in order): Pennsylvania, Bucknell, Hobart, Dartmouth

Softball, Division I

No.	Name	Record	Points
1	UCLA (14)	26-2	445
2	Arizona (4)	31-3	426
3	Washington	31-2-1	421
4	Oklahoma	27-4	369
5	Texas	25-5	357
6	California	27-7	354
7	Nebraska	19-7	343
8	Cal State Fullerton	19-10	338
9	Stanford	24-8	293
10	DePaul	16-3	293
11	Georgia	31-5	287
12	LSU	23-9	249
13	South Carolina	19-7	230
14	Arizona State	23-9	215
15	Michigan	15-6	194
16	Oklahoma State	24-6	185
17	Florida State	23-9	155
18	Alabama	25-10	152
19	Oregon	17-6	122
20	Texas A&M	23-11	106
21	Oregon State	20-11	92
22	Northwestern	15-6	45
23	South Florida	34-10	34
24	Ohio State	14-10	31
25	Massachusetts	13-10	30

Others receiving votes: Iowa 27, Louisiana-Lafayette 18, Wisconsin 13, Kansas 10, Florida 8, Pacific 4, BYU 3, Mississippi State 2, Southern Illinois 1, Hawai'i, Illinois 1.

Atlantic 10 Baseball
2003 Standings

	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	T	Pct.
East
Fordham	2	1	0 .667	5	9	0	.357
Rhode Island	2	1	0 .667	7	12	0	.368
St. Bonnies	2	1	0 .667	10	6	0	.625
Massachusetts	1	2	0 .333	5	8	0	.273
St. Joseph's	0	3	0 .000	2	13	0	.133
Temple	0	3	0 .000	4	13	0	.235
West
La Salle	3	0	0 1.000	8	4	0	.308
Richmond	3	0	0 1.000	19	3	0	.864
Duquesne	2	1	0 .667	9	12	0	.429
Dayton	1	2	0 .333	6	13	0	.316
GWU	1	2	0 .333	16	7	0	.696
Xavier	1	2	0 .333	8	11	2	.429

Atlantic 10 Softball
2003 Standings

	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	T	Pct.
Dayton	0	0	0 .000	9	10	0	.474
Fordham	0	0	0 .000	15	9	0	.625
GWU	0	0	0 .000	2	13	0	.133
La Salle	0	0	0 .000	6	10	0	.375
Massachusetts	0	0	0 .000	13	10	0	.565
Rhode Island	0	0	0 .000	6	7	0	.462
St. Bonnies	0	0	0 .000	10	8	0	.555
St. Joseph's	0	1	0 .000	8	6	0	.571
Temple	1	0	0 1.000	11	14	0	.440

A10 Women's Lacrosse
2003 Standings

	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	Pct.
Richmond	1	0	1.000	3	4	.428
St. Bonnies	1	0	1.000	3	0	1.000
GWU	1	1	.500	5	2	.714
Duquesne	1	2	.333	4	4	.500
La Salle	0	0	.000	0	6	.000
Massachusetts	0	0	.000	4	3	.571
Temple	0	0	.000	4	2	.667
St. Joseph's	0	1	.000	1	4	.200

Men's Lacrosse ECAC
2003 Standings

Team	Conference W	L	Pct.	Overall W	L	Pct.
Georgetown	2	0	1	1	1	1
Rutgers	1	0	2	2	2	2
Massachusetts	1	0	3	3	3	3
UMBC	1	1	4	4	4	4
Navy	0	2	5	5	5	5
Penn State	0	2	6	6	6	6

	Conference GF	GA	Overall GF	GA
Georgetown	23	16	55	32
Rutgers	13	8	78	42
Massachusetts	10	9	83	44
UMBC	19	22	61	42
Navy	17	23	61	48
Penn State	19	25	69	65

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/28/03 - Thursday 4/3/03 ONLY
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE (PG13) 1:40 4:20 7:00 9:35
SPIRITED AWAY (PG) 1:15 4:10 7:25 10:25*
OLD SCHOOL (R) 4:35 10:10
DREAMCATCHER (R) 1:00 4:05 (7:10) 10:15*
1> No Show Sat. 3/29 sneak preview of WHAT A GIRL WANTS (PG) 7:30
THE CORE (PG13) 1:10 4:15 7:15 10:20*
BASIC (R) 1:30 4:00 7:40 10:05*
HEAD OF STATE (PG13) 1:45 4:45 7:35 9:55*
CHICAGO (PG13) 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
WHEN FRIDAY THE 13TH (PG13) 1:55 4:50 7:45 9:50*
BOAT TRIP (R) 9:00*
PHILBY'S BIG MOVIE (R) 1:05 3:00 4:55 7:00*
THE HUNTED (R) 1:25 4:30 7:30 9:45
AGENT COBY BANKS (PG) 1:50 4:25 7:05 9:40
TEARS OF THE SUN (R) 1:35 7:25
Senior Show 4/2/03 - BOAT TRIP
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Collegian Sports

We just got our Smitt Smith voodoo doll!

sports@dailycollegian.com

Softball prepares for Atlantic 10 opener

By Jeff Boyd
Collegian Staff

The No. 25 Massachusetts softball team will begin conference play this weekend when they meet both La Salle and Fordham on their home fields.

This weekend will also mark the final road trip for UMass before they make their home debut next Wednesday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Before the Minutewomen can look ahead to playing in front of a home crowd; however, they must survive this weekend that will feature back-to-back double-headers against two of their conference rivals.

This afternoon, the Minutewomen (13-10) will face their first A-10 opponent of the season when they play a double-header against La Salle in Philadelphia. Penn. UMass is currently riding a four-game winning streak, and will look to add to that number when they face an Explorer squad that has struggled through the first part of the season.

The Explorers (6-12) have lost seven straight contests under new head coach Joe DiPietro as they head into the game against UMass.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen will travel to Bronx, N.Y. to play another double-header against Fordham.

The Rams (15-9) are very similar to UMass in the sense that their season has been a bit of a roller coaster. After losing three consecutive games last weekend, the Rams managed to string together four straight wins, the last two of which were shutouts.

In a game against Army on Wednesday, Fordham freshman Michelle Schlichtig fell one out short of pitching a perfect game. Schlichtig ended up tossing a one-hit shutout against the Black Knights to pick up her tenth win of the year, tying the school record for wins in a season.

The double-header against Fordham will likely be an afternoon of great pitching from both sides. Alongside Schlichtig in the Rams' rotation is junior Jamie Giguere. In her last outing, Giguere pitched a complete game three-hitter to lead Fordham to a 3-0 victory over Iona. Giguere also had five strikeouts in the game.

UMass is at no loss for pitching, either. Senior Kaila Holtz was named last week's A-10 Pitcher of the Week following her performances against Villanova and Seton Hall.

Behind Holtz are freshman pitching sensation Kelli Arnold and last week's A-10 Rookie of the Week, Jenna Bino.

UMass, as a team, seems to be finding its niche amongst the top teams in the nation. After almost dropping below .500 less than two weeks ago, the Minutewomen bounced back with four consecutive wins in last weekend's Big East/Atlantic 10 Challenge.

In their four wins to sweep the Big East/Atlantic 10 Challenge, UMass was able to produce some early run support for their pitching staff. The Minutewomen will look to do the same against La Salle and Fordham this weekend.

A big part of UMass' offensive production has been the play of senior Brandi Cross. Cross, who homered three times in the Challenge, has acted as a catalyst for the UMass offense this season.

Senior Emily Robustelli has also been swinging a hot bat as of late, and will look to continue that trend this weekend.

LOVE YOUR BODY WEEK
MARCH 31 - APRIL 6, 2003

EVENTS

• CAMPUS CENTER TABLES • Monday through Thursday, 10:00-2:00 Featuring: You Can't Change Your Genes

• NUTRITION PROGRAM • Getting in Shape. Learn to eat healthy. Campus Center, room 903 Wednesday April 2, at 7:00-9:00 p.m.

• MOVIE: RECOVERING BODIES • This is a movie about college student's problems with food and the process of recovery. UMass cable TV April 1 at 8:00 p.m., April 2 at 7:30 p.m. and April 3 at 7:00 p.m.

• FULLY ALIVE FASHION SHOW • a celebration of beauty in all body sizes. Fashion Show, Sunday, April 6, 1:00-3:00 p.m. Academy of Music, Northampton. Ticket prices are $10 adults, $7 students/children

• ALEXANDRA BELLER, MODERN DANCE CONCERT • Thursday, April 3 and Friday, April 4, at 8:00 p.m., Mount Holyoke College. Tickets available through UMass Fine Arts Center box office.

• MOVIE: "REAL WOMEN HAVE CURVES" • Friday, April 4 and Saturday April 5 at the Pleasant Street Theater.

• POETRY READING BY AUTHOR SUSAN STINSON • Works offering positive portrayals of large women. Saturday, April 12, 8:00 p.m. Free to the public at Beyond Words Bookstore, Northampton.

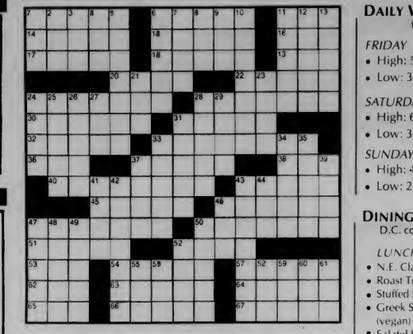
McMurphy's
welcomes
Live Music
CHRIS BALLINI
every sunday
NO COVER
positive ID required

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Lucas Grossman

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL • By Lucas Grossman

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley



GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JESSE HOOPER • By Richard D. Krochmal

ACROSS
1 Fiber cable
6 Home appliances
11 Took aim
14 Jane of Henry
15 Waterproof damage
16 Crack pilot
17 Gigantic being
18 Historic shrine
19 Guitarist — Wood
20 Long ago
22 High schoolers
24 Shellfish
26 Vivid
27 Natural gift
31 Fall behind
32 Hodgepodges
33 Arrives (2 wds.)
36 S. Dak. neighbor
37 Put out a fire
38 Edge
40 Bulletin
43 Tough-talking coach
45 — Blanche
46 Deadline
47 Devotion
49 Dance
51 Finger Arm's mother
52 Half past
53 Feverish
54 Like some bathrooms
57 Just ridiculous
62 Topple over
63 Abrasive mineral
64 Chloroform kin
65 Survey chiefs
66 Meager
67 Trees provide it

DOWN
1 Murky times
2 Taro dish
3 High explosive
4 Boise's st
5 Western ravines
6 Midwest airport
7 Goodbye to Lisa
8 Jean Baron
9 Name to Pierre
10 Cute pooch
11 Task's real name
12 PC menu items
13 Fidgety
21 Que. neighbor
23 Electric fish
24 Like — of bricks
25 Packed cotton
26 Excuse
27 Years before Virgo
28 Notre Dame
29 Byblos area
31 Cease-fire
33 Eccentric
34 Prefix for violet
35 Toll roads
37 Tapered seam
39 Square of glass
41 Vamoose
42 Tinders
43 Tiff
44 Weasley
46 Pollen spreader
47 Congregation
48 Kudla's pal
49 Animal sounds
50 Chicago colors
52 Actress Deborah
55 Little rascal
56 Pandoral plot
58 Extreme degree
59 Elephant shout
60 Composer — Rubens
61 Before now

1-31-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
for Amherst, Ma.

FRIDAY
• High: 59
• Low: 36

SATURDAY
• High: 64
• Low: 34

SUNDAY
• High: 45
• Low: 25

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• N.E. Clam Chowder
• Roast Turkey
• Stuffed Shells
• Greek Style Tofu (vegan)
• Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
• N.E. Clam Chowder
• Salmon with Miso Glaze
• Veal Madeline
• Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan-Hicks
COPY EDITOR
Barbara Lotto
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Kulak
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jolene Rousseau Carrie Auger

QUOTE OF THE DAY

You don't have to believe in something just because you've been told it all your life and now its all that's in between.

- Bodyjar
"Calling Orson"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Jealous that you are not a Capricorn? Their horoscope is so much better than yours today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Avoid water today. That includes snow and pools. The reason is because you're sugar baby, and you'll melt.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your partner will shower you with gifts and affection. That thing you are hoping for is going to come true.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Expand your horizons today. Try French cuisine and Chinese finger cuffs.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
When eating at the Dining Halls avoid the lobster bisque. Opt for the brown bag lunch.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Life goes on. Long after the thrill of living is gone. So let it rock, let it roll.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Someone else is walking a mile in your shoes. They are wicked comfortable, you might not get them back.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
When you meet a girl from Jersey, ask her if she has a keg in her pants.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
A romantic stranger will be ushered in on the winds from the library.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Give a little bit of your love today. Now's the time that we need to share.

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
That thing with the sink, yeah it's going to happen. Just be patient.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
If you get a Bluewall coffee today. Watch out for the tadpoles.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The sisters of Sigma Kappa would like to congratulate the following young women on becoming new members of our sorority and would like to wish them good luck for the remainder of the semester: Callie Conitois, Jylie Cushing, Helen Kang, Marianne Metzger, Aly Themel, Kelly Moscato, Lindsay Crabtree, Christyne Kane, and Katie McNamara.

Sororities! Help Promote American Idol throw viewing parties at your house and earn $350 e-mail Jennifer D at Zilo.com for more info

---

Wanna buy/sell stuff locally . . . No Shipping, Payment, Delivery Hassles. Need Classreviews or Classnotes? Free! Visit www.college shack.com today!

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer sublet w/ all utilities included. 2 Bedroom Apt. Cliffside in sunderland. All utilities included on Bus route 1-413-665-9333 only $820/month.

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR, WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES. 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSURC.ORG

FREE DELL COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 IN SAVINGS WHEN YOU MOVE_IN Deluxe 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & HOT WATER Plenty of free, on site parking Minutes from UMass On free busline CALL SUGARLOAF ESTATES 413-665-3856 Visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

---

Brandywine Apts: Now Leasing 1 & 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlinco lnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty .com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Roms $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise line entry on board positions or yearround. 941-329-6434. cruisecareers.com

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours from New York and Philadelphia), A Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics. WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, gymnastics, mountain bikes, motor bikes, outdoor adventure, ropes, arts & crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/16. Call (800)832-8228 or apply online: www.camadensis.com

---

RENT US YOUR EARS! $5 for a half hour of listening. Call 545-6837 Leave Message

---

HELP WANTED Part time. $8.50/hr. Brandywine Apt. needs a leasing person. Tues., Thurs., Weekends. Call 549-0600.

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392.

EMPLOYMENT

Office assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, receive inventory, computer data entry, answer telephone. All around person needed. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Looking for commission-based sales associates to work in Amherst, Holyoke, Northampton, Email resumes to jobs@college shack.com

---

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Summer Jobs on Martha's Vineyard! Store Managers, Assistants, Associates. Work for Soft As A Group in one of our retail stores in Edgartown Positions, housing available May 15th Richard White @ 413-323-8520 email @ rdwhite2@charter.net

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

More Than Just Summer Employment, Independent Lake Camp. Camp Counselors needed for private residential camp in the Beautiful Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. We are looking for people with a dedication to children, enthusiasm for diversity, and a desire to share their passion and expertise in any of the following areas: Computers, Circus Arts, Basketball, Magic, Rock Music, Skateboarding, Volleyball, Horseback Riding, Creative Crafts, Tennis, Swimming, Sailing, Fishing, Water-skiing, Boating, Theater, Dance, Video Production, Radio, Nature, Creative Writing, Soccer, Hockey, Go-Carts, Newspaper, Softball, SAT Prep, Cooking, Gymnastics, Role Playing Games, Golf, Rollerblading, Rocketry, Fine Arts, Mountain Biking, Climbing Wall, Adventure Course, Kitchen, Maintenance, Administration, Driving, and more. If you are looking for the best summer of your life, call 1-800-593-CAMP or check out our website at www.independencelake.com and apply online.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3983 ext 516

Spanish speaking for business development position. PT, must be available early morning. Please send cover letter and resume to: Fred Treyz, Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. Fax: 413-549-1038. Email info@remi.com

---

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS Excellent Advertising, Sales, Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to 7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Paul at AroundCampus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext. 288. www.aroundcampus.com

---

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED I am up to $150/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-548-0701

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Do you have questions about our rights? Do you think civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services office, 922 Campus Center. 545-1995.

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value! Reward Crystal 546-1678

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential, Tapestry Health. 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS. America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

YOUR AD COULD GO HERE!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSFRIDAY

FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Home, sweet home

Morgan, Crane lead Minutemen past Hartford in home opener

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

The members of the Massachusetts baseball team needed something to help them forget about a 17-5 shellacking handed down to them by Connecticut Tuesday.

That spot it

Senior designated hitter Chris Morgan paced the Maroon and White offense with a double, a home run, two RBI and two runs scored while sophomore Mike Crane earned the victory with 4-1/3 innings of scoreless relief as the Minutemen pounded Hartford 9-2.

UMass	9
Hartford	2

"It was a good game," UMass head coach Mike Stone said. "We swung the bats pretty well, and it's good to win. It feels a lot better than being on the other side of the score."

The Minutemen took a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the first inning when junior shortstop Mike Athas opened the game with a single through the left side, followed two batters later by a tremendous two-run homer by Morgan.

"[Morgan's homerun] really set the tone for us," Athas said. "He's someone that can do that for us with the bat."

"I wasn't really sure [if it was gone]," Morgan said. "I had to get it off the handle a little bit."

The lead grew to 5-0 in the bottom of the second on a solo home run by senior outfielder Matt Boulanger, his first of the season. After the Hawks scored a run in the top of the fourth, UMass took control of the game with four more runs in the bottom of the inning, keyed by a two-run single from sophomore outfielder Jason Twomley. The Maroon and White added runs in both the fifth and the sixth innings, while Hartford would wrap up the scoring with an unearned run in the seventh.

"We got the barrel on the ball a lot today," Stone said. "But we should've scored a lot more runs, because we had the opportunities. I would have felt a lot better if we had scored four or five more."

Crane, who entered the game with the bases loaded in relief of freshman starter Jon Davis and struck out right-fielder Matt Youngbans to end the threat, did not walk a batter and set down six Hawks by way of the punchout.

"Mike Crane came in and shut them down," Stone said. "You need to have momentum on defense to get the offense going and we got that. He's someone who's got good command of his pitches, and [in that situation] we needed someone who had pitched well their last time out and someone the defense can help out."

Morgan finished the day two-for-two and Twomley went two-for-four with three runs batted in, while freshman right-hander Jason Hickey worked a perfect ninth for the Minutemen.

"We started hitting the ball and were more comfortable at the plate, so that will make some people feel good," Stone said. "We also got a lot of people some work, so it helps to set the tone [for the weekend]."

The Minutemen return to action Saturday when they travel to La Salle for an Atlantic 10 doubleheader with the Explorers, beginning at noon.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Mike Crane picked up his second victory of the season with 4-1/3 scoreless innings in leading the Minutemen past Hartford 9-2.

Minutewomen prepare for Explorers

A-10 rival set to invade Garber Field on Saturday

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team officially starts its Atlantic 10 journey this weekend against the Explorers of LaSalle. The Minutewomen have had a few warm-up couple of weeks, splitting their last four games.

The Maroon and White have had two tough road games against ranked opponents: No. 14 Dartmouth put the Minutewomen 13-6, while No. 8 Syracuse defeated them 18-8 Saturday.

However, these losses - the Maroon and White dismantled Vassar 20-1 on friendly Garber Field.

Despite the fact that UMass has had defensive troubles as of late, they possess a formidable attack that has kept them in most of their games. The Lady Crusaders have four players that have all shown the ability to score.

Leading the attack is Kim Emrich, who has netted 14 goals in four games. She has also been incredibly efficient this year, scoring on all but seven of her 21 shots. Emrich has been playing at the top of her game this season, almost reaching her overall goal total from last season in the tallied 17.

Assisting Emrich's attack are Tracy Guenther, Amy Sunderland and Kate Henwood. Sunderland and Henwood both have six goals on the season while Guenther has eight. Henwood and Emrich have been the intricate parts of the Lady Explorer offense for the past two seasons and can work well as a cohesive unit.

The Minutewomen will also need to figure out LaSalle goalie Dianne Dictor, who has been playing well in losing efforts. Dictor is currently fourth in goals-against average with 9.78.

The Maroon and White will continue its slashing attack on the Lady Explorers, and continue to spread the ball around. The Minutewomen currently have three top goal scorers in Hope Zelinger, Bade Emery and Lydia Robinson. All three players have netted 12 goals on the season and have played effectively throughout.

Backing up an already formidable Maroon and White defense is goalie Cindy Doyle. Doyle currently leads all A-10 goalies in GAA with a solid 7.48. She also leads the A-10 with a .539 save percentage. She has been going up against some of the strongest attacks in the country.

The Minutewomen defeated the Lady Explorers last year 10-7 at LaSalle. Both teams have had trouble putting together a full game so far, and are looking to improve as conference play starts.

LaSalle hasn't lost a game by more than three goals in any of its last four games, two of which were one-goal heartbreakers. The Lady Explorers will be shooting for their first win in a season full of shortcomings. Both teams are in the second part of the season, and will be gunning for important A-10 positioning.

COURTESY MEDIA

The Minutewomen will face the La Salle Explorers Saturday at Garber Field, immediately following the men's contest.

Giving Americans something to turn to

By Sean Holmes
Collegian Staff

Spring is finally here. We are emerging out of a long, lonely winter where the piles of snow and chilling cold were matched only by the heavy burden of impending war and terror alerts. Now we can step outside and feel the warm spring air. The days are getting longer. Those perfect spring and summer evenings are upon us. We can walk past the campus pond and see sparkling water instead of ice, green grass instead of a sheet of white. The air is filled with a cool breeze and, of course, the ultimate spring sounds - popping of mitts and cracks of bats.

But the renewal of spring is being overshadowed by the reality of the world. We are in the midst of a war that is going to change our lives, for better or for worse. Whatever individual thoughts on the war may be, everyone on this campus and throughout the country is united by a torrent of emotions; among them are uncertainty and fear for ourselves, our troops and the future of our nation.

We cannot live in fear, however. At a certain point, it becomes necessary to turn off those images from miles and miles across the ocean and escape. We need a divergence from the disarray and confusion, something to calm our rattled nerves, something constant and beautiful and truly American.

On March 30, the Anaheim Angels will take the field against the Texas Rangers, and baseball, as it has always done, will be able to rise up and be all of those things. We need our national pastime this season, more than any of us know.

Let us not fall under any illusions, however, that a sport is more important than young troops sacrificing their lives overseas. But for Americans, baseball has always been – and will continue to be – something to turn to. When the whole world seems to be crumbling, the continuity of baseball is something in which we can find reassurance. Baseball requires attention, which makes it the ultimate diversion. The feeling of being at a baseball field on a summer night – cheering on your heroes, watching as a pitcher does battle with a hitter, smelling the fresh grass – is one of the few things we can truly call magic. Pennant races and ninth-inning comebacks give us hope and excitement when there seems to be none.

Baseball is something that you immerse yourself into. No other sport builds each day throughout the season the way baseball does, and no other sport has the beautiful subtleties and intricacies beneath the surface that baseball has. Our national pastime is a vital part of who we are. It is a tradition, a part of who we are as Americans. It knows how to be a soft cushion in a hard world.

As the season approaches, the wonderful words from the famous "Field of Dreams" speech by James Earl Jones ring truer than ever: "The one constant through all the years, Ray, has been baseball. Baseball has been the mark of the times. This game, this field, is a reminder of all that once was good, and can be again."

During the uncertain periods of 20th Century America, baseball has been there. It was an escape to our nation during World War I as fans watched Rogers Hornsby, Babe Ruth, Walter Johnson, Ty Cobb, Tris Speaker and Shoeless Joe Jackson dominate the league. It brought us an outlet during the Great Depression as fans cheered on the great Yankees and A's teams and players like Jimmie Fox, Lou Gehrig and Lefty Grove.

Americans watched heroes like Ted Williams and Joe DiMaggio go off to fight World War II, yet poured their hearts into the players that stayed, like Stan Musial. Baseball was there through Vietnam and the Korean War, as the nation could turn their attention away from the hectic world and see Yaz, Hank Aaron, Roberto Clemente, Al Kaline and Pete Rose create excitement at the plate while Bob Gibson, Sandy Koufax, Juan Marichal and Don Drysdale would dazzle on the mound. And now, in the 21st Century, baseball is here for us.

Our generation has yet to feel the comfort baseball can bring during these times of crisis. The only other major armed conflict any of us can remember, the Persian Gulf War, was relatively short and came at the end of baseball's regular season, through a quick four-game sweep in the World Series (in one of the great upsets, the upstart Reds beat the mighty Athletics).

Over the past several years it has been easy to mark baseball as a dead

Continued on page 6

UMass Weekend Schedule

TIME HOME VISITORS

Friday, March 28

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Softball	at La Salle	2:00 p.m.
Softball	at La Salle	4:00 p.m.
Men's Outdoor Track	at Raleigh Relays	All day

Saturday, March 29

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at La Salle	12:00 p.m.
Baseball	at La Salle	2:30 p.m.
Men's Outdoor Track	at Raleigh Relays	All day
Women's Crew	at Boston U.	9:00 a.m.
Men's Lacrosse	vs. Penn State	12:00 p.m.
Women's Lacrosse	vs. La Salle	3:30 p.m.

Sunday, March 30

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at La Salle	12:00 p.m.
Softball	at Fordham	12:00 p.m.
Softball	at Fordham	2:00 p.m.
Women's Crew	at Patriots' Cup	9:00 a.m.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2003 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CIX ISSUE 107

'Die-in' staged in protest

CHRIS ALLENGOW/COLLEGIAN

An anti-war protester is arrested after participating in the "die-in" that took place in the intersections of King, Pleasant, and Main Streets in Northampton Friday afternoon. At least 400 protesters attended the event.

By Jesse Hirsch
Collegian Correspondent

Twenty-five anti-war protesters in a staged "die-in" were arrested Friday afternoon. Dressed in white and covering themselves in red fruit juice to represent blood, the demonstrators laid down in Northampton as symbols of the people dying in Iraq. About 400 protesters blocked off the intersection of King, Pleasant, and Main Streets in Northampton to allow the "die-in" demonstration to converge.

The protest started at Kollmorgen headquarters at the end of King Street. Kollmorgen is a military contractor that manufactures periscopes and other optical devices for the war effort. Between 50 and 100 people converged next to the facility for a pre-march information and morale-boosting session.

An organizer gave one final message on the bullhorn before things began, "There are people dying right now! When you're moving today, have those people in your hearts and minds! Let's walk with them."

The crowd included students, senior citizens, veterans, and parents with their children. After standing in front of the Kollmorgen headquarters for 15-20 minutes, waving at passing cars and chanting passionate slogans, the protestors began the mile-long walk to the center of Northampton.

"It's important to note that this action [is] specifically to commemorate lives lost," said organizer Olivia Fite, a Hampshire College student, "and we're letting people know they can't just go on with business as usual."

In keeping with the intent of the day's actions, the mood of the march was, though unified and hopeful, somewhat somber. Drumbeats from a small group of musicians set the tone of a grave military march, contrasting sharply with the upbeat bongos and guitars heard at many anti-war actions. Cries of "support our troops! Bring them home!" and "This is what democracy looks like!" rang through the air.

Flanking both sides of King Street and swelling in numbers as the march proceeded, the demonstrators were mostly well-received by passers-by.

Aside from a couple of obscene gestures and a handful of counter-protestors, most people honked their horns and waved peace signs out their windows.

Designated peacekeepers kept the marchers organized.

"We're not acting as police," said Tom Flout, an older man wearing the pink and white peacekeeping uniform. "We just want to keep people marching in an orderly fashion and to prevent them from engaging with hecklers."

Some protestors reminisced about marches and movements of the past. Moods ranged from nostalgic to angry as people discussed rallies as recent as the one that took place at Westover Air Force Base a week before and as long ago as the Vietnam War.

When everyone finally reached the center of Northampton at about 5 p.m., the numbers had grown immensely from the 50-100 who began the march. While official estimates place the crowd at around 400, many said there were several hundred more than that.

Whatever the exact figure, there were more than enough people to conduct the next phase of the day's action. The protestors fanned into the crosswalks, blocking Northampton's main intersection and allowing 25 people to converge in the middle for the "die-in."

"It was amazing," said protest organizer Kelly Malone. "Literally hours before, we were sitting around worrying there wouldn't be enough people to block off the intersection. And there ended up not even being enough room for everyone to stand."

After 15 minutes of rerouting traffic and keeping their distance, police announced they would start arresting people who did not clear out from the center of the road. Then, after not moving, but making

Continued on page 4

Frat selling lots on eBay

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

Internet auction site eBay recently became home to the sale of many North Pleasant Street fraternity houses in a move designed to market nearly two acres of land and earn owner Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc. (ATG) $4 million.

This action came after weeks of deliberation by the University of Massachusetts over a decision to purchase the houses. The properties, which are currently being used as housing for fraternities Alpha Epsilon Pi, Alpha Tau Gamma, Delta Upsilon, Sigma Alpha Mu and Zeta Beta Tau, make up most of the east side of Frat Row.

According to ATG, Inc. Treasurer Jim Mulcahy, the company became impatient after the University offered them a nine-month timeline during which it would make its assessment.

"The University had the first shot," he said. "We're interested in selling. As much as we want to give the University the opportunity, what happens if at the end of the nine months, [they say] that they don't want to go forward?"

The company's thoughts began to shift to other potential buyers. Then someone suggested at one of ATG, Inc.'s meetings the use of eBay in marketing the land. Upon contacting eBay, ATG, Inc. learned that for a fee of $153.45, an ad could be placed for 30 days. Because of the minimal cost, the company decided to pursue this option.

"We said, gee, that's a very reasonable thing," Mulcahy said. "Let's do it."

ATG, Inc. said it will wait for these 30 days and see how much interest there is in the properties. Until this point, the company has not advertised any other way. The eBay page has had over 1100 visitors.

"We're going to let this eBay thing go for 30 days and see what happens," he said. "There has been interest. Somebody has been looking at it."

Mulcahy said that despite responses to the ad, ATG, Inc. has not received any specific offers at this point. Among the assortment of interested parties are individual investors, auction houses and developers. One potential buyer the company still has not heard from is the University.

"The University has not said to us, 'We have been deliberating on this for three months. We are very interested. We want to go forward,'" he said.

Mulcahy noted that the asking price for the lots, which sits at $4 million, is higher than the combined values assessed for the individual properties. However, he feels confident that he will find a buyer who is willing to pay this cost. Each lot was deemed to be worth between $500,000 and $600,000, which makes the cost of the land $3 million. Mulcahy thinks the value of the entire group of properties is worth more.

"You can't simply go to an inner developed area and find the ability to buy five houses in a row," he said. "Now, we've amassed this parcel. It's 1.8259 acres. That makes the parcel have a premium over what it is worth in an individual sale."

The company recognized this and met to discuss how much of a premium they felt they should charge. They settled upon a one million dollar raise in the price, included in the eBay advertisement. It was not included in the price ATG, Inc. asked from the University.

"If we're going to offer it to the world, we're not going to be as generous," he said.

Mulcahy acknowledged that the sale of these properties poses a threat to the future of fraternity housing. He understands that the chapters currently living on the land may not have the option of living at that location in the future, but that ATG, Inc. has given these fraternities advanced notice for some time.

"We ourselves in ATG, in leasing to these fraternities, have told them all that they should be setting aside some money and that eventually ATG was going to knock [the houses] down," he said.

Michael Wiseman, director of the Office of Greek Affairs and Inter-

Continued on page 3

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE 5
ARTS & LIVING PAGE 6
SPORTS PAGE 10
COMICS PAGE 9
CLASSIFIEDS PAGE 9
WAR COVERAGE MEDIA NEEDS TO FOCUS ON ANALYSIS PAGE 5
CORGAN'S BACK ZWAN SORES HIGH IN BEANTOWN PAGE 6
MINUTEMEN FALL PENN STATE HANDS UMASS FIRST LOSS OF SEASON PAGE 10

Cuban Professor will discuss bioethics today

By Kelly Farrell
Collegian Staff

Dr. Antonio Rafael Armas Vázquez, Professor of Bioethics from Cuba's Universty of Havana Medical School in Cienfuegos, will be speaking in several locations on campus today to address moral, political and philosophical issues surrounding genetic engineering.

Armas Vázquez's lecture, entitled "My Body, My Health," will begin at 12:30 p.m. in Dr. Lynnette Leidy Sievert's Medical Anthropology class in Machmer room W-11. He will also lecture at 3:30 p.m. in Dr. Dan Gerber's health class in Mahar room 108. Both lectures are open to the public and will be followed by a reception and informal discussion with faculty and graduate students at the University of Massachusetts Faculty Club at 6:00 p.m.

Armas Vázquez's area of specialization is in the philosophical problems in medicine, including genetic engineering, bioethics and the history of philosophy. He will be speaking on pragmatism in Cuba from 1900 to 1959, philosophical problems in Western medicine, including epistemology and anthropology, and problems in bioethics. Armas Vázquez will also address teaching philosophy in medicine and Cuban problems in relation to politics, economy and medicine.

Armas Vázquez was invited by the Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies (CLACLS), which co-sponsored the events with the UMass Faculty Club and the Faculty Club Program in Culture, Health and Science. Armas Vázquez accepted the invitation by CLACLS to help attain the center's goals for promoting "diverse programs that bring together faculty, students, and community members in an effort to understand complex political, economic and cultural issues."

Armas Vázquez plans to visit other colleges and universities this week, including Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine this Wednesday.

Seating for today's events may be limited, particularly at the informal discussion with faculty, graduate students and staff at the UMass Faculty Club this evening. Those planning to attend the events may want to contact Sushma Bridgem at sbridgem@student.umass.edu, for information on seating. For general information contact Anne Tessier at CLACLS in Thompson Hall room 924. Tessier can also be reached at 545-4648 or at las@econs.umass.du.

Romney's budget criticized

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON – Public Health Commissioner Christine Ferguson knows the state's public health system is in for a tough time during a faltering economy, and she doesn't mind finger pointing – even if it's at her boss, Gov. Mitt Romney.

Ferguson has surprised Romney's critics with her blunt appraisals of how austerity will harm the poor and the ill, even attending protests against the very administration that appointed her in January.

"The nice thing about a democracy is that everyone has a role to play," Ferguson said. "The advocates need to keep getting their message. They need to talk about what it's like to live with a chronic disease. And then people like me have to be able to take the money that we get and use it in the most effective way to get as much done as possible."

She warned last week that reductions in preventive health care made by Romney and his predecessors since the economy began sputtering could have devastating costs for the state.

"[The cuts] may be sustainable for a year, maybe even two, but it's not sustainable in the long run," Ferguson said. "If you do it over a 10-year period, you'll have more and more people in the hospital because they have prostate cancer or breast cancer. Pretty soon the system dies of its own weight, because you didn't invest in prevention."

The public health advocates who have met Ferguson have been surprised and impressed by her approach to a difficult job, giving her kudos for even showing up at events that target her boss for criticism.

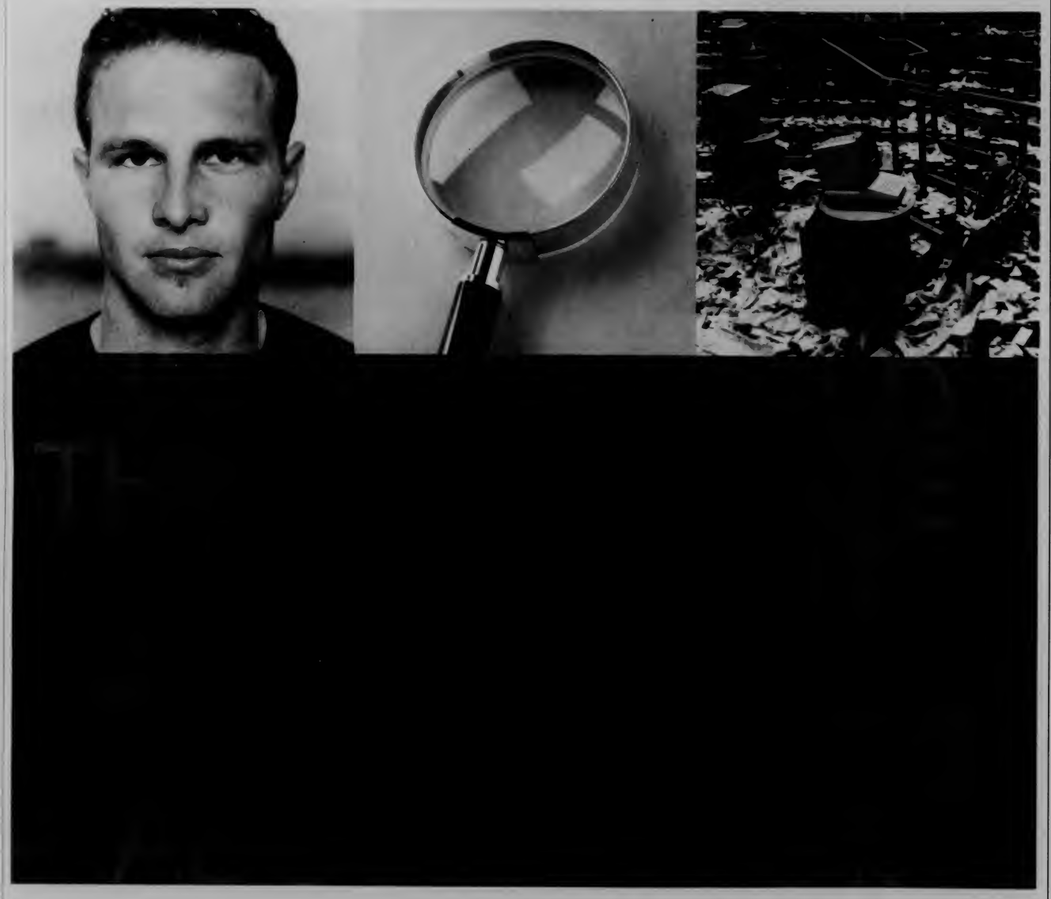
"She's been pretty public and that's a credit to her," said Marylou Sudders, former Department of Mental Health commissioner and now president and CEO of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. "When times are tough, there's lots of reasons why people could find excuses to spend time in their offices."

The 45-year-old Ferguson, who came to Massachusetts after serving as Rhode Island's human services chief for seven years, sees budget cuts as an inevitable side effect of a weakened tax base.

She said Romney's focus on business growth will be key to revival of the state's preventive health programs; in the meantime, she will focus on finding ways to enlist aid from private companies with financial interests in preventing costly illnesses.

"We aren't going to have money to do the things that we used to be able to do so we have to figure out

Continued on page 3



JOSH REYNOLDS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney greets Department of Transitional Assistance employee in Somerville, Mass., March 10.

© 2003 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. PricewaterhouseCoopers refers to the U.S. firm of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP and the other member firms of PricewaterhouseCoopers International Limited, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

VOTED #1 IDEAL EMPLOYER BY BUSINESS STUDENTS, UNIVERSUM UNDERGRADUATE STUDY, 2002

Investors need to be able to trust the information that companies supply to the public. Help us audit that information and we'll help you build a career.

For opportunities and information go to:
www.pwcglobal.com/lookhere

Look beyond the numbers.

spring's ahead

Warmer weather hit the Pioneer Valley last week, bringing residents outside without the need for heavy winter coats. Members of the campus community socialize during one of the first days of spring.

Commissioner warns about cuts

Continued from front

how we can partner with people who have an interest in the outcome," Ferguson said. "Every health plan has an interest in the outcome. Every hospital and employer has an interest. How can we link up our efforts and pool our resources to do a better job?"

Before taking over Rhode Island's Medicaid system, Ferguson worked for U.S. Sen. John H. Chafee (R-R.I.) for 13 years, serving as counsel and deputy chief of staff and helping to devise the bipartisan alternative to Clinton's health care reform plan.

Last fall, Ferguson finished last in a three-way race for the Republican nomination to take on U.S. Rep. Patrick Kennedy in the November elections.

Within weeks of her appointment this year, Ferguson's new boss slashed millions more from these programs, including teen pregnancy, AIDS and prostate cancer screening, as part of his plan to close the state's gaping deficit.

Since the beginning of the 2001 fiscal year, when Gov. Paul Cellucci was still in the corner office, the agency's budget has been reduced by nearly a third, mainly in the area of prevention.

During her short tenure, the ill and the poor have been filing into the Statehouse to lobby for their depleted programs, asking Ferguson to restore money that she doesn't have.

"This would not be my choice as a time to be introduced to Massachusetts," Ferguson said at a recent Statehouse rally by AIDS advocates, who focused most of their ire on Romney.

Lawmakers have also applauded her for being forthcoming about implications of some of the budget cuts.

"She's a hot ticket," said Sen. Jarrett Barrios, D-Cambridge, who has passionately denounced the reductions in AIDS prevention programs. "Honesty around the budget ... has been atypical from the administration these last few weeks. Her frank approach to the problems we face has earned her my respect."

Union proposal under fire

BOSTON — Union leaders are criticizing a move by Gov. Mitt Romney to strip union membership from thousands of government employees, saying it would deny those workers protections from salary cuts and layoffs.

The plans, included as riders to Romney's budget proposal for next fiscal year, would essentially expand the state's legal definition of a manager. Workers would be defined as management – and ineligible for union membership – even if they lack hiring and firing powers and oversee as few as one other worker.

"It's complete union busting," Theresa McGoldrick of the National Association of Government Employees, told the Boston Sunday Globe. "There would be no protections as far as what people would be hired and fired."

All but 80 of the approximately 600 state government lawyers represented by her bargaining unit would lose union protection under Romney's proposal, she said.

Estimates of the number of public sector employees affected by the proposal vary. Democrats in the Legislature argue the proposal would also cover public sector employees beyond state government, such as municipal and county workers, and claim it could affect up to 50 percent of the 200,000 union members in state and municipal government.

Romney aides estimated it would affect between 6,000 and 7,000 state workers. That number, however, didn't include judicial, county and higher education workers, the Globe reported.

Romney aides acknowledged that they are seeking to give the governor more latitude in streamlining government, which he has said will involve cutting about 2,000 jobs.

"Our purpose is to get flexibility in the way we manage government, and be able to run it more efficiently," said Ruth N. Bramson, Romney's chief human resources offer. "This would allow us to put the best-qualified people in the jobs when we reorganize, rather than based on the seniority of employees."

Union leaders are planning to fight the plan on Beacon Hill.

"I'd lose 50 percent of my union," said Bob McCarthy, president of the 12,000-member Professional Firefighters of Massachusetts. "It doesn't make any sense. It's not going to save any money, and it's just an attack on union."

Romney aides say opponents are exaggerating the impact of the provision.

They said the determinations of what positions are "managerial" would be made on a case-by-case basis through the Labor Relations Commission.

State Sen. David Magnani, D-Framingham, co-chairman of the Legislature's Public Service Committee, said he found the Romney proposals troubling and they could result in the dismantling of public employee unions.

"You pretty much could be excluding virtually everyone," he said. "I don't know if that's the intent, but that may be the effect."

-Associated Press

Fraternity Houses' lots go up for sale on eBay

Continued from front

fraternity Council advisor said that the fraternities in danger of losing their houses should "explore the possibility of building fraternity houses anywhere else."

Wiseman mentioned that negotiations are underway for possible housing construction in the undeveloped land inside the area the University call Fraternity/Sorority Park, located on Olympia Drive. Two chapter houses are located there right now, along with the admissions building, which was at one point a fraternity house as well, Wiseman said. He added that nine lots are undeveloped in the area and have been designated for fraternal facilities, but said that the University may want to build graduate housing there instead.

Both Wiseman and Mulcahy agreed that the lots on North Pleasant Street would most likely change occupancy for the 2004-2005 academic year. ATG, Inc. is going to negotiate leases with the fraternities for the next two semesters, Mulcahy said.

"We will be signing new leases with all of those fraternities during the month of April," he said, but added that this plan may change if UMass is willing to "ink the deal" at that point.

According to Mulcahy, ATG, Inc. has plans for its own chapter, independent of the sale of the North Pleasant Street properties.

"We bought a new house on Sunset Avenue," he said. "We are going to move our active chapter."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Matthew F. Sacco Editor-in-Chief
Scott Eldridge II Managing Editor
Matt Brady Business Manager
Mike Kulak Production Manager
Matthew Despres Night Supervisor
Ruth E. Sund Advertising Production Manager
Erica Hidalgo Advertising Manager

Jennifer Eastwood Arts & Living Editor
Jamie Loo Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jon Lamothe News Editor
James Schaffer Photography Editor
Jim Pignatiello Sports Editor
Greg Stamm Finance Manager
Jack Foulis Distribution Manager
Mia Ferolito Human Resource Manager

Shannon Farrington Editorial Production Manager
Jolene Rousseau Layout Manager
Charlie Higgins Graphics Advisor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Peter Foundas Assistant Business Manager
Betsy Feldman Assistant Advertising Manager
Rich Pacheco Assistant Finance Manager

www.DailyCollegian.com

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students
545-1995

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
-APRIL 4TH - 6TH
-THE BALLROOM
-LORD JEFFERY INN
-DOWNTOWN AMHERST
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

America at War

Gaining Iraqi trust

By CALVIN WOODWARD
Associated Press

Allied soldiers inched toward Baghdad on Sunday and pressed their campaign on a southern redoubt of Saddam Hussein loyalists trying at every turn to gain trust from Iraqi citizens and stay safe from those who may be combatants in disguise.

The military campaign has increasingly become a confidence-building one, too, and not only in Iraq. U.S. war leaders deployed on the Sunday airwaves, defended their strategy as a sound one and cast the painstaking pace of recent days as a virtue.

"We have the power to be patient in this, and we're not going to do anything before we're ready," said Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

U.S. and British allies reported increased contacts with ordinary Iraqis on many fronts Sunday, a development measured like the march toward Baghdad in wary steps.

The reason for the caution was clear: persistent danger from plain clothes killers and warnings from Iraqi officials that there will be more suicide attacks like the one that took the lives of four Americans in Najaf. Iraqis said some 4,000 Arabs have come to Iraq to help attack the invaders.

The Army's 101st Airborne Division surrounded Najaf on Sunday and was in position to begin rooting out the paramilitary forces inside the city, said Command Sgt. Maj. Marvin Hill.

In Nasiriyah where fighting has been fierce for a week, Marines secured buildings held by an Iraqi infantry division that contained large caches of weapons and chemical decontamination equipment.

A Marine UH-1 Huey helicopter crashed Sunday night at a forward supply and refueling point in southern Iraq, said a spokesman, 1st Lt. John Niemann, in Kuwait. Three people aboard were killed and one was injured in the crash that occurred while the helicopter was taking off.

Questions grew in Washington over the war's pace. Democratic Sen. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia said the U.S.-led invasion is clearly facing more Iraqi resistance than anticipated and the war plan will probably have to be adjusted to deal with that.

"I consider them not to be trivial setbacks," he said on CNN's "Late Edition," but rather "in the category of major problems."

Gen. Tommy Franks, the coalition commander, said "One never knows how long a war will take."

Close to 100,000 U.S. service members are in Iraq, supported by about 200,000 in the theater and with 100,000 more on the way.

U.S. officials said coalition ground forces were closing in on Baghdad from the south, west and north — the southern front lines now 48 miles from the capital. Myers said airstrikes have reduced some units of the Republican Guard, Saddam's best-trained forces, to less than half their prewar capacity.

British troops moved into villages on the fringes of Basra, the southern city where an outnumbered but tough core of Saddam loyalists have held off the coalition for about a week.

Up to 1,000 Royal Marines and supporting troops, backed by heavy artillery and tanks, staged a commando assault in a Basra suburb, killing some 30 Iraqi fighters and destroying a bunker and several tanks. Officials said Operation James — named for James Bond — was the Marines' largest mission so far.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said in Washington that the British are getting "increasing assistance from the local people as to where the death squads are located, where the thugs are. And they're systematically working them over."

The British said they captured an Iraqi general and killed an Iraqi colonel. An official in Baghdad denied both claims.

Baath party enforcers have shot civilians trying to flee Basra and forced regular troops trying to quit the fight to stay in it.

"As we win the trust of the Iraqi people," said British Maj. Gen. Albert Whitley, "they're pointing these people out, and either we're targeting them or we're detaining them."

Rumsfeld offered a frank assessment of why many Iraqis have been slow to embrace allied soldiers even in some areas of the country unfriendly to Saddam.

He noted that the Shiite population in and around Basra rose up against Saddam after the 1991 Gulf War. "The United States and the coalition forces left, and they were slaughtered" by the tens of thousands, Rumsfeld said.

For that reason, "I'm inclined not to urge people to rise up until we're close and we can be helpful."

Whitley, commander of coalition efforts to secure areas for humanitarian shipments, said "we did not really appreciate what 12-plus years of fear can do to people. They're looking to see who hits them next."

TERRY RX HARLIN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Iraqi Sentry Post that was booby trapped is blown up near a Challenger Tank as 40 Commando Royal Marines move into Abu Al Khasib, a suburb of Basra in southern Iraq Sunday, March 30, 2003.

Dressed in white and covering themselves with red fruit juice to represent blood, anti-war protesters in Northampton staged a "die-in" to represent the lives lost in Iraq. 25 of the protesters were arrested.

Anti-war protest ends in arrests

Continued from page 1

no attempts to resist, the 25 actors in the "die-in" were quietly handcuffed and led to the waiting police bus.

The protestors remained calm despite the police action, even quieting an angry young man who began shouting, "f the police!"

This peaceable approach lent well to captivating the attention of unaffiliated onlookers.

"Based on what I've seen in the media, I'm not sure what to think of this war," said Herrell's Ice Cream owner Steve Herrell, "but these protests are a good rallying point which remind people there's a number of points of view."

After the arrests, the demonstrators moved back from blocking the intersection, but many remained on the four street corners, chanting and waving signs. Some proceeded to the Hampshire County Jail to hold a quiet vigil for those in police custody.

Later that evening, there was still a small number of sympathizers sitting across the street from the jail. Though they were waiting with bail money, the police had thus far denied them actual access to the jail.

"They've been turning us away, but they said [the protestors] would be released in about 45 minutes," said Leah Perloff, a senior STPEC major at the University of Massachusetts. "We'll be here as long as it takes."

As more supporters showed up with blankets and food for the vigilkeepers, not a single person seemed dissatisfied with how things had transpired.

"We wanted to disrupt the lives of people in the local, U.S., and global community, to remind them that right now, while they go about their everyday business, shopping and driving and eating, people are dying for no reason at all. And I think we did that," Malone said.

The arrested protestors, many of them UMass students, were released later that night.

COLLEGIAN NEWS MEETINGS AT 5 ON WEDNESDAYS IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
387 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE PG-13 4:20 7:10 9:55
SPIRITED AWAY PG 4:00 7:00 9:45
OLD SCHOOL R 4:30 7:30 10:10
DREAMCATCHER R 4:00 7:00 10:00
THE CORE PG-13 4:40 7:20 10:05
BASIC R 4:00 7:00 10:00
HEAD OF STATE PG-13 4:45 7:15 9:50
CHICAGO PG-13 1:20 4:40 7:20 10:05
BOAT TRIP R 1:30 4:15 7:05 9:45
PHILLY'S BIG MOVIE R 1:30 4:15 7:05 9:45
THE HUNTED R 1:30 4:15 7:05 9:45
AGENT CODY BANKS PG 1:40 4:40
TEARS OF THE SUN R 1:30 4:15 7:05 9:45
Senior Show 4/3/03 - BOAT TRIP
Join us for a pre-graduation supersavers
NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Looking for a job in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.
http://www.aux.umass.edu/ConferenceServices

News@DailyCollegian.Com

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Bacon 'n' Cheese Skins $3.75 4.48
Fried Shrimp Tempura $2.75 3.63
Sweet Potato Fries $2.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
UMCMP Welcome Here
Judie's
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
www.judiesrestaurant.com
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491

DO YOU EVER WONDER HOW THE COLLEGIAN LOOKS SO DARN PRETTY?
If you answered yes, you should call 545-1864 or come down to the graphics department and talk to either Jolene or Mike, about the Layout Manager position!
Applicants should have some layout experience.
Full position for
Fall 2003 Semester, training begins this semester.
Hiring process begins April 14th!

D.P. Dough®
Delivers Calzones
— The Pizza Alternative® —
256-1616
2 CALZONES & 2 DRINKS FOR $10.00
With this coupon • Exp 5/31/03 • One Coupon per 2 Zones
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616
2 CALZONES & 2 DRINKS FOR $10.00
With this coupon • Exp 5/31/03 • One Coupon per 2 Zones
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616
D.P. Dough = Great Calzones + Fast Delivery + Low Prices
•NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS

U Card
U Get Credit!
Swipe your Ucard when you purchase any vended Coca-Cola product, and you are automatically entered to WIN $100, $50, $25, or $10 credit on your Ucard!
GO UMASS !!!

EDITORIAL OPINION

War coverage should include more news analysis

According to the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press, the media blitz on war reporting has hasn't improved the public's view on the media coverage of this war compared to the first Persian Gulf conflict. However, their recent study also shows that the constant televised war coverage is taking a significant psychological toll.

Recently, four out of 10 respondents expressed that, "It tires me out to watch," TV coverage of the war, which is up from one in three in the earlier days of the conflict. Between March 25-27, 67 percent of respondents said they felt sad watching the coverage, which was up from 56 percent during the first days of the conflict.

Over the same period, people who said it was "frightening" to watch the war coverage jumped from 45 to 56 percent.

The center's research has also found that public evaluations of war coverage are not much different from the first Persian Gulf War. Overall, the public tends to have similar positive assessments of both military and media reports, though their confidence in military reports is slightly higher than in the media.

This research should be an alarming wake-up call to news organizations.

In a generation of general cynicism towards the media and government, we in the news business would like to think that the public still trusts the media more than the government. Apparently that is not the case.

Interestingly, according to the same study, two-thirds of respondents looked upon the idea of embedded journalists favorably. The other third felt the reporters were providing too much information and were worried that the coverage could give away too much intelligence to the enemy, compromising the military campaign. Some respondents also said the media coverage wasn't good for Americans too see or was simply "too much."

We at The Collegian can constantly debate these issues of media coverage. The one thing we can agree on is that there needs to be more constructive news analysis of the war rather than just the hard news all the time.

For instance, ABC and other networks have taken to employing former government and military officials – including former Clinton press secretary George Stephanopoulos – to both critique and comment on tactical moves made by the current administration. They also, as civilians, help to bridge the widening gap between what actually happens and what we as citizens hear. Like anything, it's far from a perfect or comprehensive system, but helps promote a more assured voice to dilute the waves of mind-numbing statistics.

The media has already inundated us with the facts, figures and minute-by-minute happenings of war. While these are certainly important parts of coverage, these shouldn't be the only reports that are presented to the American public.

Information from the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press was used in this opinion.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian Editorial Board.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of The Collegian.

History should be our guide

Dan Barrett

If you listen closely you will hear someone turning in his grave. That someone is George Santayana, the philosopher and historian who said that, "Those who do not remember the past are condemned to repeat it." That saying should be chiseled into every doorway in Washington, for we have truly forgotten our past. The president, though justified in wishing to bring democracy to oppressed nations, is possessed by a theory that has haunted our foreign policy since the 1950's: democracy by force.

The war in Iraq is not a new phenomenon. Since 1950 America has sought, through military and covert intervention, to depose regimes we did not like and to establish democracy in their places. This is democracy by force is the idea that democracy through violence is better than none at all.

This belief has dominated our foreign policy since World War II. There have been at least seven cases of classic regime change: the ousting of Juan Bosch in the Dominican Republic (1965), Ngo Dinh Diem in Vietnam (1963), the invasion of Grenada (1983), Manuel Noriega in Panama (1989), the military regime of Haiti (1994), Slobodan Milosevic in Yugoslavia (1999) and the Taliban in Afghanistan (2001). An effort aimed at Fidel Castro in Cuba (1962) failed.

Add to these our "covert" regime changes, through CIA-led coups or aiding of rebels: the overthrow of Mohammad Mossadegh in Iran (1953), Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala (1954), Patrice Lumumba in the Congo (1960), and Salvador Allende in Chile (1973). Bush isn't breaking new ground in Iraq; he's following a well-established pattern.

Here is where Santayana would have objected: we haven't learned from our mistakes. Bush's path has been well worn by previous administrations, but the consequences of those actions have been forgotten. The past shows clearly: regime change backfires.

The Shah we brought to power in 1953 was overthrown by Islamic fundamentalists in 1979. This was an overwhelming success compared to following attempts. The Nationalist government in Guatemala was overthrown in 1954 only to see a U.S.-backed military regime suppress democracy until 1986; civil war continued until 1996. In Cuba, as in Iraq, we expected an outpouring of native support. Nothing of the sort occurred; Castro remains in power.

The socialist president of Chile was toppled in 1973, allowing Augusto Pinochet to commit civil rights abuses for the next 17 years. Democracy did not take hold in Haiti. It hardly took hold anywhere; the U.S. faces a mere 20% success rate on installing democracy through force.

This "success" rate should tell us something. We hurt more than we help. Why?

"Since 1950 America has sought, through military and covert intervention, to depose regimes we did not like and to establish democracy in their places."

Regime change fails due to lack of dedication from the U.S. and the nature of democracy itself. Transition to democracy requires a great commitment of time and money. The U.S. has shown repeatedly that it is not willing to make this commitment. The immense changes that democracy brings cannot be accepted overnight; our continued presence in these regions is necessary. It took the U.S. seven years of military occupation to turn Japan into a democracy. That country had no ancient ethnic rivalries, as does Iraq. More similar is Afghanistan, where tribal in fighting and chaos have already returned.

The very nature of democracy itself protests the use of violence. Democracy is the ultimate repudiation of physical force: it provides the most protection possible while allowing the most freedom. The use of force against another person or their property cannot be a legitimate form of political action in a democracy. Thus, physical violence stigmatizes the new government. Since violence is the root of the government's power, every action it takes is hypocritical and illegitimate. There is nothing then preventing a lesser form of government from using violence to achieve control.

Democracy by force does not work. But if the promotion democracy is a legitimate goal, how should we pursue it? We aren't so naive as to expect dictators to simply relinquish control, even for the good of their people. If not through military action, how to get rid of these regimes?

Information, education and aid are the way. The U.S. must, for the good of other nations and for our own survival, sponsor democratically oriented education in all nations. Through schools and books we must convert the younger generations.

Education is not enough. We must, by ourselves and through the United Nations, give most of our aid to countries that support democracy. We cannot "look the other way", and fund friendly yet oppressive regimes. That is not to say that aid won't go to non-democratic countries, only that we would reward democracy. Aid in return for reform could take several forms; building of dams, bridges, hospitals and schools, telephone and internet lines, cleaning of water supplies and training of public servants. Use not just our money, but our knowledge and skill.

Iraq deserves democracy, but democracy by force is dangerous and ineffective. Instead of revisiting past sins, we should seek new methods. Not only for the sake of the Iraqi people, but for our own as well.

Let Santayana rest. Let history be our guide.

Dan Barrett is a Collegian Columnist.

Parking is robbing our pockets

S.J. Port

On the days I wake up with a smile plastered to my face, those who know me best appreciate what I dreamt of: parking services in flames.

Across the boards, whether you are a student, janitor or professor, parking services will grate your last nerve at some point. They treat everyone the same – without respect or courtesy. Their fees are high, their meter rates outrageous, and their rules regarding appeals and hearings inflexible and unrealistic.

Metered parking on campus is understandably valuable, but the amount of time a parker receives for his change is too low. Quarters only receive fifteen minutes, dimes ten minutes, and a nickel will get you an appallingly paltry three minutes. It would take someone 20 nickels to park for an hour at an UMass meter. I understand that parking is a problem, and that more people want to use metered spaces than there is time or space for, but these fees rob students, faculty, staff and visitors.

If your class runs over by five minutes and your meter is left unpaid you could, and more often than not do, receive a $20 parking citation for "meter violation." This is the cheapest of all violations; the most expensive being $100 for "violation of a handicapped area." Yet, in the state of Massachusetts you cannot receive a temporary handicapped permit through the University (you have to mail away for one) so that you can park closer to buildings for the period during which you are handicapped. This leaves students on crutches hobbling long distances to attend classes or trying to use the inadequate "special transportation services" available for a few hours a day.

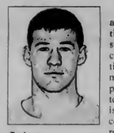
If you do get a citation that you feel is unfair you must appeal it; something Parking Services is reluctant to grant, and are loath to help you try to do. When you ask a parking service representative for help, whether by phone or in person, they are callous, icy, and often downright rude. Speaking patronizingly, they often treat customers (as that is what we are) as if we are blobs of ineptness, incapable of understanding their importance on campus or their simple rules (which do include: to have a car on campus one must sign over his first born). Perhaps it isn't clear: parking services is not important to a student's education, parking services is not important to a professor's research, parking services is not important to the University...however necessary they are, they are not as high on the totem pole as they would like to believe.

If you get more than a citation and are towed it will undoubtedly be a truck from Amherst towing. The tow will cost you approximately $125. Rumors have flown for years that someone in parking services is married to someone at Amherst towing, and this is how the company continues to have their contract with the University as the only company to tow on campus.

"I understand that parking is a problem, and that more people want to use metered spaces than there is time or space for, but these fees rob students, faculty, staff and visitors."

Despite tearing off mud flaps, towing unfairly and at all hours of the night, and towing cars with their parking brakes on, Amherst towing continues to hold parking services' favor...one more reason to hate parking services.

Worse yet, if you receive a large number of parking citations you will be called in for a hearing. When I received a vast amount of citations my employer here on campus said that they would handle it and took my citations from me. Months later the situation had not been cleared and parking services sent a bill for $250 to my parents. A befuddled mother called me that day asking what on earth the bill was and why they had sent it to her address.



By law, parking services must send all bills to the registered owner of the vehicle, regardless of whose name is on the permit, or so they told me. The bill was attached to a hearing notice telling my father (the registered owner) that he must appear before parking services at 9 a.m. on a Wednesday morning. Hell could have frozen over before a parent of mine was going to drive from Boston to handle my parking situation, so I called parking services to reschedule since I had a class at the time of the hearing.

Following a curt, exasperating phone call, I now understand that you cannot reschedule hearings, regardless of your class schedule. You cannot makeup a hearing if it is missed, unless due to a snow day...but not due to a snow delay. You cannot talk to the hearing officer except at the time of your assigned hearing. The representative will not give the officer a message for you, you must write or email it on a special form.

All this maroon tape makes a student, professor, staff member or visitor's time at the University that much less agreeable, and often causes stress which could easily be alleviated by a more courteous and campus-friendly staff at parking services. If those in charge want to make amends I suggest they start by lowering meter fees and parking violation fees to a reasonable level, instead of continuing to rip community members and students off.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

A philosophical approach to the 'Good Life'

Robert Carey

The pursuit of happiness is the all too enthralling American ideal that yanks at the pleasure-seeking subconscious of everyone, and for centuries it has brought opportunistic foreigners to our shores by the millions. The specific notion of happiness is different from one person to the next, but, for me, happiness is contentment. Defined briefly, contentment is: to limit oneself in requirements, desires, or actions.

If the framers of the constitution had to rephrase the 'pursuit of happiness' part, and were forced to find an appropriate synonym for happiness, would they have chosen contentment, or some other word that could also mean happiness, like pleasure?

The difference between pleasure and contentment is that pleasure is largely unchecked, and puts no limits on the desires of a person's actions. For much of America, the idea behind the good life rests in the Epicurean notion of hedonism: the belief that through the pursuit of happiness we can avoid the pains of life. For the human psyche, pain must be avoided at all costs. Therefore pleasure must constantly be maximized, and, if need be, done so at the expense of others. The pursuit of pleasure is an avaricious one, and is ultimately unquenchable. Pleasure pursuit is a dark and endless path. We, as humans, face similar imps and demons throughout the course of our lives. This unifying human experience bonds us as people. The only requirement to enjoying the light of human experience is having the courage and inner clarity to see it.

"Happiness is not pursued, but is adjusted around what we already hold in our lives."

The pursuit of contentment is over before it begins. The pursuit for pleasure is a quest with an illusory end. We, as humans, face similar imps and demons throughout the course of our lives. This unifying human experience bonds us as people. The only requirement to enjoying the light of human experience is having the courage and inner clarity to see it. Take hunter-gatherer societies for instance. Their entire existence is lived happily so long as they have a grass hut, cooked roots, and human closeness. Their needs are the simplest, and most basic of any people, and because of that a smile never leaves their face.

The good life is achieved through the control of our desires. It is by this means that we can truly become content. I'm not saying we need to start living in grass huts and begin to hunt bush rabbits with spears. However, any individual wishing a good life must take a sincere reappraisal of what is essential in their lives. Through the art of sophistry and sensibility the good life can be realized and instantly appreciated. And in this way, we can keep ourselves from infringing on the contentment of others, and spare them unwanted suffering of greeds and reckless ways.

The good life is a simple plan, surrounded by simple things like: a cabin in the rural tranquility of the countryside, sunshine on a wet spring day, music that upon hitting one's ears sends vivacious chills that invigorate your entire body, the inter-personal connection you share with an elite handful of people, and the transient melancholy that we all learn to endure. These not-so-rare spices of life, and ones like them, are the only things worth dying for. Anyone who says otherwise has motives as dark as crude oil.

Robert Carey is a Collegian Columnist.

Submit a letter or opinion
editorial@dailycollegian.com (413) 545-1592
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

Letters to the Editor:

Knowing the facts crucial to both sides

To the Editor:

In regards to the letter by Joanna Douilette as printed on March 24, 2003, I have several comments. While I respectfully understand Ms. Douilette's opinion regarding uninformed protestors, I would not necessarily consider such slogans as, "No blood for oil," or, "Give peace a chance" uninformed. Rather, they seem to reflect these citizens' distrust of the U.S. government's stated reasons for war and attempts at a peaceful resolution to the Iraqi situation. It is not entirely out of the realm of possibility that President Bush has more than just the elimination of a domestic threat and the liberation of a foreign people at heart. Also, I see a comparable population of uninformed citizens blindly following the president and other "patriotic" masses into war (not to suggest that pro-war citizens are unpatriotic, but merely to criticize the allegations of some that protesting is an unpatriotic act), without knowing its ramifications. Ms. Douillette does bring up the important point of education – whatever your opinion, know the facts.

As to my own opinion, I find the United States' actions in relation to the United Nations to be the more significant issue. Why be a member of an organization that is supposed to be a medium of international justice and cooperation, if you are not willing to allow it to work? Certainly the U.S.'s selectively independent and hasty violence shows the foreign community that President Bush does not respect the other member nations' opinions, interests or support. From a diplomatic standpoint, I would say that this will only serve to disenchant (and perhaps lose) current or potential allies. I would also go as far to suggest that this war will lead to the dramatic rise of anti-American sentiment from all parts of the globe.

Conclusively, I am compelled to add that while I hold a negative view of President Bush's "Operation Iraqi Freedom," I do have great respect for any and all soldiers willing to risk their lives in pursuit of their beliefs and what they believe is in the best interest of our nation. Not to undermine the grave nature of the troops' actions, but perhaps protestors are doing an equally important service to the country by voicing and defending their beliefs. That is how a democracy functions, is it not?

Katelyn M. Sypher
UMass Student

U.N. refuses to give people freedom

To the Editor:

In response to Yousef Munayyer's column, I would like to point out that when President Clinton went into Iraq in 1998 and bombed them three times, he did not go to the U.N. at all and when he went into Yugoslavia and took Milosevic out he did not have the U.N. approval (nor did he ask) but that was OK? It was with me. The U.S. is backing U.N. resolution 1441 because the U.N. doesn't have the guts to. The U.N. put this resolution in terms that they do not back up. The U.S. is doing it for them. The U.N. chooses to just handle the humanitarian part of this. And this is usual for them.

And please, Mr. Munayyer shouldn't go down the "It's only for oil path," because President is Bush is a strong supporter of the alternative fuel bill that is sitting in Congress at this moment. As for the French, well they sold Iraq the chemicals to make the lovely weapons they have and that has been proven. Unfortunately, the U.S. trained most of their scientists here in the U.S. to do what they do. So you see we are all at fault.

We have been waiting 12 long years for Saddam to comply and he has strung the U.N. and the world out long enough to make more chemical weapons. He has murdered his own people, but that seems to be ok with Mr. Munayyer and the U.N. When the Israelis attacked the Palestinian country and Arafat was somewhat overthrown, maybe a year ago, they found the documentation that proved Iraq trained Al-Qaeda and supplied them with Russian weapons.

Would Mr. Munayyer rather just sit back, close his eyes and let Saddam continue to murder his own people or would he rather the U.N. be the peacekeepers of the world (something the U.N. claims to be but isn't), and give people freedom. Mr. Munayyer should do his research before he opens his mouth, or should I say before he picks up the pen.

Ingrid Pollard
Physical Plant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS&LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2003 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Thinking you're ready to shed the winter sweaters?

Hello folks. For yet another week the ladies of "Running with Scissors" are here to provide you with valuable information and witty commentary on issues you need to know about. This week we are tackling the issue of spring and some important things to remember about dressing yourself.

Running with Scissors

Melissa Hammel & Lizzy Nielsen

LOOK OUTSIDE

Despite the calendar's claims that it is springtime, the barometer says something a little bit different. We know many of you came back from spring break with a great tan and a newfound bond with your flip-flops, but Massachusetts is not the place to try it out yet. Sadly, you might have to hold out until the second week of April or so. Simply check the weather before you get dressed in the morning. It will save you a lot of discomfort from getting frostbite on your exposed toes.

WEAR CLOTHING CORRECTLY

There is nothing worse than seeing people wearing spring clothes in a way that they were never meant to be displayed. More specifically, don't pair your favorite pair of sandals with a pair of gleaming white socks. Beyond the fact that the very purpose of a pair of sandals is to expose your feet, it also looks totally ridiculous.

The rule applies for shorts as well. Wear your shorts as they were meant to be worn. Do not rip them or roll them up. If you are looking for the ripped look, find a pair in a store and buy them that way. Do not attempt to rip them up yourself or else you run the risk of looking as though you got caught in a paper shredder. The same goes for shorts that roll up. If you like that look, then simply go to the store and buy a pair that is marketed that way. Do not roll them up yourself or else you run the risk of them being totally uneven or of looking like a hooker.

DON'T BE STUPID

Spring is not an excuse to dress like an idiot. While there are clothes on the market in the colors of hot pink and neon green covered in puffy paint, it does not mean you should go out and buy them.

Try to avoid any really bright colors that are often associated with ringing in the spring season. They don't really look good on anyone. Also try to resist the urge to buy clothing that is a size too small for you on the basis that you will lose weight and "squeeze" into it. In most cases, by the time spring actually comes around and you really get the chance to wear the clothing it will still not fit right, and it will just be depressing.

HYGIENE IS KEY

As warmer weather approaches, our sweat glands have tendencies to go into overdrive and make us smell a little bit more "earthy" than we normally do. If you're a person who has a tendency to sweat a bit, take the extra shower before you go out at night. You're better off taking too many showers than being the smelly individual in class or at the bar.

Also step up the deodorant usage and carry some around with you during the day. Working up a sweat while walking around on campus is pretty easy, and it only takes a few seconds to jump into a bathroom stall and reapply some of underarm perfume. Despite our love for cologne, it doesn't actually replace a shower. Smelling pleasant is the goal, making the person next to you keel over is not.

Also falling under this category is the concept of shaving. Ladies, no matter how progressive and liberated you might feel, excess of body hair is still

Continued on page 7

Preparation for the first of april

Compiled by Jessica Pelletier.

What do you get when you push a piano down a coal shaft? A-flat minor.

April Fool's Day is nearing. Not prepared? Not to worry. There are plenty of jokes to share with those around you to bring out the smiles and get the tears of joy flowing. Here're some favorites:

A Grasshopper walks into a bar. The bartender goes, "Did you know we have a drink named after you?"

The grasshopper says, "You have a drink named Steve?"

One fine morning Bubba was walking down the road when Jim-Bob pulled up next to him in a shiny, new pickup truck.

"Say there, Jim-Bob," Bubba said. "Where'd you get that nice new truck?"

"Peggy Lou done gave it to me last night," replied Jim-Bob.

"Gosh, I knew she was sweet on you, but I didn't know she liked you that much," Bubba said.

"Well, it's a funny thing," Jim-Bob responded. "Last night we went out by the old lake and the moon was shining real pretty. And Peggy Lou done jumped out of the truck, ripped off all her clothes and said 'Jim-Bob, take whatever you want,' so I went and took the truck."

His friend thought for a little bit and finally answered, "It's a darn good thing you did that Jim-Bob, 'cause them clothes would've never fit you."

goodbye to march

Two blondes meet each other on opposite ends of a river.

The first blonde yells out, "How do you get to the other side?"

And the second blonde tells her, "You are on the other side!"

Three psychiatrists are sitting in a bar. The first psychiatrist looks at his friends and says, "Guys, our lives are so stressful. I mean, we have problems of our own, maybe we should share with one another to let off steam."

The other two agree, so the first one starts by saying "I've had this problem with drinking for the past five years now, I can't seem to stop, and I've been cheating on my wife for as long as we've been together."

The second shrink says, "That's nothing, I've been overcharging my patients since I began my practice over ten years ago. And I use all the money I've saved up to pay for the two houses I've got."

Finally the third shrink looks at his friends and says, "Well boys, I guess I've got the worst problem out of all of us. For the life of me, I've never been able to keep a secret."

What does a fish say when it slams into a concrete wall? --- "Dam."

Berklee online music school

This Boston school program offers students of music an alternative to traditional training

By Bishapa Ray
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – On one coast, a father has built a home recording studio for his 11-year-old violinist son and other talented kids from his southern Californian neighborhood.

On the other coast, a NASA engineer – and steel drum bandleader on the side – has reduced by half the cost of recording and producing his band's music.

Both credit these to the Boston-based Berklee College of Music online initiative that has created a virtual school for music aficionados to learn everything from music theory, songwriting, recording and selling their music.

The online venture's 15 classes costing $295 to $795, depending on duration and limited to non-instrumental instruction – formally started this spring after a pilot program last fall. So far the courses have attracted about 175 students from all over the U.S. and 14 other countries as far away as Japan, Portugal and the United Arab Emirates.

They come looking for training in music recording software, getting started on lyrics and songwriting, learning how to market their music without having to rely on a recording label and the ease of learning any time and anywhere – work, home or computer lab, said Dave Kusek, head of the online school.

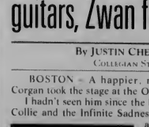
They leave with a proficiency certificate, but would have to attend the traditional school to receive a degree.

According to statistics from the International Music Products Association, more than half of American households include one musician, many of whom play music as a hobby or side gig.

"Part of our mission is to try to reach out to broader audiences, to working musicians that are out there living their lives, often dual lives, with music on the side," Kusek said. "We're trying to offer them a convenient way of furthering their careers and interests in music."

Imrold Gray, 46, of Baltimore, considers music a second career. By day, he's a NASA electronic technician, by night, he's the musical director of a steel drum band with Caribbean roots but jazz and classical influences.

He took an online course on Pro Tools music recording software at Berklee last fall, and used those skills in his band Tropical Ensemble's third album to be released this spring. His training with the software allowed the band to cut its recording and production



Continued on page 7

Billy Corgan reborn: On the wings of wailing sonic guitars, Zwan flies higher than Pumpkins' aeroplane

By Justin Chellman
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – A happier, more laid-back Billy Corgan took the stage at the Orpheum.

I hadn't seen him since the last leg of the "Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness" double album tour at the FleetCenter in 1996. In retrospect, he looked less comfortable then – overlooking a sea of fans wearing the same Zero shirt he donned along with his shiny, tight silver pants. The Smashing Pumpkins music was much more of a work of art then as well – his masterpiece so to speak. He seemed much more serious about presenting it to perfection.

Billy Corgan

Zwan
Orpheum Theater
March 27

From the onset at the Orpheum show, it was obvious Corgan is having much more fun nowadays. There's a much more personal setting at the Orpheum than at the Fleet Center, and it created an atmosphere where Corgan and the rest of the band members in Zwan were able to connect much more with their audience.

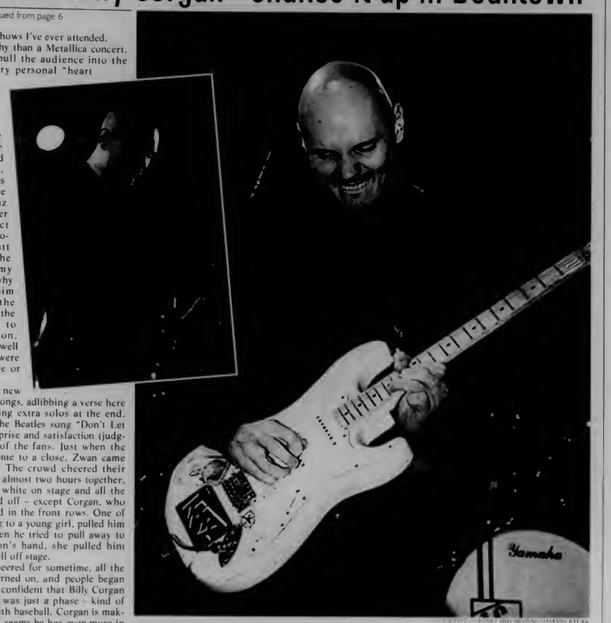
In Thursday's show, Corgan would prove his greatness without playing any Smashing Pumpkins songs. The album, "Mary Star of the Sea," has been touted as a classic by fans and critics. (It's on par with Corgan's past work with the Pumpkins. Think "Siamese Dream".) Corgan jammed through 12 of the album's 14 tracks plus more unreleased songs slated for their October 2003 release on "Djali Zwan," an acoustic alter-ego of the electric guitar trio.

From the opening song ("Mary's" title track, which spanned over 10 minutes) all the way to the final chords of "Jesus, I" (also a 10-minute-plus number), Zwan and Billy Corgan had the audience captivated. Their on-stage chemistry and trippy projections added to the incredible sound to make for

Continued on page 7

Zwan - with Billy Corgan - shakes it up in Beantown

Continued from page 6



one of the best rock shows I've ever attended.

Although less flashy than a Metallica concert, Zwan managed to pull the audience into the music. Corgan's very personal "heart songs" were amplified by his distinct voice belting through the small opera style theatre.

The rest of the band also shined in its own way. David Pajo played guitar, bass and the organ, as well as drums for the opening act. Paz Lenchantin, the former bassist of A Perfect Circle, played bass, violin and piano. Matt Sweeny provided the rhythm, and Jimmy Chamberlin showed why Corgan brought him along from the Pumpkins, slamming the skins hard enough to rival Keith Moon. Everyone gelled very well together – as if they were a band that was three or four albums deep.

Corgan also put a new twist on some of his songs, adlibbing a verse here and there and jamming extra solos at the end. Zwan also covered The Beatles song "Don't Let Me Down" to the surprise and satisfaction (judging by the screams) of the fans. Just when the concert seemed to come to a close, Zwan came out for two encores. The crowd cheered their hearts out until, after almost two hours together, the lights brightened white on stage and all the band members headed off – except Corgan, who shook everyone's hand in the front rows. One of these hands, belonging to a young girl, pulled him real close to her. When he tried to pull away to shake the next person's hand, she pulled him back, and he almost fell off stage.

After the crowd cheered for sometime, all the lights in the venue turned on, and people began filing out. I left, fully confident that Billy Corgan was back. Retirement was just a phase – kind of like Michael Jordan with baseball. Corgan is making great music, and it seems he has even more in store for us. Zwan has a few more tour dates, but unless you're down to travel to Buffalo of Philadelphia, your best bet is to catch them when they appear on Saturday Night Live on April 12.

Billy Corgan may have made his name jamming with Smashing Pumpkins (top left), but it's with Zwan (center) that his talents shine through. Zwan's concert, spotlighted with music from "Mary Star of the Sea," echoed through the Orpheum Thursday night.

Game two; round four

A popular Hollywood myth states that Kevin Bacon is somehow connected to every other actor in show business by no more than six degrees, where a degree is a single link between the given movie star and someone else who has appeared on-screen with him/her. Rumor has it that every puzzle has at least one route.

As the puzzle did not appear in Friday's paper, today we offer the puzzle and its solutions as submitted by previous contestants who regularly receive online game updates.

The puzzle:
KEVIN BACON & KENNETH BRANAGH

Take a moment to think about it... and then see the below

Solutions

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon

Jake D. Lewis

GOLD SOLUTION: SHORTEST ROUTE, FASTEST TIME - 15 POINTS

Kevin Bacon was in "Trapped" (2002) with Gerry Becker;
Gerry Becker was in "Celebrity" (1998) with Kenneth Branagh.
Submitted by Marcos Bachman
UMass Freshman, Philosophy
Total Accumulated Points: 19

SILVER SOLUTION: FASTEST TIME ONLY - 10 POINTS

Kevin Bacon was in "Planes, Trains & Automobiles" (1987) and "Novocaine" (2001) with Steve Martin;
Steve Martin was in "Grand Canyon" (1991) with Kevin Kline;
Kevin Kline was in "Wild Wild West" (1999) and "The Road to El Dorado" (2000) with Kenneth Branagh.
Submitted by A. Dave Lewis
Georgetown University, Graduate
Total Accumulated Points: 15

BRONZE WINNER: MOST CREATIVE/THEMATIC ROUTE - 5 POINTS

"Horror Films"
Kevin Bacon is in "Stir of Echoes" (1999) with Illeana Douglas;
Illeana Douglas is in "Cape Fear" (1991) with Robert DeNiro;
Robert DeNiro is in "Mary Shelley's Frankenstein" (1994) with Kenneth Branagh.
Submitted by Camille Torres
UMass Junior, History
Total Accumulated Points: 8

HONORABLE MENTION: ALL OTHER PLAYERS WITH VALID SOLUTIONS - 1 POINT

Jennifer Eastman-Lawrence (22), Marty Norden (18), Daniel Reiche (18), Deb Eskie (13), Shawn Nickerson (13), Mike Dunn (4), Justin Hiller (4), Mike Ouellette (4), Adam Shapiro (4), Jon Davenport (3), Molly O'Mara (2), Pat Reilly (2), Matthew Helman (2), Adam Polanger (2).

This game ends on April 25.

'Running with Scissors' tackles your wardrobe disgusting. Now, we realize letting legs and armpits turn into jungles during the winter is fairly accepted, but as the weather gets warmer, please refrain from this.

Continued from page 6

There are fewer things grosser than seeing a woman in a sleeveless shirt go to wave at someone and seeing the black forest growing under her arm. Legs are the same. Unless you have pale blonde hair, try not to shave any less than two times a week. Darker haired women are unlucky in this department, and often need to spend more time under the razor than lighter haired women.

LIMIT MAKEUP AND KEEP HEAD HAIR UNDER CONTROL

With warmer weather, a more summery, lighter approach to makeup is often a good idea for women. Some is still ok, especially for nighttime activities, but putting on a plaster masque of foundation and blush every morning is less necessary, and with the warmer temperatures, you are more likely to end up with breakouts. The last thing women need is to worry about zits, especially when it's something that can be controlled.

Hair also has a tendency to fly away and become overly frizzy in warmer and more humid climates. Some ultra control mousse will help with this if you have fairly straight hair, but if your hair leans more toward the curly, try a stronger serum and avoid blow drying because it won't do you any good anyway.

So to avoid looking like a frizzy-haired clown, lay off the makeup and keep your hair under control.

• • •

Now we are looking forward to the warmer weather as much as the next person, but warmer weather also brings on a new list of fashion do's and do not's. As always, the women of "Running with Scissors" offer you the best advice around. Call us shallow, but we're also right.

Melissa Hammel and Lizzy Nielsen are Collegian Columnists.

Berklee College of Music in Boston offers online music courses for its students from near and far costs in half, he said, saving the band about $1,500.

Continued from page 6

He also liked the convenience of online lectures, and the interaction with his instructor and classmates, he said.

Each course has a Web link to the course syllabus, readings and assignments. There's also a discussion area for students and the instructor to chat in real time, and post questions and comments.

Every submitted assignment is available to the entire class, for critiques and advice from the students as well as the instructor.

"You get as much from your classmates, as from your instructor," Gray said. "The different people in the class, all have a great deal of knowledge about recording and they bring a lot of their real life experience as musicians into the class."

One of those classmates, Jorge Costa, a guitarist in Portugal, became a valuable contributor to Gray's band, submitting a track for his final project that caught Gray's ear.

"His guitar track was sort of fusion rock with a Brazilian-Portuguese influence. The rhythm was interesting," he said. "That just seemed like it fused nicely with steels drums."

Gray and Costa have never talked on the phone or met. But through an online collaboration, they worked on an extended version of that track that will be included in Tropical Ensemble's upcoming album.

Berklee's Kusek says this sort of outside collaboration is a natural outcome of the lively discussions in the "classrooms."

"It's not an isolated and stale environment," Kusek said. "Online, I think it's harder to be shy. People are chatting back and forth and it's a very energetic discussion. Teachers find they have richer interaction online."

Kusek, who will soon be teaching an online class on the music industry's future, also thinks the online initiative will further today's trends of online MP3- and file-swapping.

"From our point of view, we think this open online environment has just opened up opportunities for musicians to distribute music for cheaper, more directly to their fan base without a record label," he said. "We're giving musicians a tool to do it themselves, write, record, produce music, distribute it, promote, market their music themselves."

Louis Pontarelli, 45, from Temecula, Calif., a former CFO of Beverly Hills Hospital, wants to use the Berklee program to become a producer for his son. Two years ago, he retired from his health management career after being diagnosed with final-stage leukemia.

As his then 9-year-old son, Tony, came into his hospital room each day and played the violin, Pontarelli realized he had to reconnect with his son's musical talents.

"Tony's music had some healing value, and I felt I had to get more involved with that," he said.

The Pro Tools class he took has helped him make demo tapes for his son, who is a concert master with San Diego and California youth symphony orchestras.

Pontarelli, whose cancer is now in remission, also used his classmates' and instructor's advice to build a free recording studio in his basement for his son and other musically inclined children in the area.

Berklee's online classes are aiding a change in the music industry reflected in the growing number of garage bands and home studios, Kusek said.

"Now the end game is no longer getting signed to a label," he said. "The end point is now having a meaningful life in music and giving the musician more control over his music."

> "Online, I think it's harder to be shy. People are chatting back and forth and it's a very energetic discussion...."
> - Dave Kusek, head of the online school

ALL MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN STAFF MEMBERS MUST ATTEND THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF 2003 ELECTION DEBATE ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2 AT 7 P.M. IN ROOM 168C OF THE CAMPUS CENTER.

New WORLD Theater presents

blessing the boats

Written & performed by Sekou Sundiata
Directed by Rhodessa Jones

April 2 & 3 at 8 pm
Bowker Auditorium, UMass

This heart-felt performance chronicles five tumultuous years of Sundiata's life – his struggle with life-threatening kidney failure, his subsequent organ transplant and recovery. blessing the boats blends solo theatrical performance, literary reading, stand-up comedy, spoken word performance and the storytelling of a griot.

SPECIAL EVENT – The Bridge to Life: Panel Discussion on Organ Transplants, Diversity & Survival. Monday, March 31st, 7:30 pm, Cape Cod Lounge. Call NWT, 545-1972 for more info.

Tickets $15-general public, $8-low income seniors $5-students. Call the Fab Box, 545-2511 www.newworldtheater.org

This performance is part of Blessing the Boats – a multi-year project with support from the Ford Foundation and the Network of Cultural Centers of Color.

The Ford Foundation

At The Massachusetts Dutch Collegian

Plan Ahead For Next Year...

Excellent Location...½ Mile From UMass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

LOVE YOUR BODY WEEK
MARCH 31 - APRIL 6, 2003

EVENTS

- CAMPUS CENTER TABLES • Monday through Thursday, 10:00-2:00 Featuring: You Can't Change Your Genes
- NUTRITION PROGRAM • Getting in Shape. Learn to eat healthy Campus Center, room 903 Wednesday April 2, at 7:00-9:00 p.m.
- MOVIE: RECOVERING BODIES • This is a movie about college student's problems with food and the process of recovery. UMass cable TV April 1 at 8:00 p.m., April 2 at 7:30 p.m. and April 3 at 7:00 p.m.
- FULLY ALIVE FASHION SHOW • a celebration of beauty in all body sizes. Fashion Show, Sunday, April 6, 1:00-3:00 p.m. Academy of Music, Northampton. Ticket prices are $10 adults, $7 students/children
- ALEXANDRA BELLER, MODERN DANCE CONCERT • Thursday, April 3 and Friday, April 4, at 8:00 p.m., Mount Holyoke College. Tickets available through UMass Fine Arts Center box office.
- MOVIE: "REAL WOMEN HAVE CURVES" • Friday, April 4 and Saturday April 5 at the Pleasant Street Theater.
- POETRY READING BY AUTHOR SUSAN STINSON • Works offering positive portrayals of large women. Saturday, April 12, 8:00 p.m. Free to the public at Beyond Words Bookstore, Northampton.

Sponsored by Interest to Health Services Dr. ANA Program Supported by Health Services Dr. ANA

UMass suffers its first loss of season at hands of Nittany Lions

Continued from page

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Kevin Glenz recorded a goal and an assist in the Maroon and White's upset loss to Penn State.

beat ourselves."

The Minutemen took leads of 8-7 and 9-8 in the third period, but Penn State's Marshall Feldman scored his second goal of the third period with 2:22 remaining again tying the game at nine heading into the final session.

State took its first lead of the second half on a Jones goal at the 12:48 mark of the final period, but UMass sophomore Chris Doyle's goal with 10:52 remaining knotted things at 10 and set up Jones winner for the Nittany Lions.

Zwicki led the Maroon and White in scoring for the sixth straight game with two goals and two assists, while Leveille added a hat trick and Doyle netted two goals. Whitaker paced the Nittany Lions with five goals.

"You never know of any positive effects a loss like this might have until the next game," Cannella said. "So we just need to get back to practice and work on some things and we'll see."

"You just hope this fires the guys up," Leveille said. "Hopefully this will put a fire in our bellies to go out there and work harder."

The Minutemen return to action this Saturday against the University of Maryland Baltimore County in their second consecutive ECAC matchup of the season.

Love rises to the occasion to win TPC

By DOUG FERGUSON
Associated Press

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. – Davis Love III provided the charge everyone expected from Tiger Woods and delivered a performance every bit as dominant Sunday in The Players Championship.

Love pulled away with five straight birdies and closed with an 8-under 64 to match the best final round by the winner in the 30-year history of the tournament known as the fifth major.

It was the second time Love has won The Players Championship, and it could be a huge boost to his confidence with the Masters only two weeks away.

Love finished at 17-under 271 and won by six strokes over 49-year-old Jay Haas and Padraig Harrington of Ireland, who shared the lead going into the final round but never stood a chance against such a barrage of birdies.

Love was playing in the group ahead with his best friend on tour, Fred Couples, who also had a 64 when he won The Players Championship seven years ago.

This performance was even better. Strong, cold winds that shooed away the rain left the TPC at Sawgrass as difficult as it had been all week, but Love made it look like he was on a pitch-and-putt.

Even into the crosswinds, the most challenging in golf, Love blasted his drives down the middle of the fairway and stuck his approach shots close to the hole.

"You can't do that for 18 holes, and he did it," Couples said. "That's the best round I've ever seen played. In these conditions, he did not miss a shot."

Love earned $1.17 million from the richest purse on the PGA Tour.

"It's the best round of golf I've ever played, especially under these circumstances," Love said. "It seemed like every time I looked up, it was going right in the middle. It was an exciting round of golf."

Haas, trying to become the oldest winner of The Players Championship, settled for a consolation prize. He closed with an even-par 72, and his tie for second earned him enough money to move into the top 10 on the money list and qualify for the Masters.

Harrington made back-to-back bogeys early in his round and was never a factor. He also had a 72.

Robert Allenby had a 7-under 65 to finish at 278, a score that looked as though it might be good enough to win, with the wind starting to howl and temperatures dropping. But Love made sure that wasn't the case.

"We got run over today," Haas said.

So did Woods. He started the final round five strokes behind and was poised to make a charge when he rolled in a 20-footer for eagle on the second hole. The rest of his round was hardly characteristic of someone who had won three of his first four tournaments.

Despite two eagles, Woods hit three balls into the water and wound up with a 72 and a tie for 11th, the first time since the British Open that he failed to finish in the top 10.

"I could have stayed home and it would have been the same score – even par," Woods said. "Instead, I came out there and created a few more gray hairs."

Love, who won at Pebble Beach earlier this season, now has 16 victories in a career that many believe has not lived up to his talent. Love has struggled with a 54-hole lead, but he proved again to be dangerous.

Two strokes behind going into the final round, the key shot was a 12-foot par putt on the third hole that kept him close to Harrington and Haas.

Before long every putt started falling, and Love left everyone in his wake.

Minutewomen easily knock off La Salle

By ARI JANKELOWITZ
Collegian Staff

Dating back to 1998 when the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team first played La Salle, the Explorers have set to be victorious, losing all five games against the Maroon and White.

UMass	13
La Salle	4

Nothing changed on Saturday as Maura McGarrity matched La Salle's offensive output of four goals, leading the Minutewomen (3-3 overall, 1-0 Atlantic 10) to a 13-4 victory in A-10 play at Garber Field.

"We have been working hard with [McGarrity] this season," UMass head coach Carrie Bolduc said. "It took Maura a couple chances and shots to get going. She is a powerful attacker."

Lydia Robinson and Hope Zellinger both contributed three goals, while the five remaining tallies came from Leslie Pollock, who had two, and Jada Emery, Lori Kain, and Lindsay Cassell.

La Salle (0-7, 0-1 A-10) bolded early against a persistent and aggressive Minutewoman attack. UMass took an 8-0 lead into halftime on a barrage of 15 shots.

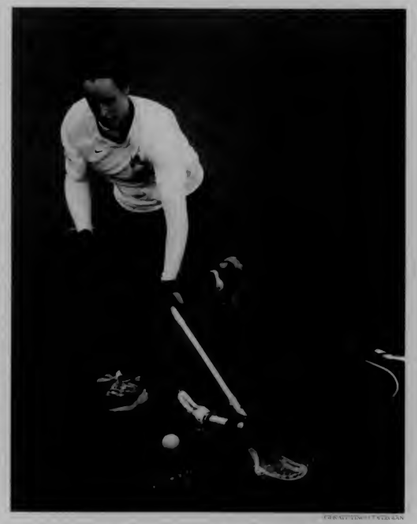
The Explorers could not shake the demons of a winless season, as they lost their seventh game in a row to start off the 2003 season.

The Minutewomen managed to hold La Salle's leading scorer Kim Emrich scoreless, as the Explorers' four goals came from three players, one apiece from Jennifer Blanchy and Traci Guenther, and two from Kristin Davis.

When told that La Salle has not won a game this season, Bolduc said, "I did not know that. I watched La Salle play before and just focused on the game plan."

A crowd of 164 witnessed the victory and Cyndi Doyle's consistent play in the cage. Doyle held the Explorers scoreless in the first half and made 11 saves for the game against 15 shots. Her four goals allowed were the lowest total given up since her shutout against the University of Albany.

"Cyndi is still looking to be consistent," Bolduc said. "She improves every day."



Doyle made several saves on what would have been sure goals for the Explorers.

"We are very happy, because we want to set the standard in Atlantic 10 play," Zellinger said. "Our goal is to go undefeated in league play."

La Salle marked the first A-10 opponent that UMass has faced. The next opponent is Hofstra, which has lost four out of its last five. Hofstra is an even more physical team.

They are talented and fast," Bolduc said. "The girls are aware of Hofstra's caliber of play. If we do everything well, then the it will be a favorable outcome."

The Pride comes to town tomorrow today for a 3 p.m. matchup at Garber Field.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Jada Emery and the Minutewomen cruised past La Salle 15-4 Saturday afternoon at Garber Field.

2003
MAKING ART
Making a Living
Wednesday workshops for emerging artists
Wednesdays, 4:30-6:30 p.m., Campus Center, UMass Amherst

• Visual Artists and Writers April 2
• Marketing • Galleries
• Distributors • Contests
• Agents
Daniel Grant, author of How to Start and Succeed as an Artist

• Performing Artists April 9
• Marketing • Agents
• Contracts • Working in Education
• Collaborations
Jazz guitarist Michael Gregory and theater artist and educator Tracy Vernon

• Art and the Law April 23
• Co-sponsored by Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts of Massachusetts

• Art-Related Careers for Artists April 30
• Web sites • Teaching • Licensing
• Careers involving additional study (art conservation, art appraisal, art therapy, architecture, interior design, scientific and medical illustration)
• Arts Management
• Publishing, art galleries, museums, the theater, collectibles
• The design field
Daniel Grant

Who should come?
• UMass and Area Students in the Arts
• Dancers • Visual Artists
• Musicians • Actors • Writers
No workshop fee, but for 5-College students, suggested donation $10 or $40 for the series. Call Arts Extension Service at 413-545-2360 or e-mail aes@contined.umass.edu to reserve a seat.

plus
Arts and Activism
Thursday, April 15
Find out about the power of the arts to make a difference in your community.
Media artist and 5-College visiting professor Liz Miller joins visual artist Beverly Naidu in showcasing their community-based cultural work.

For more information: www.umass.edu/aes
UMASS Arts Extension Service
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst

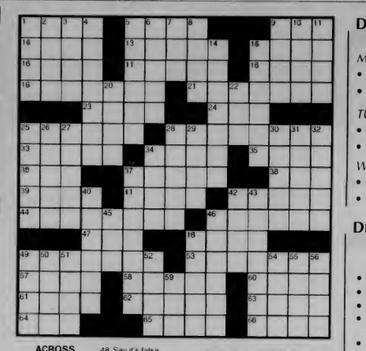
NATIONAL HAITIAN STUDENT CONFERENCE 2003
April 4-6, 2003 UMass-Amherst
WWW.HAITIANSTUDENTCONFERENCE.COM
FOR MORE INFO CALL: 617-590-0529 OR 617-794-7076
WYCLEF JEAN
THE (NHSC) WELCOMES WYCLEF AND HIS BRAND NEW LABEL:
SAKPASSE RECORDS
WYCLEF WILL BE CONDUCTING A WORKSHOP TITLED: "HOW TO BREAK INTO THE MUSIC INDUSTRY."
REGISTER ONLINE TODAY

LIMIT HOOPER • By Robert D. Krzykowski

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

JAYHOO AND JAWHOO • By Mark Vitardi

THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredrett



THE PEPPER PADDIDLE EXPLOSION • By Anonymous

THE TORQUES • By Ken Fredrett

ACROSS
1 Mountain pass info.
5 Big pitcher
9 TD passers
12 Urban cruiser
13 Tibet's — Lama
15 Pants and jacket
16 Tease
17 Fairy tale brother
18 Polynesian image
19 Heartburn soother
21 Trooper's prey
23 For the guys
24 Ga. neighbor
25 Preening
28 Highway warning (2 wds.)
33 Frighten
34 Expel
35 Sport for heavyweights
36 Out of the ordinary
37 Emery boards
38 Gun pellets
39 Judy Garland's daughter
41 Shakespeare play starter
42 Gets noisy
44 Grouch
46 Stick together
47 Involuntary movement
48 Say it's false
49 Candidate
53 Former (hyph.)
57 Some nest eggs
58 Name
60 Piltdown man, e.g.
61 S.F. transit system
62 Scott at
63 Wagon-train puller
64 Guileful
65 Not hard
66 JFK arrivals

DOWN
1 Singer — James
2 Grass
3 Gate
4 A, B or C
5 Border
6 Precincts
7 Gin inventor — Whitney
8 Rear-ends
9 Tobacco wad
10 Kid's wheels
11 Agitate
14 Has an effect on
15 Creeps forth
20 Small change
22 Large deer
25 Rock stars, maybe
26 Wireless set
27 Southern vine
28 Wall Street
29 Functions
30 Jazzman — Blake
31 Palette color
32 Marshal's band
34 Lubricates
37 Taps
40 Monet or Gauguin
42 Ducks' haunt
43 Beats
45 Fasten temporarily
46 Tuna salad ingredient
48 Allots
49 Robins' beaks
50 Spoken
51 Creche figure
52 One, in Munich
54 Cash substitutes
55 Ale ingredient
56 Former spouses
59 Herbal drink

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	M	I	T	H		G	Y	M	S		H	A	F	T
L	A	N	K	A		R	E	A	P		A	W	E	S
A	R	S	O	N		E	L	S	A		L	A	R	K
T	S	P		G	O	A	L	S		C	O	I	N	S
	E		E	J	E	C	T		D	I	E	T	S
E	S	C	O	R	T		W	E	D	S
T	O	T	E			B	O	N	N	E		O	O	H
C	H	O	S		S	C	O	U	N	T	R	Y	S	K
H	E	R		W	H	A	L	E		S	T	Y	R	E
		E		B	E	A	R	D		E	L	I	A	S
	M	I	R	E	D		S	U	S	H	I
T	A	R	O	T		D	E	L	T	A		C	A	M
S	N	O	W		B	U	N	G		B	A	H	I	A
A	N	N	S		P	E	L	T		E	M	E	R	Y
R	A	Y	E		A	L	E	S		L	A	S	S	O

1-27-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc

Daily Weather Forecast
for Amherst, Ma.

MONDAY
• High: 39
• Low:18

TUESDAY
• High: 42
• Low: 27

WEDNESDAY
• High: 52
• Low: 36

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
• Italian Minestrone
• Chicken Cacciatore
• Chili Nachos
• Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)
• Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian

DINNER
• Italian Minestrone
• RESTAURANT NIGHT at Berkshire, Hampshire and Worcester Dining Commons
• Traditional Menu at Franklin Dining Commons

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Gerald Ling
COPY EDITOR
Matthew Despres
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Giruso
PRODUCTION STAFF
Shannon Farrington / Mike Kulak
Fedrich Torres

QUOTE OF THE DAY

You're driving, it's rush hour, the cars on the freeway are moving like slugs. When you drift off, to wake up, do you always hit the brake?

- Matthew Good Band
"Strange Days"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You may be able to take advantage of a surprise bargains before the day is out.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You'll receive the information you require today, but it may come only at the 11th hour.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're going to have to do more than meet someone halfway if you wish to solve a crisis. Be willing to bend.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you look around you, you'll see that things are not nearly so bad as they seem. Be positive!

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Do someone a favor today, and he or she is bound to do you a good turn as well.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Do what you can to remain on an even keel, even if others are finding every reason under the sun no to.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It may seem to others as though you get very little done. The fact is, you're making real progress.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
A question of compatibility may arise today, and you may have to change your plans as a result.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You can give someone the answers they're looking for, or you can tell him how to discover the answers for himself.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You'll have a chance to forge ahead and break new ground today.

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Someone may be waiting for you to say "yes" to an attractive, long-standing suggestion.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You have every reason to be practical about issues such. Take it one thing at a time.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITIES

New York City trip sponsored by Commuter Area Government April 5th and 6th overnight $50 per Commuter for more details or to sign up come to 428 Student Union or call 545-0865.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Term Paper Editing! Editing performed by professors and graduate students
Visit us at www.paperscheck.com or call us toll free 866-693-EDIT

Herbal Apprenticeship Teaching the "Old ways," plant ID, making remedies. In Shelburn Falls
10 Sats, April – Sept
Register by April 1.
Kathleen O'Rourke
413-625-9426

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities • Sororities • Clubs • Student Groups: Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with a proven CampusFundraiser 3 hour fundraising event. Our programs make fundraising easy with no risks. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so get with the program! It works. Contact CampusFundraiser at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com.

Sororities! Help Promote American Idol throw viewing parties at your house and earn $350 e-mail Jennifer D at Zilo.com for more info

Interested in a loan? We can help consolidate all your bills. Call us at 1-866-210-6801 Good or bad credit accepted.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer sublet w/ all utilities included. 2 Bedroom Apt. Cliffside in sunderland. All utilities included on Bus route 1-413-665-9333 only $820/month.

MOVING OFF CAMPUS? COME TO THE COMPLEX FAIR. WED APRIL 9, 10 TO 3 ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE. SPONSORED BY COMMUTER SERVICES, 428 STUDENT UNION WWW.CSHRC.ORG.

FREE DELL COMPUTER OR UP TO $1000 IN SAVINGS WHEN YOU MOVE IN Delux 2 bedroom apartments FREE HEAT & HOT WATER Plenty of free, on site parking Minutes from UMass On free-busline CALL SUGARLOAF ESTATES

APARTMENT FOR RENT

413-665-3856 Visit us at sugarloafestates.com *limited time offer

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1 &2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug, or Sept. First come first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedroom apts., hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda Accord LX 1992 Great Shape $1500 obo 413-253-1456

COMPUTERS

Used Laptop Notebooks $99.00 Pentium II's with CD Rom $129.00 Monitors $39.00. 10% off services with This Ad. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

RENT US YOUR EARS! $5 for a half hour of listening Call 545-6837 Leave Message

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet.

EMPLOYMENT

Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392.

Office assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, receive inventory, computer data entry, answer telephone. All around person needed. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael Osona P.O. Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 telephone 508 228-3942

Moving: Local moving company looking for self-motivated individuals, full and part time positions available. Raises commensurate with performance, potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time job up to 16 hours flexible must have own car Knowledge of word processing and database software. Year round 665-2779

Bartender Trainees Needed $250.00 a day potential. Local Positions 800-293-3985 ext 516

MOVIES EXTRAS/MODELS NEEDED Earn up to $150-450/Day! No experience necessary. Call now 1-888-820-0164 x1047

FOR SALE

Brown leather sofa set in excellent condition. One sofa chair, one sofa love seat, two night stands for very reasonable prices. Call Will at 546-1194.

FOR SALE

Love seat for sale - $30 call 546-2457

DJ Equipment for sale 2 Numark TT100 Turntables 1 Gemini PMX80 Mixer Records Extra $550 Cash Call 413-546-0701

HOUSE FOR SALE

5 Bedroom plus Newer house minutes from UMass $2700/month 548-8800

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes Start Soon Student Discounts 1-800-U-CAN-MIX Space is Limited Call for Information!!!

LOST

Lost bracelet very sentimental value Reward Crystal 546-1678

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906.

PREGNANCY TESTING, Birth Control, Emergency Contraception Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

STS America's number one student tour operator is now hiring on-campus reps 2003-04 18006484849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break with STS, America's # 1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS MONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2003 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Undefeated no longer

Penn State upsets UM

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A trap.

The only way an undefeated, nationally-ranked team can fall to a struggling squad is by falling into a one.

Riding the nation's longest winning streak and taking on a struggling Penn State squad, the Minutemen had plenty of reasons to think they would be able to shake off the pesky Nittany Lions, who had been beating them to ground balls, dominating time of possession and taking it to them all game long, and avoid such a trap.

Penn State	11
UMass	10

But the big goal they had gotten all season long wasn't there, the important defensive stop they could always count on didn't happen, and before they knew it, Penn State's Will Jones skipped a shot past keeper Bill Schell with 3:25 left in the final frame. So when junior Jeff Zywicki's last-second tying attempt sailed just wide of the cage, securing an 11-10 upset win for the Lions, the loss that hadn't been there all season...was.

They were trapped.

"We played hard out there," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "But give Penn State credit, they did what they needed to do to win. They beat us to ground balls, forced turnovers and were aggressive on the offensive end. We were definitely prepared for how aggressive they were, but we just never took control. They definitely took this one from us."

"I don't think it was really them winning as much as it was us losing," senior Kevin Leveille said. "They had the ball on offense a lot, and that wears a defense down. It's not supposed to, but it does."

Both teams came out of the gates firing on all cylinders in the first period. After Jones opened the scoring and gave Penn State (2-3 1-3 ECAC) an early 1-0 lead, Chris Doyle and Kevin Leveille both netted goals to give the Minutemen (7-1 1-1 ECAC) a 2-1 advantage.

However, the Lions would jump back in front 3-2 on two Nate Whitaker goals just 10 seconds apart.

The lead was short lived, as Zywicki tied the game at 3-3 just 13 seconds later. Senior Chris Fiore gave the lead back to UMass with a top-shelf rocket past Penn State keeper Chris Garrity, and after PSU again took a slim one-goal advantage, Leveille and junior Kevin Glenz followed Fiore's lead, beating Garrity up high for a 6-5 cushion after one period.

"We knew that the pace of the game would change after the first quarter," Cannella said. "They didn't want to run up and down with us in the second period, so they went to a slower and more deliberate set offense and put the pressure on us defensively."

And change it did. Freshman Nate Whitaker accounted for all the Nittany Lions offense in the period, scoring two goals, including a dazzling over-the-shoulder flip past Schell. However Sophomore Gene Tundo bounced a shot past Garrity with only nine seconds remaining in the half, sending the teams into the locker room tied at seven.

"We knew [Whitaker] would be aggressive offensively and obviously he was," Cannella said.

"But he wasn't what beat us, they beat us as a whole and we

Continued on page 8

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sean Morris and the No.6 Minutemen suffered their first defeat of the season, losing to ECAC rival Penn State 11-10 Saturday afternoon at Garber Field.

Sortino records 800th victory

Holtz throws no-hitter in sweep of La Salle

By TODD FOSTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Elaine Sortino doesn't know how to lose.

This weekend, the No. 25 Massachusetts Softball team swept the La Salle Explorers in their first Atlantic 10 doubleheader.

The pair of wins lifted Sortino over the 800-win plateau, making her only the 16th coach in the NCAA (15th in Div. 1) history to reach this mark. Also, Sortino continues to extend her dominance in the Northeast as the only coach with 800 wins in the region.

UMass	4
La Salle	0
UMass	11
La Salle	2

After 23 seasons at helm of the Minutewomen (13-10, 2-0 Atlantic 10), Sortino has never had a losing season and is ranked 10th among active NCAA Div. 1 coaches in victories and 11th in winning percentage. The seven-time A-10 Coach of the Year has led the Maroon and White to 15 Conference titles, 12 NCAA regional appearances, and three trips to the College World Series.

Through all the achievements, Sortino remains humble when asked about her most recent feat.

"To be honest, it really doesn't feel any different," Sortino said. "It gives you something to think about, but doesn't mean anything. I mean, it was great win over La Salle, but how you play the game is what really matters."

Sortino's 800th win wasn't the only highlight of the weekend. Senior ace Kaila Holtz put on a pitching exhibition in the first game. Holtz recorded the fourth no-hitter of her career, and was one passed ball away from a perfect game as the Minutewomen downed the Explorers 4-0 in the first game.

Holtz also fired 10 strikeouts and allowed only one player to reach base. Holtz helped her cause with a home run in the game as well. Her impressive game gave the Explorers no chance of any momentum going into the second game.

The concluding game of the double-header was highlighted by the UMass bats, as the Minutewomen ran away to a 11-2 win. The team had season highs in both hits (12) and runs (11) in only five innings.

Senior Brandi Cross continued her consistent hitting, highlighted by a two-out, three-run homer. Cross finished with four runs batted in. Senior Emily Robustelli was on fire at the bat as well, going 3-for-8 with three RBIs and three runs.

Breaking out of a slump, catcher Jamie Cahalan caught fire, going 3-for-3 with a homerun and two RBIs. The other end of the battery held her own, as Kelli Arnold gave up four hits and fanned five Explorers.

COURTESY OF UMASS SID/ATHLETICS

Softball coach Elaine Sortino (right) recorded her 800th career victory Saturday afternoon as the Minutewomen swept a doubleheader with La Salle.

Sox are optimistic that this is finally their year

By JUSTIN POPE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT MYERS, Fla. – The youngest general manager in baseball rushed to revamp a team that last won a World Series 55 years before he was born. Now Theo Epstein finds out how well his moves will work.

In just four months, he shook up a Boston Red Sox team that won 93 games last year but once again failed to catch the New York Yankees in the American League East. The opening-day roster should have 10 new faces – and much more offensive punch.

The 29-year-old Epstein failed to land high-profile pitchers Bartolo Colon and Jose Contreras. But he added several veteran hitters, including Kevin Millar, Jeremy Giambi and David Ortiz.

There may be a logjam at first and third bases and some questionable fielding on the right side of the infield. But if spring training is any indication, the Red Sox will launch plenty of balls over and off Fenway Park's oddly configured walls.

The newcomers will complement a trio of hitters in the middle of the order – Nomar Garciaparra, Manny Ramirez and Shea Hillenbrand – that has the potential to be as good as any in baseball. Hillenbrand reacted to reports that he was trade bait with an outstanding spring.

"We certainly are going to be able to hit," said Todd Walker, another off-season pickup who hit .299 for Cincinnati last season.

By many measures, 2002 was a good season. The Red Sox had the second and third place finishers in the AL Cy Young award balloting (Pedro Martinez and Derek Lowe), a batting champion (Ramirez) for the third time in four years and a 101-run, 120-RBI man (Garciaparra). And there were those 93 wins.

But in Boston, other numbers stand out – 1918, when the Red Sox last won a World Series, and five, their streak of second-place finishes. And all those second-place finishes were behind the Yankees.

So it's hardly surprising Red Sox fans are still preoccupied with the question marks.

Will manager Grady Little's lineup shuffling prove a distraction? Does this team have enough pitching to make the playoffs?

Little used 118 lineup combinations last year and says the players know what they're in for. He may use even more this season now that he has greater depth. But he won't use the term "platooning."

Lineup decisions will depend on more than whether the opposing starter is left or right-handed (Giambi, for instance, is a left-hander who hits lefties well).

Ortiz, Millar and Giambi will likely share duties at first base and designated hitter. Third baseman Hillenbrand also can play first, giving Millar or newcomer Bill Mueller time at third.

The other positions should be the same as last season: Garciaparra at shortstop, Jason Varitek at catcher, and Ramirez, Johnny Damon and Trot Nixon in the outfield. Little hopes Walker will bring stability to second, a position where Boston has had 10 opening-day starters in as many years. But he's not as good a fielder as Rey Sanchez, who played there last year.

The pitching seems strong. Martinez has enjoyed his healthiest spring in years and Tim Wakefield, his starting job at last assured, his best. Derek Lowe has been inconsistent and some wonder whether his 21-8 season last year was a fluke. But opposing hitters still say he has one of the nastiest sinkerballs in the game.

The unknown is how many wins Boston can expect from its fourth and fifth starters. John Burkett is a proven winner but is 38. Casey Fossum, whom Epstein liked so much he refused to include him in a possible deal for Colon, struggled all spring.

The bullpen should be better. The Red Sox picked up Ramiro Mendoza from the Yankees and Chad Fox from Milwaukee. Former Philadelphia starter Robert Person is still building strength after shoulder surgery but could be a long reliever or a fill-in starter. Closing will be by committee, though Alan Embree could take over that role.

"We feel like we've got a chance to score a lot of runs," Little said. "The biggest thing you can expect from the team this year, when we do score those runs we're going to be able to hold that lead through the seventh, eighth and ninth innings much better than last year."

Boston fans are cautious, having grown wary of teams that "look good on paper." That was the case each of the past three springs, but the Red Sox got dragged down by injuries (2000), clubhouse bickering (2001) or an inability to win close games (2002).

There's also a sense Boston's window of opportunity may soon close. The club has options on Garciaparra and Martinez only through 2004. With Ramirez signed to an eight-year, $160 million contract, it's hard to imagine Boston could keep all its stars aligned much longer.

Whether it's the naive idealism of a Red Sox newcomer or the valuable words of an experienced player, Millar, who is both, insists the team can succeed.

"Every team says something about the World Series, but I tell you what, this team right here has the makeup and the nucleus to win," he said. "Chemistry on a baseball team is something you can't buy, and for some reason this team has it. I walked in this clubhouse three days and I felt like I'd been here 10 years."

APRIL

2003

Real news on the inside.

THE COLLEGIAN

APRIL FOOLS! NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE JOKE • EST. 2003 VOLUME H ISSUE ONETEEN

SGA digging deep

Senators seeking nutritional substitute

PEEK-A-BOO I SEE YOU

A senator demonstrates the Student Goverment Association's newest philosophy when it comes to seeking nutritional goodness.

By HUMMY MCHUMHUM
COLLEGIAN DJ

In a meeting that quickly became focused on the art of nosepicking, members of the Student Government Association met last night to discuss possible ways of revamping the current food plan options.

"Picking one's nose is a great way to enjoy a quick harvest and to satisfy even the most intense hunger," said former SGA presidential candidate Cornelius Nugent. "Besides, it doesn't even cost a meal swipe."

SGA President David Carr responded to Nugent by suggesting that his idea may solve potential budget crunches that the University of Massachusetts faces in the coming years. It may be possible to scale back the production of food on campus and supplement it in this fashion, he said.

"I think you have found a possible way to enhance the meal plan's currently lacking assortment of options while at the same time not costing the University what it already cannot afford," Carr said.

Other senators agreed, sharing their own nosepicking joys. Speaker Dan Saunders said he loves to pick his nose, and now realizes a potential use for doing so. He also took a moment to share with everyone the extent to which he finds nose picking pleasurable.

"I not only feel that the bountiful produce of engaging in such an activity is delicious, but it's also gastronomically agreeable," Saunders said.

The suggestion was met with little opposition at the meeting.

"If we could get everyone at the University to learn to enjoy it as much as we do, I think the University could seriously scale back on its production of food," said Chair of University Policy Blake Kleppe.

"It just feels so damn good," Senator David Falvey said. "I dig deep all the time because I look for the ooey gooey ones."

Nugent said he stumbled upon the idea seemingly by accident. He told reporters he developed a compulsive nose picking habit after what he calls "a crushing rejection," when Carr won the recent elections. He also commented that nose picking is laden with symbolism in this case.

"The SGA usually talks about things that can only be

Continued on page A2

Lombardi makes scene at yet to be opened bar

By SHAQUILLE O'NEAL
COLLEGIAN BIG ARISTOTLE

University of Massachusetts police responded late Friday night to a call from Bluewall workers after Chancellor John V. Lombardi stumbled into the eatery intoxicated, demanding a beer from the yet to be opened Bluewall bar.

"He was wrecked," maintainer Joe Shmoe said. "He tripped on a table leg, and it knocked those big glasses of his right off."

Workers said the intoxicated Lombardi was complaining about UMass President William Bulger, calling him "a damn mobster." They said they heard him mumble that he's had "enough of his crap."

An apologetic Mrs. Lombardi chased behind John, cleaning up some of the chairs he'd knocked over and trying to get him to stop "making a scene," as she put it. She unsuccessfully tried to get him to stop so she could tie his shoes, which included a tennis sneaker and a combat boot.

When Bluewall workers proposed to Mrs. Lombardi that perhaps the Chancellor could enjoy an alcoholic beverage at the Graduate Student Lounge, he turned quickly from emptying a sugar canister into his open mouth, spilling the sugar and shouting, "Not that place! Every embittered, underpaid graduate idiot and unsatisfied professor is in there, and when they're drunk, they confuse the picture of Bulger (on the dartboard) for me."

Mrs. Lombardi rolled her eyes and apologized for the spilt sugar and milk.

"The snow, cold and Massachusetts politicians have taken their toll," she said. "He hasn't been this bad since the days in Florida."

At the mention of Florida, Lombardi took off his glasses, and holding them in his right hand ran from the Bluewall. However, according to employees, he only made it to one of the shut glass doors at the entrance, which the Chancellor did not see. Tripping on his untied shoelaces, Lombardi fell forward, hitting the glass door. The collision left the Chancellor unconscious on the floor.

SHAMEFUL ACTS OF A DRUNKARD

Chancellor John V. Lombardi was seen Friday night yelling in the yet to be opened Bluewall bar. The man wanted a beer.

Employees with the help of UMPD forces helped Mrs. Lombardi load the Chancellor into her GMC Jimmy.

"He was mumbling as we put him into their car," said Bluewall employee, Seymour Dirt, a sophomore endocrinology major. "Something about Bulger and Romney. I think he said, 'Damn the masses. Zoomass is worth saving.' But it could've been, 'Damn my glasses. Why wouldn't they stay?"

